"Again, it is clear law that in order to redress a wrong done to the company or to recover moneys or damages alleged to be due to the company, the action should prima facie be brought by the company itself. These cardinal principles are laid down in the wellknown cases of Foss v. Harbottle<sup>2</sup> and Mozley v. Alston,<sup>3</sup> and in numerous later cases which it is unnecessary to cite. But an exception is made to the second rule, where the persons against whom the relief is sought themselves hold and control the majority of the shares in the company, and will not permit an action to be brought in the name of the company. In that case the Courts allow the shareholders complaining to bring an action in their own names. This, however, is mere matter of procedure in order to give a remedy for a wrong which would otherwise escape redress, and it is obvious that in such an action the plaintiff cannot have a larger right to relief than the company itself would have if it were plaintiff, and cannot complain of acts which are valid if done with the approval of the majority of the shareholders, or are capable of being confirmed by the majority. The cases in which the minority can maintain such an action are, therefore, confined to those in which the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or beyond the powers of the company."

In my opinion as the position of the members of this society is similar to that of the shareholders of the company and as the acts of the defendants which are challenged are in respect of the society, it is necessary that the society should be a party to this litigation. I do not think it is competent to the plaintiff either alone or representing himself and the other members of the society other than the defendants to bring a suit. The only grievance in respect of the disputed acts can be of the society. It is not open to the plaintiff, without ascertaining the wishes of the society, to file a suit on behalf of himself and all others except the defendants. The reason for that conclusion is obvious. Even if the Court decides in favour of the plaintiff, the society can call a meeting of its members tomorrow, confirm the acts of the defendants and confirm their position as members of the managing committee, thus rendering the decision of the Court a nullity. As I have pointed out, there is no suggestion here of an infringement of the individual right of the plaintiff. The suggestion is only in respect of the alleged wrong done to the society as a body. In the absence of the society as a party to this litigation, I am of opinion that the suit as framed is not maintainable and the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit in the absence of the society.

Even if this view was incorrect, I think on the evidence the plaintiff's case must fail. I shall first consider the meeting of December 4, 1938. It was admitted by both parties that on that day there were only six members of the society who had paid their subscription or whose subscription was not in arrears for a period exceeding three months. At that meeting seven persons were present, four of whom were out of the above-mentioned six. The plaintiff contended that the resolutions passed at that meeting were illegal and not binding on the society because there was no necessary quorum at the meeting. In para. 6 of the plaint it is alleged that on December 4, 1938, there were twenty-eight persons on the role of the society according to the original register and sixty-seven according to the revised register. It was contended that under the circumstances the quorum for the general meeting would be either ten or twenty-three while only seven persons were present, out of whom three were disqualified to vote under s. 15 of the Act.

2 (1843) 2 Hare 461.

3 (1847) 1 Ph. 790.

Section 15 runs as follows :—

"For the purposes of this Act a member of a society shall be a person who, having been admitted therein according to the rules and regulations thereof, shall have paid a subscription or shall have signed the role or list of members thereof, and shall not have resigned in accordance with such rules and regulations; but in all proceedings under this Act no person shall be entitled to vote or be counted as a member whose subscription at the time shall have been in arrears for a period exceeding three months."

The facts as now ascertained show that although several persons may have been shown to have joined the society as members on December 4, there were only six members who had paid their subscription so as to be eligible to vote at the meeting. In my opinion therefore it is improper to take into consideration the names of the persons who were on the role but who had not paid their subscription or were in arrears for over three months. In order to determine the quorum it is necessary to find out who were the persons eligible to attend the meeting; the latter part of s. 15 quoted above shows that in all proceedings under the Act a member whose subscription had been in arrear for over three months should not be counted as a member. If there were six members only who are to be treated as members and four of these were present at the meeting, it is clear that it cannot be contended that there was no proper quorum for the meeting.

It was next argued that in that event the election of eight members at the meeting was irregular because that included persons who were not members, and under rule 5 the managing committee must consist of not more than fourteen and not less than five members of the society. On behalf of the plaintiff it was contended that this election of persons, whose subscription was in arrears for over three months, was therefore invalid. This point is not free from doubt. However it is not necessary to consider this aspect of the case in view of the meeting of October, 1939.

In that connection the admitted facts are that on September 24, 1939, there were sixty-seven persons on the register of the society. Out of these ten had paid their subscription or were not in arrears for a period exceeding three months. A requisition for the meeting was signed by eighteen persons which included five of the above-mentioned ten. Under the orders of the then functioning managing committee a notice was issued by the Secretary to all persons on the register of the society calling a meeting on October 15, 1939. Before that date twenty-eight members had paid their subscription. At that meeting twenty-four persons, all of whom had paid all their arrears of subscription, were present and the four resolutions mentioned in the notice convening the meeting were passed. The plaintiff has challenged that this meeting was irregularly convened. In para. 9 of the plaint it is contended that the proceedings of this meeting were of a special or extraordinary nature. The requisition was signed by eighteen members of whom thirteen were disqualified by reason of s. 15 of the Act. The requisition was therefore improper or illegal. It is not disputed that if the proceedings of this meeting are held to be binding the plaintiff has no case.

O. C. J. By-laws 8, 9 and 10 were relied upon in this respect. They run as follows :—

Kania J.

8. Ordinary business meetings may be called from time to time at the instance of the managing committee as the business of the society demands. The Hon. Secretary shall give at least ten days notice of such meeting.

9. Extraordinary business meeting may be called by the managing committee to deal with emergent work. The Hon. Secretary shall give not less than two days notice of such meeting.

10. Ordinary business meetings may also be called on the requisition in writing of not less than one-quarter of the members of the society, the meeting to be called within a month of the receipt of the requisition.

It was argued that this meeting was called on a requisition submitted under by-law 10 and acting under the powers given under by-law 8. It was argued that at such a meeting extraordinary business could not be transacted. It was further argued that the four resolutions contained in the notice convening the meeting indicated that the business was of an extraordinary nature and could not be transacted at an ordinary business meeting convened under by-law 8. In my opinion this argument is unsound. The words used in framing by-laws 8, 9 and 10 are not happy, and it is evident that there is considerable confusion of thought in framing those by-laws and in the arguments based thereon. By-laws 8 and 10 are in respect of ordinary meetings. By-law 8 deals with the meetings called by the managing committee itself and by-law 10 deals with meetings called on requisitions of members. There is no provision for calling an extraordinary meeting. By-law 9 provides for an extraordinary business meeting to deal with emergent work. It is, therefore, clear that there is no distinction between ordinary business and extraordinary business or the meeting being ordinary meeting or extraordinary meeting. Apart from these three by-laws there are no other rules or by-laws in respect of calling general meetings of the society. The term extraordinary meeting is understood in a different way under the Indian Companies Act. There an extraordinary general meeting is called for the purpose of passing a special resolution. At an ordinary general meeting also business other than of sanctioning dividends, consideration of accounts, balance sheets and reports of the directors and auditors, election of directors and other officers in place of those retiring by rotation, and fixing the remuneration of the auditors can be transacted. But all that business is not ordinary business of the meeting but may be described as extraordinary or special business. Under the circumstances the meeting when called in the present case was called as a result of the requisition submitted under by-law 10 by the managing committee under by-law 8. That meeting was called for the purposes mentioned in the notice. The members were therefore not taken by surprise and they were informed definitely what matters were going to be discussed at the meeting. The resolutions passed at the meeting, although they were not of a routine nature, could be validly passed and in my opinion it is not proper to contend that it was outside the scope of by-law 8.

The next contention was that this meeting was improperly convened. In my opinion that argument is unsound. On the admitted facts on September 24, 1939, ten persons had paid their subscriptions and were not in arrears for a period exceeding three months. According to s. 15 those were the members therefore who could send a requisition. Under by-law 10 one quarter of the members of the society had to send a requisition. It was sent by eighteen members which included five out of those ten. If the requisition were sent by those five persons alone, there could be no objection to the requisition. Because it was signed by some more who were on the role of the society but who were not entitled to vote at the meeting, the requisition did not become bad. There is no dispute about the proceedings of this meeting. The plaintiff has challenged only the requisition. On the admitted facts it is clear that the plaintiff will be unable to challenge the voting that took place at that meeting, and the resolutions passed thereat. If, therefore, this meeting was properly convened, there could be no doubt that the actions of the defendants as members of the managing committee were duly ratified and the society as such had at that meeting taken the necessary steps to do so. The election of the defendants as members of the managing committee was also ratified by one of the resolutions duly passed at that meeting. In view of that resolution therefore it is clear that the plaintiff's contentions must fail.

I have recorded these findings which are directed against the society on the footing that the society has challenged the same. As I have already pointed out, the society is not a party to this litigation and in fact has not challenged them. It is the plaintiff alone who has purported to challenge the acts as not binding on the Society. The result is that the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs.

Section 1 (2) of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1936, extends the Act even to Native States in India in its application to Parsis, provided the Parsis are subjects of His Majesty.

The expression "Parsi subjects of His Majesty" in the section refers to the political status of such subjects as opposed to their civil status, in other words, to their nationality and allegiance and not to their domicil. The change of domicil does not necessarily involve change of political status of a subject. The words "subject of His Majesty" mean the same thing as "British subject." A British subject, unless a certificate of naturalization in a foreign country has been granted to him, ordinarily means a person who is a natural-born British subject.

• The real meaning to be attached to the term "resides", as used in s. 29(3) of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, depends upon the circumstances of each case. If a person resides permanently at a particular place, that place is his or her residence; but the residence need not necessarily be permanent. It is enough for the purposes of the section if the residence is bona fide, with an element of continuity about it, so that even if it is not permanent, it cannot be said to be merely casual or for a temporary or passing purpose.

CHAMBER SUMMONS.

Suit for judicial separation, permanent alimony and custody of children under the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1936.

The plaintiff Hilla was married to the defendant Maneksha in 1927 at Jalna in H. E. H. the Nizam's territory. Hilla's father was born in Bombay.

The defendant was born in Bombay, and as a child was taken to Surat, where he was educated till he was seventeen or twenty-one. Thereafter he lived with his parents at Jalna. The defendant's father was born at Surat and died in Bombay in May, 1940. The defendant joined the service of the Nizam as a permanent way inspector, a post which could only be held by a subject of the Nizam. At the material date he was living at Upalwai in the Nizam's State. The defendant's grandfather was also born at Surat, where he lived during his lifetime.

The parties lived together as husband and wife, and two daughters and a son were born of the marriage. Differences, however, arose between them, and the wife complained of cruelty on the part of the husband. Ultimately the plaintiff left the defendant's protection on November 5, 1939. She first resided with her father at Secunderabad, but in May, 1940, she came to Bombay and took up her residence there.

On December 12, 1940, as the defendant was residing outside the jurisdiction of the Court, the present plaintiff, after obtaining leave under s. 29 (3) of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1936, filed this suit in the Parsi Chief Matrimonial Court at Bombay.

On January 22, 1941, the defendant took out summons praying that the leave granted to the plaintiff to file [her] suit in the Parsi Chief Matrimonial Court at Bombay under s. 29 (3) may be revoked on the ground that he was a subject of H. E. H. the Nizam, and that the plaintiff did not reside in Bombay within the meaning of s. 29 (3) of the Act.

The chamber summons was heard.

N. H. C. Coyajee, for the defendant in support.

M. L. Maneksha, for the plaintiff to show cause.

B. J. WADIA J. This is a chamber summons taken out by the defendant for revocation of the leave granted by this Court to the plaintiff on December 12, 1940, under s. 29 (3) of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act of 1936 for the purpose of enabling her to file this suit in this Court.

The suit is filed by the plaintiff against her husband for judicial separation, for permanent alimony, and for the custody of the children of the marriage. In paragraph 30 of the plaint it is alleged that the marriage ceremony was performed in Jalna in the Nizam State, that the defendant is a railway servant at Upalwai also in the Nizam State, and is residing there, that the plaintiff has now been residing in Bombay, and that it would be a great hardship to her if she was compelled to institute this suit in a Court outside Bombay. The application to the Court was made under r. 782 (2) of the Rules and Regulations for the Parsi Chief Matrimonial Court of Bombay. The application has according to that rule to be supported by the affidavit of the plaintiff in which she has to set out the grounds on which the leave is asked for. That affidavit was made on December 12, 1940, in which she has stated inter alia that she is at present residing in Bombay, that some of her witnesses are in Bombay, that it would be a great hardship for her and her Bombay witnesses to go to Upalwai where the defendant is residing, and further that there is no Parsi Matrimonial Court either at Secunderabad or at Hyderabad for the purpose of trying suits filed under the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act. The defendant has made an affidavit under r. 782 (5), as he desires to contest the evidence on which the Court granted leave to the plaintiff. His application has also to be supported by an affidavit, and the summons is to be taken out before filing the written statement or before the time to file the written statement expires, whichever is earlier. Defendant denies that there will be any hardship to the plaintiff in filing the suit in the Nizam State. He denies also that she is at present residing in Bombay for the purposes of the Act. Defendant also in paragraph 8 of his affidavit states that the plaintiff admits that she has not been residing in Bombay as required under the Act. I do not know where this admission has been made, nor what particular admission is referred to; none at any rate has been pointed out to the Court. It is, however, admitted that there is no Parsi Matrimonial Court in the Nizam State for the purpose of trying suits under the Act. It is alleged that there is a Court in Secunderabad for trying suits between husbands and wives, but it is nowhere alleged that there is any Court at Secunderabad or in any part of the Nizam's dominions for trying a suit between a Parsi husband and a Parsi wife under the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act of 1936. I quite agree that if this Court has no jurisdiction otherwise, the fact that there is no Court in the Nizam's dominions for the purpose of determining the suit may be no answer. The defendant has put in a supplemental affidavit in which he further alleges that he is not a Parsi subject of His Majesty the King Emperor and is not a Parsi subject within the provisions of s. 1 (2) of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act of 1936, and that therefore this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The defendant should have asked for leave to put in the supplemental affidavit before it was filed, but since it raises only a point of law which can be argued even without an affidavit, I have allowed both the supplemental affidavit and the plaintiff's affidavit in reply thereto to be taken on file.

There are thus two grounds on which the defendant contends that leave ought not to have been granted to the plaintiff to file this suit. The first is that the plaintiff does not, as required by s. 29 (3), reside in Bombay, and the second is that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Section 1 (2) defines the extent of the Act and it says that it extends to the whole of British India, and, in respect of the Parsi subjects of His Majesty, to the whole of India. The effect therefore is to extend the Act even to Native States in India in its application to Parsis, provided the Parsis are subjects of His Majesty. A Parsi is defined in the Act as a Parsi Zoroastrian. The Act thus applies to Parsi Zoroastrians residing in any of the Native States, if they are subjects of His Majesty. There is a proviso under which the Act could be modified in its application to territories in India beyond the limits of British India by notification in the Gazette of India.

I will take up the second ground first, for if this Court has no jurisdiction, then the Act cannot apply, and no question of leave under s. 29 (3) of the Act can arise. The terms "British India" and "India" are not defined in the Act, but they are defined in the General Clauses Act: see s. 1 (7) and s. 1 (27). I do not think there can be any dispute that the Native States, including the Nizam's State are not a part of British India, but they would be still a part of India. It is pointed out by Halsbury, Hailsham's edn., Vol. VI, paragraph 242, at page 199, that "Every person at birth becomes a member both of a political and of a civil society. The former determines his political status or nationality, on which depends his allegiance to a sovereign; the latter determines his civil status."

A person's civil status depends upon the law of his domicile according to which his municipal rights and obligations are determined. It is pointed out that every person has a domicile at every period of his life, and that no person can have more than one domicile at one time. That is also laid down in Udny v. Udny,<sup>1</sup> where Lord Westbury at p. 457 observes as follows:—

"The law of England, and of almost all civilized countries, ascribes to each individual at his birth two distinct legal states or conditions; one by virtue of which he becomes the subject of some particular country, binding him by the tie of natural allegiance, and which may be called his political status; another, by virtue of which he has ascribed to him the character of a citizen of some particular country, and as such is possessed of certain municipal rights, and subject to certain obligations, which latter character is the civil status or condition of the individual, and may be quite different from his political status. The political status may depend on different laws in different countries; whereas the civil status is governed universally by one single principle, namely, that of domicile, which is the criterion established by law for the purpose of determining civil status."

The words in s. 1 (2) of the Act, namely, "Parsi subjects of His Majesty" refer to the political status of such subjects as opposed to their civil status. Therefore the jurisdiction of the Court depends upon the political status of the Parsi subject, that is his nationality and his allegiance, and not upon his domicile.

The expression "subject of His Majesty" is not defined, but I do not think there is any difference between "subject of His Majesty" and "British subject". Under s. 2 (a) of the Indian Naturalization Act, VII of 1926, "British subject" means a British subject as defined in s. 27 of the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914. Under s. 27 (1) of that Act "British subject" means a person who is a natural-born British subject, or a person to whom a certificate of naturalization has been granted, or a person who has become a subject of His Majesty by reason of any annexation of territory. A British subject, therefore, unless a certificate of naturalization in a foreign country has been granted to him, means a person who is a natural-born British subject. Under s. 1 of the same Act certain persons are deemed to be natural-born British subjects, amongst them being, "(a) Any person born within His Majesty's dominions and allegiance." I need not refer to the other sub-sections, as they are not necessary for the purpose of this summons.

PANTHAKY
v.
B. J. Wadia J.

It is in evidence that the defendant was born in Bombay in 1898. He was therefore born within his Majesty's dominions and allegiance, and he is a natural-born British subject. His father was born at Surat and therefore he too would be a natural-born British subject within His Majesty's dominions and allegiance. The question arises whether the defendant by going over to and taking service in the Nizam's State and remaining there for a number of years has ceased to be a British subject, or, to put it shortly, has lost or changed his political status. The political status of a British born subject can only be lost if a person goes to a Foreign State and there obtains a certificate of naturalization, or by any other voluntary and formal act, becomes naturalized therein. It is also pointed out in Halsbury, Vol. VI, Hailsham's edn., paragraph 461 at p. 415, that natural allegiance is due from all natural-born British subjects, and a natural-born British subject cannot, apart from statute, divest himself of his British nationality so as to free himself from the duty of allegiance. If such a subject becomes naturalised in a foreign country, he would cease to be a British subject. It is therefore necessary for the defendant to show that he has become naturalised in the Nizam's State. There is no statute existing in the Nizam's State under which any certificate of naturalization is granted to a subject owing allegiance to the British sovereign going over and settling down in the Nizam's territory. The only piece of evidence which the defendant relies on is art. 39 of the Hyderabad Civil Service Regulations which provides that "No person unless specially authorised by His Exalted Highness can be appointed permanently or temporarily in the superior or inferior service of the Government, if he is not a natural born subject of His Exalted Highness or is not domiciled within the Dominions."

It is not suggested that the defendant was a natural-born subject of His Exalted Highness. He is in the service of His Exalted Highness by reason of his domicile within his dominions, and Note (1) to the article points out that—

"If a person has permanently resided in the Dominions for 15 years or has continuously served under the Government for 12 years, he and his lineal male descendants to two generations will be considered to be domiciled in the Dominions."

The defendant therefore is at best only domiciled in the Nizam's State, and by the fact of his having acquired a domicile in that State he cannot be said to have given up his allegiance to the British sovereign. His bare allegation in the box that he is not a British subject but is a subject of His Exalted Highness the Nizam cannot carry him any further. A mere statement is not proof of the allegation. Defendant has not ceased to be a British subject of His Majesty. He is therefore a Parsi, i.e. a Parsi Zoroastrian, subject

O. C. J. of His Majesty. He has changed his domicile no doubt, but thereby has 1941 not in any way changed his nationality or his political status. It was pointed — out also by Lord Westbury in the same case, namely, Udny v. Udny, that a PANTHAKY change of domicile does not necessarily mean a change of nationality, that is,
 v. of natural allegiance. That would be, as he points out, to confound the PANTHAKY political and civil states of an individual, and to destroy the difference bet— ween patria and domicilium. In Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 5th edn., pages
 B.J. Wadia J. 891-892, the learned author says that—

"The doctrine was at one time laid down that a change of domicile involves something like a change of allegiance, and that, for instance, an Englishman, in order to acquire a French domicile, must at any rate, as far as in him lies, endeavour to become a French citizen. This doctrine was strictly inconsistent with the theory, on which the received definitions of domicile are based, that a domicile is merely a permanent home. As long, therefore, as this doctrine was maintained, it was impossible for English Judges to treat as satisfactory any of the current definitions of domicile. The attempt, however, to identify change of domicile with change of allegiance has now been pronounced on the highest authority a failure."

The condition of the law as it existed before the decision in Udny v. Udny is also referred to by the House of Lords in Casdagli v. Casdagli.<sup>1</sup> Viscount Haldane pointed out that there was some obscurity at one time as to whether a change of allegiance was not also required in order to establish the acquisition of a new domicile, an obscurity which has now been removed, and a man can acquire a new domicile without in any way changing his allegiance as a natural-born subject of his sovereign.

Under the circumstances I hold that the defendant is a Parsi subject of His Majesty. There is no doubt that the plaintiff is also such a subject. It is not in evidence before me as to where she was born, but under s. 1 (b) (i) of the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, even a person born out of His Majesty's dominions is deemed to be a natural-born British subject, if his or her father was born within His Majesty's allegiance, and there is evidence that her father was born within His Majesty's dominions and allegiance. Both the plaintiff and the defendant therefore are Parsi subjects of His Majesty, and the provisions of the Act apply to both of them.

The next ground is that the plaintiff cannot be said for the purposes of leave to be a person residing in Bombay. It may be noted that the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act makes residence and not domicile a condition of jurisdiction. It was pointed out by Sir Charles Sargent as far back as 1878 in Mahomed Shuffli v. Laldin Abdulla<sup>2</sup> that the meaning to be given to the word "residence" in legislative enactments depends upon the intention of the Legislature in framing the particular provision in which the word is used, and that the word "reside" is for all practical purposes the same as the word "dwell". "Reside", therefore, is an elastic term and has a variety of meanings according to circumstances or the statute or the document in which it is used. In Ex parte Breull: In re Bowie<sup>3</sup> a debtor was held for the purposes of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, to reside in the City of London where he was employed in a bank, though he lived with his mother at a place outside the jurisdiction of the London Court. "Residence" signifies a person's abode. In an old English case Blackburn J. observed that "a man's residence is where he habitually sleeps". But I doubt whether this test would apply to modern conditions of living. It is, however, not essential that for the purpose of residence a person should have a house of his own. The question still remains what length of time is requisite to constitute residence in law. The residence which the learned Judge was considering in Mahomed Shuffli's case was residence under s. 380 of the old Civil Procedure Code of 1877 for the purpose of claiming security for costs from the plaintiff residing outside British India. He has further pointed out at p. 229 that neither the expression "reside" nor "dwell" necessarily implies a permanent state of things. Counsel for the defendant argued that the word "resides" in s. 29(3) must mean "reside" both permanently and bona fide. There is no doubt that the residence must be bona fide. A mere temporary sojourn which is casual, or to use the words of Kenyon C. J. in The King v. The Duke of Richmond<sup>1</sup> "mere passage residence", or the residence of a traveller passing from one place to another on his travels, is not such residence as is sufficient in law. That was pointed out in Arthur Flowers v. Mirmie Flowers,<sup>2</sup> and also by our Appeal Court in Nusserwanji Wadia v. Eleonora Wadia.<sup>3</sup> The question is whether bona fide residence must also be permanent. If that was so, no residence which is temporary, even though not casual and even though not for a passing purpose, can ever be bona fide, merely because it is not permanent. Some degree of continuity of residence is, however, necessary. There must be something more than a mere passing temporary occupation. If, however, it was the intention of the Legislature in the Act of 1936 to mean by the word "resides" a permanent residence, there was nothing to prevent it from having said so clearly. Plaintiff in her evidence stated that she intends to stay in Bombay permanently for the reasons given by her. Her intention in itself is immaterial, for she can change it at any time. But the evidence with regard to her intention is still relevant for the purpose of determining whether her residence is merely casual or for a temporary purpose. She stated that she left her husband's house at Upalwai sometime in November, 1939, and never intended for some reason or the other to return to it. Her permanent residence during her married life would naturally be that of her husband. Having broken away from his home and having gone with the intention of not returning to it, the question is what was really her place of residence. The mere fact that her father has a permanent residence in Secunderabad and that she went and stayed with him for some time, especially for the purpose of her confinement, as she always used to do before, does not make her father's place her permanent residence. She denied that she was residing in Bombay merely for the purpose of this suit. I need not point out that there are various cases on either side of the line in which a short period of a few days has been in some Courts considered sufficient to establish residence and by some Courts considered insufficient. O. C. J. katawarada Iyengar,<sup>1</sup> the appellant who at the date of the suit had taken a house on hire in Madras and intended staying there with his family for some months was held by the Privy Council to be residing in Madras. But as I have said, there are cases on either side of the line, and the meaning of the term "residence" must depend upon the circumstances of each case. If a person resides permanently at a particular place, there can be no doubt that that is his or her residence. But the residence need not necessarily be permanent. It is enough if it is bona fide, with an element of continuity about it, so that even if it is not permanent, it cannot be said to be merely casual or for a temporary or passing purpose. I am satisfied, therefore, that the plaintiff is residing in Bombay for the purpose of s. 29(3), and that the leave which was asked for was properly granted.

Under the circumstances the chamber summons must be dismissed with costs.

I have heard both counsel on the question of costs. The hearing of this summons has lasted for more than a day and has also involved the taking of evidence on both sides. The Court now has power under r. 785 (R) to give any special direction as it chooses in its discretion with regard to the payment of costs. I direct the defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs of this summons as if the summons was adjourned into Court and the costs were taxed as of a summons adjourned into Court on the Original Side, refresher being allowed.

A clause in a lease required the lessees to deliver over possession of the demised premises at the determination of the tenancy in the same good condition as it was at the time the lessees entered into possession subject to wear and tear. Another clause provided that "on the determination of the tenancy the lessees shall be entitled to remove the structure or shed which they might have erected during the continuance of the tenancy." The lease came to an end on August 31, 1939, and the lessees vacated the premises without removing certain structures. On September 13, 1939, a creditor of the lessees attached their right, title and interest in the land and the structures. On an application by the lessor to raise the attachment :—

Held, that, as the first clause made it obligatory upon the lessees to deliver over possession at the determination of the tenancy, the lessees were given no right to remain in possession after the determination of the tenancy ;

that the second clause amounted to a contract between the parties which excluded the provisions of s. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 ;

that having regard to the words "on the determination of the tenancy" in the second clause, if the lessees wished to remove the structures they were obliged to make provision for their removal by severing them from the soil, or by taking any steps which might be necessary so that they could remove them on the determination of the tenancy ;

that as the lessees had not done so, they lost all their rights to remove the structures or to demand possession of them from the lessor ;

that even if the lessees had the right to remove the structures after the determination of the tenancy and after they had gone out of possession, they would only have had the right to remove them within a reasonable time of the determination of the tenancy, forty-eight hours being enough in this case :

CHAMBER summons to raise attachment.

The plaintiff, Khimjee, supplied cotton and cotton stripping to the defendants, the Pioneer Fibre Co. Ltd. The defendants had rented a plot of land of the applicants admeasuring about 5000 square yards for the purposes of their business. Under the terms of the lease the tenancy was to expire on August 31, 1939. The defendants were at liberty to erect temporary structures which might be required for their business, and it was agreed that on determination of the tenancy they should be entitled to remove the structures which might have been erected by them during the continuance of the tenancy.

A sum of Rs. 1,891 was found due to the plaintiff on December 31, 1938, for goods supplied to the defendants.

As the defendants failed to pay that amount the plaintiff filed a suit on July 31, 1939, to recover it and a decree for Rs. 2,196-13-0 was passed in his favour.

The plaintiff thereafter applied for the execution of the decree by attachment of the right, title and interest of the defendants in the immoveable property in their possession. He also applied for attachment of moveable property belonging to the defendants. The properties were attached on September 13, 1939, and four structures purported to have been erected by the defendants were mentioned in the draft proclamation of sale.*

The applicants, Cawasji Jehangir & Co., Ltd., the lessors, took out a chamber summons applying for raising the attachment. They submitted inter alia that the defendants had left the premises before August 31, 1939, the date on which the tenancy was to expire, that they had let out the land with the existing structures to one Star Trading Company from September 1, 1939, that the Star Trading Company were in possession of the land and the structures as their lessees from September 1, 1939, that the defendants had no interest in the land or the structures at the date of the warrant of attachment; that some of the structures were not erected by the defendants, that even if the defendants were entitled to remove the structures they could only have done so during the continuance of the tenancy and could not remove them after they ceased to be in possession of the property.

The plaintiff in his affidavit in reply stated that the lease in respect of the premises was not registered and the defendants were only monthly tenants of the applicants, that the defendants continued to be in possession after August 31, 1939, that the applicants were not justified in letting the premises to the Star Trading Company as the defendants continued to be monthly tenants until ejection proceedings were taken against them by the applicants, that all the four structures were erected by the defendants and they had a right to remove them, and that the plaintiff was entitled to attach them and sell them as they belonged to the defendants.

M. V. Desai, for the plaintiff.

R. J. Colah, for the defendants.

BLACKWELL J. This is a summons taken out by the applicants for an order that the attachment levied by the plaintiff on the property at Fergusson Road, Lower Parel, by the warrant of attachment dated September 13, 1939, be raised. This summons was adjourned into Court for taking evidence. In view, however, of the arguments of counsel, and in particular of what has been conceded by counsel for the plaintiff, evidence has not become necessary. The matter has been greatly shortened by the concessions made by the learned counsel for the plaintiff.

The defendants became the tenants of the applicants. The terms upon which they became the tenants of the applicants are set out in the correspondence annexed to the affidavit of N. M. Bhagalia dated March 6, 1940. That correspondence amounting to an agreement to lease ought to have been registered by reason of the definition of a lease in s. 2(3) of the Indian Registration Act and s. 17(1)(d). It was not registered. Notwithstanding registration by virtue of the proviso to s. 49 of the Indian Registration Act these letters may be looked at as evidence of any collateral transaction not required to be affected by a registered instrument. Mr. M. V. Desai for the plaintiff has conceded that these letters can be looked at in connection with the present application.

Mr. Desai conceded by reason of the terms contained in these letters that the term began from September 1, 1931, and ended on August 31, 1939. Having regard to the allegation in Mr. Bhagalia's affidavit and the affidavit sworn by Manharlal Dwarkadas Mehta on March 6, 1940, Mr. Desai conceded that the term of the defendants ended on August 31, 1939, that they went out, and that the Star Trading Co. became the lessees of the applicants and went into possession under a lease on September 1, 1939.

The attachment levied by the plaintiff was not levied till September 13, 1939. It was on a piece or parcel of land situate at Fergusson Road, Lower Parel, by admeasurement seven hundred and sixteen yards and seven-eighths of another square yard or thereabouts with all the tenements, buildings, outhouses, godowns and watchman's shed thereon. The present summons relates to four structures alleged by the plaintiff to have been erected by the defendants on that parcel of land. The applicants contend that structures 1, 3 and 4 were not even standing on the portion of the applicants' land described in the warrant of attachment, and that No. 2 was the only structure standing on that portion. They also contend that structures 1 and 3 were not erected by the defendants. These contentions are disputed by the plaintiff. It has, however, not become necessary to go into any question of evidence relating to this dispute because this matter falls to be determined on a point of law.

Clause 12 of the letter of July 27, 1931, which letter became one of the terms between the parties, requires the lessees to deliver over possession of the demised premises at the determination of the tenancy in the same good condition as it was at the time the lessees entered into possession subject to wear and tear. Clause 15, which also became one of the terms, provides as follows :—

"On the determination of the tenancy the lessees shall be entitled to remove the structure or shed which they might have erected during the continuance of the tenancy."

Mr. Desai contended that this is a contract between the parties such as is contemplated by s. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that in the absence of a contract, or local usage to the contrary, the lessee may even after the determination of the lease remove at any time whilst he is in possession of the property leased, but not afterwards, all things which he has attached to the earth : see s. 108 (B) (h). As will be seen from Sir Dinshah Mulla's commentary on the Transfer of Property Act, 2nd edn., at page 609, this sub-section has been amended by the insertion of the words "even after the determination of the lease" to settle a conflict of decisions referred to in Angammal v. Aslami Sahib,<sup>1</sup> as to whether a lessee is entitled to an allowance of a reasonable time after the determination of the lease for the removal of his fixture. A further amendment "whilst he is in possession of the property leased but not afterwards" fixes definitely the time during which the right may be exercised. As Sir Dinshah Mulla points out the amendment introduces no new principle, but limits and defines the tenant's right to remove as one to be exercised during the term and negatives any right to remove when the tenant is not in possession. If he once quits possession Sir Dinshah Mulla says that he may not return, and the fixtures become the property of the lessors. In this connection reference may usefully be made to Govindaprasad Shaha v. Charusheela Dasee.<sup>2</sup>

In my opinion cl. (15) does amount to a contract between the parties which excludes the provisions of s. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act. I have to construe cl. (15) and determine the rights of the defendants and the lessors in the light of it. Having regard to cl. (12) of the terms which makes it obligatory upon the lessees to deliver over possession at the determination of the tenancy, I am of opinion that the defendants were given no right to remain in possession after the determination of the tenancy. Clause 15 gives the lessees the right to remove the structures or sheds on the determination of the tenancy. It is important to observe that the words are "on the determination of the tenancy," and not "after the determination of the tenancy". Having regard to the obligation to deliver over possession at the determination of the tenancy, I am of opinion that if the lessees wished to remove the structures they were obliged to make provision for their removal by severing them from the soil, or by taking any steps which might be necessary so that they could remove them on the determination of the tenancy. They did not do so and in my view they lost all their rights to remove the structures, or to demand possession of them from the lessors.

Even if I am wrong in my construction of cl. (15) and the lessees had, by virtue of cl. (15) or otherwise, the right to remove the structures after the determination of the tenancy and after they had gone out of possession, as they did, on August 31, 1939, I think that they would only have had the right to remove the structures within a reasonable time of the determination of the tenancy. That I fix at forty-eight hours. They did not remove those structures within that period and even on this view of the matter, I am of opinion that they had lost any right they might have had, if this should be the proper construction of cl. (15), long before September 13 arrived, the date upon which the plaintiff attached the right title and interest of the defendants.

Mr. Desai contended that even if the defendants had lost their right to remove the structures, the property in the structures still remained in the defendants and they were entitled to demand possession of them or compensation for them. I am unable to agree with this contention. If the defendants chose to leave these structures on the property of the lessors and chose not to remove them within the time allowed by the contract, or by law in that behalf, then in my opinion the defendants lost all right title and interest in those structures. They could not, in my view, have claimed to enter upon the premises with a view to remove them; they could not have sought to compel the lessors to remove them and hand them over, and the result is that it became the right of the lessors to do what they liked, with those structures, to destroy them, or leave them there as they chose.

Accordingly I am of opinion that the applicants are entitled to have this attachment raised. I direct it to be raised accordingly, and I direct the plaintiff to pay to the applicants the costs of this summons. The costs of the matter in Chambers being 135, I fix the costs of this matter including those costs at Rs. 750.

The law of pre-emption must, in places in which it exists by custom, be regarded as a right attached to the land, and not as a mere personal right.

Quære, whether the law of pre-emption applies by custom to houses within the old limits of the city of Ahmedabad or it applies also to houses in the new extensions of the city.

Quære, whether the custom of pre-emption which applies to houses can be extended to open sites.

The custom of pre-emption exists only as between freeholders, that is to say, the neighbouring land in respect of which the right of pre-emption is claimed as also the land sought to be pre-empted must be freehold. The right of pre-emption does not arise on the sale of a leasehold interest in land.

F. B. The plaintiff, Dhondubai, was a Deccan Brahmin. Her family came originally from the Deccan, and settled down in Ahmedabad nearly 150 years ago. She owned plots of land bearing Nos. 4608, 4609 and 4611 which were built upon with houses.

CHHAGANLAL
v.

One Bai Lakshmi owned plots Nos. 4605, 4606 and 4607, of which plot No. 4607, which was an open building site, was contiguous to plaintiff's plots Nos. 4608 and 4609. The other two plots, viz. Nos. 4605 and 4606, were built upon with ordis or rooms, and were contiguous to plot No. 4607.

All the lands in the Bhadra locality, inclusive of the lands belonging to the parties, were held under sanads issued by Government in form H given in the schedule and referred to in s. 133 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879. The lease in question contained the following provisions :—

"You have agreed as a tenant at will and accordingly you are confirmed in the said occupancy, and you shall have to pay anna one and pies ten per annum as land revenue. The terms of your tenure are as under and subject to the said terms your occupancy is both transferable and heritable, and will be continued by the British Government without any objection or question as to title to whatsoever from time to time be its lawful holder and subject only to the condition of the payment annually of the above land revenue according to the provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code or of any other law for the time being in force and subject to the terms stated below, and to the liability to have the said rate of assessment revised at the expiration of a term of . . . years received from the . . . and thereafter at successive periods of years in perpetuity, and to the necessity of compliance with the provisions of the law from time to time in force as to the time and manner of payment of the said assessment, and to the liability of forfeiture of the said occupancy and of all rights and interests connected therewith in case of your failure to pay the said assessment as required by law.

"2. If the Government want to have at any time this land or any part thereof it has a right to do so after giving a year's written notice to you, your successors-in-title or your alienees in respect thereof and at that time if there be any superstructure built on the said land or part thereof, the Government shall pay as compensation the market price that may be estimated in respect thereof. If there be any difference as regards this market value, the market value shall be fixed in accordance with the Land Acquisition Act or the law in force at that time or the provisions of any other law (in force). But if any land is taken in this way before 31-7-1950, the Government shall pay the market value prevailing at the time in respect of the said land being taken (by Government) to you, your successors-in-title or your assignees.

"3. As stated in para 2 so long as the Government does not take the said land the annual rent at the rate of one pie per 5 yards has to be paid by you your successors-in-title and your assignees for keeping the said land in your management for your personal use and the said rent is to be paid on 1-8-20 and thereafter (to be paid) in advance on the 1st of August every year."

On September 23, 1931, Bai Lakshmi sold the open land (No. 4607) and the ordis (rooms) with the lands underneath (Nos. 4605 and 4606) to the defendants Chhaganlal and Lallubhai for Rs. 2,121.

The plaintiff who was then away from Ahmedabad did not know of the sale. She learnt about it for the first time on December 2, 1931, when she returned to Ahmedabad.

Immediately on coming to know of it at 8 a.m. on December 2, 1931, either the plaintiff or her son made the first demand known as talab-i-Mowashibat. She next deputed her son to make the second demand, talab-i-ishhad, which he did.

The defendants showed no willingness to be pre-empted.

On April 30, 1932, the plaintiff filed a suit to enforce her right of pre-emption, against plots Nos. 4605 to 4607, together with the ordiis.

The defendants contested the suit.

The trial Court held that the plaintiff's right to pre-empt could not be doubted in view of the ruling in Motilal v. Harilal (22 Bom. L. R. 806), since according to the ruling in Jadulal Shahu v. Janki Koer (35 Cal. 575) it was not necessary to assert or prove the existence of the custom of pre-emption amongst the Hindus after it was judicially recognised, that even leasehold property could be claimed by the right of pre-emption, that the plaintiff could only claim plot No. 4607 by the right of pre-emption, and that the antecedent formalities of talabs were validly performed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's claim was therefore decreed only as regards plot No. 4607.

On appeal, this decree was affirmed by the Assistant Judge, who observed as follows :—

"It was urged on behalf of the appellants that the property being a leasehold property there could be no right of pre-emption in respect of the same. No authority was cited in support of this contention. The provisions of the Mahomedan law also do not support the contentions raised on behalf of the appellants. The right of pre-emption only arises on a sale of property. According to the provisions of the Mahomedan law it is not restricted that the property, in respect of which the right of pre-emption is claimed, must be owned by the vendor. The tenure of the property appears to be immaterial. In the absence of any provision in the Mahomedan law and any judicial decision, the argument raised on behalf of the appellants cannot be accepted. I therefore hold that a right of pre-emption arises on a sale of leasehold property."

The defendants appealed to the High Court. The plaintiff filed cross-objections to assert her right to pre-empt plots Nos. 4605 and 4606 also.

On November 7, 1940, the appeal was heard by Wassoodew J., who referred it to a division bench.

Accordingly on November 28 and 29, 1940, the appeal was heard by Beaumont C. J. and Sen J., when their Lordships referred it to a full bench.

A full bench consisting of Beaumont C. J., Divatia J. and Sen. J. heard the appeal on December 5 and 6, 1940.

I. I. Chundrigar, with K. T. Pathak, for the appellants.

A. G. Desai and J. C. Shah, for the respondent.

I. I. Chundrigar. The land in dispute is leasehold property. It is Government land given on lease and not an occupancy, as the tenant has to pay rent to Government and not assessment. Again, the sanad for holding the land was given in consideration of the tenant agreeing to remain on the land as a tenant at will. The tenancy expires on July 31, 1950. Even during the period of tenancy, the Government has the right to resume the land after giving a year's notice to the tenant. The tenant has the right to sell the superstructure on the land. He can also transfer his leasehold rights, as the lease is heritable and transferable but he has no occupancy rights, because he can be turned out at any time. The land is not at all a freehold; at the most it can be regarded as held on a yearly tenancy. The Mahomedan law of pre-emption is applied to the parties here, who are Hindus on the basis of custom.

LAL
v.

F.B. It is laid down in Mulla's Mahomedan Law (11th edn., p. 185, s. 180) that 1940 the right of pre-emption is recognised by custom among Hindus who are either natives of or are domiciled in certain parts of Gujarat.

DASHRATH- I submit that no custom of pre-emption has been alleged in the plaint. The LAL plaintiff has based her suit on a right to purchase the property from the vendor CHHAGANLAL in preference to any other person. The right of pre-emption is a right of re-purchase from the purchaser of certain immoveable property. The plaintiff only relies on certain rulings of the High Court which hold that such a right exists by custom in some places and in respect of some properties.

The earliest reported case is that of Umbaram Mukunddas v. Rughoonath Laldas.<sup>1</sup> It refers to a house in the Raipur locality in Ahmedabad. The pre-emptor was held to have forfeited his right "by declining the purchase of the house in dispute". The next case is that of Gordhandas Girdharbhai v. Prankor.<sup>2</sup> In this case the finding of the lower Court was that the evidence of the witnesses for the plaintiff did not amount to proof of the custom set up by him but the High Court recognised the existence of a local custom as to the right of pre-emption among the Hindus of Gujarat, following cases decided by the Sadar Divani Adalat from the districts of Broach and Surat. This case was from the Surat District. In Rewa v. Dukabhdas<sup>3</sup> the house sought to be pre-empted was situated in Jambusar in the Broach district. The property in dispute in Dahyabhai Motiram v. Chunilal Kishordas<sup>4</sup> was situated in Borsad in the Kaira district. In this case the Court held that the observations in Gordhandas Girdharbhai v. Prankor<sup>2</sup> were very wide and could not be extended to apply to any district except those of Broach and Surat. In other districts, the plaintiff must allege and prove that the custom of pre-emption was adopted as a usage amounting to ancient and invariable custom in that district. In this connection I may refer to Digambar Singh v. Ahmad Said Khan<sup>5</sup>, where the party was asked to prove that the custom of pre-emption survived the partition of property concerned theré.

In Mahomed Beg Amin v. Narayan Meghaji<sup>6</sup> it was held that the rule of pre-emption did not exist in the district of Khandesh either as a rule of law or as a rule of justice, equity and good conscience. The case came from a village in the Nandurbar taluka. The case of Gokaldas v. Partab<sup>7</sup> came from Godhra in the Panch-Mahals district, and the Hindus of the place were held to be governed by the doctrine of pre-emption. The custom of pre-emption was not applied to Hindus in the Panvel taluka of the Kolaba district in Sitaram Bhaurao v. Sayad Sirajul.<sup>8</sup>

The case of Motilal Dayabhai v. Harilal Magonlal<sup>9</sup> decided that the custom of pre-emption existed amongst the Hindus of Ahmedabad, but the plaintiffs in this case were Jains, and the right was claimed over a house.

In the next case—Jagjivan Haribhai v. Kalidas Mulji<sup>1</sup>—the custom of pre-emption was held applicable to Hindus of Surat district as regards houses, but it was treated as an open question whether they had adopted the law with regard to agricultural lands. Macleod C. J. remarked (p. 607): "It is certainly not advisable, in my opinion, to extend any customary law which is in conflict with the personal law of the parties unless there is evidence that such alien law has been adopted."

The case of Hamedmiya v. Benjamin<sup>2</sup> came from Ahmedabad, but the vendor being a Bene Israel, the law of pre-emption was not applied against him, and the Court held that the right of pre-emption was not an incident of property and was nothing more than a right of re-purchase from the purchaser. The property in suit was an open piece of land.

Even where a custom of pre-emption is found to exist in a particular portion of a town, a person claiming the right in another portion of it should prove such custom affirmatively: Lal Chand v. Hans Kumar.<sup>3</sup> In the present case there is no proof that the custom of pre-emption existed in the Bhadra locality of the city of Ahmedabad.

The properties in dispute in all the Bombay cases were freehold. None of the cases related to leasehold properties. The plaintiff has to prove that the custom applies to transfers of leasehold lands. Unless she does so, she must fail.

The transferor of the property to be pre-empted was not the owner of the land. She was only a tenant and what she sold was only the leasehold right she possessed. The right of pre-emption arises only out of a valid, complete and bona fide sale. It does not arise out of gift, wakf, inheritance, bequest, or a lease, even though in perpetuity (Mulla, p. 188, s. 182). A lease thus does not give rise to pre-emption, much less would a transfer of leasehold rights do so.

It has been held very early in the Calcutta High Court in Moonoolly Ram v. Baboo Huree Ram<sup>4</sup> that pre-emption applies only to sales. A lease in perpetuity with a rent (however small) reserved is not a sale, and cannot therefore be the subject of pre-emption. In other words, the Mahomedan law says you cannot get leasehold rights by pre-emption. You can only get the rights as owner. The same view was taken in the later case of Baboo Ram Golam Singh v. Nursing Sahoy,<sup>5</sup> where it was held that the right of pre-emption applies to sales only, and cannot be enforced with reference to leases in perpetuity like a mokurruree, which (however small the reserved rent) are not sales, and in which there is no "milkyut" or ownership on the part of the shufee or pre-emptor. It will appear from the facts narrated on p. 44 that this was the case relating to the transfer of leasehold rights and not the creation of a lease. The facts of that case are, therefore, identical with the facts of this case. The Patna High Court took the same view in Sheikh Mohammad Jamil v. Khub Lal Raut,<sup>6</sup> and held that the doctrine of pre-emption did not apply to the sale of the mukurrari interest. Sultan Ahmad J., after referring to the above cases, among others, said (p. 742) : " Unless the proprietary interest is transferred, the right of pre-emption does not accrue. The main pedestal on which the right of pre-emption stands is reciprocity. It is well-established on the texts as well as on the case-law that the pre-emptor must have the milkiyat or ownership in the property on account of which he claims the right of pre-emption. . . The milkiyat or ownership of the property being sine qua non for the exercise of the right of pre-emption, it is obvious that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 holding only the mokurrari interest could not pre-empt if the plaintiffs had sold their property. So the very principle of mutuality upon which the whole doctrine of pre-emption is based is wanting in this case, and so under no circumstances could the plaintiffs claim the right of pre-emption when only the mokurrari interest was transferred." The above case was followed in Mussammatt Bibi Saleha v. Haji Amiruddin<sup>1</sup> though the facts were somewhat different.

If the view is that pre-emption applies only to a section of the public then it should be proved that a particular section of the Hindu community has adopted that law. The plaintiff is a Deccani Brahman. It is not proved that Deccani Brahmins settling in Ahmedabad have adopted the custom of pre-emption. Her family should be deemed to have carried the personal law of Deccan with them and this did not include the law of pre-emption. No particular custom is referred to in the plaint, neither is such custom proved. The right is claimed from the vendee, not from the vendor so far as open land is concerned.

Moreover proof of the existence of the custom of pre-emption is not enough. Such a custom must be shown to be applicable not only to houses but also to lands in cities or lands in agricultural areas, as the case may be. The lower Courts have passed a decree for pre-emption in respect of an open piece of land. The question is, does the law of pre-emption apply to open lands in cities? Our High Court held in Jagjivan Haribhai v. Kalidas Mulji<sup>2</sup> that the existence of the custom of pre-emption in respect of houses would still leave the question of the prevalence of the custom in respect of agricultural lands an open one, with the burden of proving it on the plaintiff. In Hamedmiya v. Benjamin<sup>4</sup> this distinction was recognised and Patkar J. held that if the custom had been alleged, it would have been necessary to send down an issue for a finding as to whether the law of pre-emption applies by custom to an alienation of a small piece of land in the city. Patkar J. referred to the case of Ram Chand Khanna v. Goswami Ram Puri.<sup>3</sup> According to the latter case, although a custom of pre-emption relating to house property and based on Mahomedan law prevails in the city of Benares, it does not follow that such custom should be extended, without strict proof of its applicability to the sale of land as distinct from house property. As such, the plaintiff has not merely to prove the existence of the custom of pre-emption in Ahmedabad in respect of houses but also in respect of open land. Plaintiff has not been able to prove a single case, in which the custom applies to open lands in the city of Ahmedabad, and must, therefore, fail.

The land in dispute is Crown land. There is no authority to show that the custom of pre-emption applies to Crown lands. In the present case there is only a transfer of leasehold right, and the law of pre-emption does not apply to such a transfer.

Further, the plaintiff is not entitled to exercise the right of pre-emption, for she is not the owner of the adjoining property.

It is common knowledge that none of the properties in the fort of Bhadra in Ahmedabad are freehold. All these properties belong to Government and are given by them on lease to persons occupying them.

Only an owner of adjoining immoveable property is entitled to pre-empt and not his tenant (Mulla, p. 186, s. 181). Here both the pre-emptor and the owner of the property sought to be pre-empted are tenants of Government. The plaintiff has not alleged, much less proved, that she is the owner of her lands. She cannot, therefore, pre-empt.

As regards the formalities attendant on the exercise of the right of pre-emption, the lower appellate Court has not applied the law to the facts as found. It is alleged in the plaint that the first talab known as the talab-i-mowasibat was performed by the plaintiff's son. The finding of the Court is that it was performed by the plaintiff herself. It is also found that the second talab, i.e. talab-i-ishhad, was performed by the plaintiff's son who was authorised by the plaintiff in that behalf. Now the plaintiff's son in making the second talab makes reference only to the first talab as made by himself and not the one made by his mother. This is irregular and makes the second talab inoperative.

I concede that the plaintiff could make talabs through agents.

A. G. Desai. I submit Hamedmiya v. Benjamin<sup>1</sup> goes much too far in confining the law of pre-emption to particular classes of Mahomedans. The law of pre-emption no doubt applies primarily to Mahomedans. But it applies by custom in particular localities to non-Mahomedans as well. There is no justification in cutting up non-Mahomedans in those localities into several communal divisions and applying the law to one and not to the other.

In Jadu Lal Sahu v. Janki Koer<sup>2</sup> the Privy Council holds at p. 106 "that the right of pre-emption is enforceable irrespective of the persuasion of the parties concerned."

Zimmes or Infidels like Christians and Hindus can as well avail of the privilege (Baillie, p. 477). Thus Hedaya at p. 558 says: "A Mussulman and a Zimmee, being equally affected by the principle on which shaffa is established, and equally concerned in its operations, are therefore on an equal footing in all cases regarding the principle of shaffa."

The law of pre-emption, wherever it is recognised by force of custom, will be "presumed to be founded on and co-extensive with the Mahomedan law upon that subject" (Jadu Lal Sahu v. Janki Koer<sup>3</sup>). And under the Maho-medan law the right of shaffa or pre-emption is not a mere personal right but is a right attached to land. As observed by Mahmood J. in Gobind Dayal v. Inayatallah<sup>1</sup> it is not a right of "re-purchase", either from the vendor or from the vendee, involving any new contract of sale. According to Hedaya as translated from the original Arabic (in Gobind Dayal v. Inayatallah<sup>2</sup>): "Pre-emption becomes obligatory (i.e. enforceable) by a contract of sale, which means after the sale. Not that sale is the cause (of pre-emption), for the cause is conjunction (of the properties)". Thus the foundation of the right of shuffa is "the conjunction" of the tenements concerned. The right of shuffa thus exists antecedently to the sale. And the sale is a condition precedent, not to the existence of the right,—because the right (shafi-i-jar) is already there by reason of "conjunction" of vicinage—but only to its enforceability (Tajibo) (Gobind Dayal v. Inayatallah<sup>3</sup>). It is thus a right of substitution entitling the shafi-i-jar or the pre-emptor to step into the shoes of the vendee on complying with certain formalities (Gobind Dayal v. Inayatallah<sup>4</sup>).

The principle laid down in Hamedmiya's case that the right of pre-emption is merely a personal right and is not attached to the land is based on the ruling of the Calcutta full bench in Sheikh Kudratulla v. Mahini Mohan Shaha<sup>5</sup> which says that the right of pre-emption is nothing more than a right of re-purchase from the vendee and that it is a right which "comes into existence" after the right to the property has completely passed to the purchaser.

There is thus a conflict between two full bench decisions of the Allahabad and the Calcutta High Courts and Hamedmiya v. Benjamin has preferred to follow the latter. But the conclusion of the Calcutta full bench is based on a mistranslation of the Arabic word "Tajibo" in the Hedaya. And as pointed out by Mahmood J. in Gobind Dayal v. Inayatallah<sup>6</sup> the correct interpretation of the word is not "established" as given by Hamilton in his Hedaya—which is a translation not of the original Arabic text, but of a translation of the Persian version of the Arabic text—but "becomes obligatory, necessary or enforceable". The right of pre-emption on the point of vicinage does not require to be "established" like "a right of re-purchase." It is attached and continues to be attached to the tenement concerned and can under certain circumstances at once be "enforced" against the adjoining tenement sold.

The right is thus not personal but is an incident of property and has nothing to do with the caste or the community to which the parties belong. In fact this right was enforced against the Official Assignee, as a right annexed to the land and not dependent on the religious persuasion of the parties concerned in Sehobaran Singh v. Kulsum-un-Nissa.<sup>7</sup>

As regards non-Mahomedans, therefore, all that need be proved is whether the right of pre-emption is recognised by custom in the locality in which the dispute is raised. And if such custom is proved, it is not necessary to prove to which particular community the party belongs.

The plaintiff is domiciled in Ahmedabad and her family has lived there for over one hundred and fifty years and the property in dispute is situate within the precincts of the ancient city of Ahmedabad. And so far as the city of Ahmedabad is concerned the right of pre-emption has been judicially recognised in several decisions. See Motilal Dayabhai v. Harilal Maganlal<sup>1</sup> and the other instances referred to in the judgment of the trial Court under appeal in that case : see also Nanlal Motilal v. Natvarlal Trikamlal<sup>2</sup> in which this custom was judicially recognised as applying to Hindus in Ahmedabad. And once a custom is judicially recognised, it is not necessary to assert or prove it : Jadu Lal Sahu v. Janki Koer<sup>3</sup> and Gireeshchandra Bhattacharya v. Rabeendranath Das.<sup>4</sup>

It is true that the right of shaffa or pre-emption arises only out of a completed sale and not out of a mere lease even though in perpetuity (Mulla, para 182). But that does not mean the two tenements must be freehold. The nature of tenure of the two tenements is irrelevant for the purposes of pre-emption. And the argument based on the doctrine of reciprocity is equally irrelevant. Because no one is bound to pre-empt and shuffee does not concern itself with the benefits or disadvantages that may or may not accrue to the parties concerned. The Mahomedan law, I submit, does not make any distinction between freehold and leasehold properties nor between houses and lands. And it is therefore better first to examine the texts themselves rather than ascertain what the Judges may have said in this behalf.

Because Courts are not entitled to put their own interpretation on the Koran when it is interpreted in a particular way, e.g., by the Hedaya (Aga Mahomed Jaffer Bindaneem v. Koolsom Bee Bee<sup>5</sup>) or to introduce new rules of law when the ancient commentators did not themselves deduce those conclusions : Baker Ali Khan v. Anjuman Ara Begam : Sidik Ali Khan v. Anjuman Ara Begam.<sup>6</sup>

And the Hedaya quotes the Prophet as saying "Shaffa takes place with regard to all lands or houses" (p. 558) and makes no distinction between freehold and leasehold or between houses and building sites. The Mahomedan law does no doubt not recognise alienation by way of a lease as giving rise to pre-emption. But it does not follow from this that the property transferred must not be leasehold or that it must be freehold. In Chap. III in dealing with the articles against which the right of pre-emption can or cannot be enforced, the Hedaya expressly mentions articles against which the right cannot operate (p. 558). And it is noteworthy that leasehold land is not included in that category.

Futawa Alamgiri is another authoritative text on Mahomedna law and Baillie in his Digest of Mahomedan Law, which is mainly founded on Futawa Alamgiri, mentions six requisites for enforcement of the right of shaffa. And

F. B. he mentions the sixth requisite or condition as follows (Book VII, c. 1, p. 47) : 1940 "There must be milk or ownership of the shufee, or pre-emptor, at the — time of the purchase, in the mansion on account of which he claims the right DASHRATH- of pre-emption. So that he has no right on account of a mansion of which he LAL is merely the tenant for hire, or that he has sold before the purchase, or has CHHAGANLAL converted into a musjid, or place of worship". This condition in the first
 v. place is confined to ruba or mansion and has no reference to akar or land on BAI which it stands. It does not say that the pre-emptor must be the owner of DHONDUBAI both the mansion (ruba) and also of the land (akar). Next the meaning — of the expression "there must be milk of the shufee" does not really mean that the shufee must be the absolute owner of the tenement. Baillie no doubt translates "milk" as "ownership" and though the word "ownership" may be the nearest equivalent of milk in Arabic, the latter expression according to Mahomedan jurists "covers a wider range of ideas than those included in mere proprietary rights" : see Abdul Rahim's Muhammadan Jurisprudence, p. 262. The idea underlying condition No. 6 is that the pre-emptor must have full and free power of disposition over the property and not that he must also be the full owner thereof. This is illustrated in the three illustrations given in condition No. 6 itself.

In the present case the plaintiff is admittedly the owner of the ruba or the superstructure and the site on which it stands also belongs to her at any rate till 1950, and she had a free right of transfer thereof. She is not a mere tenant under Government. She is a grantee of occupancy rights on certain terms and conditions. The parties concerned hold sanads in form B given in schedule H of the Bombay Land Revenue Code with permanent rights of occupancy though no doubt defeasible on certain terms by Government. Such terms may or may not be enforced by Government. But all lands held even on unrestricted survey tenure could be forfeited e.g. for failure to pay assessment to Government. And if the argument on the other side is carried to its logical conclusion pre-emption can never be claimed except in the case of inam lands where nothing need be paid to Government.

Moorooly Ram v. Baboo Huree Ram<sup>1</sup> simply says pre-emption applies to sales and not to leases even though in perpetuity. The case does not touch the point now under consideration. The case of Baboo Ram Golam Singh v.
Nursing Sahoy<sup>2</sup> follows Moorooly Ram v. Baboo Huree Ram<sup>3</sup> and says the right of pre-emption applies to sales only and not to leases in perpetuity, because there is no "milkyut or ownership in the pre-emptor" (p. 45). The conclusion in this case is correct but the reasoning is wrong and is based on a wrong conception of the word "milkyut" or milk in Baillie's Digest at
 p. 477. "Milk" in condition No. 6 referred to by Baillie at p. 477 really means, as already stated, right of disposition (milku't-tasarruf) : Abdul Rahim, p. 263.

The case of Sheikh Mohammad Jamil v. Khub Lal Raut<sup>4</sup> follows these two cases and Sakina Bibi v. Amiran.<sup>5</sup> No attempt has, however, been made in this case by Sultan Ahmad J. to ascertain the correct meaning of the word

"milk" or milkyut beyond making a general assertion :—"It is well established on the text... that the pre-emptor must have milkyut or ownership in the property." And in support of this statement the only text quoted is Baillie, pp. 473, 474, and Baillie's interpretation of the word milk or "ownership" is accepted without demur.

The case of Mussanmat Bibi Saleha v. Haji Amiruddin<sup>1</sup> follows Sheikh Mohammad Jamil v. Khub Lal Raut<sup>2</sup> and suffers from the same infirmity. Both these cases introduce the principle of reciprocity which is not at all recognised by Hedaya or Fatwa Alam in relation to pre-emption. So also in Phul Mohammad Khan v. Kazi Kutubuddin<sup>3</sup> the interpretation of the word "milk" is assumed to be "ownership" and the attention of the Court does not seem to have been drawn to the three divisions of milk as given by Abdul Rahim at p. 262.

The advocate also discussed the following cases : Sitaram Bhaurao v. Sayad Sirajut<sup>4</sup> ; Motilal Dayabhai v. Harilal Magankal<sup>5</sup> ; *Sitaram Bhaurao v. I. I. Chundrigar was not called upon to reply.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a second appeal from the Extra Assistant Judge of Ahmedabad. In the suit the plaintiff seeks to exercise a right of pre-emption in respect of the suit property, which is situate in the Bhadra division of Ahmedabad. The plaintiff seeks to exercise the right of pre-emption by reason of her owning property adjacent to the suit property. So that we are only concerned in this case with the right of a neighbour to exercise the right of pre-emption, and not with the right of other parties, like co-owners.

Pre-emption is a part of the Mahomedan law, and, so far as is necessary for the purpose of the present appeal, one may say that it is the right of an owner of property to acquire from the purchaser of adjacent property such property at the price and on the conditions at and on which he has bought it. The object of the law, as explained in the Hedaya, was to enable landowners to avoid the advent of an undesirable neighbour, and the Prophet laid down that the neighbour has a right superior to that of a stranger in the land adjacent to his own. So that, under Mahomedan law, a neighbour can acquire property, which has been sold, from the purchaser, provided he observes certain formalities, and in this case the lower Courts have held that the formalities were duly complied with, and that is a finding of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal.

It is rather curious, having regard to the antiquity of this doctrine, to find that even at the present time there is considerable doubt as to some of its important features, and in particular as to whether the rights and burden of

F. B. pre-emption are incidents annexed to the land, like an easement, or whether 1940 they are personal to the owners of the lands affected. This Court in a case, ————— to which I will refer later, in the year 1928 held that in all cases pre-emption DASHRATH- is a mere personal right, depending on the community of the parties; but LAL Mr. Justice Mahmood in the judgment which he delivered as a member of CHHAGANLAL a full bench of the Allahabad High Court in Gobind Dayal v. Inayatullah<sup>1</sup>
 v. discusses exhaustively the whole question of pre-emption, and comes to the BAI conclusion that the right is in the nature of an easement, that it is annexed DEONDUBAI to the land under Mahomedan law, and that the right comes into existence ————— on the completion of the sale. The person from whom the land must be Beaumont C.J. acquired by the neighbour is the purchaser, but, as Mr. Justice Mahmood ————— points out, that is because, until the sale is actually effected, it cannot be said that the owner of the land in question has unequivocally elected to part with it. But as soon as he has sold, the right of the neighbour to be substituted for the purchaser arises. I agree with the view expressed by Mr. Justice Mahmood that this right of pre-emption was originally under Mahomedan law a right attached to the land. No doubt, at the present time, as between Mahomedans in British India it has become part of their personal law, but that is because the law of pre-emption is no part of the general law of British India, and since Mahomedans are scattered about over India and are not segregated in particular localities, unless this rule be regarded as part of their personal law, they would cease to enjoy the benefit of it. But in this case we are not dealing with Mahomedans. The parties are all Hindus. The plaintiff is a Deccani Brahmin, and one argument of the appellants is that this right of pre-emption is personal, and does not apply to Deccani Brahmins. For the reasons I have given, I think that that argument has no substance in it, and that if the right affects the land in suit, the plaintiff can exercise it.

It is clear from many cases that although the right of pre-emption does not apply to British India generally, it has been adopted by custom in certain localities, and it is said that it has been adopted by custom in Ahmedabad.
 I am clearly of opinion that the custom as adopted in a particular locality must be in accordance with the law as it originally was, and I think, therefore, that in places in which the law of pre-emption exists by custom, it must be regarded as a right attached to the land, and not as a mere personal right.
 In my opinion, the Privy Council in Sheobaran Singh v. Kulsum-un-Nissa<sup>2</sup> have really decided that point. They were dealing there with a case in which the parties were Hindus, and the owner of the land in respect of which the right of pre-emption was sought to be exercised had become insolvent, and the land had vested in the Official Assignee. It was held by the Privy Council that the Official Assignee took the land with all its benefits and all its burdens, including the obligation of having this right of pre-emption exercised against him. It seems to me to follow from that decision that the Privy Council regarded this right, where it exists by custom, as a right annexed to the land, because if it were a mere personal right, depending on the religious persuasion of the parties concerned, it could hardly pass to an Official Assignee.

The appellants have taken three points on this appeal, apart from the point which I have mentioned that the plaintiff, being a Deccani Brahmin, is not entitled in any case to exercise the custom. They say, first of all, that no custom is alleged, or proved, in the plaint. The answer to that, made in both lower Courts, is that this custom has been judicially recognized as applying to Ahmedabad; and, no doubt, it is the law that if a custom is known, and has been judicially recognized, it is not necessary to allege or prove it; it has become part of the local law of which the Court takes judicial notice. Putting it shortly, the authorities on this point come to this. In Gordhandas Girdharbhai v. Prankor<sup>1</sup> it was asserted by a division bench that the custom was recognized in the whole of Gujarat, though it was not necessary for the purposes of that decision to go as far as that. In Dahyabhai Motiram v. Chunilal Kiskordas,<sup>2</sup> which was a case relating to the Kaira district which is in Gujarat, the Court considered that there was no justification for the view that this custom prevailed throughout Gujarat, and they held that it did not apply in the Kaira district. That case undoubtedly very much weakened the authority of Gordhandas Girdharbhai v. Prankor. It was held in Mahomed Beg Amin v. Narayan Meghaji<sup>3</sup> that the custom did not apply to Khandesh district. Then comes Motilal Dayabhai v. Harilal Maganlal<sup>4</sup> in which it was held that the custom existed amongst Hindus in Ahmedabad, and then there is Hamedmiya v. Benjamin<sup>5</sup> (which I have mentioned) in which the Court held that, assuming the custom to exist in Ahmedabad, it did not extend to the vendee in that case, who was a Bene Israelite. The Court expressed the view that this right was purely personal, and for the reasons I have given I think that the ratio decidendi in Hamedmiya v. Benjamin cannot be supported. However, it is not in any case a direct authority for the proposition that the custom exists in Ahmedabad. For that one has to go back to Motilal Dayabhai v. Harilal Maganlal. In that case the learned Chief Justice Sir Norman Macleod says that the trial Judge referred to a number of decisions both of the High Court and of the Courts at Ahmedabad, in which the custom had been considered, and he says that the custom was not disputed, but was assumed to exist, and that the effect of the decisions is that the custom of pre-emption amongst Hindus in Ahmedabad must be recognized. One criticism which arises on that decision is that "Ahmedabad" is a very vague expression. Ahmedabad is a city, and not a district, and in recent times the limits of Ahmedabad city have very much extended. Generally speaking, a local custom must be certain as to the locality in which it operates, and I do not myself know of any authority for saying that a local custom can apply within the limits of a city for the time being, and that it will expand or contract with the growth or shrinkage of the city. However, it is not disputed in this case that the lands in question are within the ancient city of Ahmedabad as it existed in the time of the Moghuls when, no doubt, this custom originated, and it may well be that the custom within the walled city of Ahmedabad does exist. It is not necessary in the 1940 Then another objection which has been taken by the appellants is that — the suit property in this case is an open site, and all the cases in which this DASERATH- custom has been recognized in Ahmedabad have been cases of house property.

 LAL In Jagjivan Haribhai v. Kalidas Mulji,<sup>1</sup> which was a case dealing with the CHHAGANLAL custom in Surat, and in Ram Chand Khanna v. Goswami Ram Puri,<sup>2</sup> which
 v. was a case dealing with the custom in the city of Benares, the Courts.
 BAI pointed out that the custom had been shown to exist in respect of house DHONDUBAI property in the districts concerned, but they declined to extend it to open — sites. I agree with the view expressed in those cases that this custom is not Beaumont C.J. one which should be extended. The law may have been a beneficial one as — applied to village communities in ancient times by ensuring that a man did not get an unpopular neighbour, but it obviously is less suitable to conditions of life in a city where people come and go frequently, and a man may well not know his neighbour by sight. It is moreover difficult to reconcile the custom with modern views as to the desirability of free disposition of immoveable property. Therefore, I am certainly not disposed to extend the custom, but Mr. Desai for the respondent points out that the general rule as laid down by the Privy Council in Jadu Lal Sahu v. Janaki Koer<sup>3</sup> is that where this right of pre-emption is introduced by custom amongst Hindus, the right must be co-extensive with the right as it existed under Mahomedan law, and under Mahomedan law it seems to have been applicable both to land and houses. That is clearly stated in Hamilton's Hedaya at p. 548. I doubt if the custom can be confined to house property, but again it is not necessary to express any decided opinion on that second point.

The third point taken, which seems to me to be fatal to the respondent, is that this custom of pre-emption only exists as between freeholders, that is to say, the neighbouring land in respect of which the custom is claimed must be freehold, and the land sought to be pre-empted must also be freehold. Now, in this case the learned Extra Assistant Judge held that the defendants' interest was a leasehold interest up to July 31, 1950. That is clearly wrong. When one looks at the sanads, under which the defendants hold, they are in the form given in sch. "H" to the Bombay Land Revenue Code with certain modifications, and I think the result of the sanads is to show that the defendants are given a permanent right of occupancy, but subject to the right of Government at any time on a year's notice to resume possession of the property on payment of certain compensation, which varies according to whether the resumption takes place before or after July 31, 1950.
 The right of Government to resume possession at any time on a year's notice is plainly inconsistent with the view that the land is owned by the defendants as freehold. There is no evidence, nor is there any allegation, as to what the plaintiff's title is, but it is common knowledge that within the district of Bhadra all properties are held on the same footing as the property of the defendants. I think we must assume that the title of the plaintiff is of that nature, but, at any rate, the plaintiff has failed to establish that she is the full owner of the property.

The question then arises, whether this right of pre-emption exists as between parties who have got something less than the full freehold interest. Mr. Desai admits that there is nothing in the Hedaya which lays it down that the right exists in respect of anything less than the freehold interest, but he says that there is also nothing which restricts the right to freehold interest. Since in ancient times the Mahomedan law did not recognize leases, although it recognized the hire of land for purposes of user, it is not surprising that the matter is not discussed in the Hedaya. But in Baillie's "Digest of Mahomedan Law", Part I (2nd edn.), in which the author sets out the conditions on which the right of pre-emption can be exercised, the 6th condition at p. 477 is in these terms :—

"6th. There must be milk or ownership of the shufee, or pre-emptor, at the time of the purchase, in the mansion on account of which he claims the right of pre-emption. So that he has no right on account of a mansion of which he is merely the tenant for hire, or that he has sold before the purchase, or has converted into a musjid, or place of worship."

That is a definite assertion that the pre-emptor, at any rate, must have the full ownership, and in Sheikh Mohammad Jamil v. Khub Lal Raut<sup>1</sup> which has been followed recently in Patna in Phul Mohammed Khan v. Quazi Kutubuddin,<sup>2</sup> the learned Judges held, relying on that condition as showing that the pre-emptor must have the full ownership, that so also must there be full ownership in the land pre-empted, because otherwise there would be no reciprocity, and reciprocity is essential for the existence of this right of pre-emption. Those cases also follow Baboo Ram Golam Singh v. Nursing Sahoy,<sup>3</sup> in which it was held that the right of pre-emption did not arise on the sale of a leasehold interest in land. I see no reason for differing from those authorities. I think the cases were rightly decided, and as I have already indicated, I am certainly not disposed to extend this custom beyond the limits within which up to now it has been recognized.

In my judgment, on that ground the appellants must succeed. The plaintiff has not shown that she possesses land which entitles her to exercise this right of pre-emption. She seems also to have claimed in the trial Court to exercise a right of purchase by contract, and issue No. 6 in the trial Court related to that matter. That issue was reserved. If the parties wish to have that issue tried, the matter will have to go back to the trial Court for trial of that issue alone.

All costs in the trial Court, except costs of issue No. 6, and costs in the District Court and this Court must be paid by the respondent.

Cross-objections dismissed with costs.

DRIVATIA J. I agree that the appeal should be allowed on the ground that the right of pre-emption attaches under the Mahomedan law only to sales of proprietary interest in the land and the suit property is held not in proprietorship but under a precarious leasehold tenure.

BAI

Divatia J.

It may be taken for the purpose of this appeal that the custom exists among the Hindus of Ahmedabad to exercise the right of pre-emption with regard to sales of house properties, and speaking for myself, I have no doubt about the existence of such a custom from beyond legal memory. It is a kind of custom which is so long known and so well known as not to require any proof at the present time. As early as 1823 it had been judicially recognized and it was also recognized in Motilal Dayabhai v. Harilal Maganlal.<sup>1</sup> If some decisions have proceeded on the admission of the custom, it was because the custom as admitted could not have been successfully challenged in a Court of law. Whether the custom extends beyond the original city walls of Ahmedabad, it is not necessary to decide in this case as the suit property is situated in Bhadra which is a part of the ancient city of Ahmedabad and within its walls. It is, however, clear that all cases in which pre-emption has been allowed are those relating to houses of absolute ownership of the parties. The origin of the custom is due to the natural desire of acquiring the adjacent property for the growing needs of the family especially where one house with its peculiar structure for the accommodation of one family is partitioned into different parts between its co-owners. It is also partly due to the desire of preventing an outsider from breaking up the homogeneous character of the locality. The only law recognising the right of pre-emption being the Mahomedan law which governed a large part of the population of Ahmedabad, the Hindus also conveniently adopted it as a customary right. It would not, however, be quite correct to say that the custom was adopted by the local Hindus as their personal law. It was more in the nature of a local custom attached to property than a part of the personal law of the Hindus. It is true that in Hamedmiya v. Benjamin<sup>2</sup> the custom was not recognised in the case of a Bene Israel vendee at Ahmedabad on the ground that it was proved to exist only among the Hindus of that city. But I think it is more logical to recognise the custom as attaching to property in a local area than to regard it as a personal custom. The recognition of the custom as applying to the Hindus of Ahmedabad was due to the fact that when it was being established there were few non-Mahomedans in the city who were not Hindus. Although, therefore, the custom is held applicable to Hindus, it should be not regarded as having a personal origin but as attaching to houses situated within the city of Ahmedabad.

But whether the custom be regarded as attaching to persons or to property, it is clear that both under the Mahomedan law and the customary law, the right of pre-emption can be exercised only with respect to property in which proprietary rights could be and have been transferred. The terms of the sanad granted for the suit property make it absolutely clear that it was given to the holder as a tenant-at-will, although it is provided that he may not be ejected without a year's written notice. It is also stated that the holder can at any time be ejected after the requisite notice was given, and he may be compensated for the land as well as the building in different ways depending upon its resumption before or after 1950. It is further stated

s. c. 22 Bom. L. R. 806.

that what was to be paid for the land to the Government was certain annual rent for its occupation and that the rent was to be paid so long as the Government did not resume the said land. It is, therefore, clear that the holder of the land was not granted absolute rights of ownership in it but certain rights created under a leasehold tenure under which the tenant could be ejected at any time after a year's notice. There is no decision either under the Mahomedan law or under the custom of pre-emption which lays down that the right of pre-emption would attach to property held under such a leasehold tenure. On the other hand, there are several decisions of the Calcutta, Allahabad as well as Patna High Courts which clearly show that the right of pre-emption cannot be exercised with respect to property transferred under mukarrari tenure or leases granted in perpetuity. The decisions in Baboo Ram Golam Singh v. Nursingh Sahoy,<sup>1</sup> Sheikh Mohammad Jamil v. Khub Lal Raut,<sup>2</sup> Sakina Bibi v. Amiran,<sup>3</sup> and the latest decision in Phul Mohammad Khan v. Quazi Kutubuddin<sup>4</sup> are relevant on this point. It is, however, urged on behalf of the respondent that the texts in the Mahomedan law do not specifically say that the right of pre-emption could not be exercised in respect of leasehold land. But the word used in the texts is "milkiat" and the Hedaya uses that term only in the sense of a proprietary right. It is not only the property for which pre-emption is claimed that must be held in absolute proprietorship but as held in Sakina Bibi v. Amiran the pre-emptor also must have vested ownership in the tenement for which the right of pre-emption is exercised. That seems to be consistent with the reason of the law of pre-emption. A person requires the right of pre-emption either because of his permanent interest in his property he wishes to prevent an undesirable person from becoming his neighbour, or because he wants to enlarge his house by purchasing the adjacent property. But there would be no meaning in granting such a right to a person whose tenure is so precarious that he is liable to be ejected at any time by the superior holder from his own house or from the house acquired by pre-emption.

It would be a question also whether the right of pre-emption would attach to an open piece of land. So far as agricultural lands are concerned, it has been rightly doubted by our Court in Jagjivan Haribhai v. Kalidas Mulji<sup>5</sup> as to whether the right of pre-emption would attach to such lands, and the Allahabad High Court has in the case of Hindus in Benares expressly held that the right of pre-emption attaches to houses only but not to open land.

There is no doubt that the rule of pre-emption, which puts fetters on the unrestricted right of transfer and enjoyment of property and is against the rule of justice, equity and good conscience, should be strictly applied, especially when it is sought to be relied upon as a part of custom, and in the present case I am of the opinion that the right of pre-emption based on custom should not be extended to transfers of leasehold property in respect of which it has not been exercised in the past.

It must, therefore, be held that the plaintiff has no right of pre-emption with regard to this land held under a leasehold tenure. It may be open to

City of Bombay Municipal Act (Bom. III of 1888), Secs. 3(m)†, 257(1) and 375—"Owner", meaning of.

The word "owner" as defined by s. 3(m) and used in ss. 257(1) and 375 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, does not include trustees of a wakf property who, under a permission of the High Court to raise a loan on the property, borrow money on the property and give to the creditor the right of collecting rents from the tenants of the property entitling him out of the rent to pay to himself a commission of certain per cent. and to appropriate the balance of the rent in reduction of the loan.

The expression "receives the rent" in s. 3 (m) is not used in any technical sense.

THE accused and certain other persons were trustees of certain wakf properties in Bombay.

Under a permission obtained from the High Court the trustees were enabled to raise a loan of Rs. 20,000 on the security of the wakf properties. The trustees accordingly raised on February 5, 1940, a sum of Rs. 3,500 from one Mohiuddin (creditor) and gave to him the right of collecting rent from the tenants of certain wakf property on condition that out of the rent the creditor

"Owner" when used in reference to any premises, means the person who receives the rent of the said premises, or who would be entitled to receive the rent thereof if the premises were let, and includes—

(i) an agent or trustee who receives such rent on account of the owner ; and

(ii) an agent or trustee who receives the rent of, or is entrusted with, or concerned for, any premises devoted to religious or charitable purposes ; and was to pay to himself a commission of twelve and a half per cent. and apply the balance in reduction of the amount of the advance.

(iii) a receiver, sequestrator or manager appointed by any Court of competent jurisdiction to have the charge of, or to exercise the rights of an owner of, the said premises.

On March 9, 1940, the accused was served by the Bombay Municipality with a notice under ss. 257(1) and 375 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, requiring him to clean the water-closet pans, to put in working order the flushing tanks, to clean and repair the waste water pipes and to lime-wash the house internally.

On September 11, 1940, the accused pointed out to the Municipality that the house in question was in the possession of Mohiuddin under a deed and that he (creditor) was receiving rents in respect of it.

The accused was tried by an Honorary Presidency Magistrate, who found him guilty of offences under ss. 257(1) and 375 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 60 on the two charges.

The accused applied to the High Court in revision.

B. S. Panisuff, for the accused.

B. G. Rao, Assistant Government Pleader, for the Crown.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a revision application against the conviction of the accused by a Bench of Honorary Presidency Magistrates of offences under ss. 257(1) and 375 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888.

The accused was served with a notice on March 9, 1940, requiring him to do certain work covered by those sections. The only question is whether he is a person liable to be served with such a notice and required to do the work in question, and that depends entirely on the definition of the expression "owner". It is not suggested that the accused is an occupier, which is one of the words used in s. 375. The only question is whether he is an owner.

"Owner" is defined in s. 3(m) of the Act as meaning the person who receives the rent of the said premises, or who would be entitled to receive the rent thereof if the premises were let, and includes an agent or trustee who receives such rent on account of the owner, and an agent or trustee who receives the rent of, or is entrusted with, or concerned for, any premises devoted to religious or charitable purposes. It is suggested that these premises are devoted to charitable purposes. But there is no evidence that the accused is a trustee or concerned with the management thereof.

The position with regard to the receipt of rent at the date when the notice was served was this. Under a document, which is exhibit C, dated February 5, 1940, the accused and certain other persons, who are said to be trustees of wakf property, entered into an agreement with one Mohiuddin Bawa Saheb, under which it is recited, that the parties of the first part, who are called the debtors, had obtained permission from the High Court to raise a loan of Rs. 20,000 and that they were at the moment in urgent need of a loan of Rs. 3,500, which the party of the second part, called the creditor, had agreed to advance. Then by the document the debtors gave to the creditor a right of collecting rent from the tenants of the property in question, and out of the rent he was to pay to himself a commission of twelve and a half per cent. and the balance of the rent he was to appropriate in reduction of the advance of Rs. 3,500. Whatever that document may amount to in law, whether it is an assignment of rent or power-of-attorney, it seems to me that as long as the loan or any part of it is outstanding, it is the creditor, and not the debtors, who can collect the rent. In my opinion, the expression "receives the rent" in s. 3(m) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act is not used in any technical sense. The Court has to see whether the person charged with an offence under the Act is one who receives rent of the premises. No doubt he may receive the rent directly from the tenants or indirectly from an agent. But if he is not entitled to receive the rent at all, and does in fact not receive it, I do not think that he can be said to be an owner. Here the accused and his co-owners of the property have parted with the right to receive the rent. They cannot recover it, and, that being so, it seems to me that they are not owners within the meaning of the Act. I gather that the Bench relied upon a clause in exhibit C under which the debtors covenanted to pay the Municipal taxes and to attend to all Municipal notices and to carry out the requirements contained therein. But that is a matter between the debtors and their creditor. The creditor, if he complies with the notice, may have a right to recover the amount of his expenditure from the debtors. But a clause of that sort cannot affect criminal liability arising under the Act of Parliament.

In my opinion, therefore, the accused is not an owner within the meaning of the act, and, therefore, his conviction was wrong and must be set aside. Fine, if paid, to be refunded.

The effect of the proviso to s. 7 of the Land Improvement Loans Act, 1883, is that, on the sale by Government of the land (for the improvement of which tagai loan is borrowed) for non-payment of the loan, while the interest of third parties (e.g. the right of an occupancy tenant) is protected, the interest of the borrower and that of the mortgagee or charge-holder from such borrower with regard to the property sold is extinguished.

SUIT to enforce mortgage.

The mortgage in suit was passed on August 29, 1919, by Shankarayya (defendant No. 1) to Channmallappa (father of the plaintiff Mahalingappa) for Rs. 8,000 on the security of his lands, survey No. 94 and seven other plots.

On February 1, 1921, defendant No. 1 took a tagai loan from Government for the improvement of survey No. 94. The loan was not repaid. Survey No. 94 was therefore taken possession of by Government for the non-payment, and was sold by Government to defendant No. 4 in 1932.

On January 3, 1936, the plaintiff sued to recover the money due on the mortgage (i.e. Rs. 16,000) by sale of the mortgage land inclusive of survey No. 94. Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 5 were sons of the mortgagor, defendant No. 1.

Defendant No. 4 resisted the claim mainly on the ground that the sale of survey No. 94 to him by Government for non-payment of tagai loan was free from all encumbrances, and that therefore survey No. 94 was not amenable to the claim.

The trial Court held that the sale of survey No. 94 was exempt from the mortgage claim of the plaintiff, for the following reasons :—

"Section 7 (c) of the Land Improvement Loans Act, XIX of 1883, together with the proviso clearly goes to show that the land survey No. 94 for the benefit of which the tagai loan was contracted for by defendant No. 1 can be sold free of any prior incumbrance. Plaintiff's pleader argues that if defendant No. 4's view is to prevail, then the proviso is redundant. It is not within the purview of the present inquiry as to how and why the proviso to s. 7(c) came to be embodied. At any rate, s. 7(c); and the proviso clearly prove that the encumbrance goes away when the land is forfeited, treated as a waste land, and then sold by Government. Plaintiff's pleader does not allege that there was any irregularity or illegality in the procedure adopted by the Collector in selling this land. It is immaterial whether plaintiff had notice of this forfeiture and sale by Government. It is true that the proviso is not very happily worded. But it does show that a previous encumbrancer has no claim over this land for his money. Defendant Nos. 4's pleader relies on 41 Mad. 691 and 142 I. C. 376, 377. In both these rulings it is clearly held that when a land is sold under s. 7(c) of the Land Improvement Loans Act, the prior encumbrance, if any, goes away. I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that plaintiff cannot lay any claim to this land for his dues."

The plaintiff's claim was accordingly decreed by passing the usual mortgage decree against the mortgaged lands other than survey No. 94.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

B. D. Belvi, for the appellant.

H. F. Mudireddi, for the respondent.

DIVATIA J. This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff in a suit to recover Rs. 16,000 with interest due on a simple mortgage for Rs. 8,000 passed by defendant No. 1 in favour of the deceased father of the plaintiff on August 29, 1919. The mortgaged property comprised eight survey numbers one of which was revision survey No. 94. On February 1, 1921, defendant No. 1 took a tagai loan from the Government for improving his field, survey No. 94, and for that purpose he mortgaged to the Government another land of his, namely, revision survey No. 11/1. He failed to repay that tagai loan, and as a result Government sold survey No. 94 in 1932 when it was purchased by defendant No. 4 for Rs. 1,525 and he passed a kabulayat to the Government for that number. Thereafter the appellant brought this suit on January 3, 1936, to recover the amount due on the mortgage. The main issue was whether the plaintiff could hold survey No. 94 in suit liable for the suit debt in view of the fact that the land was forfeited and sold by the Government for arrears of tagai. The learned Judge held that the plaintiff cannot hold that land liable for the suit debt, and he, therefore, passed a decree against the defendants to the effect that the plaintiff was entitled to recover his money by sale of the mortgaged property except survey No. 94.

The plaintiff has now preferred this appeal against that part of the decree by which his claim against survey No. 94 was dismissed, and his contention before us is that the lower Court was wrong in holding that that survey number was not liable for the suit debt. The provision of law under which this land was sold for the non-payment of the tagai dues is in s. 7 of the Land Improvement Loans Act, XIX of 1883. The relevant part of that section is :—

“(1) Subject to such rules as may be made under section 10, all loans granted under this Act, all interest (if any) chargeable thereon, and costs (if any) incurred in making the same, shall, when they become due, be recoverable by the Collector in all or any of the following modes, namely :—

(c) out of the land for the benefit of which the loan has been granted—as if they were arrears of land-revenue due in respect of that land ;”

“Provided that no proceeding in respect of any land under clause (c) shall affect any interest in that land which existed before the date of the order granting the loan, other than the interest of the borrower, and of mortgagees of, or persons having charges on, that interest ..”

It is contended before us on behalf of the appellant that the plaintiff's right as mortgagee before defendant No. 1 took the tagai loan could not be extinguished under the proviso which is sought to be construed as not affecting any right of a prior mortgagee of the land. In our opinion, however, there is no warrant for that construction. The proviso clearly states that it would not affect any interest which existed before the order granting the loan other than the interest of the borrower and other than the interest of the mortgagee of that interest. It is clear that by the words “of mortgagees of that interest” the Legislature meant to include the mortgagee of the land before the loan was taken. The appellant's contention is that the words “mortgagees of that interest” mean the mortgagees of the interest of the borrower at the date of the loan, and that interest was only the ownership of the equity of redemption. This argument implies that there must be two mortgages before that date, first of all, the mortgage created over the property, and, secondly, a mortgage of the equity of redemption remaining with the mortgagor after the first mortgage was created. But that assumes that the purpose of the proviso was to protect the prior mortgagee of the land for which there is no warrant whatever. The clear meaning of the words of the proviso is that the interests of third parties are protected, but that the interest of the borrower and the interest of the mortgagee or charge-holder from the mortgagor with regard to the property sold would be extinguished.

This construction of the section is supported by the decision in Sankaran Nambudripad v. Ramaswami Ayyar.<sup>1</sup> There the learned Judges had to construe this particular proviso and they have construed it as meaning that a sale under s. 7(1)(c) of the Land Improvement Loans Act to recover the loan was free of prior incumbrances. It is stated that the proviso releases rights other than those of the borrower and of the mortgagees, e.g., the rights of an occupancy tenant.

We think that that construction of the proviso is correct and that the Legislature meant to protect the rights of third parties only and not of those who claim under the borrower himself even though the transaction was created before the date of the loan.

We think, therefore, that the decision of the lower Court is correct, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

The first requirement of s. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is that there should be a writing signed by the transferor or on his behalf from which the terms necessary to constitute the transfer can be ascertained with reasonable certainty. The words "signed on his behalf" in the section must mean presumably signed by a person who has authority to bind or represent the transferor.

The third clause of the section makes it a condition that the transferee has performed or is willing to perform his part of the contract. The section is primarily intended for the benefit of the transferee. When the section speaks of the performance of his part or willingness to perform his part, it means complete performance or complete willingness so far as he is concerned.

The section debars the transferor from exercising rights which he would have apart from the agreement. There is, however, an exception to this disablement in the words "other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract." It is clear that the transferor can in any case derive no rights from this section which are inconsistent with the conditions subject to which the section comes into operation. As it is a condition precedent that the transferee shall have performed his part of the contract or should be willing to perform his part of the contract, the material time being obviously the time when the

The Borough Municipality of Ahmedabad sold the right to occupy their vegetable market for a period of three years at an auction, one of the conditions of which was that the successful bidder was to pass a registered rent-note at his own expense. The defendant's predecessor was the successful bidder, who at the end of the auction signed the conditions of auction, which were also signed by the Chairman of the Standing Committee who held the auction. The sale was in due course adopted by the Standing Committee and adopted by the General Body of the Municipality. The bidder went into possession of the market and paid two months' rent in advance. When called upon to pay the estimated cost of getting a rent-note executed and registered, he took no notice of the demand and also of the reminder that was sent to him subsequently. He still continued to occupy the market and paid the rent regularly till he died. His widow intimated to the Municipality that the contract was at an end and offered to hand over possession of the market to the Municipality, which she later did. The Municipality then sued to recover damages for breach of the contract after forfeiting the deposit, relying on s. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 :—

Held, dismissing the suit, (1) that the conditions necessary for the coming into operation of s. 53A were not satisfied in the case ;

Sultanali v. Tyeb<sup>4</sup> and Ramjoo Mahomed v. Haridas Mullick,<sup>5</sup> followed ;

(3) that the whole case of the plaintiff implied that there was an agreement by way of lease, and not merely an agreement to execute a lease at a later date such as would come under s. 17(2) (v) of the Indian Registration Act.

SUIT to recover damages for breach of contract.

The Borough Municipality of Ahmedabad (plaintiff) wanted to let their vegetable market consisting of stalls situated in Manekchowk in the city of Ahmedabad for a period of three years. A resolution to that effect was passed by the Standing Committee of the plaintiff on January 5, 1934.

The conditions of the auction were settled, which contained, among other things, the following :

"2. This auction is for the period of three years from 1-4-34 to 31-3-37 and hence the bidder will have to pass a registered rent-note at his own expense for three years immediately after the General Board sanctions the auction.

4. The bidder (auction purchaser) shall have to pay at the time of auction the amount equal to one month's rent as deposit immediately after the last bid and the rent will have to be paid every month in advance before the first day of every month.

7. If the amount of rent is not paid in advance every month as mentioned in condition No. 4 the Municipality will take over the possession of the market stalls:

and the open lands at once before the period of letting is over without first giving any notice, and will lease by fresh auction to another person at the cost and responsibility of the lessee and if the Municipality suffers any loss in rent etc. by a lower bid or no bid at the fresh auction, the lessee is bound to make good the same.

16. The auction of the stalls of this market and the open land being for a period of three years will be taken as final after it is sanctioned by the General Board and the registered rent-note will have to be passed before handing over the possession of the market."

The auction was held on January 21, 1934, when one Bechardas Samaldas (represented by Bechardas Damodardas, defendant) was declared the highest bidder at Rs. 2,551 per month. On the same day, the conditions of auction were signed by the bidder Bechardas Samaldas, and by the chairman of the Standing Committee as also by the members of that Committee.

On January 30, 1934, the bidder agreed to deposit two months' rent instead of one month as provided in the conditions of auction. On the same day the Standing Committee resolved to make a recommendation to the General Body to sanction the auction. This the General Body did on February 14, 1934.

On February 24, 1934, Bechardas was informed of the sanction and asked to pay Rs. 467 to meet the cost of preparing a rent-note and getting it registered. This was not done. It was only on February 16, 1935, that the plaintiff sent a reminder about payment of the above cost. This too remained unheeded.

Meanwhile, on April 1, 1934, Bechardas obtained possession of the market and remained in possession paying the rent as stipulated till his death, which occurred on April 30, 1935.

On May 17, 1935, Divali, the widow of Bechardas, wrote to the plaintiff that her husband had died and that the contract of lease had come to an end. She again wrote to the plaintiff asking them to take possession of the market at the latest on June 30, 1935.

The Standing Committee resolved on June 11, 1935, to take possession of the market and to take legal steps to recover damages for rent from Divali. This was communicated to Divali on June 13, 1935; and possession of the market was taken on June 17, 1935.

After several infructuous attempts to sell the right of the unexpired lease, it was knocked down to two merchants for Rs. 1,651 per month on August 6, 1935. The General Body sanctioned the sale on August 7, 1935. The possession of the market was handed over to the new bidders on August 8, 1935.

On September 5, 1935, the Standing Committee by its resolution forfeited the deposit made by Bechardas.

On October 4, 1935, the plaintiff Municipality filed a suit against Divali to recover Rs. 26,054-1-10 as damages consequent on the breach of contract by Bechardas. Divali having died pending suit on February 17, 1936, the defendant was brought on the record as her heir.

The defendant contended inter alia that even if the lease was proved, it being for a period of three years should have been in writing and registered under s. 17(1) (d) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, and that even if Bechardas acted upon the tenancy the plaintiff did not thereby obtain any right to treat the tenancy as concluded.

The trial Court held that the plaintiff had proved the contract of lease, that it was proved to be a valid and binding contract as could form the basis of a suit for damages, that either Bechardas or Divali had broken the terms of the lease and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover Rs. 26,025-13-0 as damages. The Court gave the following reasons :—

“ It is thus obvious that in this suit the most important question is whether the plaintiff can maintain the present suit for recovery of damages when there is no written lease duly registered as required by s. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act and s. 17 of the Indian Registration Act. There is no written lease—much less registered. The pakka lease was to be engrossed and registered at the cost of the lessee. The lessee did not come forward to give costs for the making of the pakka lease though the plaintiff called upon him to do so and yet took possession of the vegetable market and acted under the auctioned out lease which was for a period of three years as if the lease was completely legal and operative. If the lessee had not taken the possession the plaintiff would have thought it necessary or been obliged to sue the lessee for specific performance of the agreement to pass a pakka lease and to abide by it. That necessity did not arise because the lessee took the possession of the vegetable market, gave deposit money and monthly rent in advance as settled under the terms and conditions of the auctioned out lease and under his Kabuliyat, exhibits 61 and 62. These writings under the signature of the lessee only purported to take a pakka lease on the General Board of the plaintiff sanctioning the bid of rent given by the lessee ; inasmuch as they purport to create a pakka lease on a future date they fall short of creating a present demise of or interest in the leased property. That being so, the ruling in Suleman v. Patell, 35 Bom. L. R. 722, which is almost on all fours with the facts in this suit is to be relied upon for holding that exhibits 61 and 62 can legally form the basis of the present suit for damages as in the said ruling the aid of s. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act was invoked on the consideration that it was available to the transferor to base a suit for damages. The learned advocate for the defence urges that the ruling betrays a misconception of the limited scope of the section and cites rulings in the cases of Mst. Nasiban v. Mohamed Sayed, [1936] A. I. R. Nag. 174, and of Danimara Tea Co. v. Probodh, 41 C. W. N. 54, in support of his view. I have carefully studied all these rulings and am clearly of opinion that the view taken by his Lordship Honourable Justice Wadia in the above-named Bombay ruling correctly interprets s. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act. The section debars the transferor from enforcing only any right against the transferee other than the right created by the agreement partly performed notwithstanding that the transaction has not been completed according to law. Thus it does not debar the transferor's right to sue either for specific performance or for damages on the agreement to take a pakka lease especially when such an agreement as not creating the present demise is not compulsorily registrable. It is wrong to say that the section merely creates a passive equity conferring the right to defend a suit to the transferee and that it creates a disability for a transferor. It is proper to think that all rights and liabilities under the incomplete written agreement were meant to be mutually enforceable by the legislature by this section. In the present case there being not even the written pakka lease, it is also possible to take a view that s. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act may not come into play and that the plaintiff's right to sue for damages could be recognisable on the consideration that the writing, exhibit 61, does not create a present demise and can without requiring registration form the basis of the present suit and can be admissible for proving the contract. Such a view was taken in the ruling in the case of Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Narayana, 17 Mad. 456. As this ruling has been dissented from in the above said Bombay ruling I do not base my conclusion on it and think it proper to invoke the aid of s. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act for admitting exhibit 61 into evidence. The result is that I record my findings in the affirmative on issues Nos. 1 and 2.”

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

BROOMFIELD J. This is an appeal by one Becharadas Damodardas against whom a decree for Rs. 20,000 and odd has been passed by the Joint First Class Sub-Judge, Ahmedabad, at the suit of the Ahmedabad Municipality.

BECHARDAS
DAS
v.
AHMEDABAD
PALITY

There is no dispute as to the facts which are fully set out in the plaint. The Ahmedabad Municipality has a vegetable market, the right to occupy which is periodically sold by auction. There was an auction held on January 21, 1934, at which one Becharadas Samaldas was the highest bidder. The terms of the tenancy were set out in the conditions of the auction, exhibit 61, a document which after his bid was made was signed by Becharadas Samaldas and also by the Chairman of the Standing Committee which carried out the auction. The period of tenancy was to be three years from April 1, 1934, to March 31, 1937. The person who obtained the lease was to pass a registered rent-note at his own expense. He was to deposit one month's rent and he was to pay the rent every month in advance. There were numerous other conditions, but we are not at the moment concerned with those.

On January 30, 1934, Becharadas Samaldas agreed to deposit two months' rent instead of one month as provided in exhibit 61. Before the tenancy became effective it was necessary that the highest bid should be sanctioned by the General Board of the Municipality, and after a resolution of the Standing Committee on January 30, 1934, recommending the acceptance of the bid, the General Board on February 14, 1934, sanctioned that recommendation. Becharadas was informed of this on February 24, 1934, and he was called upon to pay Rs. 467, the estimated cost of getting a rent-note executed and registered. He did not pay this money and nothing was done about execution or registration of the rent-note. Nearly a year later, on February 16, 1935, a reminder was sent to him about paying the costs of the document but apparently he took no notice of this either. In the meantime he had obtained possession of the vegetable market on April 1, 1934, and he continued in occupation paying the rent of Rs. 2,551 every month regularly in advance until he died on or about April 30, 1935.

Becharadas's widow Bai Divali informed the Municipality of her husband's death and said that the contract was at an end, and that she was ready to hand over possession at any time between June 1 and 30. The Municipality then made several attempts to re-auction the lease. Auctions were held on two or three occasions but either no bids were received or the bids were considered insufficient. Possession of the market had been re-taken on June 17, 1935, and Bai Divali was informed that arrangements would be made for a new lease at her risk. Ultimately in August, 1935, a bid for Rs. 1,651 was received which was accepted and sanctioned by the General Board, which also authorised a suit for damages being filed on the old agreement. On October 4, 1935, the suit was filed against two defendants, viz., Bai Divali and Shankardas Samaldas, brother of the deceased Becharadas Samaldas. This Shankardas died on November 8, 1935, and his name was then struck off. Bai Divali died on February 17, 1936, and Becharadas Da-

In the suit the plaintiff Municipality claimed damages amounting to Rs. 26,000 and odd, the amount being arrived at in this way. The total amount which would have been paid by way of rent under the agreement with Bechardas Samaldas was Rs. 91,836. From that amount was deducted the sum of Rs. 33,000 and odd which had been received as rent from Bechardas and also the sum of Rs. 32,000 and odd which was to be received from the new tenants within the period of the original tenancy. In addition a small sum was claimed for the expenses of advertisement and so on.

Broomfield J.

The learned trial Judge relying on a decision of Mr. Justice B. J. Wadia in Suleman v. Patel<sup>1</sup> held that the case was covered by s. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act and that, in spite of there being no registered agreement or lease, the plaintiff Municipality was entitled to recover the amount which they would have recovered if the agreement had been carried out, less what they actually received. It may be mentioned in this connection that one of the conditions contained in the auction paper, exhibit 61, No. 21, was that if the lessee did not act according to the conditions of the tenancy, the Municipality had the right to take over possession of the market, to forfeit the deposit and to recover the loss if any.

The first argument of the learned advocate for the appellant is that s. 53A does not apply in terms to a case like the present and that the section can only be relied on as a defence and not as the foundation of an action. The first requirement mentioned in s. 53A is that there should be a writing signed by the transferor or on his behalf from which the terms necessary to constitute the transfer can be ascertained with reasonable certainty. The words "signed on his behalf" in the section must mean presumably signed by a person who has authority to bind or represent the transferor.

The documents relied on by the Municipality are the auction paper, exhibit 61, the further agreement by Bechardas to deposit two months' rent, exhibit 62, and the resolution of the General Committee, which does not in itself contain any of the terms of the agreement but sanctions the recommendation of the Standing Committee that the highest bid should be accepted. By s. 48(4) of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, it is provided that every contract under or for any purpose of this Act shall be made on behalf of the Municipality by the Chief Officer. Exhibit 61, as I have mentioned, is signed by the Chairman of the Standing Committee. This signature also appears on exhibit 62 which is the subsequent agreement. Under s. 34(2) (c) of the same Act the Chief Officer may delegate any of his powers or duties to any municipal officer or servant with the sanction of the Standing Committee. There is no evidence of any delegation of the Chief Officer's powers in the present case, but it is to be noted in this connection that this particular point was not taken at the hearing. Another point to be noted is that the Chief Officer appears to have signed the resolution of the General Committee or a copy of it, though why or in what capacity he did this does not appear. However, under the circumstances we are not prepared to say that the requirements of the first clause of s. 53A have not been satisfied.

The principal difficulty which the plaintiff Municipality seeking to rely on the section has to get over is the third clause which makes it a condition that the transferee has performed or is willing to perform his part of the contract. Leaving aside for the moment the question whether this section is only enacted for the protection of the transferee and confers no rights on the transferor, it is obvious both from the language and also from the history of this enactment that it is primarily intended for the benefit of the transferee and that being so, when the section speaks of the performance of his part or willingness to perform his part, it must mean in our opinion complete performance or complete willingness so far as he is concerned. Otherwise there would be no reason why the transferor should be confined within the four corners of the contract. We are quite unable to accept the argument of the learned advocate for the respondent that it is a sufficient compliance with this condition that the transferee should have performed his part of the contract to some extent. It is true that Mr. Justice B. J. Wadia in Suleman v. Patell<sup>1</sup> has taken this view, but with all deference to the learned Judge we are unable to agree. We think, therefore, that the conditions necessary for the coming into operation of s. 53A are not satisfied in this case, and that is really enough to dispose of the appeal, so far as the application of s. 53A is concerned.

I propose, however, to refer very briefly to some of the cases which have been cited in the argument. Pir Bakhsh v. Mahomed Tahar<sup>2</sup> was a case to which s. 53A did not apply, but their Lordships of the Privy Council described the section as a partial importation into India of the English equitable doctrine of part performance and they also said that it enables a defendant in certain circumstances to plead his possession under an unregistered contract.

In Probodh Kumar Das v. Dantmara Tea Co.<sup>3</sup> the facts were that the plaintiffs were in possession under an unregistered contract of sale whereas the defendants had the title to the property. The plaintiffs sought a declaration that the defendants had no title and were debarred from enforcing any right to the estate. The case therefore is not directly in point, but there are observations in the judgment which undoubtedly support Mr. Chundrigar's argument that the section is only available as a defence. The material passage in the judgment is this (p. 297) :—

"In their Lordships' opinion, the amendment of the law effected by the enactment of s. 53A conferred no right of action on a transferee in possession under an unregistered contract of sale. Their Lordships agree with the view expressed by Mitter J. in the High Court that 'the right conferred by s. 53A is a right available only to the defendant to protect his possession.' They note that this was also the view of their late distinguished colleague, Sir Dinshah Mulla, as stated in the second edition of his treatise on the Transfer of Property Act, at p. 262. The section is so framed as to impose a statutory bar on the transferor; it confers no active title on the transferee. Indeed any other reading of it would make a serious inroad on the whole scheme of the Transfer of Property Act."

book to which their Lordships refer the learned commentator criticised Suleman v. Patell as being based on a misconception of the limited scope of the section.

It is not necessary for our purposes to say that the transferor can never rely on the section. According to its terms it debars the transferor from exercising rights which he would have apart from the agreement. There is, however, an exception to this disablement in the words "other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract." But it is clear, we think, that the transferor can in any case derive no rights from this section which are inconsistent with the conditions subject to which the section comes into operation. If it is a condition precedent, as we think it is, that the transferee shall have performed his part of the contract or should be willing to perform his part of the contract, the material time being obviously the time when the section is sought to be made use of, it must follow that a suit for damages for breach of a contract can never be founded upon this section. We find ourselves unable to accept Suleman v. Patell as a correct exposition of the law on this point.

If s. 53A cannot be availed of, the question is whether the suit can be maintained apart from it. It has been argued on behalf of the respondent that the document on which the plaintiff relies did not require registration. Under s. 17(1)(d) of the Indian Registration Act leases of immoveable property for any term exceeding one year are compulsorily registrable. The definition of "lease" in the Act includes an agreement to lease. It has been held, however, e.g., by the Privy Council in Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zamindari Co.,<sup>1</sup> that an agreement to lease in order that it should require registration must be one which effects an actual demise or creates a present and immediate interest in the land. Mr. Shah has contended that in the present case there was no actual demise and that no immediate interest in the property was created. According to him the intention of the parties was that a formal lease should be executed and registered, and until that was done, there was nothing which could be called an agreement to lease.

We cannot accept this argument. Possession of the property was given under the agreement on April 1, 1934, and from that date the parties acted exactly as though the tenancy was in force. The importance or rather the lack of importance which the Municipality attached to the formal lease is shown by their conduct. They did no doubt write a letter to Bechardas asking him to pay the money for the registered deed, but, when he failed to comply, they took no further steps in the matter and waited nearly a year before they so much as reminded him about it. The fact that the tenancy was to commence at a date subsequent to the agreement does not of course prevent there being a present demise: see Sultanali v. Tyeb<sup>2</sup> and Ramjoo Mahomed v. Haridas Mullick.<sup>3</sup> In the latter case there is a full discussion of the authorities English and Indian. In view of these authorities we have no hesitation in holding that there was a present demise and that the contract contained in the writings relied on by the plaintiff Municipality required registration.

In fact it is obvious, we think, that the whole case of the plaintiff implies that there was an agreement by way of lease, and not merely an agreement to execute a lease at a later date such as would come under s. 17(2)(v) of the Indian Registration Act. In paragraph 8 of the plaint it is stated that the deceased Bechardas "took on lease by public auction" the vegetable market and the land pertaining to it, and generally speaking it may be said that the plaint is drawn up on the footing that there was a tenancy and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for breach of the terms of the tenancy. If it were really the fact that there was not an agreement for a lease which would have been valid as a lease if properly registered, the plaintiff would be out of Court, for his only remedy in that case would have been a suit for specific performance of the agreement to take the lease.

One argument put forward on behalf of the appellant was that the suit had abated as against Shankerdas, the original defendant No. 2, and that as his heirs had not been brought on record within the time fixed by law the estate of Bechardas was not represented. This is based on the contention that Bechardas Samaldas and his brother Shankerdas were members of a joint family. On this point, however, the evidence is very far from clear. The learned trial Judge has referred to a deed of family arrangement, exhibit 83, by which a dispute between Bai Divali and Shankerdas was settled. Some of the terms of this document, in particular the provision that Shankerdas was to be paid a salary for managing the estate, are difficult to reconcile with the theory that he was the owner of the property by survivorship. If the brothers were not joint, the widow of Bechardas represented his estate and a decree against that estate in the hands of the appellant, who was brought on record within time after Divali's death, would seem to be in order. In the view we take of the case the point of course does not arise.

The result of our findings is that the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout. The cross-objections are also dismissed with costs.

Under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, it is not necessary for a workman to give notice of every trivial accident to which he may be subject.

A workman is, however, bound to give notice of any accident which is not trivial, and it is not for him to decide whether it is likely to give rise to a claim for compensation. If an accident, too trivial in the first instance to require notice, subsequently develops serious consequences, the obligation to give notice as soon as practicable would be met by giving notice when the consequences ensue.

The question whether there was any evidence before the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation on which he could hold that there was sufficient cause for not giving notice of an accident under s. 10 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, is a question of law on which the High Court can interfere in appeal.

APPLICATION under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923.

The facts are stated in the judgment.

P. B. Shingne, with M. R. Vidyarthi, for the appellant.

N. K. Desai, with S. G. Chitale, for the respondent.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act against the award of the learned Commissioner awarding a sum of Rs. 448 as compensation to the workman.

The facts as found by the learned Commissioner are that on July 5, 1939, the workman was working on a lathe in the workshop of the appellant, and got a particle of something into his eye. He admittedly did not give notice at once of the accident, but the next day did not attend work, and he says that he told his fellow employee, Ambalal, to tell the Mistry the reason for his not attending. Ambalal denies that story, and the learned Commissioner has not found as a fact whether Ambalal was told or not. The learned Commissioner has not found the facts very clearly. According to the evidence, however, the workman went to his doctor the day after the accident, and the doctor gave him some treatment. A day after that the workman complained that he could not see, and, at any rate, three days after the accident he was in great pain. Apart from his having, as he says, sent word through Ambalal, that he was remaining absent, he still gave no notice. But he says that he went to the factory eight or ten days after the accident, and then gave notice to the Mistry, but the Mistry says that he did not pass this information on to the Manager, although he usually passed on information to the Manager about an accident. The learned Commissioner says that it is curious that he did not pass on the information, but whether he believed the Mistry or not, I do not know. Eventually the workman gave notice to the Factory Inspector on July 18, that is thirteen days after the accident, and the Factory Inspector then wrote to the employers, and this was the first written notice. Even assuming that the Mistry passed on the information about the accident when he received it from the workman, that was, according to the evidence, some eight or ten days after the accident. The learned Commissioner has found as a fact that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment, and he has also found that there was sufficient cause for not giving earlier notice of the accident, and this appeal is brought on the ground that the Commissioner was wrong in holding that there was sufficient cause for not giving notice.

The material provisions of the Act are contained in s. 10. The section provides :

"No claim for compensation shall be entertained by a Commissioner unless notice of the accident has been given in the manner hereinafter provided as soon as practicable after the happening thereof".

Then there are certain provisos, the third of which is in these terms :

"Provided, further, that the Commissioner may entertain and decide any claim to compensation in any case notwithstanding that the notice has not been given, or the claim has not been preferred, in due time as provided in this sub-section, if he is satisfied that the failure so to give the notice or prefer the claim, as the case may be, was due to sufficient cause".

So that the Commissioner may entertain the claim, notwithstanding the failure to give notice as soon as practicable, if he is satisfied that the failure was due to sufficient cause.

The first question, which arises, is whether there is a right of appeal against the opinion entertained by the Commissioner that there was sufficient cause to justify the workman in not giving notice. A bench of this Court in Halemabi v. Ardeshir<sup>1</sup> held that the question whether there was sufficient cause is a question of law, and that an appeal lies, therefore, against a decision of the Commissioner on such question under s. 30 of the Act. I am not quite sure myself that the Court paid sufficient attention to the words of the proviso which show that it is for the Commissioner, and not for the Court, to be satisfied, and, if satisfied, he can entertain the claim. However, the question whether there was any evidence before the Commissioner on which he could properly be satisfied is undoubtedly a question of law on which this Court can interfere. For the purpose of this case it is not necessary to go beyond that, because the argument of the appellants is that there was no evidence before the Commissioner on which he could hold that there was sufficient cause for not giving notice in proper time.

It is clear that the necessity of giving notice of an accident is imposed for the protection of the employer. Section 11 enables the employer to get the workman examined by his own medical practitioner, after he receives notice of an accident. The notice is required both to enable the employer to check the fact of the accident having occurred to the workman in the course of his employment, and also to enable the employer to take such steps as he may think fit to mitigate the consequences of the accident; and it is obviously important that the notice be given as soon as practicable after the accident, as the section provides.

I agree with the view expressed in the case to which I have referred, Halemabi v. Ardeshir, that it is not necessary for a workman to give notice of every trivial accident to which he may be subject : a mere knock which gives him a bruise, or some particle getting into his eye, which would probably

A. C. J. recover by the next day, would not necessitate notice. On the other hand, 1941 I am inclined to think that Mr. Justice Patkar in that case went rather too far — in saying that the workman need not give notice of any accident unless he AHMEDABAD thinks that the accident is one which will give rise to a claim for compen-VICTORIA sation. I think a workman is bound to give notice of any accident which is IRON WORKS not merely trivial, and it is not for him to decide whether it is likely to give LTD. rise to a claim for compensation. If an accident, too trivial in the first in-
 v. stance to require notice, subsequently develops serious consequences, I am of MAGANLAL opinion that the obligation to give notice as soon as practicable would be KESHAVAL met by giving notice when the consequences ensue. Until then, there has — Beaumont C.J. not really been an accident. In the present case I will assume that in the first — instance a particle of metal flying into the workman's eye was not an accident of which he was required to give notice, but any injury to the eye is, of course, likely to develop into something serious ; and it seems to me that on the evidence of the workman himself, and of the doctor to whom he went, it is plain that within three days at the outside the accident had developed into a serious matter, and the workman was bound to give notice. I am satisfied that within three days of the actual accident there was in fact an injury which showed that the accident was one of which notice was required to be given, and the learned Commissioner gives no reasons for holding that there was sufficient cause for not giving notice then. It is clear that, even if the workman did give notice to a fellow workman, that is not sufficient.
 Under sub-s. (2) of s. 10 notice must be served upon the employer or upon any person directly responsible to the employer for the management of any branch of the trade or business in which the injured workman was employed. It is obvious that a co-employee does not come within that description. So that giving notice to Ambalal, even if it was given, was useless. The obligation to serve the notice suggests that it must be a written notice, in which case the notice to the Mistry could not be relied upon ; but, in any case, the notice to the Mistry, even if passed on to the Manager, was too late, because it was given six or seven days after the accident had to the knowledge of the workman become one in respect of which he was required to give notice. In my opinion, therefore, there was no evidence before the learned Commissioner on which he could hold that there was sufficient cause for not giving notice of the accident as soon as practicable.

That being so, we must allow the appeal and set aside the award.

MACKLIN J. I agree.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), Secs. 7, 25, 19—Minor in custody of aunt since birth—Application by father for custody of minor—Applicability of s. 25.

Under s. 7 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, the Court, before making an order, should insist on evidence showing that the order was in the best interests of the child. It cannot pass such an order in advance. It is bound to consider, at the time when the order is to take effect, whether the applicant is the proper person to have the custody of the child.

In s. 25 of the Act custody means actual, and not constructive, custody. The section therefore does not apply where a ward has never been in the custody of his legal guardian.

APPLICATION under s. 9 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890.

The opponent Chenbasappagowda's wife, Gangawa, was in the family way and went to the house of her elder sister Shivawwa (applicant) for delivery. On October 28, 1937, she gave birth to a daughter, and died shortly thereafter i.e., on November 3, 1937. After her death the child remained in the care and custody of the applicant.

In February, 1938, the opponent filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bagalkot, for custody of the child. During the pendency of the suit, the applicant in July, 1938, made the present application under s. 7 of the Guardians and Wards Act in the Court of the District Judge of Bijapur to appoint her the guardian of the minor who was in her custody. This application stood over pending the result of the civil suit. The civil suit was decided on December 21, 1938. The suit was dismissed on the ground that, having regard to the tender age of the child, it was better left with the aunt, but that the opponent could make a further application for custody in the future. After this decision the applicant's application came before the District Judge of Bijapur on January 18, 1939, and he then directed that the applicant should remain as guardian of the person of the minor till it became two years old. The opponent was appointed guardian of the property of the minor. After the child became two years of age the District Judge made an order, on the application of the opponent, that the opponent should be declared the guardian of the minor and directed the applicant to hand over the minor to him forthwith.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an appeal from an order made by the District Judge of Bijapur in an application under s. 7 of the Guardians and Wards Act of 1890.

The material facts are that the minor girl, in respect of whom this application was made, was born on October 28, 1937, and the mother died on November 3. The mother had gone for delivery to the house of her elder sister, who is the applicant in these proceedings, and after the birth of the child the sister kept and looked after it. In February, 1938, the father of the child filed a regular suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bagalkot, which is in the Bijapur District, asking for the custody of the child, and in July, 1938, the present application was launched under s. 7 of the Guardians and Wards Act, in the Court of the District Judge of Bijapur, by the aunt who had the actual custody of the child. She asks to be appointed guardian of the child, and to be confirmed in the custody. When the application first came before the Court, it stood over pending the result of the civil suit. The civil suit was decided on December 21, 1938. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that, having regard to the tender age of the child, it was better left with the aunt, but he stated that the father could make a further application for custody in the future. After that decision, the application under the Guardians and Wards Act came before the learned District Judge of Bijapur on January 18, 1939, and he then directed that the applicant should remain as guardian of the person of the minor till it became two years old. The father was appointed guardian of the property of the minor. After the child became two years of age, the learned Judge made an order that the father should be declared the guardian of the minor, and directed the aunt to hand over the minor to him forthwith. It is clear that before making any order the District Judge ought to have insisted on evidence, showing that the order was in the best interests of the child. He seems to have thought that he had actually made an order in advance in January that the minor was to be handed over to her father when she became two years of age. But he was not competent to make such order. He would be bound to consider, at the time when the order was to take effect, whether the father was the proper person to have the custody of the child. However, apart from that, the contention of the appellant is that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order.

Section 7 of the Guardians and Wards Act, under which the application was made, enables the Court to appoint a guardian of the person or property of the minor. But s. 19 provides that the Court has no power to appoint a guardian of the person of a minor whose father is living and is not, in the opinion of the Court, unfit to be guardian of the person of the minor. As that was the position in this case, the learned Judge could not appoint the aunt as guardian; all he could do was to dismiss her application, so far as it related to guardianship. Custody is dealt with in s. 25, which provides that if a ward leaves or is removed from the custody of a guardian of his person, the Court, if it is of opinion that it will be for the welfare of the ward to return to the custody of his guardian, may make an order for his return.

It was held by a bench of this Court in Achrallal Jekisandas v. Chimantal Parbhudas<sup>1</sup> that that section does not apply, if the ward has never been in the custody of the guardian, which is the case here, and I must confess that I do not see any answer to that. The words are "If a ward leaves or is removed from the custody of a guardian". Custody must there mean actual custody; if it means constructive custody, and it be said that the ward is always in the constructive custody of the legal guardian, then the answer is that there is no occasion for making an order, because it has not left such constructive custody. In my opinion custody in the section means actual custody, and it cannot be said that a minor who has never been in the custody of his guardian has either left or been removed from such custody. In Ibrahim Nachi v. Ibrahim Sahib<sup>2</sup> a bench of the Madras High Court differed from that view and held that in order to give effect to what, it considered, must have been the intention of the Legislature, s. 25 could be construed as giving power to the Court to make an order that the guardian should have the custody of the minor in all cases. There are other cases to the same effect, though not in this Court. I should be glad to hold that the statute confers such a power upon the Court, but I cannot extract such a meaning from the language which the Legislature has used. It is contended by the respondent that the Court must have power under the Guardians and Wards Act to make an order for custody, because by a decision of the Privy Council, Besant v. Narayaniah,<sup>3</sup> it has been held that no mofussil Court can make an order for custody, except under the Guardians and Wards Act. A full bench of the Madras High Court in Sathi v. Ramendi Pandaran,<sup>4</sup> no doubt, held that that is the effect of the Privy Council decision; but, in my view, the decision of the Privy Council did not go as far as the Madras High Court supposed. In the case before the Privy Council the suit had been filed by the father in the District Court of Chingleput to have it declared that he was entitled to the guardianship and custody of his sons, and, no doubt, the Privy Council held in that case that the District Court, in which the suit had been instituted, had no jurisdiction over the infants except such jurisdiction as was conferred by the Guardians and Wards Act of 1890, and that, having regard to the terms of s. 9, the Court had no jurisdiction over the infants in question who were not residents within its jurisdiction. But the Privy Council was considering a suit filed in the District Court, which is the Court referred to under the Guardians and Wards Act; and the suit dealt with a matter covered by the Act, because the minors had left the custody of their guardian. In my opinion, the decision has no application to a suit filed in the Court of a Subordinate Judge asking for relief not covered by the Act. As at present advised, I am not prepared to accept the view that a Subordinate Court would not have jurisdiction to entertain a suit by the father of a minor, to have custody of that minor handed over to him. It was not apparently suggested that the Subordinate Court of Bagalkot had no such jurisdiction in the suit which the father previously filed. I think the

Hindu law—Maintenance—Widow earning income by personal exertions—Whether such income justifies reduction of maintenance—Reduction when permissible.

Under Hindu law personal income obtained by a widow by her own exertions cannot be regarded as a sufficient change in the circumstances to justify the Court in reducing the amount of maintenance fixed under a decree. It is only the permanent reduction in the income of the family property which affords a valid reason for reducing the amount of maintenance.

In 1928, one Bai Jaya (defendant), a Hindu widow, filed a suit against her husband's brother Dalpatram (plaintiff) to get her maintenance from the joint family property. This suit ended in a compromise decree under which the plaintiff agreed to give to the defendant Rs. 65 per year as her maintenance. This amount was paid to the defendant till the year 1935, when the plaintiff filed the present suit against the defendant for varying the amount of maintenance, on the ground that the income of the ancestral property had decreased, that since about a year before the suit the defendant had been earning Rs. 45 per month as a nurse in a private institution and that therefore the changed circumstances justified the cessation of the payment, or in any case, a reduction of the amount. The defendant inter alia contended that her service was only temporary and insecure and that the fact that she was earning by private service did not entitle the plaintiff to stop or reduce the payment for her maintenance which had been fixed under the decree.

The trial Court found that there was no appreciable reduction in the income of the ancestral property, but that as the defendant was earning Rs. 45 per month as a nurse and this income was likely to continue in future, that constituted a sufficient change in the circumstances justifying a reduction of the maintenance. The trial Judge reduced the amount of maintenance to Rs. 15 per year. In his judgment he observed as follows :—

"The first question is whether a widow is entitled to maintenance out of the income of the joint property which passed into the hands of the surviving coparcener when she has private property of her own out of which she is able to maintain. The answer is "No" according to the Calcutta High Court and "Yes" according to the Madras High Court. According to the Madras High Court the right of the widow of a coparcener in a Hindu family to maintenance is an absolute right due to her membership in the family and does not depend on any necessity arising from her want of other means to support herself. She is, therefore, entitled to some maintenance out of her husband's estate. However, the private means of a widow should be taken into account in determining the quantum of maintenance to be decreed to her, vide 38 Mad. 153. Hindu Law and Usage, by Mayne, 9th ed., at pp. 659 and 660, states that if the widow's private property produces an income, this is to be taken into consideration, for her right is to be maintained and so far as she is already maintained out of her own property that right is satisfied.

In 2 Bom. 573, 584, it is laid down that the doctrine that widow's peculiar property should not be taken into account, was regarded as highly unreasonable. This doctrine is also opposed to Mayukha. If the private means of a widow are shown to be sufficient in themselves to support her adequately in her station in life her right of maintenance would be wholly in abeyance though it might revive on a change in her circumstances."

On appeal the Assistant Judge also held that the income of the defendant as a nurse was a sufficient change in the circumstances to justify the Court in reducing the amount of maintenance. The learned Judge, however, modified the decree of the trial Court by granting a further declaration that in case the defendant lost her service or in case of a change in her circumstances she was at liberty to apply to the Court in execution proceedings to claim a higher amount for maintenance and residence up to Rs. 65 per year.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

DIVATIA J. The parties to this dispute are a Hindu widow and her husband's brother. The appeal arises in a suit filed by the plaintiff, who is the husband's brother, against the widow for a declaration that the defendant is not entitled to get Rs. 65 per annum for her maintenance as settled in a consent decree in a previous suit in 1928, and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from executing the decree. In the alternative he prayed for a reduction of the said amount of maintenance in view of the changed circumstances of the parties.

The facts which led to the litigation are shortly these :—In 1928 the widow filed a suit against the present plaintiff for getting her maintenance from the joint family property. That suit ended in a compromise under which the plaintiff was to give Rs. 65 per year as maintenance to her. That amount had been paid by him since then, but in 1935 the plaintiff brought the present suit on the ground that the income of the ancestral property had decreased, that since about a year before the suit the widow had been earning Rs. 45 per month as a nurse in a private institution at Ahmedabad, and that the changed circumstances justified the cessation of the payment, or in any case, a reduction of the amount. The widow contended that her service was only temporary and insecure, that she had got no property fetching any income, and that the fact that she was earning by private service at that time did not entitle the plaintiff to stop or reduce the payment for her maintenance which had already been fixed under the consent decree.

The trial Court found that there was no appreciable reduction in the income of the ancestral property, but that the widow had been earning Rs. 45 per month as a nurse and that income was likely to continue in future. In its opinion that was a sufficient change in the circumstances justifying a reduction of the amount of maintenance already fixed, and on that ground alone the trial Judge reduced the amount of maintenance from Rs. 65 to Rs. 15 per year.

On appeal by the widow the Assistant Judge confirmed this decision on the same ground that the income of the defendant as a nurse was a sufficient change in the circumstances which would justify a Court in reducing the amount of maintenance. The learned Judge, however, modified the order of the trial Court by adding that in case the widow lost her service or in case of a change in her circumstances she was at liberty to apply to the Court in execution proceedings to claim a higher amount for maintenance and residence than Rs. 15 per year up to Rs. 65 per year which was fixed under the original decree.

It is against this order that the present appeal has been filed by the widow, and it is contended on her behalf that the fact that she has at present got some income on account of her personal exertions cannot be regarded as a sufficient change in the circumstances which might justify the Court in reducing the amount already fixed under the decree. For this proposition the appellant relies upon several decisions of the Indian High Courts. The latest decision is in Jai Ram v. Mst. Shiv Devi.<sup>1</sup> There the suit was brought by a person, who was bound to pay Rs. 10 per mensem as maintenance allowance to a widow of the family, for its reduction on the ground that she was employed as a mistress in a Municipal girls' school and was earning more than Rs. 50 per month. It was found that it was not a stable income of the widow and that after her appointment she had consented to work on a reduced salary. It was held that the fact that the widow was having some separate income of her own by her personal exertions was no reason to vary the decree obtained by her because such income cannot be treated as permanent and described as her means. It was observed in the judgment that the income was liable to be stopped at any time when her employers chose to do so, and it was obvious that she could not be forced to work for her own living if she did not wish to do so. In the present case also the evidence shows that the widow is working as a nurse in a private hospital since nearly a year before the suit was filed, and that it was not a permanent job with gratiation of salary or security of tenure. The principle of the Lahore case is, therefore, applicable to the facts of the present case.

The Patna High Court has also taken the same view in Bahuria Saraswati Kuer v. Bahuria Sheoratan Kuer.<sup>1</sup> There the widow, who was claiming maintenance from her husband's relations, was being paid some amount annually by her brother for her maintenance. It was contended that that income should be taken into consideration in assessing the amount of maintenance which the defendant was liable to pay to her. It was held that a voluntary payment of such an amount by the widow's brother to her could not be taken into consideration in fixing the amount which she was entitled to receive from her husband's estate, and that such an amount cannot be described as "means" which the widow possessed, because the word "means" meant only the income to which she was either legally entitled or the income of her stridhan estate. The Madras High Court also has, in Sundari Ammal v. Venkatarama,<sup>2</sup> held that where a widow received certain amount of maintenance from the family but subsequently improved her financial condition either by her own efforts or by the generosity of others, she was not liable to have that allowance reduced. There some amount was being paid to the widow by a person out of compassion for her by way of an annual gift, and it was held that such an amount cannot be described as an increase in the means of the widow.

There is no authority for the proposition that any personal income obtained by a widow by her own exertions is a justifying cause for reduction of the amount of her maintenance already fixed. The principle which would apply to the case of reduction of an amount already fixed, has been laid down by our High Court in Gopikabai v. Dattatraya.<sup>3</sup> That principle is that a suit will lie to obtain a reduction in the amount of maintenance decreed to a Hindu widow on a change of circumstances, such as permanent deterioration in the value of the family property; but where such deterioration was due to the plaintiff's own default in not keeping the property in a proper state of repair, he had no right to ask for a reduction. To the same effect is a recent decision of the Chief Court of Oudh in Lala Maheshwari Prasad v. Musamat Sahdei Kunwar,<sup>4</sup> in which it is held that the amount of maintenance fixed for a Hindu widow can be subsequently reduced by the Court if the income of the family property is permanently reduced, but it should not keep on varying with every fluctuation in the income of the estate. On the same principle the amount of maintenance, already fixed, cannot be varied with every fluctuation in the private income of the widow even if such income could at all be taken into consideration. It is obvious that income by personal service is always contingent and irregular on account of various causes such as illness, leave without pay, change in salary, etc.

It is, however, contended on behalf of the respondent that the stridhan property of a widow must be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of her maintenance, and her income from service is her stridhan property. Even assuming that it is so, it is not every kind of stridhan that goes to reduce the amount of maintenance. Just as unproductive stridhan of not very high value and which the widow is not likely to dispose of cannot be taken into account in fixing the amount of maintenance, so also her personal earnings, especially when they are uncertain in amount and unstable in duration, should not go to reduce the amount of her maintenance from her husband's property, much less when it is already fixed by a consent decree. On principle, such reduction is objectionable as it would, in many cases, encourage the widow to lead an idle life when she feels that her own earnings will not materially add to her income as her maintenance would be proportionately reduced. It is, therefore, a sound principle that once her amount of maintenance is fixed, it is only the permanent reduction in the income of the family property which would afford a valid reason for reducing the amount, and that it should not be affected by her income from personal service. This principle is not opposed to any provision of Hindu law. On the other hand, it is consistent with its rule that it is only the stridhan property of a widow capable of producing income that is to be considered in fixing the amount of maintenance.

I think, therefore, that the lower Courts were wrong in holding that the amount of maintenance, which the defendant had already obtained under the consent decree was liable to be reduced because of her earnings by personal service.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside, and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

A person who claims to be entitled to property, as an heir of the settlor, on the ground that the trust deed is void, is not a person claiming against a trustee holding the property for an express purpose. Section 10 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, does not apply to such a case.

A Mahomedan made a trust deed of his immoveable property on October 22, 1895, under which the income of the property was to be given to him during his life-time, and after his death the trustees were to pay the income in certain proportions to the beneficiaries under the deed. Since the death of the settlor on June 7, 1897, the trustees administered the property as under the trust. On March 28, 1939, the plaintiff who was the settlor's heir's heir filed a suit for a declaration that the deed was void and inoperative, and for an order cancelling the deed and directing the trustees to deliver the property to him and render account of their management :—

TYABALLY

Held, that, as the trustees were in possession of the property under the trust deed and had held it for the beneficiaries and administered it according to the deed, the property was not vested in the trustees for a specific purpose; and that s. 10 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, therefore did not apply and the suit was barred by limitation.

SUIT to set aside a trust deed.

One Abdulhussein, a Bohra Mahomedan, by a deed made on October 29, 1895, conveyed to himself and another trustee his immoveable property situate in Bombay. Under the deed the trustees were to pay the income of the property, after discharging outgoings, to Abdulhussein for his life and after his death to the beneficiaries mentioned in the deed in certain proportions.

The following pedigree shows the relationship of the parties :—

Abdulhussein died on June 7, 1897, leaving behind him his widow Jelamboo, and two daughters, Aminaboo and Kulsumboo.

Defendant No. 1, Tyabally, defendant No. 2, Saifudin, and defendant No. 3, Mahomedally, were trustees appointed by Jelamboo under the trust deed.

O. C. J. Till Jelamboo's death in 1934, the trustees paid the income of the trust 1940 property to her and to her two daughters, Aminaboo and Kulsumboo.
 FIDAHUSSEIN Aminaboo was married to one Abdulally and she had three sons, Mahomed-KADERBHAI ally (defendant No. 3), Hasanally and Eusufally, and one daughter, Fatma-v. boo. Aminaboo died on December 1, 1905, and Abdulally, on May 16, 1924.
 TYABALLY Hasanally died in 1896 and Essufally, in 1908, without leaving any issue.
 EUSUFALLY Kulsumboo was married to Hyderally and she had one son, Abdulhussein and three daughters, Sukhraboo, Sakinaboo, and Jelamboo. Kulsumboo died in 1912 after the death of her husband Hyderally. Sukhraboo was married to defendant No. 4, Mahomedally Kaderbhai, and had one child defendant
 No. 5, Safiaboo. Sakinaboo was married to the plaintiff, Fidahussein Kaderbhai, and she died in 1913. The plaintiff thereafter married Jelamboo, sister of Sakinaboo. Jelamboo died in 1917. Abdulhussein died in 1918 leaving one son Jakiuddin and widow Asmaboo (defendant No. 6). Jakiuddin died in 1920.

The plaintiff alleged that the deed which was a wakf deed was void and inoperative; that he and defendants Nos. 3 to 6 and 8 were entitled to the trust property as heirs to the estate of Abdulhussein; that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were holding the property as trustees and had never put forward any claim to the property on their own behalf; and that the possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 was permissive and the suit was within time.

The plaintiff prayed for a declaration that the deed was void and inoperative and for an order cancelling the deed and giving possession of the property to the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 3 to 6 and 8, and directing the trustees to render a full and complete account of their management of the property.

Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 in their written statement contended inter alia that the plaintiff's suit was barred by the law of limitation; that the deed executed by Abdulhussein was a deed of settlement and not a deed of wakf and was not void or inoperative; that they were appointed trustees under the trust deed on August 28, 1925; that they were in possession of the trust property as trustees under the deed and their possession was not permissive as alleged by the plaintiff.

Defendant No. 6 contended similarly and further submitted that defendant No. 8 was not the brother of Jelamboo who died in 1917 but of Jelamboo, the widow of Abdulhussein Essufally who died in 1934; that the trustees had held the property upon the trusts mentioned in the deed in their right and capacity as trustees of the said trusts adversely to the claim, if any, otherwise than as a beneficiary under the deed, of Abdulhussein Essufally and after his death of his heirs and those claiming through or under them; that the trustees had held the properties adversely as aforesaid for a period of forty-four years, and the claim, if any, of Abdulhussein and his heirs to the property otherwise than as beneficiaries under the deed and of those claiming through or under them or any of them was barred by the law of limitation; that the trustees had, in any event, acquired a title to the property by adverse possession for the beneficiaries mentioned in the deed and that they held the property as trustees in trust for them.

Defendant No. 7, Advocate General, put forward similar contentions and submitted himself to the orders of the Court.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga and J. S. Khergamwala, for the plaintiff.

E. B. Ghaswalla and V. F. Taraporewala, for defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

v.

TYABALLY

KANIA J. This suit is filed by the plaintiff to obtain a declaration that a deed of trust dated October 29, 1895, is void and inoperative, that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 who are the present trustees and holders of the property be ordered to deliver up the property and the deed for cancellation and to render an account of their management of the property. The plaint recites that on October 29, 1895, one Abdulhusein, who was a Shia Mahomedan, executed the deed in question. That deed is annexed to the plaint. According to the plaintiff it is a deed of wakf. The purport of that deed is set out in para. 3 of the plaint. The first object was to pay the income to the settlor during his lifetime. It is contended in the plaint that as the settlor was a Shia Mahomedan the deed was therefore void. The settlor died on June 7, 1897. In para. 7 of the plaint it is stated as follows :

"The plaintiff says that after the death of the said Abdulhusein Issooobhai the trustees under the said deed of trust paid the rents of the said property to the said Jelamboo (widow of the deceased) till her death in 1934 and the said Aminaboo defendant No. 3 abovenamed and the said Kulsumboo and her two daughters Sukhra-boo and Sakinaboo and one son Abdulhusein in proportion mentioned in the said deed of wakf dated October 29, 1895."

The plaint then recites different deaths and marriages resulting in the parties to the suit, other defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 7, being the present descendants of heirs of the deceased settlor. In para. 14 of the plaint it is stated as follows :—

"Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have been holding the property as trustees and have never put forward any claim to the said property on their own behalf. The plaintiff says that the possession of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 is permissive and the suit is within time."

Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have filed a written statement in which they denied the allegation in para. 14 of the plaint that their possession of the property was permissive. They contended that they have been in possession of the trust property as trustees under the said deed. In para. 10 of their written statement they have contended that they are entitled to retain possession of the property as trustees under the said deed, and they denied their liability to render accounts of their management of the property to the plaintiff.

The question of the validity of the trust depends on the question whether the deceased was a Shia Mahomedan. That fact is not admitted on the pleadings. The result is that oral evidence, perhaps considerable, will be required to be led to prove that fact. As the point of limitation raised on the pleadings appears to be clear on the authorities, I decided to try that issue first. That includes the decision of the allegation that the trustees' possession was permissive. I should state at once that the plaintiff has made that allegation in the plaint. That is denied in the written statement of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and also in the written statements of defendants Nos. 6 and 7. The plaintiff has led no evidence to show that the possession

v.

TYABALLY

was permissive. The sixth issue is a question of fact, and as no evidence is led in support of this allegation by the plaintiff, the same must be found against him.

The question of limitation arises also on the averments otherwise found in the plaint. As I have pointed out para. 7 of the plaint contains an admission on the part of the plaintiff that after the death of the settlor the trustees had paid to the parties entitled to receive money under the trust-deed the income in the proportions mentioned in the deed. Reading the plaint as a whole, it is therefore clear that the settlor who was the owner received the income during his lifetime. After his death the trustees applied the income of the trust property in accordance with the trust deed and not on the footing that the heirs were entitled to the property or income. It is not stated anywhere in the plaint that this was done with the consent of the heirs. On the other hand exhibits Nos. 1 to 5 show that after the death of the settlor the two daughters of the deceased, under the power vested in them to appoint new trustees, have appointed fresh trustees. This is, if evidence was needed, sufficient to show that the possession of the trustees was not for and on behalf of the heirs but for and on behalf of the beneficiaries mentioned in the deed of trust. It is clear that the plaint is based on the decision of Cassamally Jairajbhai v. Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim.<sup>1</sup> Beaman J. in that case pointed out that there may be two aspects of the case. The first is where the trust deed itself is wholly bad; the other, where there is a transfer of the ownership to the trustees with a direction to apply the same to beneficial uses some of which may or may not be good. The learned Judge in that case came to the conclusion that in the event of there being a resulting trust, if the claim was made by the settlor's heir's heirs no question of limitation would arise. In support of his conclusion he noticed the observations in Maulvi Saiyid Muhammad Munawwar Ali v. Razia Bibi,<sup>2</sup> although he pointed out that so far as their Lordships of the Privy Council were concerned their decision was based on a finding of fact that possession was held by the lower Courts as permissive and not adverse. In my opinion that Privy Council decision which is based on a finding of fact does not help the present plaintiff.

The decision of Beaman J. was dissented from by the Appeal Court in Mahomed Ebrahim v. Abdul Latiff.<sup>3</sup> In Khaw Sim Tek v. Chuah Gnoh Neoh<sup>4</sup> their Lordships of the Privy Council clearly held that to invoke the application of s. 10 of the Indian Limitation Act the property must be vested in the trustees for a specific purpose. It was held that persons claiming adversely to the trust and on the footing that the trust deed itself was bad cannot contend that the property was held by the trustees for an express purpose, they being one of such purposes. The effect of that decision on the judgment of Beaman J. further came to be considered by the Court of Appeal in Shirinbai v. Sir Navroji Vakil.<sup>5</sup> The Court there held that Khaw Sim Tek v. Chuah Gnoh Neoh definitely overruled the view of Beaman J. These decisions are binding on me. I may say that I respectfully agree with the conclusion arrived at in those decisions. In view of the Privy Council decision in Khaw

Sim Tek v. Chuah Gnoh I find no adequate reason to hold that a person who claims to be an heir of the settlor and claims to be entitled to the property on the ground that the trust deed was void, could be stated to be a person claiming against a trustee holding the property for an express purpose. On the allegations in the plaint itself in this case therefore the plaintiff's claim is time-barred. He does not claim under any of the provisions of the trust deed to recover any property. His case is that the trust deed is void and as a settlor's heir's heir along with the others he is entitled to recover the property from the trustees. To such a case in my opinion s. 10 of the Indian Limitation Act has no application.

Therefore, the facts here are, that ever since the death of the settlor the trustees on the face of the plaint admittedly administered the property as under the trust deed and their possession is of trustees claiming to be so under the trust deed in question. They do not claim to hold the property for anyone except the beneficiaries mentioned in the trust deed and therefore the present claim of the plaintiff as the settlor's heir's heir in my opinion is clearly barred by the law of limitation. The second issue must therefore be found against him and the suit must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Defendants Nos. 5 and 8 have filed no written statement. In law they are therefore deemed to have admitted the statements in the plaint. They must bear their own costs of the suit.

The Advocate General (defendant No. 7) must get his costs from the plaintiff. If he is unable to recover his costs from the plaintiff, his costs taxed as between attorney and client should come out of the trust estate.

Defendant No. 6 has a pecuniary interest in this property which comes into existence only if the trust deed is set aside. Seeing that the trust deed has been in existence for so many years against her own pecuniary interest she has decided to support the trust and challenge the plaintiff's allegations. She is made a party to the suit and is therefore entitled to adopt such attitude as she considers right, irrespective of whether it is to her benefit or against it. It was argued that the Advocate General and the trustees were there to support the trust and there was no reason for her to incur costs. If a party is made a defendant it is at his option to appear and adopt an attitude as he pleases. I find nothing wrong in the attitude of defendant No. 6 in this case. As her interest is different from the plaintiff and the Advocate General, I cannot say that she should have appeared through the same solicitors and counsel. She is therefore entitled to her costs against the plaintiff.

As regards the trustees the plaintiff must pay their costs. The trustees applied that in the event of their costs not being recovered from the plaintiff they should be directed to be paid out of the trust estate. It was argued that they had to put the facts before the Court and submit to the orders of the Court. It is true that in the normal course a trustee supporting his title and succeeding in supporting the trust would be entitled to an order of the kind now applied for. In the present case it is however pointed out on behalf of the Advocate General that the trustees are guilty of misconduct in respect of this suit. It was pointed out that although the suit was filed in March, 1939, the trustees did not file their written statement for many months. Defendant No. 6 moved the Advocate General who called upon the trustees

O. C. J. to define their position in clear and unequivocal terms. When driven to do 1940 so they filed their written statement in March, 1940. Even thereafter they FIDAHUSSEIN would not make their affidavit of documents. Defendant No. 6 obtained an KADERBHAI order against them and it was only on the service of such order that the TYABALLY trustees made their affidavit disclosing therein only the books of account of EUSUFALLY S. 1993 to 1995. When the attention of the Advocate General was called to this fact he called upon them to make a proper affidavit, and it was only then that they produced copies of the books of the previous years. In the course of this discussion the Advocate General ascertained that money was not applied by the trustees to charity according to the deed of trust. The Advocate General therefore called upon them to deposit the proportionate rent in a separate account. When that direction was given defendant No. 3 wrote to the Advocate General a letter dated October 27, 1940, in which he contended that the trust deed was void, that he had applied a far larger sum towards charity than charity was entitled to and he was entitled to a set off. In the concluding portion of that letter he contended that, without prejudice to his other contentions, he maintained that the trust deed was void, that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were his nominees, that the family property was managed by him according to his pleasure and he had disbursed the income in the manner he thought he was entitled to do. He further added that he had managed that property in that manner for over last twelve years. The last statement is clearly an attempt to go back on his written statement in which the trustees contended that the properties were managed by them in accordance with the trust deed. When the suit was called on the trustees refused to raise any issues which arose on their written statement. They appeared by two counsel although they intimated that they only submitted to the orders of the Court.
 In discussing the question of limitation they have taken no part. Their attitude throughout has been of not upholding the trust or assist the Court in upholding the trust. They have adopted changing attitudes, and in spite of their written statement ultimately threatened to go back on the same and contended that the trust estate was not managed according to the trust deed but on the footing that the trust deed was void and the property belonged to the heirs alone. Under the circumstances I think they are not entitled to the further order for costs asked by them.

Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), Sec. 114, ill. (a)—Theft—Stolen property found in possession of accused "soon after" theft—"Soon after", interpretation of—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), Sec. 411—Practice—Prosecution to prove their case—Conviction cannot be based on statement of accused.

Illustration (a) to s. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, directs that the Court may presume that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession. The question, what period is covered by the expression "soon after", depends upon the circumstances of each case. The Court is not bound to draw this presumption, and it must always ask itself whether in the circumstances of the particular case the presumption is one which in fairness to the accused can be drawn. When one is dealing with property of some value, and it is very unlikely that the man, from whom the accused got it, had come by it honestly, or when one is dealing with property stolen in a village where there are not likely to be many dealings in it, the presumption may be drawn more readily than in the case of a theft in a big city.

Hence where an old brass bell stolen in the city of Bombay was found in the possession of an old iron dealer in the city thirteen days after the theft, the presumption under s. 114, ill. (a), was not drawn.

It is not open to a Magistrate to convict an accused who pleads not guilty on his own statement. It is for the prosecution to prove their own case.

RECEIVING stolen property.

On October 13, 1940, an old brass bell was found missing from the compound of the Motlabai Hospital in Bombay. It appeared that one Khimji had stolen the bell on October 12, 1940. It was found on October 25, 1940, in the possession of the accused, who was a dealer in old iron in the Chorbazar in the city of Bombay. The prosecution led no evidence to show how the accused came into the possession of the bell.

At the trial the accused made a statement, under s. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, that he had purchased the bell along with other metal scrap in the course of his business. He was thereupon convicted by the Presidency Magistrate, Second Court, for the following reasons:—

"The accused in his statement denies having any knowledge that the bell was stolen property when he received it by purchasing in a lot of brass, zinc and copper on August 23, 1940. The accused has not called the merchant from whom he states he purchased it. He has however shown an entry in his rojmel. In this entry there is no doubt in my mind the word 'ghanti' (bell) has been interpolated

Magistrate, Second Court, Mazgaon, Bombay.

A. Cr. J. after erasing the original letter or word. The bell is a brass bell. He gives no 1941 reason why he did not include the weight of the bell in the total weight of brass EMPEROR articles by the weight of their metal. I hold that the entry produced by the

 v. accused is a fabricated one and it is made to raise a false defence in this case...
 MAVJI NANJI It is admitted by the accused that he does not write the names of the persons from — whom he purchases the scrap iron or brass articles in his rojmel. He also admits he is unable to trace the person who sold the bell to him. These are in my opinion circumstances which clearly show that the accused knew and had reason to believe that the bell was a stolen property at the time he received it dishonestly."

The Magistrate, in view of the offence of the accused being a first one, directed him to be bound over in a sum of Rs. 50 for a period of six months.

The accused applied to the High Court in revision.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an application in revision against the conviction of the accused under s. 411 of the Indian Penal Code by the Presidency Magistrate, II Court, and the question, which arises, is one which comes not infrequently before Magistrates in Bombay. The question is when ought a presumption to be drawn that property shown to have been stolen, and found in the possession of the accused, was received by him knowing or having reason to believe that the property was stolen? In other words, when ought the presumption arising under the first illustration to s. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act to be drawn?

The property found with the accused was a bell, and the learned Magistrate has found, and in revision we accept his finding, that the bell was stolen from the Motlabai Hospital on the night of October 12. According to the evidence of the witness Khimji Khoda, he himself stole the bell, and kept it on an otla of a house near his room, and somebody removed it. Apparently the suggestion is that somebody stole it from the original thief. It was found with the accused, who keeps a shop in the Chor Bazar in which he sells old iron, on October 25, that is thirteen days after the date of the theft. The accused in his statement said that he bought this particular bell in August, and if that is so, of course, the bell in his shop could not be the bell which was stolen in October. But the learned Magistrate was not prepared to accept that statement and considered that the accused had fabricated his account. I think the learned Magistrate really convicted the accused largely on his own statement. That is wrong. The prosecution must prove their case. The prosecution have proved that the bell was stolen on October 12, and that it was found in the accused's shop on October 25, and the question is whether in those circumstances the Court ought to presume that the accused received the bell knowing or having reason to believe it to have been stolen. Unless that presumption is drawn, there is no evidence which the accused can be called upon to answer.

The first illustration to s. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act directs that the Court may presume that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession. The answer to the question, what period is covered by the expression "soon after"; must, I think, vary according to the circumstances of each case. The Court is not bound to draw this presumption, and the Court must always ask itself whether in the circumstances of the particular case the presumption is one which in fairness to the accused can be drawn. When one is dealing with property of some value, and it is very unlikely that the man, from whom the accused got it, had come by it honestly; or when one is dealing with property stolen in a village where there are not likely to be many dealings in it, the presumption may be drawn more readily than in the case of a theft in a city like Bombay, and in the case of property like this old bell. In my opinion, it is not fair to assume that property of this nature was received by the accused knowing it to have been stolen, when he received it as long as thirteen days after the theft, though in different circumstances thirteen days might be deemed soon after the theft. Old iron, like this, may have been dealt with in Bombay half a dozen times before it reached the accused. According to the thief, the property was removed from his custody, and it may very well have been sold to a hawker for a few annas, and the hawker have sold it to the accused. That is at least as likely as that the accused purchased direct from the thief. In my opinion, it is not right to presume in this case, merely because the accused was shown to be in possession of stolen property thirteen days after the theft, that he had reason to believe that it was stolen. If that is so, the accused was not bound to make any statement, and he ought not to be convicted on the strength of his statement.

We must, therefore, set the conviction aside.

Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd edn., Vol. XX, para. 493, p. 406, referred to.

To publish in a newspaper of a woman, who is an instructress in physical culture and dancing, and who also runs an industrial institution for poor Parsi girls, that she is unfit to carry on her profession or work, and that by carrying it on she would be in a position to ruin the future of the girls taking their training in her classes, is a gross libel.

Newspapers are subject to the same rules as other critics, and have no special right or privilege, and in spite of the latitude allowed to them, they have no special right to make unfair comments, or to make imputations upon a person's character, or imputations upon or in respect of a person's profession or calling.

The range of a journalist's criticisms or comments is as wide as that of any other subject, and no wider.

Any person, whether he is a private individual or a public journalist, has a right to hold any views he pleases on any subject of public interest and to express the same. It is immaterial whether the opinion or the comment is correct or not correct, whether it is just or unjust, or whether it is couched in language which may not err on the side of moderation. What is material and important is that the comment must not go beyond the limits which the law calls "fair."

An imputation of a criminal offence in order to be actionable per se must be a distinct charge and must not be a mere statement of suspicion. It may be made in so many words, or it may be made in words from which the charge could be inferred, but the inference must be clear and unequivocal.

The plaintiff, Mitha Rustomji Murzban, who was the wife of one of the proprietors of the Jame-e-Jamshed Press, had, in collaboration with her husband and some other members of the Parsi community, started "The Parsi Amateur Dramatic Society" with the object of staging plays, organising concerts, and variety programmes, in aid of charities.

The society conceived an idea of staging a play called Aflatoon in aid of a War Fund started by one Bapsy A. Sabawalla. Some twenty-five Parsi ladies and gentlemen were taking part in the rehearsals of the play. The tickets for the performance were not advertised for sale to the public but were sold only to the members of the Parsi community who were friends and relatives of the performers.

The plaintiff was also conducting a charitable institution called "Udyoga Ashram" for imparting instruction in arts and crafts to poor Parsi girls.

The defendant, Nusserwanji Nowroji Engineer, who was the editor of a Gujarati Weekly called Kom Sevak, was carrying on agitation in that paper against the staging of the play Aflatoon with a cast including some Parsi girls. In its issue of September 22, 1940, he published the following :—

“In the past Mr. Adi Murzban, Mr. Rustom Murzban and Mr. Ratan B. S. N. Cooper used to take part as actors in the play ‘Aflatoon’ and this time they themselves have declined to be actors and have preserved their self-esteem for which the said Mr. Adi Murzban and Mr. Ratan B. S. N. Cooper deserve to be complimented. What we deeply regret is that Mr. Rustom Murzban who was originally going to take part in this play has now, as we understand, got out of it, then why is his wife Mrs. Mitha Murzban obstinately persisting in taking part in this play and thus spoiling the future (moral and spiritual) welfare of the Parsi girls of her own class? Now parents, beware and don’t send your daughters to such classes where their moral and spiritual future may be totally shattered and ruined.

Serious Reminder !

It is necessary to give a serious reminder to Mrs. Mitha Murzban that it has been rumoured that from her ‘Industrial Ashram (Udyoga Ashram)’ at Charni Road Junction, a Parsi Girl by name Gadiwalla who used to stay at Mazgaon and who though married was addicted to gadding abroad, had after being a convert to Mahomedanism eloped with a Moghul leaving her near relations and connections and had married the said Musalman ?

Then we shall only ask this woman Mitha that if such a disastrous result can accrue to a girl attending a class, then has she or have her associates any idea to what extent the future (moral and spiritual) of Parsi girls would be ruined by making them actresses on the theatre stage ?”

The plaintiff alleged that the above words meant that she was a person unfit to conduct any classes inasmuch as the moral and spiritual future of girls attending such classes would be totally shattered and ruined ; that by her action in inviting Parsi ladies to join her in staging the play, the moral and spiritual welfare of such ladies would be ruined and shattered even more than the fate which awaited the girls who attended her classes.

The plaintiff also alleged that the defendant slandered her at a public meeting held in Sir Cowasji Jahangir Hall on September 26, 1940, by uttering the following words :—

“The girls who are going to take part in the play ‘Aflatoon’ are not allowed even to go to their parents’ home. The father of the girl is present here.”

The plaintiff alleged that the above words meant that she was guilty of the criminal offence of wrongfully confining the girl whose father was present, and that she had used physical violence upon the girl in so confining her.

The plaintiff submitted that she had been greatly injured in her credit and reputation and in her profession as a teacher and had suffered considerable damage. She claimed Rs. 5,000 by way of damages and prayed for an injunction restraining the defendant, his servants and agents from further printing, circulating or otherwise publishing the above libel and slander or similar libels or slanders.

The defendant in his written statement contended inter alia that he wrote the words complained of by way of admonition and for the public good of the Parsi community by way of warning ; that in so far as the words consisted of expressions of opinion they were fair comments made in good faith and without malice upon facts which were a matter of public importance ; that he did not allege that the plaintiff had anything whatever to do with the conduct of Gadiwalla or with her conversion to Islam and her subsequent

B. J. WADIA J. This is a suit for damages for defamation consisting partly of libel and partly of slander, and for an injunction restraining the defendant, his servants and agents and each and every of them from further printing, circulating, distributing or otherwise publishing the said libels and/or slanders or any similar libels and/or slanders affecting the plaintiff.

The words complained of as libel are set out in paragraph 7 of the plaint, and were printed and published by the defendant in the issue of the Kom Sevak of September 22, 1940, a weekly journal in Gujarati published every Sunday, which was started by him sometime about the end of 1935. Defendant stated that he and his sons were the owners of the paper in partnership, and that he himself was the editor, printer and publisher. The paper is mostly read by members of the Parsi community, but has a circulation also amongst members of the other communities. The words complained of as slander are also mentioned in para. 7 of the plaint, and were, according to the plaintiff, spoken by the defendant in reference to her at a public meeting held in Sir Cowasji Jehangir Hall, Bombay, on September 26, 1940. The defendant has put in a very long and prolix written statement containing matters which are mostly irrelevant to the issues in the suit. The publication of the words complained of as libel is not denied ; but the defence is that the words are a fair and bona fide comment on a matter of public interest, and also that they were published on a privileged occasion. With regard to the words complained of as slander, the defendant denied that he uttered the words referred to by the plaintiff, and that if he did, they were spoken on a privileged occasion. In any event he contends that they are not actionable per se, that is, without proof of special damage.

Plaintiff is a married woman, and gives instructions in physical culture in various institutions in Bombay. She conducts a physical culture and dancing class at her place of residence at Gowalia Tank Road. She also runs the "Udyoga Ashram" for poor Parsi girls over the age of fourteen in two rooms in a house at Charni Road Junction, which have been given to her rent-free. Those classes are run with the help of other honorary Parsi lady teachers, who give instructions in cutting, sewing, knitting and all kinds of fancy and embroidery works. This instruction is given free of charge to the girls. About April, 1940, plaintiff and several other Parsi ladies and gentlemen started the "Parsi Amateur Dramatic Society" for staging plays, dramas and dramatic entertainments for helping charities, particularly Parsi charities. At present the number of members of the Society is about forty. There were no rules nor any constitution for the Society until the beginning of this year. About this time also one Mrs. Bapsy Sabawalla, a well-known social worker in Bombay, started collecting a fund for purchasing ambulances in aid of the Bombay War Gifts Fund, and the Society thought of staging a Gujarati play in aid of Mrs. Sabawalla's fund. At first it was decided to stage one particular play, but it was given up. The Society then decided to stage the play named Aflatoon, which was written by Mr. Phirozeshah Jehangir Murzban, now deceased, the plaintiff's father-in-law. The play was rehearsed from time to time after April, 1940, generally in the plaintiff's class at Gowalia Tank Road, and it was finally staged on September 29, 1940, with a cast of a large number of persons, some of whom were ladies, and was performed before a Parsi audience. Many parts of the original play, which the Society considered were unsuitable for being performed by amateurs and before a modern audience, were cut off and dropped. About the end of August last the defendant, who came to know that the play was about to be staged, started an agitation in the columns of his paper Kom Sevak, not against the staging of the play, but against Parsi men and women taking part in acting plays upon the stage, whether as amateurs or professionals. His view is that the appearance of Parsi men and women together on the stage is far from desirable, and even harmful to the interests and welfare of the community, and especially of the women who take part with the men upon the stage. It appears that the Parsi community is divided over the merits of this question, which has been agitated for many years in Bombay, the "orthodox" section of the community, as it is called, being against the appearance of Parsi men and women together on the stage, and the other section called the "reformists" pulling the other way. There is no evidence before me as to which of these sections is the larger, though it is quite probable that it is the orthodox section which has the majority behind it. It was because of this controversy that the Society decided to perform the play of Aflatoon before a Parsi audience only, though, according to the plaintiff, there was nothing that was objectionable in the play and nothing to prevent it from being performed on the stage before a cosmopolitan audience. It was decided to stage it only before a Parsi audience, because of the agitation going on in the press. Many affidavits were made on the notice of motion for an injunction against the defendant last October. About the merits of this controversy there are various statements in the written statement; defendant's counsel was full of it, and so was the defendant. The merits of the controversy are, however, not before the Court. It is not a question on which the Court is called upon to express any opinion. The only opinion that the Court can express is that any person, whether he is a private individual or a public journalist, has a right to hold any views he pleases on the subject, and to express the same. It is immaterial whether the opinion or the comment is correct or not correct, whether it is just or unjust, or whether it is couched in language which may not err on the side of moderation. What is material and important is that the comment must not go beyond the limits which the law calls "fair".

What the plaintiff complains of is that the words published about her in the Kom Sevak of September 22 are defamatory. As pointed out in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XX, Hailsham's edn., para. 493, p. 406 :—

"A statement which, being published of another in the way of his lawful trade, business, profession, calling, or office, conveys a reflection on him calculated to disparage or injure him therein, is a defamatory statement, even though it be not calculated to hold him up to hatred, contempt, or ridicule."

Section 499, Explanation 4, of the Indian Penal Code, attempts a more detailed explanation or description of what a defamatory statement is; but the principle is the same. It is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the words are false. If the words are defamatory, they are presumed to be false, and it is for the defendant if he seeks to justify them to prove that they are substantially true. It is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove any malice on the part of the defendant. It is only for the purpose of rebutting the defence of qualified privilege that it becomes necessary to prove express malice in the sense of improper motive on the part of the defendant.

It is in evidence that the defendant began writing about the subject in the columns of the Kom Sevak from about September 1, 1940. He wrote again on the 8th, and also on September 15, 1940. It was, however, in the issue of September 22 that he wrote and published the words firstly set out in paragraph 7 of the plaint. Counsel for the defendant objected to the office translations of the passages referred to in the plaint; but there are now official translations before the Court. The first passage, which has been put in as exhibit A, runs as follows :—

"In the past Mr. Adi Murzban, Mr. Rustom Murzban and Mr. Ratan B. S. N. Cooper were working as actors in the drama 'Afiatoon'. And this time they have declined to work as actors and have preserved their self-respect; for which Mr. Adi Murzban and Mr. Ratan B. S. N. Cooper deserve to be congratulated. What we regret most, is this that when Mr. Rustom Murzban who was to take part in this drama, has, according to what we have heard, stayed out, why does his wife Mitha Murzban persist (in her idea) to play her part in this drama, and spoil the future of the poor girls attending her class? Now, parents beware! Do not send your girls to classes of this type, where their future would be ruined."

The person referred to in this passage as Mitha Murzban is the plaintiff, and Mr. Rustom Murzban is her husband. There is nothing objectionable in the first part of this passage ending with the words "persist (in her idea) to play her part in this drama". What the plaintiff complains of as alleged libel are the last words, viz. that by persisting in playing her part, the plaintiff will spoil the future of the Parsi girls attending her class, and the warning to Parsi parents not to send their girls to classes of this type, meaning the type of the plaintiff's class, where their future would be ruined. In the first place, the words "her class", according to the defendant, refer only to the class which the plaintiff conducts at her place of residence, Gowalia Tank Road. According to the plaintiff, she conducts not only that class, but also the classes known as the "Udyoga Ashram". The important words are 'spoil the future of the poor Parsi girls'. A question arose as to what is the correct interpretation of the Gujarati word for 'future'. The defendant in his explanation first said that it meant the 'fortune' of the girls, and he illustrated it by a reference to exhibit No. 1, which refers rather to their matrimonial prospects.* Later on he corrected himself and said that the word 'future' was general and comprehensive, and would mean or include social, religious and moral future. The plaintiff alleges that it means and includes moral and spiritual future also. By spiritual future or religious future is meant the religious faith or the religion of the Parsi girls. It is this last part of the passage to which objection is taken. To say of a person in respect of her profession or calling—and the profession or calling of the plaintiff is that of an instructress in physical culture and dancing,—that she is unfit and incompetent for the purpose is, in my opinion, defamatory; but to say that the future including the social, religious and moral future of the girl would be spoiled by attending classes of the type of classes which the plaintiff conducts is to impute to the plaintiff an unfitness which is worse than attributing mere incapacity.

The second passage appears in the same issue, though not continuously with the first. It is headed "A grave reminder", the first part of which refers to an incident, which happened in the year 1939 in connection with one Mrs. Gadiwala, who was attending the "Udyoga Ashram" at Charni Road Junction. She was a married woman about twenty-seven years old. Sometime about July or August, 1939, she ceased to attend the "Udyoga Ashram", and it was afterwards discovered that she had been converted to Islam and had married a Moghul. These are facts, or, at any rate, are not disputed by the plaintiff. The writer goes on to say: "Is it necessary to give to Mrs. Mitha Murzban a grave reminder of that?" He continues as follows:—

"We would put this question only to this Bai Mitha; if so dire is the consequence in connection with a girl attending a class, have you as well as the people concerned any idea as to the extent to which the future of the Parsi girls would be spoiled by making them act as actresses on the stage?"

The last words 'act as actresses on the stage' are printed in bold type in the passage. It is really difficult to see the connection between a woman who attended the "Udyoga Ashram", and who afterwards left it and became a Mahomedan and married a Moghul, and the performance by Parsi girls upon the stage. In order to explain this connection, defendant stated in his evidence that what is meant is that if a girl like Mrs. Gadiwala came to grief merely by attending the class, viz. the "Udyoga Ashram", in the sense that she had only a restricted freedom of movement, how much worse would be the consequence for girls, appearing on the stage who, according to the defendant, would have unrestricted freedom. Why the girls appearing on the stage should, after the performance is over, have unrestricted freedom has not been explained. In fact reading the words of the passage in their plain ordinary meaning there is no reference to the restricted freedom of the one, and the unrestricted freedom of the other, either expressly or even by suggestion. The words used are that 'the future of the Parsi girls would be spoiled'. In this case also the word 'future' means and includes their social, religious and moral future. The defendant stated that he did not suggest that Mrs. Gadiwala's conversion and marriage were the results of her attending the "Udyoga Ashram"; but the suggestion is that if a girl attending a class like the plain-tiff's class, "Udyoga Ashram", came to such a result, the girls appearing with the plaintiff upon the stage would come to a result far worse than that of Mrs. Gadiwala. The only connection between the two, or the only common link between the two, viz. Mrs. Gadiwala's attendance of the "Udyoga Ashram" and girls appearing with the plaintiff upon the stage, is the plaintiff herself. To my mind it is rather far-fetched, if not fanciful, to suggest that the distinction sought to be drawn was between some imaginary restricted freedom and an equally imaginary unrestricted freedom. Another explanation that was given was that the attack, if any, is on the classes, and not upon any one conducting the class. This is another fanciful explanation. As pointed out by Halsbury in the same volume in paragraph 494,

"...a statement which in form is only a criticism of goods may, nevertheless, involve a reflection on the seller or maker, and thus be the foundation of an action of libel or slander properly so called,"

Similarly a statement may appear in the form of a comment upon classes that may nevertheless involve a reflection upon the fitness of the person conducting the classes, and be the foundation of an action for libel.

Both these passages suggest that the plaintiff is unfit to carry on her classes for poor Parsi girls, because by attending the classes their future would be ruined. She is therefore unfit to discharge the duties of her profession, or the duties in respect of her calling; and the imputation would have a tendency to prejudice her in the way of her profession or calling. The statements are therefore defamatory of the plaintiff and constitute a libel.

No action, however, lies against a defendant if he can prove that the words complained of are a fair and bona fide comment on a matter of public interest. The onus is upon the defendant to show that the subject commented upon is a matter of public interest, that the statements of fact relating thereto are true, and that the comment based upon the facts is a fair and bona fide comment. It is the expression of the criticism that has to be fair. It is not necessary to prove malice on the part of the defendant, though malice may sometimes be proved to show that the comment is not fair. Nor is it a defence to allege that the defendant bona fide believed that his statements were true. There is no exact definition of what a matter of public interest is. Matters of public interest are numerous, and are usually grouped under certain heads; but generally speaking, they are subjects which invite public attention, and are open to public discussion or criticism. There is also no definite standard of what a fair and bona fide comment is. In Merivale v. Carson<sup>1</sup> Lord Esher M. R. as far back as 1887 proposed the following test (p. 280):—

"What is the meaning of a 'fair comment'? I think the meaning is this: is the article in the opinion of the jury beyond that which any fair man, however prejudiced or however strong his opinion may be, would say of the work in question? Every latitude must be given to opinion and to prejudice, and then an ordinary set of men with ordinary judgment must say whether any fair man would have made such a comment on the work. It is very easy to say what would be clearly beyond that limit; if, for instance, the writer attacked the private character of the author. But it is much more difficult to say what is within the limit. That must depend upon the circumstances of the particular case."

It is further stated at page 281 that a comment may be independent, bold and even exaggerated, and that mere exaggeration, however gross the exaggeration may be, would not make the comment unfair. The question for consideration is : whether "any fair man, however prejudiced he may be, however exaggerated or obstinate his views, would have said that which this criticism has said of the work which is criticised. If it goes beyond that, then you must find for the plaintiff ; if you are not satisfied that it does, then it falls within the allowed limit, and there is no libel at all." The same test, in my opinion, would apply to every comment, including a defamatory imputation as to character or profession or calling, unless the imputation is a correct or reasonable inference warranted by the facts commented upon : see the remarks of Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton in Hunt v. Star Newspaper Company, Limited<sup>1</sup> ; the remarks of Lord Atkinson in Hunt v. Star Newspaper Company, Limited,<sup>2</sup> and the remarks of Lord Justice Kennedy in Peter Walker & Son, Limited v. Hodgson.<sup>3</sup> Newspapers are subject to the same rules as other critics, and have no special right or privilege, and in spite of the latitude allowed to them, it does not mean that they have any special right to make unfair comments, or to make imputations upon the character of a person, or imputations upon or in respect of a person's profession or calling : see Arnold v. The King-Emperor,<sup>4</sup> where it was pointed out by the Privy Council that the range of a journalist's criticisms or comments is as wide as, and no wider than, that of any other subject. This controversy, which gave rise to the agitation, is no doubt, in my opinion, a subject of public interest ; but it cannot be said to be a reasonable inference warranted by the facts to say that the plaintiff who was one of the performers in the play would ruin the future of the Parsi girls attending her class or classes, and was therefore unfit to carry on her profession. As the imputation is not warranted by the facts, it takes the statements out of the sphere of fair comment.

The other defence is that the words were published on a privileged occasion. No action lies for a communication made upon an occasion of qualified privilege and fairly warranted by it, unless it is proved by the plaintiff to have been made maliciously, that is, with an improper motive ; malice, it has been said, destroys the privilege. Communications are made upon occasions of qualified privilege if made (a) by a person in discharge of a public or private duty whether legal, moral or social to a person who is interested in receiving it, or (b) by a person who has an interest to be protected communicating information relevant to that interest to a person honestly believed to have a duty to protect it, or (c) by a person in matters when a common interest or a reciprocal duty or interest arises in respect of the subject-matter of the communication between the person and the person or persons to whom the communication is made. It is essential that there should be reciprocity of either a duty to communicate and an interest to receive, or an interest to communicate and a duty to receive, or a common interest or reciprocal duty to communicate and to receive the information. It is incumbent upon the defendant to prove : (a) that the words were published on a privileged occasion, and (b) that the communication was relevant or pertinent to the occasion. It is not enough for him to prove that he honestly believed in his duty or interest and in the corresponding duty of his readers; or that he believed honestly in the relevancy of what he said. It is necessary that the Court should be satisfied that what he communicated was something, which a reasonable person could have done.

The occasion for the communication of the words complained of is described in paragraph 7 of the written statement as follows: namely, that the statements were made in discharge of a moral or social duty and on a matter of public importance on which there was an interest common to the writer and to the persons to whom such statement was conveyed. The defendant must also show that what he communicated was relevant or pertinent to the privileged occasion. Any attack or personal imputation upon a person's calling or profession cannot be said to be relevant to, or fairly warranted by, the occasion; nor can it be said to be a mere incidental reference. In some cases the whole public or a section of the public may have an interest in being informed, as, for instance in the case of a controversy on a matter of public interest carried on in the press such as this particular controversy was. Even in such cases the communication must be relevant to the occasion, that is relevant to the discharge of the duty or the protection of the common interest. The statements made by the plaintiff are not, in my opinion, relevant or pertinent to the controversy about Parsi girls generally appearing upon the stage. It was pointed out by Lord Justice Romer in Chapman v. Ellesmere (Lord)<sup>1</sup> that it may be true in one sense to say that the newspapers owe a duty to their readers to publish any and every item of news that may interest them. But this is not such a duty as makes every communication in the paper relating to a matter of public interest a privileged one.

The second part of the plaintiff's case is that the defendant slandered her at a public meeting of the Parsis convened by the Parsi Federal Council in the Sir Cowasji Jehangir Hall on September 26, 1940, to protest against the appearance of Parsi girls along with men on a public stage. The words complained of by the plaintiff are set out about the end of paragraph 7 of the plaint. They are as follows:—

"The girls who are going to take part in the play 'Afiatoon' are not allowed even to go to their parents' home. The father of this girl is present here. (At this stage a Parsi gentleman named Mr. Pestonji Mehta which is a mistake for Jamsetji Mehta who is the father of the girl entered the stage and supported the facts published (mentioned) by Mr. Nusserwanji)" Mr. Nusserwanji there meaning the defendant.

Plaintiff admitted that she herself was not present at the meeting; and it was therefore incorrect for her to say in the verification clause that all that was stated in para. 7 including these words was true to her own knowledge. She, however, alleges that these words were spoken in reference to her and that is not specifically denied by the defendant in his written statement. Defendant has also not specifically denied that these were the words spoken, but has done so impliedly by setting out in his written statement what according to him were the words he spoke. His version of what he spoke is as follows :

"I have come to learn that some of the Parsi girls are going to take part in this play (Aflatoon) against the wishes of their parents. Since the agitation in my paper against this movement one of such girls has been staying away from her parents' house for a month. As an instance I shall call the father of the girl who is sitting here and he will bear me out."

The plaintiff's counsel argued that the words quoted in paragraph 7 were substantially the words used by the defendant, or were words which are the same in effect. It was formerly essential for the plaintiff to prove the actual words pleaded ; but it has now been held that it is enough to prove the substance of the words set out in the statement of claim of the plaintiff : see the remarks of Lord Coleridge, Chief Justice, in Harris v. Warre.<sup>1</sup> In Tournier v. National Provincial and Union Bank of England<sup>2</sup> Lord Justice Atkin pointed out at page 488 that—

"No slander of any complexity could ever be proved if the ipsissima verba of the pleading had to be established."

Whatever the words used were, plaintiff has to prove as she alleges that those words meant and were understood to be meant that she had been guilty of the criminal offence of wrongfully confining the girl Mani Jamshedji Mehta, and that in confining her the plaintiff had used physical force or violence, in order to compel her to take part in the performance of the play against the wishes of her parents. There is no reference to the use of physical force or to any illegal detention in the words set out in the plaintiff. What is alleged by the plaintiff is that the defendant said that the girls who were to take part in the play of Aflatoon were not even allowed to go to their parents' home, and Mani Mehta was one of such girls. Mani Mehta and her parents were called, and they denied this allegation. The girl's father, Mr. Jamshetji Mehta, an old man of about seventy-five, was also present at the meeting ; and he said that he was too confused to follow what the defendant said ; but at the defendant's instance he got up on the stage and then sat down. If, however, the plaintiff contends that even these words, viz. that the girls are not allowed even to go to their parents' home, were understood to mean that she had committed a criminal offence, it is for her to prove that the words were capable of conveying, and in fact did convey, that meaning ; and the evidence must be sufficiently strong and cogent for the purpose.

Besides the girl's father who denied what the defendant had said, plaintiff called three other witnesses : Dara Kapadia, a reporter of the Jame-Jamshed, one Ibrahim Haji Mahomed Mistry, who calls himself a free-lance journalist and who writes to the press, and one Hirjibhai Byramji Warden, who is related to the plaintiff, being her maternal uncle. Kapadia and Warden made a joint affidavit on the Notice of Motion for Injunction, and both stated in their affidavit, as they stated here, that the defendant did say in his speech that Parsi girls were made to take part in the play against their parents' wishes. Kapadia stated that the defendant also said that one girl was wrongfully confined. Warden stated that the defendant said that girls were detained by force both by the plaintiff and her husband, and that the same night after the meeting was over he went up to the plaintiff to enquire about the serious charge that had been made against her. Ibrahim Mistry only stated that the defendant said that the girls had not been allowed to see their parents for a month, and Mani Mehta was one of them. He stated that he asked the plaintiff's husband over the phone whether any girl was detained in his house, and that he received a reply that it was not true. On the other hand defendant denies that he spoke about any wrongful or possible detention at all, or made any such allegation. He says he did not even refer to the plaintiff. Three witnesses were called on his behalf who were present at the meeting, two of whom actually spoke at the meeting. The man who did not speak was Framroze Banker ; but he said that he was a great admirer and friend of the defendant, and he always took whatever the defendant said as correct. He further stated that at the end of the meeting he saw Jamshedji Mehta, who spoke to him of his own accord, and told him that his daughter Mani was about to take part in the play against his and his wife's, i.e. her mother's wishes. When Mr. Mehta was confronted in the box with Banker, he said that he had not seen or met Banker at all that evening. I entirely agree with counsel's comment upon Mr. Banker that he was a partisan witness of the defendant, and I place no reliance upon his evidence. There are, however, two independent witnesses, who belong, no doubt, to what is called the "orthodox" section, and are friends of the defendant, but who cannot be said to be partisan witnesses. One of them was Mr. Cawasha Manekshaw Talyarkhan, who was until 1937 a practising advocate of this Court. He stated what according to him happened at the meeting, when defendant called the old man on the stage, and the old man nodded and raised up his hands as if to approve of what the defendant had stated. This is slightly a modification of the words used in his affidavit that the old man "corroborated" what the defendant said. All the witnesses were, however, agreed that no particular reference was made to the plaintiff. Mr. Talyarkhan stated that the words 'shame, shame' that came from the audience were directed against one Pestonji Kapadia. Mr. Banker said that the words 'shame, shame' were directed against the organisers of the performance, and amongst its organisers plaintiff would be included ; but he did not say that the plaintiff was referred to by name. Mr. Dadachanji, however, stated in his evidence that nobody ever said 'shame, shame' at all at the meeting. One thing is significant namely that Mr. Talyarkhan, who was once a practising lawyer, should have referred in his speech to "habeas corpus proceedings." Mr. Warden was right when he too said that habeas corpus proceedings were referred to, though Warden went further and said that they were referred to in connection with Mani Mehta and her illegal detention by the plaintiff. Mr. Talyarkhan in his evidence however stated that he did refer to habeas corpus proceedings ; but he said he put the case in the alternative to the audience. He said that he knew nothing as to what had happened ; but if the girls, including Mani Mehta, were absent from their parents voluntarily, nothing could be done ; but if they were kept back by force, then a writ of habeas corpus can issue. I doubt very much whether such an elaborate explanation, which a lawyer gives to his client, was given in that heated atmosphere of the meeting to an excited audience. At the same time he stated that he did feel a doubt as to what the defendant said, and the defendant corroborated what Mr. Talyarkhan said. It is very strange for Mr. Dadachanji, who is also a journalist and social worker, to say that he did not understand what habeas corpus meant, and he thought even Mr. Talyarkhan did not understand what it meant. This is again another exaggeration. It seems to me that it is quite probable that the speakers having come to know that the plaintiff was an organiser, for the matter of that the main organiser of the performance of this play, wanted to drive home their remarks against her; but the evidence is conflicting and not clear as to whether she was referred to specifically and in connection with any illegal detention by her. The onus is upon the plaintiff to show that the words either contained a direct charge of having committed a criminal offence or that they clearly indicated and suggested the commission of such an offence. I have considered all the evidence together on both sides as carefully as I can, and I have come to the conclusion that plaintiff has not discharged that onus. An imputation of a criminal offence in order to be actionable per se, which is a drastic remedy, must be a distinct charge and must not be a mere statement of suspicion: see Simmons v. Mitchell.<sup>1</sup> It may be made in so many words, or it may be made in words from which the charge could be inferred; but the inference must be clear and unequivocal. In view of my opinion I do not think it is necessary for me to go into the question whether the words were spoken on a privileged occasion. If the words were defamatory, and did impute the commission of a criminal offence, an imputation of having committed a criminal offence would not be relevant or pertinent to that privileged occasion. However, that is a question which need not be gone into at length, because, in my opinion, the plaintiff has not proved the slander.

The only question is: what is the relief which the plaintiff is entitled to? She claims Rs. 5,000 by way of damages. I have already held that to say of a person, and especially of a woman, that as an instructress she is unfit to carry on her work or her profession, and that by carrying it on she would ruin the "future" of Parsi girls in the sense in which that word was used, is grossly defamatory; and I order the defendant to pay the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 1,000 as and by way of damages. The plaintiff also claims an injunction against the defendant; but there is no evidence before me of any threat to repeat the libel complained of. Even in para. 8 of the plaint the only allegation was that having regard to the campaign which had been carried on, the defendant would continue to further publish the defamatory matters affecting her, unless he was restrained. There is no allegation that he had threatened to do so, and there is no evidence either. I cannot, therefore, order an injunction to issue against the defendant.

I have heard counsel on the question of costs. The usual rule is that the plaintiff must get the costs of those issues on which the plaintiff has succeeded, and the defendant must get the costs of those issues on which the plaintiff has lost. No doubt, there was considerable evidence led on the question of slander; but the more important part of the defamation was the libel, which Presidency-towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), Sec. 68(1)(d)—“Suit relating to property of the insolvent”—Meaning of—Money-decree passed against appellant—Appellant becoming insolvent subsequently—Whether Official Assignee could continue appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 8—“Might maintain,” meaning of—Appeal whether abates where Official Assignee has no power to maintain it—Poverty of appellant whether ground for passing order for further security.

A suit “relating to the property of the insolvent”, within the meaning of s. 68 (1) (d) of the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act, 1909, means a suit which, if successful, will increase the assets distributable amongst the creditors or the defence of which may prevent the assets being diminished. A right to institute an appeal, which merely relates to a money claim against an insolvent, is not a legal proceeding relating to the property of the insolvent and does not fall within the powers given by s. 68 to the Official Assignee.

A Court of Appeal will not direct an appellant to give further security for the costs of the appeal merely on the ground of his poverty.

The appellant was declared insolvent after he had filed an appeal against a money decree passed against him. The respondent applied for an order dismissing the appeal under O. XXII, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, contending that by reason of the insolvency of the appellant the appeal abated :—

Held, that the words “might maintain” in O. XXII, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, meant that the Official Assignee had the power or was entitled to maintain the appeal ; and that as in the present case the Official Assignee could not maintain such an appeal, the appeal did not abate.

NAROTTAM-

AMARCHAND

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a motion in appeal No. 35 of 1940 asking, in the first instance, that the appeal may be dismissed under O. XXII, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and, in the alternative, that the appellant may be ordered to give further security for the costs of the appeal. The appeal is against a money decree passed against the appellant. After the passing of the decree, the decree-holders got the debtor adjudicated insolvent. There is, we are told, an appeal against the order of adjudication, but at the moment the order of adjudication stands.

The contention of the respondents on this motion is that the right to appeal against the money decree is vested in the Official Assignee, and that the appeal has abated under O. XXII, r. 8, and ought to be dismissed under sub-r. (2). Mr. Engineer for the respondents has relied on a decision of this Court in Rustomji v. Byramji,<sup>1</sup> but, in my opinion, that decision is not in point. The Court there was considering whether a right to sue to set aside a money decree on the ground of fraud vested in the Official Assignee, and the Court held that it did so vest. But the question here is whether a right to appeal against a money decree is affected by the insolvency of the appellant debtor, and that question must be determined by a reference to the Civil Procedure Code. At the moment when this appeal was filed, it was a well constituted appeal. That is not in dispute. The question is whether it ceased to be a well constituted appeal by reason of the insolvency of the appellant. That question turns on O. XXII, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, which provides in sub-r. (1) that the insolvency of a plaintiff in any suit, which the Assignee or the Receiver might maintain for the benefit of his creditors, shall not cause the suit to abate, unless such Assignee or Receiver declines to continue the suit or to give security for the costs thereof as therein mentioned. I agree with the view expressed by the Lahore High Court in Mul Chand-Ganga Bishen v. R. M. Downie and Co., Ltd.<sup>2</sup> that the plain implication of that section is that the suit does abate, if the Assignee declines to continue the suit or to give the security, although that is not expressed in terms. Sub-rule (2) enables the Court to dismiss the suit where it has abated under sub-r. (1). Rule 8 is made applicable to appeals by r. 11.

Now, the only question to my mind on this motion is whether it can be said that the Official Assignee might maintain this appeal for the benefit of the insolvent's creditors. The case in Lahore, to which I have referred, was also a case of a money decree, but the question whether the appeal might be maintained by the Official Assignee was not discussed, so far as the report shows. In my judgment, the words "might maintain" mean has the power, or is entitled, to maintain, and one has to look at the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act in order to see what powers the Official Assignee has in the matter. By s. 68(1)(d) of the Act the Official Assignee has power to institute, defend or continue any suit or legal proceeding relating to the property

O. C. J. of the insolvent. A suit relating to the property of the insolvent, in my opinion, means a suit which, if successful, will increase the assets distributable amongst the creditors, or the defence of which may prevent the assets being diminished. A right to institute an appeal, which merely relates to a money claim against an insolvent, is not, in my view, a legal proceeding relating to the property of the insolvent and does not fall within the powers given by s. 68 to the Official Assignee. I think, therefore, that the Official Assignee could not maintain the appeal for the benefit of the insolvent's creditors, and consequently the appeal has not abated under O. XXII, r. 8. The Official Assignee is not bound by the judgment appealed from, and can in insolvency decline to admit the debt.

The question then arises whether we ought to direct the appellant to give further security for costs. He has made the ordinary deposit of Rs. 500 under the High Court Rules. It is said that he has got no money, that this suit was fought at considerable length in the Court below, and that he can produce money if he wants to do so, but has not produced anything towards paying the amount of this decree. However, the general principle on which the Courts act is not to order further security to be given merely on the ground that the appellant is poor. So far as I can judge from the statement made by counsel, the appeal raises a question of law, which is arguable, and in the circumstances I do not think that we ought to order the appellant to give any further security for costs.

The motion, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

MACKLIN J. I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1—Suit—Withdrawal—Permission to file fresh suit—Such permission terminates the suit—Procedure when permission asked for.

Where the plaintiff, under O. XXIII, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, simply wishes to withdraw from a suit, he can do so without asking for any permission from the Court. Where, however, he wishes to withdraw it with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter,

he should ask for permission from the Court, which could be given on such terms as it thinks fit. The permission relates not to the withdrawal from the suit but to the filing of another suit.

When once an order is made permitting the withdrawal of a suit on certain conditions, it is not open to the plaintiff to ask the Court to modify or annul those conditions, because the suit has already ended when the order is made.

In applying for withdrawal of a suit, the plaintiff should request the Court to acquaint him with the terms which it wishes to impose, before the final order is made. It is also open to the Court without any such request to indicate such terms to the plaintiff, and after hearing the plaintiff it may modify them or even allow him to withdraw his application for withdrawal and proceed with the suit. All this, however, must be done before the order of withdrawal is formally made.

APPLICATION to withdraw from a suit with permission to file a fresh suit for the same subject-matter.

The applicant Jaijibai and one Hirabai filed a suit in the Court of the Joint First Class Subordinate Judge at Nadiad for a declaration that the inam village of Ralej having been granted to their ancestor for maintenance and prosperity of the family was not liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained by the defendant Bhikhibai. The other creditors of the plaintiffs were not made parties to the suit.

On February 15, 1940, Jaijibai (Hirabai having died in the meantime) applied to the Court for permission to withdraw the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit. The Court passed on the same day the following order :—

“I am satisfied that in the ends of justice the plaintiff may be allowed permission to withdraw the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter on condition that the plaintiff pays in cash full costs of the defendant in this suit before institution of a fresh suit.”

On February 16, 1940, the plaintiff applied to the Court that the condition imposed upon her was very onerous and that it should be modified. This application was dismissed by the Court on April 6, 1940.

On April 6, 1940, the plaintiff again applied to the Court stating that she had not withdrawn her suit in view of the harsh and inequitable condition imposed upon her and that the Court should take up the hearing of the suit at the stage where it was left. This application too was dismissed by the Court on April 13, 1940, for the following reasons :—

“The learned pleader for the plaintiff on the authority of Shidramappa v. Mallappa (33 Bom. L. R. 278) wants the relief claimed in this application. That very authority is against him. In fact at p. 282 it is mentioned that when once the suit has been withdrawn it is no longer pending and the permission given by the Court relates to the bringing of a fresh suit. At p. 288 it is mentioned that the withdrawal of the suit does not require permission of the Court. It must be taken that the suit is withdrawn when the order is passed, and the permission granted refers to the filing of the subsequent suit on certain conditions .... The Court passed order both

 v.
 BHIKHIBAI A. G. Desai, with C. K. Shah, for the applicant.
 CHANDULAL P. B. Shingne, with Wadia, Ghandy & Co., for the opponent.

DIVATIA J. This revision application is filed by the plaintiff in a suit for a declaration that certain property was not liable to be sold in execution of a decree obtained by the defendant, who is the opponent here, against one Bapuji.

After issues were framed the plaintiffs applied to the Court for permission to withdraw the suit with liberty on the ground that the property was in possession of the receivers in another suit filed by the other creditors of Bapuji, that in their absence this suit might fail for want of necessary parties and that a fresh suit was, therefore, necessary impleading all proper parties. The application was presented on February 15, 1940, and on the same day the learned Judge passed an order to the effect that he was satisfied that in the ends of justice, the plaintiffs may be allowed permission to withdraw the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter on condition that the plaintiffs pay in cash full costs of the defendant in this suit before the institution of a fresh suit.

On the next day, i.e., the 16th, the plaintiffs applied to the Court that the condition of paying the full costs imposed by the Court was not legal or in any case equitable, as even if the suit failed for want of necessary parties, i.e., on a preliminary ground, without being decided on merits, the costs payable to the other side would be only one-fourth of the full costs. The plaintiffs further stated that the condition being very heavy, they had not withdrawn the suit and that they would do so after it was revised. After hearing the other side, the Court dismissed that application on April 6. It appears that in the meanwhile, on February 21, the learned Judge had signed the bill of costs which was drawn up in pursuance of the order of the 15th. The defendant's pleader countersigned it, but the plaintiffs' pleader did not.

After the dismissal of their application on April 6, the plaintiffs on the same day applied again that the dismissal of their application was wrong, they had not withdrawn the suit which was still pending and that the Court should proceed with its further hearing. The Court dismissed that application also on the ground that the suit had been already withdrawn and had, therefore, come to an end on February 15 when the plaintiffs' first application for leave to withdraw was granted and that the bill of costs was also signed on February 21. The learned Judge relied on the decision in Shidramappa v. Mallappa,<sup>1</sup> for holding that once the suit had been withdrawn, it was no longer pending, that it must be taken to have been withdrawn when the order for withdrawal was passed and that the permission granted referred only to the filing of a fresh suit on certain condition. It is this order which is challenged by the plaintiffs in this revision application.

Order XXIII, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, provides :—

"Where the Court is satisfied—

(a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or

(b) that there are other sufficient grounds. ...

it may, on such terms as it thinks fit, grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit ... with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such suit ..."

It is clear that if the plaintiff simply wishes to withdraw from a suit, he can do so without asking for any permission from the Court. But if he wishes to withdraw it with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter, he has to ask for permission from the Court, and it could be given on such terms as it thinks fit. It is further clear that the permission relates not to the withdrawal from the suit but to the filing of another suit.

There is a difference of opinion among the High Courts as to whether, after the Court grants permission to withdraw with liberty on certain conditions, the suit must be regarded as pending till the second suit is brought. So far as our High Court is concerned, the view taken in Shidramappa v. Mallappa is that when once a suit has been withdrawn, it is no longer pending, and the permission given by the Court relates to the bringing of the fresh suit. A suit should be regarded as having been withdrawn when an order is made by the Court on the application to withdraw : see Jaimala Kunwar v. Collector of Saharanpur<sup>1</sup> and Seethai Achi v. Meyyappa Chetti.<sup>2</sup> This order, therefore, terminates the suit, although it is not a decree within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code as held in Patloji v. Ganu<sup>3</sup> and Kulandavelu Nachier v. Ramaswami Pandia Thalan.<sup>4</sup> It, therefore, follows that after the order is made permitting the withdrawal of the suit on certain conditions, it is not open to the plaintiff to ask the Court to modify or annul those conditions, because the suit has already ended when the order is made.

It is, however, contended on behalf of the petitioner that the Allahabad High Court has held in Rachhpal Singh v. Sheo Ratan Singh<sup>5</sup> that a suit is withdrawn after the plaintiff has accepted the terms imposed by the Court, and that it is, therefore, open to the plaintiff to ask for a modification of the terms or even to withdraw the application for the withdrawal of the suit even after the order of withdrawal is made by the Court. It is further contended that this decision has been quoted with approval in the case of Shidramappa v. Mallappa. It is true that this decision is referred to both by Patkar J. as well as Baker J. in Shidramappa's case. It is observed by Patkar J. as follows (p. 284) :—

"The question has been considered in the case of Rachhpal Singh v. Sheo Ratan Singh,<sup>6</sup> in which the view of the Calcutta High Court in Shital Prosad's case<sup>7</sup> was not accepted, and it was held that once the plaintiff has accepted the terms imposed by the Court, the case is declared to be withdrawn and is no longer pending, and the plaintiff must comply with those terms strictly or take the consequences of being barred from filing a second suit."

“That judgment refers to all the authorities, and his conclusion, with which I agree, is that once the plaintiff has accepted the terms imposed by the Court the case is declared to be withdrawn and is no longer pending, and the plaintiff must comply with those terms strictly or take the consequences by being barred from filing a second suit.”

These passages do not, in my opinion, indicate that our Court took the view that even after the order permitting the withdrawal of the suit on certain conditions was passed, it was open to the plaintiff to apply to the Court to modify the conditions or to proceed with the suit on the ground that he did not wish to accept the conditions imposed. On the contrary this view would be inconsistent with the decision in Shidramappa's case that the withdrawal takes place and the suit ceases to be pending when the order for its withdrawal is made. In fact, another passage in the judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Rachhpal Singh v. Sheo Ratan Singh is to the effect that the Court will intimate to the plaintiff whether it is willing at all to give permission to file a fresh suit and if so on what, if any, terms; if the plaintiff accepts those terms, the order of withdrawal with those terms will be passed and the suit will cease to be a pending suit. It would thus appear that even according to that decision the non-acceptance of the terms by the plaintiff should take place before and not after the order of withdrawal is passed. In my opinion, therefore, once the order of permission to withdraw is made and the suit has ceased to exist, it is not open to the plaintiff to ask the Court to revive the suit on the ground of non-acceptance of the terms. No doubt cases may occur where it would be a hardship on the plaintiff if the Court imposes such terms for withdrawal as would be very difficult to fulfil, and the plaintiff might prefer to proceed with his suit in spite of its defect rather than to comply with the terms which he feels very hard. To obviate this result the plaintiff, while applying for withdrawal, might request the Court to acquaint him with the terms which it wishes to impose, before the final order is made. It is also open to the Court without any such request to indicate such terms to the plaintiff, and after hearing the plaintiff it may modify them or even allow him to withdraw his application for withdrawal and proceed with the suit. But all this must be done before the order of withdrawal is formally made.

The order of the lower Court is, therefore, correct, and the rule is discharged with costs.

Hindu law—Custom—Divorce whether recognised among Pakhali caste of Ahmedabad—Consent of party against whom divorce sought—Consent given in presence of caste panch—Whether such divorce permissible under Hindu law.

The custom of granting divorce exists among Hindus of the Pakhali caste of Ahmedabad, and a divorce obtained according to it would not be contrary to Hindu law if the party against whom the divorce is sought has given his or her consent to the divorce in the presence of the caste panch.

One Jina Magan (plaintiff) and Bai Jethi (defendant) who belonged to the Pakhali caste of Ahmedabad were married when they were children. On August 17, 1935, there was a meeting of the caste panch when a divorce was granted with the consent of the plaintiff and the defendant and two mutual documents were executed by the brothers of the plaintiff and the father of the defendant as the parties were considered to be minors.

On December 23, 1935, the plaintiff filed the present suit against the defendant for restitution of conjugal rights. The defendant contended that she was divorced by the plaintiff on August 17, 1935, according to the custom of the caste and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to claim his marital rights. The trial Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit observing as follows :—

"The custom of divorce alleged by the defendant is that the husband and wife by mutual consent before a caste meeting divorce each other on the payment of Rs. 155 by the wife's father. According to Shankerangham Chetti v. Subhan Chetti, 17 Mad. 479, 'There is nothing immoral in a caste custom by which divorce and remarriage are permissible by mutual agreement.'

Hence if there is mutual consent and the above custom is proved there is nothing wrong in recognizing it. That the consent must be mutual is made clear in Keshav Hargovan v. Bai Gandi, 17 Bom. L. R. 584 where it is held that 'The caste custom which authorizes a minor wife to divorce her husband against his will and with or without any assignable reason on payment of a sum of money fined by the caste from time to time must be regarded as immoral or opposed to public policy within the meaning of s. 322 of the Indian Contract Act.' It may be noted that this case reported (sic) to the same caste as in our case.

* Second Appeal No. 695 of 1939, against the decision of I. C. Munsif, Assistant Judge at Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 335 of 1937, reversing the decree passed by J. D. Kapadia, Assistant Judge at Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 25 of 1937.

A. C. J. Thus there can be no divorce in our case without the consent of the husband. If 1941 the consent is not proved the divorce even if we accept the custom becomes legally — void. •Even if we fully believe the defendant's story, what it comes to in our case JINA MAGAN is that as the parties were minors the divorce was by the consent of the guardians of
 v. the minors who signed the divorce deeds (exhibits 31 and 32). The guardians of BAI JBETHI the husband were his brothers and the guardian of the wife was her father.

— Can such a custom be legally recognized? Can two married minors be divorced at the sweet will of their guardians without any assignable reason by merely the payment of a certain amount? I am not clear whether such a custom would be recognizable under the Hindu Law and whether such a custom is not opposed to public policy. Fortunately in our case it is not necessary to decide that issue.

According to Jina Magan (the husband) he never consented to the divorce, nor had he authorized his brothers to grant any divorce. Besides he was a major at the time of the divorce and his brothers had no business to consent for him."

On appeal the Assistant Judge held that the defendant had been validly divorced by the plaintiff according to the custom of the caste and that therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief prayed for. He observed as follows in his judgment :—

"But the learned pleader for the respondent laid great stress on the ruling in Keshav v. Bai Gandi (17 Bom. L. R. 584) and emphasised that it was a ruling of the High Court with respect to this very caste. A glance at the ruling however will show that it is not applicable to the facts of this case. That was a case in which the caste gave fargat to the wife and there was no consent of the husband. On the contrary, in this case the husband's consent has been established by exhibit 49 who is the patel of the caste and whose evidence deserves weight ... The custom of giving divorces by the guardians with or without the consent of the minor husband and wife may appear immoral in civilised society but in the caste of Pakhalis where infants are married by their parents such a custom cannot at all be looked upon as immoral and so long as the Hindu law recognises the force of the custom, there is no reason why the Court should not enforce it in proper cases."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Purshottam Tricumdas and C. M. Trivedi, with C. S. Trivedi for Ramnath Shivalal, for the appellant.

I. I. Chundrigar, with K. T. Pathak, for the respondent.

DIVATIA J. This appeal arises in a suit by the plaintiff-appellant against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights. The only question in the appeal is whether the plea of the defendant that she has already been divorced from the plaintiff has been established. The lower appellate Court has held, differing from the trial Court, that the defendant had been validly divorced by the plaintiff according to the custom of the caste and that the latter was not, therefore, entitled to the relief prayed for.

The finding of the lower appellate Court on the evidence is that both the parties belonging to the Pakhali caste of Ahmedabad were married to each other when they were children, that on August 17, 1935, there was a meeting of the caste panch where a divorce was granted with the consent of both the parties and two mutual documents were executed by the brothers of the plaintiff and the father of the defendant as the parties were considered to be minors. On the question of minority there is some confusion in the judgment of the lower Court where at one place they are described as minors and at another place the husband is described as a major. It appears from the certificates of birth produced in evidence that the husband as well as the wife had finished eighteen years of age when the divorce was granted. In the eye of law, therefore, they must be treated as majors. The defendant had, however, pleaded in the written-statement that according to the custom of the caste if either the husband or the wife had not attained the age of twenty-one, a petition was made to the caste on their behalf by their guardians and that the guardians can ask for or give a divorce on behalf of the minors. That point, however, is not material in view of the fact that on the finding of the lower Court the husband, who was above eighteen years of age and capable of giving consent, was present at the meeting and did give his consent asked for by the defendant's father on her behalf. The evidence of the headman of the caste, which has been believed by the lower Court, shows that the husband duly gave his consent, but he said that the writing would be signed by his elder brothers who were present there. It is true that there is no specific finding as to whether the wife gave her consent, but there would be no question of that in view of the fact that the defendant was also present in the caste meeting and her father himself wanted the divorce for his daughter on account of desertion as well as on the ground of the marriage being ill-matched. The learned Judge, therefore, on this evidence as well as on the several instances of custom relied upon on behalf of the defendant, held that the custom had been proved and that the wife having been validly divorced from the husband, the plaintiff was not entitled to restitution. On behalf of the plaintiff much reliance was placed in the lower Court on the decision of this Court in Keshav Hargovan v. Bai Gandi.<sup>1</sup> That was a case of parties of the same caste in the same town. It was held there that a custom stated to exist among Hindus of the Pakhali caste by which the marriage tie can be dissolved by either husband or wife against the wish of the divorced party, the sole condition attached being the payment of a sum of money fixed by the caste, cannot be recognised by the Court as it was immoral or opposed to public policy as well as repugnant to Hindu law. The previous case law on this point was reviewed, and the ground of the decision is that the caste cannot give a divorce without the consent of the party which is going to be divorced. Undoubtedly that is a correct principle. The caste has no jurisdiction to force a divorce upon an unwilling party. But the case would be otherwise where the party against whom divorce is sought according to custom gives his or her consent and the consent is given in the presence of the caste panch. All the previous cases discussed in Keshav Hargovan v. Bai Gandi, and relied upon here also were either civil or criminal cases in which the wife remarried without a valid divorce in the sense that it was not granted with the consent of the husband. But it seems to me that in those castes where the custom of divorce exists and where the consent of the spouse, who is to be divorced, has been proved, it would be permissible for the other spouse, if she is the wife, to remarry, and such custom of divorce cannot, in my opinion, be regarded as contrary to Hindu law.

Mr. Purshottam on behalf of the appellant contends that the institution of divorce itself is opposed to the spirit of Hindu law, and that there is no decision of any Court in India which holds a custom of divorce as valid. I think that would be going too far. As observed in Tagore Law Lectures, 1908, on Customs and Customary Law in British India, "divorce is not contemplated by the Hindu law but it is not repugnant to its principles, and if there be a well established custom in its support, it may override the general provisions of that law." Sir William Strange in his treatise on Hindu law also says that in the lowest classes divorce is attainable between a husband and wife provided it is allowed by the custom of the caste. There have been many cases in our Courts arising out of divorce in the lower castes. In all these cases even where it is held that the divorce had not been properly granted, it has been taken for granted that the custom of divorce can validly exist in a particular community, especially if it is a shudra community, but that divorce could not be forced by the caste against the unwilling person. In Rahi v. Govind<sup>1</sup> it was held that a shudra woman, who was married to another person by pat marriage, without having received a chhor chiti (i.e. release) from her first husband, could not validly remarry another person because there was no valid divorce. At page 114 of the judgment there is a quotation from Steele's Law and Customs of Hindu Castes to the effect that "all the lower castes admit the second marriage of wives in particular instances, and of widows, the ceremonies at which differ in many respects from those at a first marriage." There is also a reference therein to instances in which it was allowed, in the cases of women whose husbands were living; but in such cases the proper course would appear to be for the first husband to give the wife a chhor chithi, or a writing of divorcement, and generally the concurrence of the caste was required, but not invariably. On the particular facts of that case, it was held that the consent of the husband had not been obtained, and that, therefore, the divorce was invalid, but it was observed that in the lower castes especially the custom of divorce by giving a chhor chithi was in existence. Similarly, the decision in Reg. v. Sambhu Raghu<sup>2</sup> also proceeds on the ground that the consent of the husband had not been obtained, and it was observed:—"The Court does not recognize the authority of the caste to declare a marriage void, or to give permission to a woman to re-marry." The decision in Emperor v. Bai Ganga<sup>3</sup> also proceeds on the same ground. There the husband was absent in South Africa and it was held that the caste had no authority to grant divorce without his consent. On the other hand, it has been held in Sankaralingam Chetti v. Subban Chetti<sup>4</sup> that there is nothing immoral in a caste custom by which divorce and re-marriage are permissible on mutual agreement, on one party paying to the other the expenses of the latter's original marriage. I may state that there is a recent decision of the Privy Council in Gopi Krishna Kasaudhan v. Musammat Jaggo,<sup>5</sup> in which their Lordships confirmed the finding of the trial Court to the effect that in the community of the parties, who were vaishyas, it was proved that abandonment or desertion of the wife by her husband dissolves the marriage tie, and sets her free to contract another marriage. It is true that it was not contended there that the custom, especially in the regenerate classes, was against Hindu law. Nevertheless, it is remarkable that such a plea had not been taken if that custom was supposed to be against the spirit of Hindu law.

In my opinion, the lower Court has rightly distinguished the decision in Keshav Hargovan v. Bai Gandi, on the ground that there the consent of the husband was not taken by the caste and here the consent has been proved. It would have been another matter if it had been proved that the caste procured the husband's consent by pressure or coercion, but there is no evidence to show that, and it seems to have been a free and voluntary consent.

It is next argued that the lower Court was wrong in holding the custom proved in this particular community. It is not clear on the evidence as to whether the persons belonging to the Pakhali caste are shudras or kshatriyas. Some have described themselves as Rajput Pakhalis. In Borrodaile's Gujarat Caste Rules, Vol. II, there appears to be a statement to the effect that in this Pakhali caste there was no system of natra, i.e. re-marriage, during the husband's life-time, and that it is not the practice for a wife to dissolve the marriage tie during the husband's lifetime. In the book on Tribes and Castes of Bombay by R. E. Enthoven, Vol. I, there is a reference to the Pakhali caste. It is there observed as follows with regard to this community (p. 180):—

"A husband can divorce a wife on the ground of her misconduct. A wife can divorce a husband if he ill-treats her. A divorced woman has to pay a fine of from Rs. 100 to 200 to the caste-people in order to remain in the caste."

In the present case, the learned Judge has held, relying upon the instances adduced by the defendant, that the custom of granting divorce in this community does exist, and as the consent of the husband has been given, it would not be against the spirit of Hindu law.

In my opinion, therefore, the lower Court was right in holding that in the present case the custom of divorce has been proved, that the consent of the husband has also been proved, and that therefore the divorce being legal and valid, the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief of restitution of conjugal rights.

The decree of the lower appellate Court is, therefore, confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

In the Rules of the High Court of Bombay, 1936, item 14 of the "Table of Fees to be taken by the Attorneys", which relates to "instructions for brief", is not confined either to suits or to matters in Court. The wording of the item does not draw a distinction between chamber matters and matters heard in Court. The essential thing is that there should be a final trial of a suit or matter. The words "final trial" are not confined to a final trial of a suit. The Taxing Master has, therefore, jurisdiction to allow a sum as an item of instructions for brief on a chamber summons which originated in chambers but was adjourned to be heard in Court.

The Court normally does not interfere with the discretion of the Taxing Master as to the quantum of costs allowed, unless he has misdirected himself or not properly exercised the discretion vested in him. If the Taxing Master takes into account merely the length of time occupied by the hearing in assessing fee for "instructions for brief", or attaches undue importance to it, he misdirects himself. The words "instructions for brief" do not mean the same thing as "instructions for counsel." Instructions given orally to counsel in the course of hearing cannot be included in "instructions for brief."

Rule 563 of the High Court Rules gives a wide discretion to the Taxing Master to take various factors into consideration in respect of suits as well as other matters, and the word "matter" in the rule cannot be construed as referring only to appeals, arbitrations, accounts and motions, being the four matters expressly mentioned in item 14.

In the Rules of the Bombay High Court, 1936, under items 40 and 41 in the "Table of Fees to be taken by Attorneys," the Taxing Master has to reckon the number of hours of attendance, irrespective of whether they took place on the same day or not. Having completed the first hour, for which a sum of Rs. 15 is allowed, all subsequent hours are to be allowed at the rate of Rs. 10.

H. H. Wadia v. Haji Mahomed Ismail Ashraf,<sup>3</sup> overruled.

In counting hours of attendance of attorneys, under items 40 and 41, referred to above, the time taken up by the midday adjournment of Court is not to be reckoned.

Rule 567 of the Rules of the High Court of Bombay, 1936, only authorises the payment of refreshers on the hearing of a suit or appeal which extends to more than a day. There is no express power to allow refreshers on a summons adjourned into Court. Refreshers in matters other than suits or appeals do not come within the words "all reasonable disbursements" in item 60 of the "Table of Fees to be taken by the Attorneys."

On a review of taxation no increase of charges are allowed over those charged in a bill of costs.

Where the Taxing Master has not been asked to allow additional brief fee, having regard to the unexpected length of time the case has taken, and where no application is made to the chamber Judge to have the matter sent down to the Taxing Master to consider whether an extra allowance should not be made, the Appeal Court will not increase the fee or ask the Taxing Master to do so.

TAXATION.

The appellant, P. D. Shamdasani, had filed a suit (No. 564 of 1925) against the respondents, the Central Bank of India, Ltd. The suit had been dismissed on August 21, 1931, and on appeal, the appeal (No. 41 of 1931) had been dismissed on April 14, 1932. The appellant's petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council had been dismissed on August 29, 1932. The respondents' solicitors lodged one bill of costs on February 27, 1932, and another on October 30, 1933. The bills of costs were taxed by the Taxing Master in August, 1934. The appellant's objections to the taxation of the bills of costs were dismissed. The appellant took out a chamber summons for review of taxation on February 15, 1935. It was adjourned for hearing into Court and was dismissed with costs by Blackwell J. on April 8, 1936.

The respondents' solicitors lodged on September 28, 1938, their bill of costs of the chamber summons for review of taxation. The Taxing Master completed the taxation of the bill of costs on February 15, 1939.

The appellant filed on March 10, 1939, his objections to the allowances made in respect of the following items:—

1. The allowance of Rs. 1,000 for instructions for brief on behalf of the respondents to show cause against review of taxation.

2. The allowances of—

Rs. 45-0-0 for brief fee (3 g.ms.) to Mr. Engineer.

Rs. 30-12-0 for drawing observations.

Rs. 49-4-0 for engrossing brief.

Rs. 135-0-0 for brief fee (9 g.ms.).

SHAMDASANI
v.
CENTRAL

The appellant has filed objections to the taxation of the bill of costs of the respondents and defendants of and incidental to the chamber summons for review of taxation and adjourned into Court and the order made thereon to be taxed between party and party pursuant to the order dated April 8, 1936, and between attorney and client.

Objection No. 1. The appellant objects to the allowance of the sum of Rs. 1,000 on the item of "Instructions for Brief" on behalf of the respondents and defendants to show cause against the review of taxation. The appellant objects to the allowance in the first instance on the two grounds that the allowance is "inadmissible for an interlocutory application" and, secondly, it is "inadmissible in chamber matters." I hold that this is not an interlocutory application in any sense of the expression. Further it is also not a chamber matter. It is a matter adjourned into Court under r. 78 of the High Court Rules. The matter appears as a Court matter and court-fees are paid as such. A further point taken is that the allowance is inadmissible under item 14 at page 414 of the High Court Rules. It may be stated that an allowance under this item is made generally in all matters which are heard in open Court. The appellant objects in the alternative that the quantum is "excessive being out of all proportion to the work actually done." The appellant adds "the work was priced at Rs. 800 in the first instance, then at Rs. 1,000 in the original bill. The same work was now priced at Rs. 1,750 more than double the original amount of Rs. 800." The attorney for the respondents replies that it is absolutely wrong to state that Rs. 800 was first charged. He also submits that no bill previously taxed should be referred to and that he has absolute discretion to place any charge. The appellant refers to the oral judgment of Kemp J. delivered on April 9, 1925, in suit No. 3643 of 1923, P. D. Shamdasani and anr. v. The Tata Industrial Bank and also to 27 Bom. L. R. pp. 1195, 1201.

The attorney has specified in detail the work that he has done on behalf of the respondents on pp. 2 and 3 of the bill of costs. It will also be relevant to refer to the record of proceedings in appeal No. 20 of 1936 as in this matter there was an appeal from the judgment of Blackwell J. to the Court of appeal. The judgment of Blackwell J. is printed on pp. 22 to 29 of the appeal paper book. In r. 563 of the High Court Rules it is stated that "In dealing with fees or allowances which are discretionary, the Taxing Master, in exercise of such discretion, shall take into consideration the other fees and allowances to the attorney and counsel, if any, in respect of the work to which any such allowance applies, the nature or importance of the suit or matter, the amount involved, the interest of the parties, the fund or persons to bear the costs, the general conduct and cost of the proceedings and all other circumstances." This matter lasted for 33½ hours and was called on about fifteen times. Taking all the above matters into consideration I consider the sum of Rs. 1,000 as a fair and proper allowance on the item of instructions for brief.

Objection No. 2. The appellant objects to the allowance of 3 gms. as brief fee to Mr. Engineer on the ground that the charge is inadmissible, because the cases mentioned in r. 548 (ii) do not include this case for the employment of counsel. Rule 548 (ii) states that the costs of one counsel only shall be allowed on taxation between party and party in the following cases (a) short causes etc. (b) long causes etc. and so forth. I hold that this rule is not exclusive and has no application to the present case. Counsel's fee has to be allowed in every matter in which counsel has been certified by the Judge in chambers. The appellant in the alternative objects to the allowances re. brief fees on the ground that the original brief fee was 6 gms. only and that an increase of 6 gms. was made (12 gms. in all) after the brief fee had in fact been worked out. The attorney for the respondents states that the fee of 6 gms. had been altered to 12 gms. and initialled by him before the appellant closed his arguments in the opening roughly after about five hours hearing. The attorney also refers to Kemp J. on Costs, pp. 52 and 53. I hold that the attorney was justified in increasing the brief fee especially as the supplemental briefs were delivered during the course of the case. The appellant next objects to the allowance of Rs. 30-12-0 for drawing observations, Rs. 49-4-0 for engrossing brief, and Rs. 135 (9 gms.) for brief fee. I consider these to be proper allowances and I disallow the objection. Further objections are taken to the allowance of Rs. 585 for refresher fees for 27½ hours at 7 gms. for each of the 5 refreshers plus Rs. 60 for the sixth refresher for 2½ hours, to Rs. 30 for brief fee for hearing judgment, and Rs. 45 for 9 attendances with 3 brief fees and 6 refreshers.

I can only refer to the judgment of Kemp J. dated April 9, 1925, in suit No. 3643 of 1923, P. D. Shamdasani v. The Tata Industrial Bank, which runs as follows: "Under the circumstances, the plaintiff objects to the costs of refresher fees which have been allowed to counsel on the summons. The rule relating to refreshers is r. 525 (now r. 567) of the High Court Rules. According to that rule a refresher is allowed in the hearing of a suit or appeal. These words do not, in my opinion, cover the case of a hearing of a summons. The corresponding English rule, Order 65, r. 27, Regulation 48, uses the words "Cause or matter" and it has been held under that rule that the word "matter" would cover the case of a summons adjourned into Court to be heard on oral evidence and in such a case the Taxing Officer would have power to allow refreshers if he sees fit to do so. (In re Anglo-Austrian Printing and Publishing Union [1894] 2 Ch. 622)." Rule 567 only lays down the standard for allowing a refresher fee on the hearing of a suit or appeal that has been heard for over five hours and does not debar the Taxing Master from allowing a refresher in any matter heard in Court. In fact there is no specific rule under which a brief fee can be allowed. Item No. 60 of the Table of Fees (page 417, High Court Rules) also empowers the Taxing Master to allow all reasonable disbursements excluding conveyance and coolie hire. I therefore hold that the payment of refresher fees on a chamber summons adjourned into Court is in order. I confirm the allowance of 7 gms. as a refresher fee. I confirm the brief fee of 2 gms. for hearing judgment as this is a very usual allowance as also the brief fee of 3 gms. to Mr. Engineer as it is a proper allowance. As for the Rs. 45 paid for nine attendances with 3 brief fees and 6 refreshers, this matter is concluded by the judgment of the Honourable the Judge sitting in chambers, Kania J., delivered on November 16, 1934, in High Court Suit No. 39 of 1931, Walter Campbell v. A. Trevor Robinson. His Lordship has allowed Rs. 5 on each such attendance. This objection is, therefore, disallowed with costs.

Objection No. 3. The appellant objects to the allowance of Rs. 445 for attendances of the solicitors in Court for altogether 37 hours on the ground that the words "for the first hour or part of an hour" and the words "for every additional hour" in rr. 40 and 41 respectively cannot mean "for first hour or part of an hour each day" and "for every additional hour each day." The appellant further submits that the non-attendance of the attorney in Court during the mid-day adjournment cannot be treated as "attendance of attorney in Court" within the meaning of r. 40. This matter has been decided by the Honourable the Judge sitting in chambers, Mr. Justice Rangnekar, on April 15, 1935, in High Court Suit No. 1363 of 1929, H. H. Wadia v. Haji Mahomed Ismail Ashraf. The second point has also been disposed of by the Honourable the Judge sitting in chambers, Mr. Justice Kania, on November 16, 1934, in High Court Suit No. 39 of 1931, Walter Campbell v. A. Trevor Robinson, on a chamber summons to vary the judgment of the Taxing Master, dated June 11, 1934. The decision of the Judge in chambers binds the Taxing Master and as such the objection is disallowed with costs.

All the objections are disallowed with costs.

The appellant took out, on June 26, 1939, a chamber summons to review taxation of the bill of costs. The summons came on for hearing before Blackwell J. who adjourned it into Court on December 1, 1939. His Lordship confirmed the decision of the Taxing Master as to objections Nos. 1 and 3. And as to objection No. 2, the appellant in the course of the hearing withdrew his objections as to certain items, and his Lordship upheld the objection

SHAMDASANI The following is his Lordship's judgment (April 4, 1940) :—

BLACKWELL J. This is a chamber summons for a review of taxation taken out by Mr. Shamdasani which was adjourned into Court. Mr. Shamdasani abandoned prayer (a) of the summons. In a chamber summons for review of taxation in Appeal No. 62 of 1926—Suit No. 3643 of 1923—I held that it was not competent to Mr. Shamdasani to take out one chamber summons in respect of two separate judgments delivered by the Taxing Master in respect of two separate bills of costs relating to two distinct and separate matters. Having regard to that decision Mr. Shamdasani applied for leave to amend the summons in the present case by deleting prayers (c), (d) and (e). Mr. Banaji, for the respondents, did not object, and I granted leave to amend the summons accordingly. That left for decision only prayer (b) of the summons, and prayer (f), which relates to costs.

The first objection arising out of prayer (b) is to the allowance of the sum of Rs. 1,000 on the item of "Instructions for brief on behalf of the Respondents and Defendants to show cause against the Review of Taxation." Mr. Shamdasani had taken an objection to an item of instructions for brief in similar terms to the objection taken by him in this matter in the review arising out of Appeal No. 62 of 1926—Suit No. 3643 of 1923. In my judgment in that matter I gave my reasons for holding that the objection to an item of instructions for brief on a chamber summons adjourned into Court was unsustainable. In view of that judgment Mr. Shamdasani informed me that he could not carry the matter further upon this chamber summons. I hold that this part of objection No. 1 fails for reasons similar to those given by me in the previous review which I need not repeat.

Next Mr. Shamdasani objected that the quantum of Rs. 1,000 was "excessive and out of proportion to the work actually done." As appears from the judgment of the Taxing Master Mr. Shamdasani brought to his notice that the amount charged in respect of the item of instructions for brief upon an earlier taxation in the same matter which was afterwards set aside was, as Mr. Shamdasani contended, Rs. 800 in the first instance which was subsequently altered to Rs. 1,000 in the original bill, and he complained that for the same work detailed in precisely the same manner in the bill the subject-matter of the present taxation Rs. 1,750 had been sought to be charged. As appears from the judgment of the Taxing Master the attorney for the respondents denied that Rs. 800 was the amount originally charged in the bill and further submitted that no bill previously taxed should be referred to, and that he had an absolute discretion to charge any amount he thought proper. I have myself looked at the original bill, and although it is impossible now to say what the charge originally made was it is quite clear that it was a charge different from the sum of Rs. 1,000 which now appears in the bill. I have been informed by both parties that the Assistant Taxing Master allowed Rs. 1,000 in respect of instructions for brief on the original bill. The Taxing Master states in his judgment that the attorney specified in detail the work that he had done on behalf of the respondents on pages 2 and 3 of the bill of costs. I have myself looked at the bill of costs, and it is in my opinion plain that a great deal of work was imposed upon the attorneys in preparing a brief in such a form as to put counsel in possession of all the numerous facts and matters which it would be essential for counsel to grasp in order to deal with the review of taxation. The magnitude of the work involved becomes manifest when it is realised that the matter lasted for thirty-three hours and a half, and was called on about fifteen times. In his judgment the Taxing Master refers to High Court Rule 563, which contains the various matters which the Taxing Master should have regard to in respect of fees or allowances which are discretionary. In the exercise of his discretion he cut down the charge of Rs. 1,750 to Rs. 1,000. If the Taxing Master had allowed more than had been allowed by the Assistant Taxing Master when the bill was originally taxed in respect of this very item, I think that Mr. Shamdasani might have had some grievance upon the ground that it would not be easy to understand why the attorneys in their first bill fixed the amount which they sought to recover at Rs. 1,000, and yet in a second bill increased it to Rs. 1,750. The Taxing Master however has not given effect to the attorneys' endeavour to obtain in respect of this item more than they sought to obtain in the first bill. I have no reason whatever to suppose that the Assistant Taxing Master did not exercise his discretion properly in allowing Rs. 1,000 in respect of the first bill. I am quite satisfied that the Taxing Master had all the materials before him and in no way misdirected himself in considering what it was proper that he should allow under this item. In my opinion he came to a right decision in respect of this objection and this objection fails.

Objection No. 2 consists of various items which it is necessary to refer to separately. These items are set out conveniently one after another in the objections carried in before the Taxing Master by Mr. Shamdasani. The first item, viz., Rs. 45 relates to a brief fee of three Gms. paid to counsel on the hearing of the chamber summons in chambers, counsel being certified. Mr. Shamdasani gave up his objection to this item. The third item appearing in the objections is one of Rs. 135 for a brief fee. Mr. Shamdasani gave up this objection. The next item in the objections is Rs. 585 for refresher fees. The question whether refresher fees could be allowed on a chamber summons adjourned into Court arose in the review of taxation of Appeal No. 62 of 1926—Suit No. 3643 of 1923. In that matter I held that the Taxing Master has no power to allow refreshers except refreshers in a suit or appeal, and I gave my reasons for so holding. I need not repeat them. I refer to my judgment in that matter.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Shamdasani informed me that he repeated, by reference, his arguments, and Mr. Banaji adopted the same attitude, realising that in view of my previous judgment he could not contest the matter further upon this review.

The next item in the objections is Rs. 30 for brief fee for hearing judgment. Mr. Shamdasani gave up that objection. The next item in the objection is Rs. 45 for nine attendances with three brief fees and six refreshers. Mr. Sham-

dasani gave up his objection to the attendances with the three brief fees, which comes to the sum of Rs. 15, and confined his objection to Rs. 30 attendances in respect of six refreshers. In view of my previous judgment that refresher fees are not permissible, it follows that the allowance of Rs. 30 in respect of the attendances must go, Mr. Banaji not arguing the matter in view of my previous decision.

The items which survive in respect of objection No. 2 are Rs. 30-12-0 for drawing observations and Rs. 49-4-0 for engrossing brief. The first charge was originally Rs. 36. The Taxing Master disallowed Rs. 3-12-0 and Rs. 1-8-0 was made attorney and client leaving the item of Rs. 30-12-0. The second charge was Rs. 55. The Taxing Master made Rs. 15-12-0 attorney and client leaving Rs. 49-4-0. No reasons were given against these allowances by Mr. Shamdassani in his objections taken in before the Taxing Master as required by r. 571. The Taxing Master in his judgment said that he considered those charges to be proper allowances, and he disallowed the objection to them. I see no reason whatever for differing from the decision of the Taxing Master in respect of these items.

The result with regard to objection No. 2 is that Mr. Shamdassani has withdrawn his objections to the various items which I have enumerated, the objection as to Rs. 585 for refresher fees succeeds, the objection to Rs. 30 part of item Rs. 45 succeeds, and the objections to the items of Rs. 30-12-0 and Rs. 49-4-0 fail.

Objection No. 3 relates to the allowance of Rs. 445 for attendances of the solicitors in Court for thirty-seven hours. The reasons given by Mr. Shamdassani in his objections taken in before the Taxing Master are as follows :—
 “The words” ‘for the first hour or part of an hour’ and the words ‘for every additional hour’ in rr. 40 and 41 respectively cannot mean ‘for first hour or part of an hour each day’ and ‘for every additional hour each day.’”
 Mr. Shamdassani took the same point before me and contended that the omission of the words “each day” after the last words in items 40 and 41 was not unintentional. Items 40 and 41 are in the following terms :—

- “40. Attendance of attorney in Court on motion or on hearing of any suit, cause or matter including insolvency or criminal matters for first hour or part of an hour . . . . . Rs. 15-0-0 41. For every additional hour . . . . . Rs. 10-0-0”

These items came into operation for the first time on March 1, 1933. Before that the items relating to attendance of solicitors in Court were 33 and 34, which were in the following terms :—

- “33. Attendance in Court on the hearing of a cause or further hearing and final disposal or at the hearing of testamentary intestate, matrimonial or criminal causes . . . . . Rs. 20-0-0 34. The like if occupied the whole day . . . . . Rs. 25-0-0”

I am informed by Mr. Banaji that when those rules were in operation the attorneys were allowed either Rs. 20 or Rs. 25 if the matter occupied the whole day for each separate attendance and the attendances on subsequent days were in no way considered to be a continuation of the previous attendances, but were treated as separate attendances. It appears that when items 40 and 41 came into operation the Taxing Master adopted a compromise and allowed Rs. 15 for the hearing on the first day, if it occupied an hour or part of an hour, and Rs. 10 for every additional hour, if the matter lasted for more than one hour on the first day and was continued on the next day, but if there was an interruption in the hearing he treated the further hearing as a fresh commencement and allowed Rs. 15 for the first hour or part of an hour. I am unable to see any justification for such a compromise. Reading the words as they stand I should myself have been disposed to hold that those items entitle the attorney to Rs. 15 in respect of the first hour or part of an hour when the suit commenced to be heard, and Rs. 10 for every additional hour on the first day, if it lasted more than one hour, and only Rs. 10 for every additional hour in respect of the next day, if the case went over, and any succeeding days. I have however been informed that this point came up for consideration by Mr. Justice Rangnekar in Suit No. 1363 of 1929—H. H. Wadia v. Haji Mahomed Ismail Ashraf.<sup>1</sup> The Taxing Master disallowed the charges on the basis of Rs. 15 for the first hour of each day. Objections were carried in by the defendant's attorneys on July 5, 1934, to this disallowance, the objection which is before me being in these terms :—

"It is respectfully submitted that the disallowances made from the items mentioned under this objection should be allowed between party and party."

The objection in question was No. 14(c). The Taxing Master in his judgment, which is before me, stated that he allowed Rs. 15 for the first hour of the hearing and Rs. 10 for every additional hour of the hearing for the reasons which had been stated by him under objections 3 and 5. As regards those objections he said in his judgment that the charge of Rs. 15 would be allowed only on isolated dates of hearing, and not when the hearing of a suit or matter went on from day to day, and that Rs. 15 would be allowed for the first hour of the hearing and Rs. 10 for every subsequent hour of the hearing though on different days, and he stated further that the item does not state that the charge of Rs. 15 has to be allowed for the first hour's hearing on each day of the hearing. This judgment appears to have been based on the compromise attitude to which I have previously referred. A chamber summons dated April 10, 1935, was then taken out by the defendant, prayer 1(c) relating to this item. The matter came before Mr. Justice Rangnekar. No judgment was delivered but the order made by the learned Judge dated April 15, 1935, is before me, and as appears from that order Mr. Justice Rangnekar allowed among other things the defendant's objection No. 14 (c). I am informed that since that date the Taxing Master, as he would be bound to do, has acted on that decision. Although I might myself have come to a different decision had the matter been res integra, I feel bound to follow the decision of Mr. Justice Rangnekar given as long ago as April 15, 1935, although he delivered no judgment in respect of the matter. Accordingly, I think that this part of the objection to the allowance of Rs. 445 fails.

A further objection to this allowance is given in reasons (b) and (c) of the objections taken in by Mr. Shamdasani before the Taxing Master, viz., that the attendances cannot be held to cover the period of the mid-day adjournment and any allowances for alleged attendances during the mid-day adjournment are inadmissible under item 40, allowances for actual attendance only being permissible. This point came before Mr. Justice Kania in suit No. 39 of 1931—Walter Campbell v. A. Trevor Robinson.<sup>1</sup> The Taxing Master disallowed the amounts charged during the luncheon interval. The defendant took in objections and item No. 7 relates to the charge of attending Court. The reason given against item No. 7 in the objections is that "Defendant's attorneys are entitled to recess interval being calculated under item No. 40. The same principles on which refreshers are allowed to counsel apply to charges for attendance appearing in Court by an attorney." The Taxing Master having disallowed the charges in question the defendant took out a chamber summons, and on November 16, 1934, Mr. Justice Kania delivered a judgment, which is before me, in which he allowed among other objections 7, 10 and 12 which all related to the same matter for the reasons given by him. This judgment is binding upon me. I think that the Taxing Master's decision as to objection No. 3 was right. This objection fails.

As regards costs, Mr. Shamdasani must pay to the respondents the costs properly incurred by them in preparing for the hearing of prayers (a), (c), (d) and (e). As regards prayer (b), Mr. Shamdasani has failed entirely as regards objections Nos. 1 and 3. As regards objection No. 2 he has succeeded as to the item of Rs. 585 for refresher fees and the item of Rs. 30 for attendances in respect of those refresher fees, but otherwise he has failed even as to that objection. Accordingly, I think the fair order will be that Mr. Shamdasani should pay to the respondents three-fourths of the costs of the summons relating to prayer (b). When the matter was before me in chambers on December 1 last and I adjourned it into Court, I reserved the question whether counsel should be certified in chambers until the matter was heard in Court, and the importance or otherwise of the matter was determined. Having heard the matter I am perfectly satisfied that it was a fit matter for briefing counsel for the respondents, and I certify accordingly.

BLACKWELL J. Objection 2 was taken up first. Mr. Shamdasani objected to the allowance of two items, viz. Rs. 96 and Rs. 51 marked and paid by way of refreshers on the ground that the allowance was "ultra vires and inadmissible under High Court Rule 567 in matters other than a suit or appeal". The Taxing Master in his judgment referred to an unreported judgment of Mr. Justice Kemp dated April 9, 1925, in Suit No. 3643 of 1923, P. D. Shamdasani v. The Tata Industrial Bank, Ltd. I have looked at that judgment. In my opinion it throws no light upon the matter which is before me. That judgment related to a summons for discovery which as Mr. Justice Kemp clearly pointed out was not adjourned into Court, but simply stood over for disposal by the trial Judge. The matter before me relates to a chamber summons which was adjourned into Court, and I have to consider it quite independently of the observations made by Mr. Justice Kemp in the judgment referred to by the Taxing Master. The view of the Taxing Master given by him in his judgment is that r. 567 only lays down the standard for allowing a refresher fee and does not debar the Taxing Master from allowing a refresher in any matter heard in Court. He points out that there is no specific rule under which a brief fee can be allowed and he says that item No. 60 of the Table of Fees, which appears at page 417 of the High Court Rules, also empowers the Taxing Master to allow all reasonable disbursements excluding conveyance and cooly hire. He, accordingly, held that the payment of refresher fees on a chamber summons adjourned into Court was permissible.

Rules 567 and 568 of the High Court Rules deal in terms with the allowance of refreshers at the hearing of a suit or appeal. The wording of these rules is different from the wording of the rule which deals with the allowance of refreshers, viz., O. 65, r. 27, Regulation 48, which appears in the Annual Practice. That rule permits the allowance of refresher fees "when any cause or matter is to be tried or heard upon viva voce evidence in open Court". The words "cause or matter" are not to be found in either r. 567 or 568 of our High Court Rules, the words there being merely "suit or appeal". Mr. Shamdasani drew my attention to the fact that in the former High Court Rule 551 corresponding with the present rule 568 the words "or other matter" were to be found after the words "suit or appeal", but that those words had been deleted and do not appear in the present r. 568, and he invoked that in aid of his argument that refreshers ought to be restricted to the hearing of either a suit or appeal. Mr. Banaji on the other hand contended that it was open to the Taxing Master to allow a refresher upon a chamber summons adjourned into Court by reason of item 60 of the Table of Fees, which appears under the heading "Disbursements" and permits the allowance of all reasonable disbursements excluding conveyance and cooly hire. Mr. Shamdasani does not object to the allowance of counsel's fee on the brief on a chamber summons adjourned into Court. He concedes that such an allowance would be permissible under High Court Rule 541, but he contends that inasmuch as rr. 567 and 568 deal specifically with the allowance of refreshers the Court ought to take the view that refreshers are only intended to be allowed as provided by those rules, and not otherwise. In my opinion Mr. Shamdasani's argument is right. Where there are rules dealing in terms with the allowance of refreshers I think it would not be proper to hold that it was open to the Taxing Master to allow refreshers at his unfettered discretion in any matter in Court other than a suit or appeal the refreshers as to which are specifically provided for and limited by rr. 567 and 568. I am of opinion that item 60 was not intended to cover any such case. In Walker v. Crystal Palace District Gas Co.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Justice Denman said (p. 301) :

"It is quite clear that the master, as between party and party, has no right to

O. C. J. 1941 allow a refresher except under an Act of Parliament, or under rules which are equivalent to an Act of Parliament; he cannot allow one as a mere matter of discretion".

SHAMDASANI v. CENTRAL BANK OF INDIA These observations fortify me in my opinion. I hold that the Taxing Master has no power to allow refreshers except refreshers in a suit or appeal, and that objection No. 2 succeeds.

Blackwell J. In Easton v. London Joint Stock Bank,<sup>2</sup> the question arose whether refreshers could be allowed on the hearing of an appeal from the Chancery Division. The Appeal Court decided that they could not having regard to the rules. Lord Justice Cotton in the course of his judgment said (p. 34):—

"As far as I understand, both in the Court of Appeal in Chancery and before the Exchequer Chamber, it has been the practice not to allow daily refreshers of a fixed amount, but if the Taxing Master in either Division is satisfied that the fee originally marked on the brief of counsel is not sufficient, then he allows an addition to be made to it, and allows it in taxation as against the opponent, and, of course, also as between the solicitor and his own client who has instructed him. Where there are no witnesses, it is the duty of the solicitor, as far as possible, to form an opinion, before the case begins, what, having regard to the importance of the case and the probable length of the argument, will be the proper fee to mark on the brief of counsel, and the Taxing Master, unless satisfied that there has been some mistake made, would not allow any addition to be made afterwards to that fee."

In Court matters where refreshers are not permissible, having regard to rule 567, it seems to me that the solicitors should act in accordance with the observations of Lord Justice Cotton and make up their mind before the hearing what is the proper fee to be marked on the brief having regard to the length of time which the matter is likely to take in Court. In a proper case it may well be that if the Taxing Master came to the conclusion that there had been a mistake made by the solicitors in marking the fee owing to circumstances which they could not foresee, he would be justified, not in allowing a refresher, but in allowing an increase in the fee originally marked on the brief.

Objection No. 1 relates to the allowance of Rs. 350 on the item of instructions for brief for hearing of the summons on the ground that the allowance is "ultra vires and inadmissible in chamber matters." The Taxing Master held, and in my opinion quite properly, that this is not a chamber matter, and that it is a matter adjourned into Court under r. 78 of the High Court Rules. He pointed out in his judgment that the matter appeared as a Court matter and that court-fees were paid as such. Mr. Shamdasani objected before the Taxing Master, and before me, that this item was ultra vires having regard to item 14, which appears at page 414 of the High Court Rules. The Taxing Master overruled this objection and said in his judgment that an allowance under this item is made generally in all matters which are heard in open Court.

Item 14 is in these terms:—

Mr. Shamdasani contended that the words "final disposal at first hearing, settlement of issues, final trial" should be construed as referring and referring only to the trial of a suit. He contended that that item could not, as far as those words were concerned, refer to matters other than suits. In this connection reference may be made to High Court Rule 563 which deals with discretionary fees and allowances and among other matters to which the Taxing Master must have regard are the nature or importance of the suit or matter. The word "suit" does not appear in item 14. In my opinion the words "final disposal at first hearing" and "final trial" in item 14 are applicable to any matter tried in Court as a Court matter. In addition to suits there are many matters tried in Court, such as, misfeasance summonses, matters under the Companies Act, matters under the Land Acquisition References, petitions under the Lunacy Act and Guardians and Wards Act, petitions under the Trusts Act and under the Patents and Designs Act, and under the Specific Relief Act, and many other matters which need not be referred to in detail. If item 14 is to have the limited scope placed upon it which Mr. Shamdasani contends for, the Taxing Master would be debarred from allowing instructions for brief in respect of many long and difficult matters heard in Court such as I have indicated. I have come to the conclusion that the Taxing Master is right in his opinion that he is entitled to allow an item of instructions for brief on chamber summons adjourned into Court upon the ground that it has ceased to be a chamber summons heard in chambers and has become for all purposes a Court matter.

Mr. Shamdasani drew my attention to In re Anglo-Austrian Printing and Publishing Union.<sup>1</sup> That was a taxation matter which arose out of a misfeasance summons taken out under s. 10 of the Companies (Winding Up) Act, 1890. The bill of costs taken in for taxation included an item of instructions for the special report of the Official Receiver under r. 78 of the Companies Winding Up Rules, and also instructions for brief on the hearing. The Registrar disallowed the instructions for the special report of the Official Receiver upon the ground that the application was a summons in the winding up, adjourned into Court, accompanied with a statement of the facts and that he allowed drawing at 8d., and copy at 4d., a folio respectively and disallowed instructions and he disallowed the instructions for brief on the ground that the application was not the hearing or trial of an action upon notice of trial or notice of judgment given, and that accordingly instructions for brief could not be allowed. Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams expressed the opinion that the Registrar was right in disallowing both the instructions for the report made by the Official Receiver and the instructions for the brief on the hearing. The question as to the instructions for the brief on the hearing turned upon the wording of item 81 of Appendix (N) to the Rules of 1883, which was in the following terms:—

"Instructions for brief on hearing or trial of action upon notice or trial or notice for judgment given, whether such trial be before a judge, with or without a jury, or before an official or special referee, or on trial of an issue of fact before a judge, commissioner, or referee, or on assessment of damages."

It is to be observed that the words in that item are "trial of action" followed by the words "upon notice of trial". Those words are very different from the words in item 14 of the Table of Fees upon which the matter before me depends. Consequently I do not find that the case in In re Anglo-Austrian Printing and Publishing Union<sup>1</sup> assists me in the construction which I have placed upon item 14.]

The appellant appealed against the judgment and order of Blackwell J. so far as the following items were concerned.—

1. Item for instructions for brief on behalf of the respondents to show cause against the review of taxation, amounting to Rs. 1,000.

2. Items under dates February 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28, 1936 and March 2, 3, 4, 6, 10, 11, 12, 13, 18 and 19, 1936, for attendances of attorney in Court for 37 hours, amounting to Rs. 445.

The respondents filed cross-objections against the judgment and order as regards two items in objection No. 2—

1. Rs. 585—Refreshers paid to counsel for 27½ hours after the first five hours at the rate of 7 g.ms. for 5 refreshers of 5 hours each and 4 g.ms. for the last refresher of 2½ hours.

2. Rs. 30—for attendance on counsel in respect of 6 refreshers.

Appellant, P. D. Shamdassani, in person.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, with H. D. Banaji, for the respondents.

N. P. Engineer, amicus curiae, for the Bombay Incorporated Law Society.

P. D. Shamdassani. This appeal raises the questions as to (1) the jurisdiction of the Taxing Master to make certain allowances in the bills of costs of attorneys lodged for taxation between party and party, and (2) principles of taxation of certain items therein. These items relate to allowances for (1) "Instructions for brief", (2) "Attendances of attorney in Court" and (3) "Refresher fees to counsel."

As regards the jurisdiction of the Taxing Master to make an allowance for "Instructions for brief" on a chamber matter adjourned into Court, the substantial question which arises for determination is:—whether the words (1) "final disposal at first hearing", (2) "settlement of issues" and (3) "final trial" appearing in item 14, namely, "Instructions for brief (including perusing papers and examining witnesses) whether on final disposal at first hearing, settlement of issues, final trial or on appeals, arbitrations, accounts or on motions—'Discretionary'" at page 414 in the Table of Fees attached to the Rules of the High Court of Bombay, 1936, should be construed as referring only to "suit" or referring to any matter tried in Court as a Court matter.

The words "final disposal at first hearing" in item 14 have reference to the words "Disposal of the suit at the first hearing" appearing in O. XV of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and the words "settlement of issues" therein have reference to the words "Settlement of issues and determination of suit on issues of fact or on issues agreed upon" appearing in O. XIV of the Code. That being the case, the words "final disposal at first hearing" and the words "settlement of issues" in this item must be construed as referring only to "suit". The words "final trial" therein should be read as being ejusdem generis with the preceding words therein. Accordingly the words "final trial" must also be construed as referring only to "suit".

The learned Judge ought to have placed upon the words in this item such construction as the words therein in their plain meaning imported. His decision that the words "final disposal at first hearing" and "final trial" in this item are applicable to "any matter tried in Court as a Court matter" is wrong. Such a liberal construction was placed by him upon the ground that the strict construction would operate harshly or unjustly in particular cases referred to in his judgment.

The learned Judge acted upon a wrong principle in taking something into consideration which he ought not to have. The duty of a judicial interpreter is to interpret the law as he finds it and not as he wishes it to be. The rule is clearly established that the Judge cannot on equitable grounds enlarge the scope of any words in any Act or rules made thereunder or Table of Fees prescribed thereunder or introduce matters not recognized by it.

The learned Judge ought to have put a construction upon these words with due regard to the words "suit or matter" in r. 563, which promotes and not defeats their respective objects, which suppresses the mischief and advances the remedy and which best accords with the public benefit.

Item 14 has reference to items 81 and 82 in Appendix "N" under O. 65, rules 8 and 9, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883. It will be seen from those items and the precedents of bills of costs in Porter and Wortham's Guide to Costs, 13th edn, (1932), that "Instructions for brief" are discretionary in witness actions. They are principally intended to cover the trouble and expense incurred in collecting evidence for the trial of an action. This then shows the real character of the item of "Instructions for brief." The decision in Parshuram Shamdassani v. Tata Industrial Bank,<sup>1</sup> is founded upon this view.

Rule 563 of the Rules of the High Court has reference to item 14. The word "matter" in this item should be construed as referring only to "appeals" or "arbitrations" or "accounts" or "motions" the only four matters expressly provided for in this item after its amendment on March 1, 1933, by the insertion of the words "or on appeals, arbitrations, accounts" before the words "or on motion" in the original item and by the substitution of the word "motions" for the word "motion" in the original item, and the words "final disposal at first hearing, settlement of issues, final trial" in this item should be construed as referring to "suit" in r. 563. The true construction of these words is also founded upon the true construction of the items preceding item 14 which by their very intendment refer only to "suit" in r. 563. In the result the charge for "Instructions for brief" in chamber matters heard in Court was certainly not discretionary as was held in Parashuram Shamdassani v. Tata Industrial Bank.<sup>2</sup> Accordingly the Taxing Master had no jurisdiction to make any allowance for "Instructions for brief" on a chamber matter adjourned into Court not for taking viva voce evidence but for convenience sake. An adjournment into Court is merely a continuation and 1918. See also Appendix "N" under O. 65 rr. 8 and 9 at page 1854, and general notes as regards "Documents and proceedings for which no fees for Instructions are allowed" under the heading "Instructions" at page 1866.

In any event the quantum of costs allowed was excessive being out of all proportion to the work actually done. The work was priced at Rs. 800 in the first instance, then at Rs. 1,000 in the original bill. The same work was now priced at Rs. 1,750 more than double the original amount of Rs. 800. The allowance of Rs. 1,000 was in violent contrast with the allowance of Rs. 15 for perusing papers including objections taken by the appellant on August 15, 1934, for the review of taxation before the Taxing Master which was made by him against Rs. 45 claimed therefor and with the further allowance of about Rs. 35 in respect of perusal of (1) chamber summons dated February 15, 1935, (2) affidavit dated February 15, 1935, in support thereof, (3) Taxing Master's certificate dated February 1, 1935, and (4) Taxing Master's judgment dated January 26, 1935, (being Annexure A to the said certificate). The same is in utter disregard of the other allowances to the attorneys and counsel aggregating Rs. 565 and Rs. 165 respectively.

The Taxing Master misdirected himself in (1) taking into consideration the length of time, namely, 33½ hours including mid-day adjournments, occupied in the hearing and final disposal of the chamber summons, and (2) thinking that "Instructions for brief" mean the same thing as "Instructions to counsel." The Taxing Master erred in not following the ruling in Parashuram Shamdassani v. Tata Industrial Bank,<sup>2</sup> to the effect that the foundation for the charge for "Instructions for brief" is the preparation for the brief and that the length of the trial will not necessarily correspond with the work done in the preparation of the brief. Accordingly "Instructions for brief" would be completed before the brief was delivered. If the Taxing Master had directed himself properly, he would have noticed from the particulars delivered in respect of this item in the bill of costs that there was practically no work to be done by the attorneys for and on behalf of their client in respect of the preparation of the brief beyond perusing the papers and that the attorneys were fighting for their own object and interests ostensibly in the name of their client. He would have further noticed that the attendances of attorneys in Court during the time, namely, 33½ hours including mid-day adjournments, occupied in the hearing and final disposal of the chamber summons were for the only purpose of giving "Instructions to counsel" as and when required or found necessary and that all such attendances had been separately charged for and allowed under items 40 and 41 at page 416 in the

As regards attendance of attorney in Court, the objection is founded upon two grounds, namely, (1) that under item 40 in the Table of Fees the allowance of Rs. 15 is for the first hour of the hearing, irrespective of the day, and after that first hour is finished only Rs. 10 can be allowed for the subsequent hour or hours under item 41, (2) that in counting the hours of attendance of attorney in Court the mid-day adjournment, which at present is three-fourths of an hour, cannot be included. The words "each day" which do not appear after the words "for first hour or part of an hour" in item 40 and the words "for every additional hour" in item 41 cannot be read into them. The words "attendance of attorney in Court" can only mean attendance of attorney when the Court is sitting and not when the Court is not sitting. The learned Judge would have upheld the appellant's contentions but he felt himself bound by the decision of Rangnekar J. in H. H. Wadia v. Haji Mahomed Ismail Ashraf to the contrary on the first point and by the decision of Kania J. in Walter Campbell v. A. Trevor Robinson to the contrary on the second point. Both these decisions are wrong.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga. As regards the jurisdiction of the Taxing Master to make an allowance for "Instructions for brief" we submit that the Taxing Master has such jurisdiction. The words "final disposal at first hearing" and "final trial" in item 14 at page 414 in the Table of Fees attached to the High Court Rules must be construed as applicable to "any matter tried in Court as a Court matter", otherwise the Taxing Master would be debarred from allowing "Instructions for brief" in respect of many long and difficult matters heard in Court such as misfeasance summonses, matters under the Companies Act, matters under Land Acquisition References, petitions under the Lunacy Act and Guardians and Wards Act, petitions under the Trusts Act and under the Patents and Designs Act and under the Specific Relief Act and many other matters. In India there is no difference between witness and non-witness action. See judgment of Blackwell J. on this point at page 24 of the Appeal Paper Book in Appeal No. 20 of 1936 in Suit No. 564 of 1925. In England there are different rules and scales for the chancery and common law sides.

As regards quantum, the Taxing Master's decision is final. The Court will not as a general rule interfere with the decision of the Taxing Master upon a mere question of quantum: Ogilvie v. Massey.<sup>1</sup> Without meaning any disrespect to the Court we rely upon the observations of Cozens-Hardy M. R. at page 244. After referring to the general rule laid down in Alsop v. Lord Oxford<sup>2</sup> and in In re Catlin<sup>3</sup> to the effect that in matters of taxation Court can only be called upon to determine on the propriety of allowing or disallowing items which involve some principle, and not where a question only of quantum arises, the Master of the Rolls says "I should be very sorry if any doubt were cast on that, for I can scarcely imagine a tribunal more unfit than a Judge of the High Court to deal with questions of quantum on the taxation of costs." We also rely upon the observations of Sir Amberson

H. D. Banaji. We submit that the decision of Rangnekar J. to the effect that under item 40 the allowance of Rs. 15 is for the first hour each day and under item 41 the allowance of Rs. 10 is for every additional hour each day is correct. Such a construction was placed on the ground that the attorneys do in practice prepare their bills on the basis of the work done for each day. The above decision was given on April 15, 1935, and has been followed by the Taxing Master all these years. The long established practice should not be disturbed.

We further submit that the decision of Kania J. that in counting hours of attendance the time taken up by mid-day adjournment should be included is correct. The learned Judge says that if a matter is part-heard, it is natural for counsel to contemplate and think about the part-heard matter and how he proposes to make further progress. The attorney who is more saturated with the details will have to prepare the necessary materials for the hearing after the mid-day adjournment, and there is no reason why a difference should be made between the work of an attorney and a counsel so far as the mid-day adjournment is concerned. This decision was given on November 16, 1934, and has been followed by the Taxing Master all these years. The long established practice should not be disturbed.

Our cross-objections are in respect of the allowances of Rs. 585. Refreshers were paid to counsel for 27½ hours after the first five hours and Rs. 30 for attendances on counsel in respect of the said 6 refreshers. We submit that it was open to the Taxing Master to allow refreshers to counsel in matters other than "suit or appeal" by reason of item 60 of the Table of Fees, which appears under the heading "Disbursements excluding conveyance and cooly hire." Counsel's fees are disbursements. See Notes under the heading "What disbursements may be included in a bill of costs for delivery" in Porter and Wortham's Guide to Costs, 13th edn., p. 1010. On a proper construction of rules 567 and 568 of the High Court Rules, the said rules merely lay down a standard for the guidance of the Taxing Master in the exercise of his discretion in allowing refreshers to counsel in a suit or appeal as a disbursement under item 60 of the Table of Fees.

If item 60 does not cover refreshers to counsel, additional fees by way of daily allowances may be allowed and the original brief fee of 9 g.m.s. increased accordingly, as it is inadequate for a matter the hearing of which occupied 27½ hours after the first five hours. We rely on the observations of Cotton L. J. in Easton v. London Joint Stock Bank<sup>2</sup> at page 33.

N. P. Engineer. I ask for leave to appear as amicus curiae for the Bombay Incorporated Law Society. We are only concerned with the proper construction to be placed upon items 14, 40, 41 and 60 in the Table of Fees attached to the Rules of the High Court, and r. 567. The words "final disposal at first hearing" and "final trial" in item 14 are applicable to "any matter tried in Court as a Court matter." "Instructions for brief" do not stop when the brief is delivered. If restricted to the first instructions given, it may keep out very important instructions taken or given. The point is covered by the decision in Shamdasani v. Tata Industrial Bank.<sup>1</sup> Attendance is charged every day, and it would be Rs. 15 for the first hour and Rs. 10 for an additional hour each day. The framers of the rule had before them the practice of charging each day's fees separately. Rule 254 shows that the time of the mid-day adjournment was not to be deducted. The Taxing Master has to take into account the time between the calling of the suit and the rising for the day. In theory the Court is sitting during the time of the mid-day adjournment. As to refreshers, there is no provision apart from item 60 for the refreshers. Even without a rule refreshers have been allowed all these years. If item 60 allows brief fee, then refreshers are also allowable under it. Rule 567 merely quantifies the refreshers in suits and appeals. Therefore it follows that in matters not being suits or appeals it shall not be more than those under r. 567.

BEAUMONT, C. J. This is an appeal by the appellant against a decision of Mr. Justice Blackwell on a summons to review taxation of costs. The costs were incurred on an earlier summons to review. There are three items which arise in this appeal. The first two arise strictly in the appeal, and the third on cross-objections.

The first matter, which arises on the appeal, is an item of Rs. 1,000 allowed for "Instructions for brief." The appellant contends, first, that the Taxing Master had no jurisdiction to allow anything for that item, and, secondly, that if he had jurisdiction, he allowed too high a figure. As I have said, the costs were incurred on a summons to review, which had been adjourned into Court, so that we are dealing with the costs on an adjourned summons. The item "Instructions for brief" is dealt with in Item 14 of the Table of Fees to be taken by the attorneys of this Court. That item reads as follows :

As the item formerly stood, it did not include the words "or on appeals, arbitrations, accounts." So that it only dealt with "Instructions for brief whether on final disposal at first hearing, settlement of issues, final trial or on motions," motions being generally interlocutory. Mr. Shamdasani contends that the item down to the words "final trial" only deals with instructions for brief in suits. He points out that the words "on final disposal at first hearing" appear to have reference to O. XV, which deals with the disposal of a suit at the first hearing, and the words "settlement of issues" appear to have reference to O. XIV, which deals with the settlement of issues in a suit, and he

O. C. J. argues, therefore, that "final trial" must also refer to the final trial in a suit.
 1941 The subsequent words "or on appeals, arbitrations, accounts, or on motions" may cover matters of such nature arising otherwise than in a suit, but the SHAMDASANI "final trial", according to his argument, must be in a suit. I must confess
 v. that I think that the item is not happily worded. "Final trial" is not a very CENTRAL apt expression to use for the hearing of a chamber summons. The word BANK OF apt expression to use for the hearing of a chamber summons. The word INDIA "hearing" would be more appropriate than the word "trial," but at the same time it is not inaccurate to say that a summons is tried, and there is nothing Beaumont C.J. in the wording of the item which in terms confines "final trial" to the final trial of a suit. There is no other item in the Table of Fees, which covers "instructions for brief," and there are many matters which may come before the Court, which are not suits, but which may involve the taking of oral evidence, and require the preparation of elaborate instructions for counsel.
 Lunacy matters, matters relating to minors, references under the Land Acquisition Act, company matters, and so forth, may require instructions to counsel, and it is difficult to suppose that the Table of Fees was not intended to include cases of that nature, and that no fee was to be payable for instructions in such matters. In my opinion, there is no sufficient reason for confining the words "final trial" to the final trial of a suit.

Mr. Shamdasani has further contended that this must be regarded as a chamber matter, because the summons originated in chambers and was adjourned to be heard in Court merely for the sake of convenience. I do not myself think that it makes any difference whether it is to be regarded as a chamber matter or a Court matter, so long as it is the final trial of the matter. We were referred to a dictum of Sir Norman Macleod in Parashuram Shamdasani v. Tata Industrial Bank,<sup>1</sup> in which he said that this item would not apply to chamber matters, but he gives no authority or reason for that opinion, and the wording of the item does not draw a distinction between chamber matters and matters heard in Court. The essential thing is that there should be a final trial. No doubt, most chamber matters do not involve a final trial, and many of them are not of sufficient importance to justify instructions to counsel. But as I have already indicated, there are many matters, other than suits, which require instructions to counsel, and some of those matters are normally dealt with in chambers, e.g. disputes about minors, disputes about permission to trustees to compromise, and kindred matters. I think myself that there is no sufficient reason for confining Item 14 either to suits or to matters in Court. In my opinion, therefore, the Taxing Master was right in allowing a fee for "instructions for brief."

With regard to the quantum allowed, the Court normally does not interfere with the discretion of the Taxing Master as to quantum, unless he has misdirected himself. On the face of it a fee of Rs. 1,000 for "instructions for brief" on a summons to review taxation seems to me difficult to justify. There must already have been a review before the Taxing Master, and the solicitors would not have to peruse many documents for the purposes of the application to the Court, nor is it likely that they would have to examine witnesses. They might, no doubt, have to tabulate the facts for the benefit of counsel, and instruct him as to the view which they wished to put forward. But it is difficult to see how work of that nature could be worth the sum allowed. When we asked to see the brief which the Taxing Master had valued in this way, the only substantial brief produced, which was that delivered to senior counsel, contained in extenso copies of the summons, affidavits and other documents in the case, and involved no work at all except for the copying. There were also concise observations for counsel, which cannot, I think, be valued as highly as the Taxing Master thinks. The learned Taxing Master in his reasons says that he has considered all the matters mentioned in r. 563, and taking those matters into account and also the fact that the hearing of the summons lasted for thirty-three and a half hours he thinks Rs. 1,000 a fair allowance. I think that in taking into account the length of time occupied by the hearing, the learned Taxing Master has misdirected himself. No doubt, as was pointed out by this Court in Shamdasani v. Tata Industrial Bank,<sup>1</sup> instructions to counsel may go on during the hearing, but the words of Item 14 are not "instructions for counsel" but "instructions for brief." The delivery of a brief is a formal act. It confers upon counsel authority to appear in the case, and vests in him the responsibility of conducting the case in the way he thinks right. It also fixes the fee which he is to be allowed, and I cannot agree that the words "instructions for brief" mean the same thing as "instructions for counsel." Prima facie, instructions for brief must have been completed before the brief was delivered, although I do not dispute that matters might come to light after the brief was delivered, which might involve the delivery of a supplementary brief, a fee for which could be allowed under Item 14. But there is no evidence in this case of the delivery of a supplementary brief. I am not prepared to agree that instructions given, probably orally, to counsel in the course of the hearing can be included in "instructions for brief." It is difficult for us to say what the Taxing Master ought to have allowed. We are satisfied that in taking into account the length of time the hearing occupied he misdirected himself, and we think that a fair order will be to allow half the item. So we reduce the Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 500. That disposes of the first point.

The second point raised on the appeal is as to the attendance of attorneys in Court, and two points are taken with regard to that. The Taxing Master allowed Rs. 15 for the first hour of each day and Rs. 10 for subsequent hours and parts of an hour on that day. It is objected that under Item 40 the allowance of Rs. 15 is for the first hour of the hearing, irrespective of the day, and after that first hour is finished, only Rs. 10 can be allowed for subsequent hours. Mr. Justice Blackwell was disposed to agree with the argument of the appellant on that point, but he felt himself bound to follow an unreported decision of Mr. Justice Rangnekar, in which that learned Judge seems to have held that under Item 40 solicitors were entitled to Rs. 15 for the first hour on each day of the hearing. Now, the item reads :

"Attendance of Attorney in Court on motion or on hearing of any suit, cause or matter including insolvency or criminal matters for first hour or part of hour—Rs. 15."

Item 41 reads : "For every additional hour—Rs. 10." It seems to me that the meaning of those items is perfectly plain. All that the Taxing Master has to do is to reckon the number of hours of attendance, irrespective of whether they took place on the same day, or in the same week, or in the same month. Having completed the first hour, for which a sum of Rs. 15 is allowed, all subsequent hours are allowed at the rate of Rs. 10. I cannot see the slightest justification for saying that a sum of Rs. 15 is to be allowed for the first hour on each day. The only argument in favour of that construction, which was suggested, is that attorneys do in practice prepare their bills on the basis of the work done for each day, but the existence of that practice affords no reason for giving to the words of the item a meaning which they do not bear. In my opinion, that objection must be allowed.

The other objection in respect of attendance is that in counting the hours of attendance the Taxing Master has included the mid-day adjournment of three-fourths of an hour. Mr. Justice Blackwell decided that that practice was right on the authority of a decision of Mr. Justice Kania in suit No. 39 of 1931—Walter Campbell v. A. Trevor Robinson,<sup>1</sup>—which has not been reported. In my opinion, it is impossible to say that an attorney is attending Court at a time when the Court is not sitting. This Court takes an adjournment of three-fourths of an hour in the middle of the day, and a working day consists of five hours apart from that adjournment. The length of the adjournment might be curtailed or extended, if the Judges thought fit, but whatever the period of adjournment may be, it seems to me quite impossible to say that an attorney is entitled to be paid for attendance in Court when the Court is not sitting. Mr. Justice Kania based his decision upon the analogy of refreshers to counsel, but the wording of r. 567, which deals with refreshers, is quite different from the wording of Item 40, and I express no opinion upon the question whether refreshers are allowable for the mid-day adjournment. This objection also must be allowed.

The point taken on the cross-objections is with regard to refreshers to counsel. This summons lasted, according to the Taxing Master, thirty-three and a half hours, and the brief fee marked for counsel was nine G. Ms. If the appellant chose to take over six days to argue a summons, which could probably have been disposed of adequately in a few hours, I see no good reason why he should not pay for the privilege, but we have to see whether refreshers to counsel, which the Taxing Master allowed, are permitted by the rules.

Rule 567 of the Rules of the High Court of Bombay in terms only authorises the payment of refreshers on the hearing of a suit or appeal which extends to more than one day. So that there is no express power to allow refreshers on an adjourned summons. Mr. Banaji for the appellants on the cross-objections relies on Item 60 of the Table of Fees, which reads :

He argues that counsel's fees are disbursements, which no doubt is so, but the regular rule is that counsel's fee must be marked on the brief before he goes into Court. If counsel is to be entitled to a refresher, which means an additional fee calculated by the day, to my mind, there must be a special rule

conferring that right, and if there is no such rule, I do not think that a refresher fee can be regarded as a reasonable disbursement.

The origin of refreshers was discussed by the Court of Appeal in England in Easton v. London Joint Stock Bank,<sup>1</sup> and it was there pointed out that the practice of allowing refreshers had originated, because in actions heard with witnesses it was impossible for a solicitor, when he was delivering his brief to counsel, to estimate within reasonable limits the length of time the case was likely to last. Therefore, it was unreasonable to expect him to arrive at a fee for counsel which would prove to be fair, and so, in cases heard with witnesses, the practice had grown up of allowing counsel to receive extra remuneration at so much per day, and that practice was embodied in a rule in England, and is covered by our rule 567. But the Court pointed out that even if there was no authority to allow refreshers to counsel, it was open to the Taxing Master in his discretion to allow an additional brief fee, if he thought that for some reason or another the solicitor had not been able to calculate, and had not in fact correctly calculated, the length of time the case was likely to last. I quite agree with that latter proposition, and I think that in this case if the Taxing Master had been asked to do so, he could properly have allowed a further brief fee, because the solicitor could not have supposed that a summons to review taxation would be likely to last for more than thirty-three hours; but the Taxing Master was not asked to deal with the matter in that way. Fees to counsel were claimed as refreshers allowed by the rules, and the Taxing Master allowed refreshers, and the learned Judge in review disallowed them. I think that the learned Judge was right on that point, and that the refresher fees must be disallowed.

Then the only question is whether we are entitled to send the case back to the Taxing Master to consider whether he ought to allow something by way of an additional brief fee on the principle indicated above. This Court held in Parashuram Shamdasani v. Tata Industrial Bank (supra) that such a course could not be adopted. In that case the learned Judge, who heard the summons to review, had taken the view of the matter which we take, namely, that refreshers on a summons are not allowable, but that the brief fee might be increased, and he had increased the brief fee. In the Court of Appeal the Court held that the summons, which had been adjourned to the hearing, had merged in the hearing, a view which, if I may say so, seems to me a curious one; but the Court then went on to say that, on the footing that costs were payable as costs of a summons, the Judge was wrong in increasing the brief fee from twenty to thirty G. Ms., thus diminishing the effect of his disallowance of the refreshers by ten G. Ms., and that no increase of charges could be allowed on a review of taxation over those charged in the bill of costs. Sir Norman Macleod, who delivered that judgment, had himself, I believe, been at one time Taxing Master, and he was no doubt familiar with the practice of the office, and I think that we ought to follow his view, although technically it was only a dictum. The proper course for the solicitors was to ask the Taxing Master to increase the brief fee, having regard to the unexpected length of time the case had taken; but as that course was not adopted, I think

The result, therefore, is that the appeal is allowed as to half the brief fees, though it fails on the question of jurisdiction to allow instructions for brief. It succeeds as to the two points relating to the attendance of attorneys, and the cross-objections fail.

B. J. WADIA J. I agree. With regard to the first objection raised by the appellant I think that a chamber summons adjourned into Court cannot be described merely as an interlocutory application or as a chamber matter. It becomes really a Court matter, and it appears on the daily Board as a Court matter, and Court fees are payable for it as such. With regard to the further point that an allowance for Instructions for Brief is inadmissible under the terms of 'item 14' at page 414 of the Rules of the High Court of Bombay, it is true to say in the first place that that item has not been very happily worded. It should in my opinion be recast. It does not, however, appear to me as if it was the intention of the framers to restrict the words "final trial" only to the final trial of a suit. Ordinarily we do not speak of the final trial of a chamber summons even when the summons is adjourned into Court; we generally refer to the final hearing of a summons. But an inappropriate word or expression in the 'item' ought not in my opinion to override the intention and meaning of all the words taken as a whole. It was conceded in argument that the word "appeals" in the same 'item' included appeals from orders made on chamber summonses, and it would be somewhat anomalous if an allowance for instructions could be given for an appeal from an order on a chamber summons adjourned into Court and not for the hearing of the summons itself. Moreover, there are in addition to chamber summonses adjourned into Court many matters which are tried in Court as Court matters, e.g. misfeasance summonses, matters under the Companies Act, Land Acquisition References, petitions under the Lunacy Act and Guardians and Wards Act, petitions under the Trusts Act and under the Patents and Designs Act, under the Specific Relief Act, and also other matters. If 'item 14' is to have the limited scope placed by the appellant upon it, for which he contended before the Taxing Master and in Court, the Taxing Master would be debarred from allowing instructions for brief in respect of many of these matters heard in Court which sometimes take up a long time and involve difficult questions both of law and of fact. Rule 563 of the High Court Rules gives a wide discretion to the Taxing Master to take various factors into consideration in respect of suits as well as matters, and I do not agree with the appellant's contention put forward in his memorandum of appeal that the word "matter" in r. 563 of the High Court Rules should be construed as referring only to appeals, arbitrations, accounts and motions, being the four matters expressly mentioned in 'item 14'. We were referred to the dictum of the Appeal Court in Parashuram Shamdasani v. Tata Industrial Bank,<sup>1</sup> where the learned Chief Justice observed that the charge for instructions in chamber matters was certainly not discretionary. In my opinion that statement has been put rather too wide, but in any event it does not apply to the matter before us, because in that case the summons was not adjourned into Court, but was merely ad-journeyed to the hearing of the suit itself.

In my opinion the learned Chamber Judge was right in disallowing the appellant's objection as to the allowance for Instructions for Brief to the respondents under 'item 14'.

With regard to the question of the quantum, I have held in a case that was argued at great length before me, namely, Gorakhram v. Pirozsha (No. 1),<sup>1</sup> that as a rule the Chamber Judge does not interfere with the discretion of the Taxing Master, except in extreme cases where there has been gross abuse, or a serious mistake, or when the Taxing Master has acted on a wrong principle, or applied an altogether wrong construction. That the Court has a right to interfere with the discretion of the Taxing Master is not denied, and it has been held in the case which I have referred to before in 27 Bom. L. R. 1195, following the English rules of taxation, that the decision of the Taxing Master is not final even on the question of the quantum. It was in my opinion a mistake to unduly insist on considering in a discretionary item the length of the hearing of the summons in Court. That is a matter along with other matters which may be taken into consideration, because it often happens that when a matter is heard in Court for a considerable length of time, questions do crop up for further elucidation during the hearing which necessitate sometimes the handing of further instructions in supplemental briefs to counsel. We have not been referred in this case to any such supplemental briefs. Before the Taxing Master takes such supplemental briefs into consideration, he has to satisfy himself that there were new matters which required further "instructions for brief", using the expression mentioned in 'item No. 14'. I think that the allowance of Rs. 1,000 was excessive, and the discretion vested in the Taxing Master has not been in my opinion justifiably exercised. I, therefore, agree with the learned Chief Justice that a fair and reasonable amount to allow for instructions would be a sum of Rs. 500.

With regard to the third objection as to the allowance for solicitors' attendance in Court and the question of the mid-day adjournments, I entirely agree with what has been said by the learned Chief Justice, and I have nothing to add.

With regard to the cross-objections on the question of refreshers which were allowed by the Taxing Master to the extent of Rs. 585, I may mention that when the matter went up before the learned Chamber Judge on a review of taxation, the only argument that was advanced was that that amount was covered by item 60 which deals with "reasonable disbursements". I do not think that if it was the intention to include refreshers in matters other than suits or appeals in the expression "reasonable disbursements", it would have been left to be implied, and not referred to more definitely. No application was made to the learned Chamber Judge to have the matter sent down again to the Taxing Master to consider whether an extra allowance should not be made, not on the ground of allowing "refreshers", which, as Lord Justice Cotton pointed out in Easton v. London Joint Stock Bank,<sup>2</sup> was an unfortunate term, but on the ground that the extra costs incurred after the first five hours might be allowed as additional or increased fee over and above that 1941 happen at times that there is a miscalculation by the attorney and the fee is under-marked at the inception of the trial. No such application was made, SHAMDASANI and I do not think that we should now at this stage, following the observations

 v. of the Appeal Court in 27 Bom. L. R. 1195, allow the matter to be sent back CENTRAL to the Taxing Master. I quite agree that r. 567, which refers to refreshers and BANK OF the amount of refreshers in the case of suits or appeals, may often work hard-INDIA ship in matters other than suits or appeals which take up a very long time in B. J. Wadia J. hearing. This is more an argument for reconsideration of the rule in the future rather than for allowing the cross-objections at present. In my opinion the learned Chamber Judge was right, and the cross-objections must be dismissed.

PER CURIAM. With regard to costs, the appellant succeeded in one or two matters in the Court below, but failed on a majority of the points raised, and the learned Judge directed him to pay the costs of certain items which had not been fought, and to pay three-fourths of the costs of the items which had been fought. In this Court he has succeeded on most of the points, but has failed on one point, and he has succeeded on the cross-objections. Cross-objections would have to be dismissed with costs, if we made a strict order. We are very reluctant to make a complicated order for taxation, giving the costs of certain items to one party and of other items to the other party. From such figures as the parties have supplied to us, rough figures, no doubt, as to what they expect to get under the orders which stand and possible orders, we think that the two sides would about balance each other on a strict order for taxation of costs of separate items. Therefore, we propose to make no order as to costs in the Court below and in this Court. Each party to bear their own costs in the lower Court and in this Court both of the appeal and cross-objections. There is to be no payment on either side in respect of the whole matter.

A Court will not allow itself to be used as an instrument of fraud, and by the application of rules of evidence or procedure it will not allow its eyes to be closed to the fact that it is being used as an instrument of fraud. Once the Court finds that the plaintiff is seeking its assistance to enable him to get the benefit of what is a fraud, it refuses to assist him. If, as a result of such refusal, the defendant is left in possession of some advantage derived from the common fraud of the plaintiff as well as the defendant, that is not due to any action on the part of the Court, but on the principle that the Court will not assist either party to the fraud.

Where a plaintiff is relying upon a deed, the defendant is entitled to give evidence of the circumstances under which it came into existence. When those circumstances include an allegation of a joint fraud by both the plaintiff and the defendant, the particulars of that fraud must be pleaded. The duty of the Court then is to look into the matter, and if it comes to the conclusion that the parties were acting together with a view to perpetrate a fraud, and did in fact perpetrate that fraud, and that there is no difference in the degree of guilt of the plaintiff and that of the defendant, it will not assist either party. It is the Court's duty to dismiss the plaintiff's claim because it knows that it has before it two persons equally guilty of fraud and it will not assist either of them.

II. In cases where fraud is accomplished—

(1) Where only one party acts fraudulently, he cannot be allowed, either as plaintiff or as defendant, to plead his fraud, on the principle that no man shall be heard to plead his own fraud;

(2) Where both parties are equally fraudulent, the Court will refuse to enforce the fraudulent transaction on the principles that where each party is equal in fault, the law favours him who is actually in possession, and will give relief to neither, and that a right of action cannot arise out of fraud, with the result that—

(a) where the plaintiff seeks relief on the allegation and on the basis of joint fraud, his suit will be dismissed; and

(b) where he seeks relief by suppressing the fraud, the defendant can plead and prove the common fraud to defeat the plaintiff's claim.

Plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain lands from the defendants alleging that he had purchased them from the defendants and had leased them for cultivation to the defendants who refused to deliver possession. The defendants contended that the sale-deed was passed without consideration, that the transaction was part of a fraudulent attempt to defeat their creditor who sought to attach the lands in execution of his decree, that the plaintiff was a benamidar and party to the fraud perpetrated on the creditor, and that he could not take advantage of it:—

Held, dismissing the suit, that it was a fraud for the plaintiff to claim beneficial title under a deed in respect of which he was a mere benamidar, and that the defendants were entitled to prove the benami nature of the transaction, even though in doing so they might have to rely on their own fraud.

SUIT to recover possession of lands.

In 1921, one Kasimsaheb obtained a decree against Guddappa (defendant No. 1) and his father Chikkappa (defendant No. 2). The decree was confirmed in appeal on November 17, 1923.

On March 22, 1924, defendants mortgaged some of their lands to a devasthan.

On July 24, 1925, Kasimsaheb applied to execute his decree and recovered part of the decretal amount. He again applied on August 11, 1927, to execute the decree, but without success.

On January 3, 1928, defendants sold their lands for Rs. 600 to the plaintiff Balaji, who paid Rs. 400 in cash to defendants and kept the balance of Rs. 200 with him. On the same day, defendants sold their other properties to one Guddappa (Ex. 54), and also sold their cattle to one Mariyappa.

On January 16, 1928, the plaintiff satisfied the mortgage of 1924 by paying Rs. 151-12-0 to the devasthan, and on January 17, 1928, he paid to the defendants Rs. 48-4-0, the balance of Rs. 200 which were kept with him.

On February 6, 1928, the sale was recorded and mutation of names effected in the record of rights. The possession of the lands sold, however, remained with the defendants.

On March 7, 1929, Kasimsaheb applied for the third time to execute his decree alleging that the sale deed passed in favour of the plaintiff was a fraudulent transaction entered into merely with the object of defeating his claim. He failed to prove the allegation and the darkhast was dismissed.

On December 4, 1935, the plaintiff sued to recover possession of the lands with mesne profits from the defendants. He alleged that he was the owner of the lands and had leased them to defendant No. 1 on an oral agreement in 1930, that defendant No. 1 denied his title and refused to hand over possession of the lands to him.

Defendants in their written statement contended that the sale deed in respect of the lands was executed by them in favour of the plaintiff on January 3, 1928, with a view to save the lands from attachment and sale in execution of the decree obtained by Kasimsaheb against them, that the sale deed was passed without consideration and was not intended to convey any title to the plaintiff, that the amount of Rs. 400 produced before the Sub-Registrar by the plaintiff was taken back by him, that possession of the lands had always been with them, that the plaintiff knew of the fraudulent nature of the transfer and being party to it he could not take advantage of it, and that the plaintiff was estopped from claiming possession of the lands.

The Subordinate Judge found that the sale was hollow and meant to defraud the decree-holder Kasimsaheb, and, therefore, dismissed the suit. He observed in the course of his judgment.—

"The last point which needs some consideration is whether defendants can resist the plaintiff's claim for possession as they were admittedly parties to the fraud. The law on the point is clear. It has been held that if the transferor remained in possession of the property in spite of the execution of the sham conveyance, the transferee will not be permitted to bring a suit for possession of the property on the strength of the conveyance, vide Notes under s. 53, p. 234, of the Transfer of Property Act by Mitra, 6th edn., 1930; see also Yaramati v. Chundru, 20 Mad. 326, 332. Hence in spite of the fact that the plea of the defendants involves an acknowledgment of their own turpitude, they can still resist a claim for possession of the transferee of the property fraudulently transferred."

On appeal, the Assistant Judge, relying on the decision in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa,<sup>1</sup> reversed the decree of the trial Court on the ground that the defendants could not plead their own fraud as an effective answer to a claim to property conveyed by them to a benamidar, and ordered the defendants to give possession of the lands to the plaintiff. He observed in his judgment.—

"It was argued as a point of law that when plaintiff and defendants are both parties to a fraudulent transfer and fraud has been perpetrated against the transferor's creditors, as in the present case, the Court should not assist plaintiff to recover possession, but should allow the estate to lie where it falls. This point was specifically considered in 31 Bom. 405 (Sidlingappa v. Hirasa). I must respectfully follow the ruling of our High Court in the above case which accepted the proposition that a deed cannot be avoided on the ground of fraud by a party to the fraud: that is to say, that a defendant cannot plead his own fraud as an effective answer to a claim to immovable property conveyed by him to a benamidar. This was followed in Sayad Nahannu v. Sabiribibi, 37 Bom. 217. The trial Court has relied on Yaramati v. Chandru, 20 Mad. 326. In that case, however, it was plaintiff who pleaded the fraud and not the defendant and the Court refused to assist plaintiff; while in the present case plaintiff pleads no fraud, but defendants plead it to avoid the sale. The observation of Benson J. in that case at p. 332, 'If the defendants were now seeking the assistance of the Court to obtain possession of the land from plaintiff, it may well be that the Court would allow the plaintiff to plead the true rights of the parties, even though the plea involved a declaration by the plaintiff of his own turpitude' is merely obiter. This is clear from the later case, Koppula v. Chitrapu, 56 Mad. 646, which is parallel to the above Bombay cases."

R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the appellant. The point in dispute is covered by the general principle of law that where both parties to a suit have committed fraud and the fraud is carried out, the Court should help neither party, and allow the estate to fall where it lies. This principle is not accepted in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa<sup>1</sup> and Sayad Nahannu v. Sabrinibibi<sup>2</sup>. There is another general principle of equal importance to the effect that a party to a fraud should not be allowed to take advantage of his own fraud. In Lakshman v. Vasudev<sup>3</sup> the case of Sidlingappa v. Hirasa was distinguished, though it was decided on a different ground.

My submission is that Sidlingappa's case is not correctly decided. That case has been consistently followed in the Madras High Court; but all the other High Courts have taken a different view and are of opinion that the estate should lie where it falls.

There is an analogous provision in s. 84 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, but it applies only when the fraud is not carried out. Where, however, the fraud is carried out, the Court should help neither party and allow the estate to lie where it falls.

The facts in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa were somewhat peculiar. The real owner conveyed his property in benami to another person, who sold it to plaintiffs' father. The property was attached in execution of a money decree against the owner, but the attachment was raised at the instance of the plaintiffs' father. Subsequently, when the plaintiffs sued to recover possession of the property from the real owner, he pleaded his own fraud as an answer to the claim. It was found that both deeds of conveyance were sham transactions. The owner succeeded under them to cheat his decree-holder out of his just rights. Dealing with this position Jenkins C. J. said (p. 411) : "He (owner) now seeks to plead his fraud as a defence to the plaintiffs' claim to recover possession of this property ... for the plaintiff it is urged that the rule is that a deed cannot be avoided on the ground of fraud by a party to the fraud; Allegans turpitudinem suam shall not be heard. ... It is a sounder policy to accept the rule, which will be most apt to deter persons from frauds of this kind; for, experience shows that they are by no means uncommon. We prefer the rule for which the plaintiff contends". Then later on, the Chief Justice adds (p. 412) : "Though we have dealt with the case as if both parties to this litigation had been equally culpable, it is to be noticed that it was the plaintiffs' father and not the plaintiff, who joined the defendant in the fraud, and it is a question whether it can be said that the plaintiff and the defendant are in pari delicto." The above case failed to consider the earlier rulings of our High Court, and was itself doubted and distinguished in the later case of Lakshman v. Vasudev<sup>1</sup> which was disposed of on the ground of s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. There Madgavkar J. said (p. 359) : "The decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins is entitled to the greatest respect. But, as pointed out by Mookerjee J. in Raghupathi v. Nrishingha,<sup>2</sup> the authority of the case in Deo dem Roberts v. Roberts,<sup>3</sup> on which it is based, must be deemed to have been considerably weakened by the subsequent ruling in Prole v. Wiggins.<sup>4</sup> The circumstances in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa were peculiar. It was not merely a case of fraud between the parties but fraud had been practised on the Courts in execution. Under these circumstances, although the Court there accepted the maxim 'Let the estate lie where it falls' or in other words in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis, it held that on the very application of that rule the plaintiff was entitled to a decree".

The earliest case in Bombay on the subject of fraud is of Luckmidas Khimji v. Mulji Canji<sup>5</sup>. It was not brought to the notice of Jenkins C. J. in Sidlingappa's case. The facts in that case were that in order to screen his property from execution the defendant had mortgaged his house with power of sale, and the mortgagee sold the house under the power to the plaintiff who was the defendant's uncle. The defendant attorned to the plaintiff, but remained in possession of the house. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover possession of the house the defendant pleaded that the mortgage, the sale and the attornment were all merely colourable. Westropp C. J. said (p. 304) : "Actual possession, either manual or by payment of rent, it is admitted that the plaintiff never had... The plaintiff's counsel has relied on Doe d. Roberts v. Roberts<sup>6</sup> to the contrary ... but ... it seems doubtful that even in a Court of common law that case would now be followed ... Where, however, a contract or deed is made for an illegal or immoral purpose, a defendant, against whom it is sought to be enforced, may show the turpitude of both himself and the plaintiff, and a Court of Justice will decline its aid to enforce a contract thus wrongfully entered into." The same view was taken in the later case of Babaji v. Krishna<sup>7</sup>, where Sargent C. J. said (p. 374) : "The judgments of the Privy Council in Ram Surun Singh v. Mussamut Pran Peary<sup>8</sup> and of the Calcutta High Court in Sreemutty Debia Chowdhraïn v. Bimola Soonduree Debia<sup>9</sup> as delivered by Sir Richard Couch show that it is open to the defendant to defend his possession by showing that the real transaction between himself and the plaintiff was to defraud, whether a third party or the defendant's creditors generally."

In Honapa v. Narsapa<sup>10</sup> the Court was dealing with a converse case. The real owner had conveyed his property to defendant with the object of defrauding his creditors and the fraud had been carried out. The owner was held not entitled to recover possession from the defendant. In that case Farran C. J., after an exhaustive review of case-law, remarked (p. 413) :

"Where a defendant in possession proves that he is the real owner and that the deed under which the plaintiff is claiming is fraudulent and collusive, he is left in possession, because the plaintiff has no just claim to the property. He owes his safety, not to the Court's action, but to the fact that he is in possession, and the plaintiff cannot establish a right to turn him out... Where the fraud is not completed, it may well be contended that as the collusive transaction has not really frustrated justice, the original owner still retains a good claim to the property." The above case shows that if the real owner is the defendant in possession then the plaintiff will not be helped by the Court in recovering possession. If the real owner comes to Court for recovering possession of the property, he will not be helped either. If the fraud is carried out, the real owner gets no help from the Court.

In Shripadgouda Venkangouda v. Govindgouda Narayangouda<sup>1</sup> it was held that where both parties to a suit practise fraud on Court and obtain a collusive decree, it is not open to either of them to impeach the judgment on the ground that it was collusively procured. The plaintiff who brought a suit to set aside a decree which was collusively obtained against him was non-suited on the ground that he was a party to the fraud.

The case of Sidlingappa v. Hirasa<sup>2</sup> was dissented from by the Allahabad High Court in Vilayat Husain v. Misran,<sup>3</sup> in which the Court assisted neither party, both parties being in pari delicto. As regards Sidlingappa's case the Court said (p. 399) : "If one studies that case, one will see that no attention was concentrated upon the question with which we are concerned here, which is whether a defendant can in a pleading, raise facts which show that he and the plaintiff were in pari delicto."

In the Lahore High Court in the full bench case of Quadir Baksh v. Hakam,<sup>4</sup> Tek Chand J. said with reference to Sidlingappa's case (p. 377) : "The judgment in this case was delivered by Lawrence Jenkins C. J. and like everything else which bears the imprimatur of that great Judge, is entitled to the highest respect. I have, therefore, given much anxious thought and careful consideration to it, and though I find that it has been dissented from already in our own Court as well as in Calcutta and Allahabad, it is not without considerable hesitation and diffidence that I have decided not to follow it."

In Madras the view taken in Sidlingappa's case has prevailed, but the decisions there have proceeded on the rule of stare decisis, and not on merits : Kotayya v. Mahalakshamma.<sup>5</sup> The Madras view is criticised in Quadir Baksh v. Hakam at p. 740.

Story on Equity (3rd Edn.), p. 123, § 298 has it : "In general (for it is not universally true), where parties are concerned in illegal agreements or other transactions, whether they are mala prohibita or mala in se, courts of equity, following the rule of law as to participators in a common crime, will not interpose to grant any relief ; acting upon the known maxim, In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis, est possidentis."

with approval a passage from Mayne on Hindu Law, which says (p. 102) : "But where the fraudulent or illegal purpose has actually been effected by means of the colourable grant, then the maxim applies. 'In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis'. The Court will help neither party. 'Let the estate lie where it falls.'"

In Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar<sup>1</sup> the Calcutta High Court is of opinion that where the intention to commit fraud has not been carried into effect, a beneficial owner is entitled to sue for a declaration that a deed of transfer executed by him is benami and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover.

The general rule is that a person who commits fraud is not allowed to plead his own fraud in support of his case, either as plaintiff or defendant. Where fraud is actually carried out the Court should help neither party. When fraud is not carried out the Court should assist the real owner in getting his property. In the present case the plaintiff has not come to the Court with clean hands. It must be held that both parties were privies to the fraud and the plaintiff should be non-suited.

S. R. Joshi, for the respondent. I submit that the case of Sidlingappa v. Hiras<sup>2</sup> is correctly decided.

Where a plaintiff can make out his title to the property in dispute on independent evidence, the defendant should not be allowed to defeat such plaintiff by pleading his own fraud. Fraud has been allowed to be pleaded by the defendant only in three classes of cases :—

- (1) where the fraud has not been carried out
- (2) where the consideration for the agreement is executory and in a suit by the plaintiff to enforce the performance of the promise, the defendant resists the enforcement by pleading common fraud, and
- (3) where plaintiff seeks to repudiate any illegal transaction after it is carried out and seeks to recover back the money paid under it.

The case of Sidlingappa v. Hiras<sup>2</sup> does not fall under any one of them.

The judgment in Vilayat Husain v. Misram<sup>3</sup> mainly relies on two English cases : Taylor v. Chestor<sup>4</sup> and Herman v. Juchner.<sup>5</sup> In Taylor v. Chestor the plaintiff had deposited with the defendant the half of a £ 50 bank note by way of pledge to secure the payment of money due from the plaintiff to the defendant. The debt was contracted for wine and suppers supplied to the plaintiff by the defendant in a brothel kept by her, to be there consumed in a debauch. The plaintiff having brought an action to recover the half-note, it was held that the maxim, in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis, applied, and that as the plaintiff could not recover without showing the true character of the deposit, and that being on an illegal consideration to which he was himself a party, he was precluded from obtaining the assistance of the law to recover it back. The test laid down in the case is that where a plaintiff cannot succeed without showing the true character of the transaction he cannot succeed. In this case Mellor J. said (p. 314) : "The true test for determining whether or not the plaintiff and the defendant were in pari delicto, is by considering whether the plaintiff could make out his case otherwise than through the medium and by the aid of the illegal transaction to which he was himself a party." Hence, where the plaintiff comes to the Court with a prima facie title and he is not obliged to plead fraud at all, the principle of in pari delicto does not apply. I submit this case is not inconsistent with Sidlingappa's case and does not support the other side. It was not a case where the plaintiff was obliged to plead his own fraud.

In Herman v. Jeuchner the plaintiff had deposited money with the defendant in order to induce the latter to stand surety for him, and it was held that he was not entitled to sustain an action to recover back the money, although he had not committed any default and although the defendant had not been compelled to pay the amount for which he had become bound. Brett M. R. said (p. 564) : "The contract between the plaintiff and the defendant is tainted with illegality. . . . if the contract is illegal and has been performed, then the person vouching the illegality cannot recover. In this case the illegal purpose has been wholly performed, and therefore the plaintiff cannot recover." This would fall under the three classes of cases mentioned above.

In Raghupati v. Nrisingha<sup>1</sup> the benamidar lost his suit, the fraudulent purpose having been carried out. Mukerji J. observed therein that the authority of Doe dem. Roberts v. Roberts<sup>2</sup> was shaken by Prole v. Wiggins.<sup>3</sup> But Doe dem. Roberts's case has been cited by Tindal C. J. in Prole's case and distinguished. In Prole's case the suit was to recover money on a bond passed under a contract by which it was intended to defeat certain provisions of a statute. Here the consideration was executory. It falls under class 2. Moreover Raghupati's case is opposed to the ruling of our Court in Shripadgouda Venkangouda v. Govindagouda Narayangouda,<sup>4</sup> as even after a decree the transaction was allowed to be disputed.

The case of Chenvirappa v. Puttappa<sup>5</sup> was followed in Shripadgouda Venkangouda v. Govindgouda Narayangouda<sup>6</sup> with the remark (p. 1190) : "The plaintiff (in Chenvirappa's case) could not get the judgment set aside which defendant had obtained against him by his own contrivance even if the trust was enforceable in his favour for it arose ex turpi causa." This case is in my favour.

The case of Doe dem. Roberts v. Roberts<sup>2</sup> is an authority for the proposition that no man can be allowed to allege his own fraud to avoid his own deed. This case was relied upon by Jenkins C. J. in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa, which is not inconsistent with Prole v. Wiggins.<sup>7</sup> The full bench case of Qadir Bakhsh v. Hakam<sup>8</sup> relies mainly on Raghupati v. Nrisingha and Vilayat Husain v. Misran.

It is contended on the other side that the early Bombay rulings are not considered in Sidlingappa's case. To take the earliest case, in Luckmidas Khimji v. Mulji Canji<sup>9</sup> the sole question was whether the Small Cause Court in Bombay had jurisdiction to entertain the case. A suit to recover possession of immoveable property can be brought in the Court of Small Causes only if the defendant is a tenant. As soon as the defendant is shown to be a trespasser the jurisdiction of that Court is ousted. The defendant there was pleading his own title. There is nothing to show that the fraud there was actually carried out. The cases of Chenvirappa v. Puttappa<sup>1</sup> and Shripadgouda Venkangouda v. Govindagouda Narayangouda<sup>2</sup> are in my favour. The plaintiff having allowed a collusive decree to be passed against him was held not entitled to recover possession of the property. Chenvirappa's case is in conflict with Raghupati v. Nrisingha.<sup>3</sup> In the case of Babaji v. Krishna<sup>4</sup> there was no finding that fraud was committed; and the case is not inconsistent with Sidlingappa's case, as pointed out in Qadir Bakhsh v. Hakam.<sup>5</sup> Honapa v. Narsapa<sup>6</sup> was a case in which it was the owner of property who sued to recover its possession after the fraud was carried out. Such is not the case here. None of these cases is in conflict with Sidlingappa's case.

The case of Deo dem. Roberts v. Roberts<sup>7</sup> was relied upon in Sidlingappa's case. According to it, no man can be allowed to plead his own fraud. Abott C. J. said (p. 368): "The plaintiff, at the trial, produced a proper deed of conveyance, and proved its execution, and by that he established his title to the premises. The defendant endeavoured to defeat this, by showing that the deed was delivered for the fraudulent purpose of giving to the plaintiff a colourable qualification to kill game; but in the case of Montefiori v. Montefiori,<sup>8</sup> Lord Mansfield expressly said, 'that no man shall set up his own iniquity as a defence, any more than as a cause of action'. Here that is attempted to be done; but the defendant cannot be allowed to be heard upon this matter." The above case was followed in Phillpotts v. Phillpotts<sup>9</sup> and Bessey v. Windham.<sup>10</sup> It was also followed in Kamayya v. Mamayya,<sup>11</sup> where Coutts Trotter J. has reviewed English cases on the point and has pointed out that the case Doe dem. Roberts v. Roberts is not inconsistent with Prole v. Wiggins; and in Sayad Nahammu v. Sabinibibi.<sup>12</sup>

The decision in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa<sup>13</sup> does not proceed so much on English cases as on the application of the test of public policy (p. 411).

Ram Surun Singh v. Mussamut Pran Peary<sup>14</sup> was not a case in which the defendant was trying to avoid his own deed by pleading his own fraud.

The remarks in Lakshman v. Vasudev<sup>15</sup> are obiter. There Sidlingappa's case is only distinguished.

The case of Sidlingappa v. Hirasa is treated in this Court as a leading case. It has been consistently followed in subsequent cases: Kondi v. Chumilal,<sup>16</sup>

v.
BALAJI-

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a second appeal from a decision of the Assistant Judge of Dharwar, which has been referred to a full bench, because it raises the question whether the decision of this Court in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa<sup>4</sup> is correct.

The facts as found by the lower Courts are that in 1923 there was a decree passed against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the present appellants, which decree was in process of being executed. Then on January 3, 1928, the defendants executed in favour of the present plaintiff what purported to be a sale-deed, and on that deed the plaintiff sues for possession. Both the lower Courts have held that in fact no consideration passed on that sale-deed, that it was part of a fraudulent attempt on the part of the defendants to defeat their creditors, and that the deed on which the plaintiff sues was in effect a benami transaction. On those findings, which bind us in second appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that to grant a decree in favour of the plaintiff would be to assist him in perpetrating a fraud. The defendants are still in possession, and the plaintiff, unless he can get a decree for possession from the Court, will not be able to gain any advantage from this alleged sale-deed. In appeal the learned Assistant Judge overruled the decision of the trial Court on the authority of Sidlingappa v. Hirasa (supra).

The principles, which must govern cases of this sort are in my opinion clear. No Court will allow itself to be used as an instrument of fraud, and no Court, by the application of rules of evidence or procedure, can allow its eyes to be closed to the fact that it is being used as an instrument of fraud. The legal maxim is ex turpi causa non oritur actio. Once the Court finds that the plaintiff is seeking its assistance to enable him to get the benefit of what is a fraud, the Court refuses to assist him. If, as a result of such refusal, the defendant is left in possession of some advantage derived from his own fraud, that is not due to any action on the part of the Court. It is a fraud for a plaintiff to claim beneficial title under a deed in respect of which he was a mere benamidar, and the Court cannot refuse to allow the defendant to prove the benami nature of the transaction, even though in doing so the defendant may have to rely on his own wrong doing.

In Sidlingappa v. Hirasa (supra) the facts were substantially the same as in the present case, and the Court there held that the defendant could not be allowed to defeat the plaintiff's case by alleging his own fraud. It was pointed out that the deed on which the plaintiff sued was ostensibly a valid conveyance, and it was held that the defendant could not be allowed to show that it was not what it purported to be, a conveyance on sale, by setting up his own fraud. The leading judgment was given by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, and I should never differ from any decision of his without very great diffidence, but, in my opinion, his decision in that case cannot be supported. The judgment resulted in the Court decreeing possession to a man who, on the facts proved, had no title whatever to possession, and was setting up a fraudulent claim. The case seems to postulate the existence of some sort of rule of estoppel, under which a defendant is never entitled to set up his own fraud; but, in my opinion, there is no such rule. An admission by a witness that he has been guilty of fraud never comes gracefully, but at the same time such admissions cannot be said to be illegal. I think the true rule is stated by Sir Grimwood Mears in Vilayat Husain v. Misran,<sup>1</sup> where he says (p. 398) :—

"In all cases where a plaintiff is relying upon a deed, the defendant is entitled as of course to give evidence of the circumstances under which the document came into existence. When those circumstances embrace and include an allegation of a joint fraud by both plaintiff and defendant, the particulars of that fraud must be pleaded; and it is then the duty of the court to look into the matter, and if the court comes to the conclusion that the parties were acting together with a view to perpetrate a fraud, and did in fact perpetrate that fraud, and that there is no difference in the degree of guilt of the plaintiff (who is asking the court to give him some help) and that of the defendant, the duty of the court is not to assist either party; in other words, the duty of the court is to dismiss the claim, because the court having then in its knowledge that it has before it two persons equally guilty of fraud will not assist either of them."

In the present case the fraud which the plaintiff and the defendants perpetrated on the defendants' creditors is a thing of the past, and this Court is not asked, and would certainly refuse, to assist in that. The fact that such a fraud was perpetrated in the past cannot justify this Court at the present time in assisting the plaintiff to perpetrate a further fraud upon the defendant.

We have been referred to a considerable number of cases, and, except for the Madras High Court, all the other High Courts have not followed the principle laid down in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa. This High Court itself in two earlier cases, Luckmidas Khimji v. Mulji Canji,<sup>2</sup> and Babaji v. Krishna,<sup>3</sup> had adopted what I venture to think is the right principle, and said that in a case of this sort the Court does not interfere to assist the plaintiff, but leaves the estate to lie where it falls. Unfortunately those cases were not discussed in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa. Sidlingappa v. Hirasa has been disapproved by the Allahabad High Court, by the Lahore High Court, and by the Calcutta High Court. In Qadir Bakhsh v. Hakam,<sup>4</sup> a full bench of the Lahore High Court went in considerable detail through all the cases on this subject in the High Courts in India, and arrived at the conclusion that the true principle is that the Court in a case of this sort would not interfere to help the plaintiff, even though in proving the fraudulent nature of the plaintiff's claim it is necessary for the defendant to rely on his own earlier fraud. In the Madras High Court there are several cases which follow Sidlingappa v. Hirasa. The last of them, which is Kotayya v. Mahalakshamma,<sup>5</sup> merely rests the decision on the doctrine of stare decisis, though apart from the decisions of the Madras High Court itself, the balance of authority is heavily against the view taken. To my mind, the principle, which was acted upon in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa, is fundamentally wrong and offends against the rule that the Court must never allow itself to be used to assist in the perpetration of fraud. Sidlingappa v. Hirasa must be treated as overruled.

In my opinion, the decision of the learned trial Judge in this case was right, and the decision of the lower appellate Court was wrong. We must, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court, and restore that of the trial Court, with costs throughout.

DIVATIA J. The point arising for decision in this appeal is whether it is open to the defendants to prove a joint and successful fraud of themselves and the plaintiff to defeat the latter's claim for possession of property conveyed under a collusive and nominal transaction. The lower appellate Court has held, relying on a decision of our High Court in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa,<sup>1</sup> that the defendants cannot plead their own fraud as an effective answer to a claim to property conveyed by them to a benamidar. On this point the opinion of our own as well as other High Courts is not unanimous. In three previous decisions of our High Court the view adopted was that it was open to the defendant to defend his possession by proving that the transaction of sale between himself and the plaintiff was effected to defraud a third party : Luckmidas Khimji v. Mulji Canji,<sup>2</sup> Babaji v. Krishna,<sup>3</sup> and Honappa v. Narsappa.<sup>4</sup> That view was based on the well-known maxim that when each party is equal in fault, the law favours him who is actually in possession. In Sidlingappa v. Hirasa it was, however, held that the defendant cannot plead his own fraud in answer to a claim which is ostensibly good in law and that it was a sounder policy to accept the rule that a party alleging his own participation in the fraud shall not be heard. The same view was expressed by Beaman J. in a later decision in Sayad Nahannu v. Sabrinibibi.<sup>5</sup> In Lakshman v. Vasudev<sup>6</sup> the decision in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa was criticised but was sought to be distinguished on the ground that where the plaintiff, who was a purchaser from a fraudulent party, had not proved his own good faith and due enquiry, he was not entitled to the assistance of the Court.

Among the other High Courts, the Madras High Court is the only one which has in its recent rulings, the last of which is in Kotayya v. Mahalakshamma,<sup>7</sup> adopted the same view as in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa, although its earlier decisions were to the contrary. The Calcutta, Allahabad, Lahore and Rangoon High Courts have dissented from the decision in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa, and held that the defendant is entitled to maintain his possession by proving the fraudulent nature of the transaction where the fraud is joint and successful : Raghrupati v. Nrisingha,<sup>8</sup> Vilayat Husain v. Misran,<sup>9</sup> Qadir Bakhsh v. Hakam,<sup>1</sup> and Ma Nan Chaw v. Ma E.<sup>2</sup> It is to be noted that there is unanimity on the point that the plaintiff cannot be allowed any relief by way of declaration or possession based on a transaction initiated by his own fraud whether with or without the defendant as his accomplice; the diversity of opinion is with regard to the defendant's right to plead the joint fraud in answer to the plaintiff's claim. In order to test the two different views on this point, it is necessary to examine the various ways in which the allegation of fraud can come before a Court. Fraud may be either unilateral or bilateral, i.e., it may be committed only by one party to the suit while the other party is innocent or it may be by both the parties conjointly and collusively to defeat a third person. In both cases it might be successfully effected by the fraudulent object being accomplished or it might be ineffective in the sense that after the fraudulent transaction has been entered into, its object has been frustrated. In all cases of unilateral or bilateral fraud which has not been successfully accomplished, either party to it can repudiate the fraudulent transaction and can recover or maintain his possession relying upon his real title. That has been laid down in a number of authorities of which the principal ones are Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandi Servai,<sup>3</sup> Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar,<sup>4</sup> and Bai Devmani v. Ravishankar Oghadbhai.<sup>5</sup> That is also the rule underlying s. 84 of the Indian Trusts Act. Where, however, the fraudulent object is achieved, different results would follow according as the fraud is unilateral or bilateral. Where the fraud is unilateral, the fraudulent party cannot be allowed to plead his own fraud either as a plaintiff or as a defendant on the well-known maxim that no man shall be heard to plead his own fraud. Where the fraud is bilateral and both parties are equal in turpitude, neither of them can, as plaintiff, enforce his claim against the other relying upon the fraudulent nature of the transaction on the same principle that a right of action cannot arise out of fraud. So far the position is clear. But what would happen when the fraudulent plaintiff, suppressing the collusive and nominal nature of the transaction and relying on its outward legality, sues his accomplice in the fraud to obtain possession of property which he would not have been able to get if he had disclosed the fraud? The divergence of opinion emerges here. The decisions, of which Sidlingappa v. Hirasa is a type, are based on the view that the defendant is in no better position than the plaintiff and both are governed by the same principle of incapacity of proving one's participation in fraud. Thus in a case where the defendant has purported to sell his property to the plaintiff by a formally good but really hollow and collusive deed without parting with possession, the plaintiff can obtain a decree for possession by relying on his outwardly good title and preventing the defendant from proving the fictitious nature of the transaction.

That is the actual decision in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa, and if it is correct that would be the result in the present case also. It is observed in that decision that in order to deter persons effectively from committing frauds, it is a sounder policy to act upon the rule of equity prohibiting a party from proving a fraud of which he is an accomplice than to act upon another rule of equity that the Court will not help a plaintiff where the litigants are parties to a common fraud. In arriving at this conclusion the Court mainly followed an old English decision in Deo dem Roberts v. Roberts.<sup>1</sup> But, as observed in Quadir Bakhsh v. Hakam and Vilayat Husain v. Mistran, that decision is not now considered an authority and the Courts act on the principle that where parties are of equal guilt, the estate will lie where it falls, and the defendant can, therefore, plead the fraud to maintain his possession. See Broom's Legal Maxims (9th edn.,) at pp. 465-6 and 478-9, and Taylor on Evidence, Vol. I (12th edn.,), p. 89. It may be further stated here that the rule applied in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa is also based on the principle of estoppel that the defendant being a party to the fraud is estopped from pleading his own fraud, but, as held in Ram Surun Singh v. Mussamut Pran Peary,<sup>2</sup> there can be no estoppel in the case of joint fraud where the facts are known to both the parties.

As I stated before, all the Indian High Courts except the Madras High Court have dissented from the decision in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa. After that decision was reported, the Madras High Court changed its former view and adopted the reasoning of that decision. I may state here that in Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandi Servai their Lordships quoted with approval a passage from Mayne's Hindu Law to the effect that where the fraudulent purpose has been effected by the colourable grant, the maxim "In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis" applies and the Court will help neither party.

Testing the matter on principle apart from authorities, it seems to me that the rule adopted in Sidlingappa v. Hirasa is less equitable than the other view. By preventing the defendant from establishing the real nature of the transaction, the Courts would encourage the plaintiff, who has already joined in one fraud, to practise another fraud on the Court by falsely posing as an innocent party and misleading the Court which would not have granted him any relief if he had himself alleged the true facts. There is much less reason in equity for allowing the plaintiff the relief which he seeks by suppressing his own fraudulent part and thereby gagging the defendant's mouth from telling the truth.

It might be said that if the plaintiff is not allowed to set up his fraud, why should a defendant be allowed to do so, but the answer to that is that the Courts will not allow a fraud being practised on them by the plaintiff and they will hear the defendant on any ground which would defeat a false and fraudulent claim. The defendant in possession does not ask for any relief from the Court but only tells the truth which the plaintiff is suppressing. It is that equitable principle that underlies the maxim that where each party is equal in fault, the law favours him who is actually in possession, thereby not assisting either party to the fraud by granting any executable decree. The rule that as between parties of equal guilt the law favours the party in possession is as good a rule in equity as the rule that no man can plead his own fraud and there is no conflict between them. They can both be worked consistently by applying the latter rule where fraud is pleaded for obtaining relief from Court and the former, where joint fraud is pleaded by the defendant to maintain his possession. Another reason pointing to the same conclusion is that a hollow as well as fraudulent transaction between the parties is void ab initio and as such unenforceable. In such cases, a defendant, by proving a common fraud, proves the void nature of the transaction which would otherwise have not been established.

2 (1870) 13 M. I. A. 551.

As a result of this discussion the law on the subject can be summarized as follows :—

I. In all cases of unilateral or bilateral fraud which has not been successfully effected, either party can repudiate the fraudulent transaction and can recover or maintain his possession by proving his real title.

II. In cases where fraud is accomplished—

(1). where only one party acts fraudulently, he cannot be allowed, either as plaintiff or as defendant, to plead his fraud, on the principle that no man shall be heard to plead his own fraud ;

(2) where both parties are equally fraudulent, the Courts will refuse to enforce the fraudulent transaction on the principles that where each party is equal in fault, the law favours him who is actually in possession, and will give relief to neither, and that a right of action cannot arise out of fraud, with the result that—

(a) where the plaintiff seeks relief on the allegation and on the basis of joint fraud, his suit will be dismissed ; and

(b) where he seeks relief by suppressing the fraud, the defendant can plead and prove the common fraud to defeat the plaintiff's claim.

In the present case, the defendants having proved the successful fraud of both the parties, they are entitled to remain in possession and the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief. The appeal should, therefore, be allowed with costs throughout.

not decrees obtained against "the same judgment-debtor" for the purpose of rateable distribution under s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

Applicant obtained a decree against a father and son who were members of a Hindu joint family. The opponents obtained decrees against the father alone as manager of the joint family. In execution of the applicant's decree ancestral property belonging to the father and son was sold and the amount realised was held in Court. The opponents in execution of their decrees asked for rateable distribution of the assets with the applicant :

Held, that the opponents' decrees against the father alone and the applicants' decree against the father and son were not decrees against "the same judgment-debtor" within the meaning of s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, and therefore rateable distribution could not be claimed by the opponents.

RATEABLE distribution.

One Laxman (applicant) obtained a decree against Ramakrishna and his son Venketesh, who were members of a Hindu joint family, for a sum of Rs. 3,096-8-6. Govind and others (opponents) obtained decrees against Ramakrishna alone. In execution of the applicant's decree ancestral property belonging to Ramakrishna and Venketesh was sold for Rs. 5,289 and this amount was held by the executing Court.

The opponents then applied to execute their decrees and asked for rateable distribution with the applicant. The applicant contended that inasmuch as the opponents' decrees were not passed against the same judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, rateable distribution of the assets falling to the share of Venketesh could not be ordered for the benefit of the opponents.

The trial Judge allowed rateable distribution and ordered the sum realised to be distributed among all the decree-holders. He observed as follows :—

"The decrees in all Darkhasts pending for rateable distribution show that Defendant Ramakrishna Venketesh is the manager of the family. Defendant No. 2 ... is the undivided son of Defendant No. 1 Ramakrishna Venketesh. Thus all the decrees being against Defendant Ramakrishna Venketesh in his capacity of the manager it follows that they are binding on his son Venketesh ... moreover, he being the son his father's debts which are not shown to be immoral or illegal are binding on him. Hence it is implied that Venketesh Ramakrishna is represented in all these Darkhasts by his father as the manager. That being so it is immaterial if his name specifically does not appear in each of the Darkhasts."

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a revision application under s. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, which raises a question under s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, which is not altogether free from difficulty.

The present applicant obtained a decree against a father and son, members of a Hindu joint family. Of the thirteen opponents, one obtained a similar decree against the father and son, and his position is obviously the same as that of the applicant. But the other twelve opponents obtained decrees against the father alone, and I will assume that in all those decrees the father was shown as the manager of the joint Hindu family. In execution of the applicant's decree, ancestral property has been sold for Rs. 5,289, and that money is in Court. The opponents applied to execute their decrees, and they now ask for rateable distribution with the applicant.

Section 73 provides that :—

“(1) Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons :”

Admittedly all the provisions of that section except one have been complied with by the opponents. It is said however that their decrees are not against “the same judgment-debtor”, and that is the point which we have to determine.

Now there has been a difference of opinion between this High Court and the High Court of Madras as to the meaning of the expression “same judgment-debtor” in s. 73 in cases where a decree has been obtained against a man in his lifetime, and then after his death another decree has been obtained against his personal representative. In such a case are both decrees obtained against the same judgment-debtor? This Court held in Govind Abaji Jakhadi v. Mohoniraj Vinayak Jakhadi<sup>1</sup> that they were not, that the expression “the same judgment-debtor” must be construed strictly, and that, inasmuch as the decrees were against different persons, they could not be said to be against the same judgment-debtor. The same view was taken recently by this Court in Chunilal v. Broach Urban Co-op. Bank, Ltd.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, the Madras High Court has given a more liberal construction to the expression “the same judgment-debtor”, and has held that the deceased debtor and his personal representative must be regarded as the same judgment-debtor, because the decrees are executable against the same estate. The latest decision of the Madras High Court is a full bench decision, Rama Krishnan Chettiar v. Viswanathan Chettiar.<sup>3</sup> So far as that point is concerned, we are bound by the decisions of this Court, which could only be dissented from by a full bench. But the point which arises in this case, namely, whether a decree against a Hindu father is against the same judgment-debtor as a decree against the father and son, is, to my mind, not by any means the same point, though in some of the Madras cases it has been suggested that it is, at any rate, very similar. Ramanathan Chettiar v. Subramania Sastrial<sup>1</sup> suggested that the same principle governed both classes of case, and held that a decree against a father and a decree against a father and his son were decrees against the same judgment-debtor, the father being the manager of the joint family of which the son was a member. So that, that decision is exactly in point, and it has been followed in later decisions by the Madras High Court, the last decision being Subramaniam v. Annamalai.<sup>2</sup> But with all deference to the Madras High Court, I think there are serious difficulties in the way of the construction adopted. In the first place, it is really incorporating into the construction of s. 73 principles peculiar to Hindu law, because it is only where the defendants, father and son, are members of a joint Hindu family, that they can be regarded as the same judgment-debtor. In the case of defendants belonging to other communities, or being members of a divided Hindu family, it could not be suggested that a decree against a father is against the same judgment-debtor as a decree against father and son. Apart from the difficulty of construing an Act of the legislature so as to assign to it different meanings according to the community of the parties, there seems to me to be this practical difficulty, that the construction adopted by the Madras High Court may very well deprive the son of his right to claim that the debt, the subject of the decree against his father, was one incurred by the father for immoral purposes, and is, therefore, not binding upon him. There may be a decree against a father and son for a debt which was incurred for the purposes of the joint family; then there may be a decree against the father alone for a debt not incurred for the purposes of the joint family, but incurred for immoral purposes. If the former decree-holder is proceeding to execute his decree, it seems to me that the creditor of the father alone can obtain rateable distribution, if the debtor is the same, without allowing to the son any opportunity of disputing his liability, because the terms of s. 73 are peremptory and in a case falling within its terms rateable distribution must be allowed. For those reasons, in my opinion, on the true construction of s. 73 it cannot be said that a decree against a father and a decree against a father and son are decrees against the same judgment-debtor.

It is admitted that so far as the father is concerned, he being a common debtor under both decrees, rateable distribution can be claimed. But as against the son it seems to me that rateable distribution cannot be claimed, because the two decrees are not, so far as he is concerned, against the same debtor. The learned Subordinate Judge took a different view of the matter and allowed rateable distribution.

I think, therefore, that the application must be allowed as against the opponents whose decrees are against the father alone, and the order of rateable distribution set aside. Such opponents must pay the costs of the application to this Court. The exact amount of distribution will be worked out in the lower Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sec. 73—Rateable distribution—“Same judgment-debtor,” meaning of —Decree against judgment-debtors personally and another decree against them in representative capacity—Whether such decrees are against “same” judgment-debtors.

A decree against a person individually and a decree against that person as representative of a deceased person are not decrees against “the same judgment-debtor” within the meaning of s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, so as to entitle the holders of the two decrees to rateable distribution.

The expression “the same judgment-debtor” in s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, denotes identity of individuality and identity of character or interest. Decrees obtained against the same individual, but in different capacities, may be regarded as not obtained against “the same judgment-debtor.”

EXECUTION proceedings.

The applicant, Jamiyatram Joshi, obtained a personal decree for Rs. 478 and costs against one Nathabai Motibhai and his two brothers, Shankarbhai and Marghabhai, and one Desai Babarbai, in suit No. 100 of 1935 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Umreth.

The opponent, Umiyashankar Joshi, also obtained a decree for Rs. 310 and costs against Nathabhai and his two brothers, as heirs of their father Motibhai, and against the property of Motibhai, in suit No. 333 of 1936 in the same Court.

The opponent filed a darkhast (No. 269 of 1939) for execution of his decree. Some property of Motibhai was sold in execution and the Court was in possession of the sale proceeds.

The applicant filed a darkhast (No. 68 of 1940) claiming rateable distribution in the proceeds of the sale.

The Subordinate Judge held that the applicant was not entitled to any rateable distribution as claimed. He observed :—

"What is contemplated by s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, is that the decrees must be against the 'same judgment-debtor.' In Reg. Darkhast No. 269/39 the decree is passed against the estate of the deceased Motibhai Baberbhai and what is being sold in this darkhast is also the same property, whereas the decree in Regular Darkhast No. 68/40 is passed against the judgment-debtors 1 to 4 in their personal capacity. Thus although the property is the same still the decrees are not against the 'same judgment-debtors,' for the words 'same judgment-debtor' do not include a person who does not occupy the 'same character' in all the decrees. In Regular Darkhast No. 68/40 the decree is apparently in the personal capacity against the judgment-debtors, while the other in Regular Darkhast No. 269/39 is against defendants 1, 2 and 3 in the representative capacity. This view is abundantly borne out in Govind Apaji Jakhadi v. Mohaniraj (25 Bom. 494) and Chunilal Raychand v. The Broach Urban Co-operative Bank, 39 Bom. L. R. 815. The result is that the two decrees (i.e. in Reg. Darkhast No. 68/40 and Reg. Darkhast No. 269/39) not being against the same judgment-debtor the judgment-debtor in Reg. Darkhast No. 68/40 is not entitled to any rateable distribution as claimed."

The applicant applied to the High Court.

C. K. Shah, for the applicant.

J. C. Shah, for the opponents.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a revision application in execution, which raises a question under s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. There were two decrees, the first being against three persons personally and a fourth person whose existence can be ignored, I think, and the second against the same three persons as the heirs of their deceased father. The question which arises is whether a decree against a person individually and a decree against that person as representative of a deceased person can be held to be decrees against the same judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 73 so as to entitle the holders of the two decrees to rateable distribution.

Mr. C. K. Shah for the applicant relies on a recent decision of the Calcutta High Court in Hemendra Nath Chaudhuri v. East Bengal Commercial Bank<sup>1</sup> in which the Court held that in such a case the decrees were against the same judgment-debtor. On the other hand, Mr. J. C. Shah relies on decisions of other High Courts in which the opposite view has been taken. The question does not seem to have come before this Court.

When there is a conflict of authority upon a question, I like to consider the matter in the first instance apart from authority. Section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code provides, so far as material, that where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor, the assets shall be rateably distributed among all such persons. "Judgment-debtor" is defined in s. 2 (10) as meaning any person against whom a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made. The argument for the applicant is that the language of s. 73 is quite clear, that a decree against a particular person in his individual capacity and another decree against that person in a representative capacity are nevertheless both decrees against the same person, and, therefore, against the same judgment-debtor within the definition. I agree that, if one gives the most literal meaning to the word "judgmentdebtor," that result must follow. For the respondent it is argued that a person, who may be an individual or a corporation, can for legal purposes be regarded sometimes as two persons. I am not prepared to accept that view, and I always deprecate the practice, which is sometimes followed, of making the same person a party twice over where he represents different interests. But at the same time the same person may hold different characters, and he may be a party to litigation in different capacities, and I apprehend that it would always be open to the Court to allow a party to appear and argue in different capacities by different counsel, if that course is necessary to avoid one aspect of the matter not being put before the Court. Therefore, the Court recognizes, and certainly the framers of the Civil Procedure Code have recognized, that the same person may appear in various capacities, and it would seem to me not to be unduly stretching the language of s. 73 to say that the expression "the same judgment-debtor" denotes identity of individuality and identity of character, and that two decrees obtained against the same individual, but in different capacities, may be regarded as not obtained against the same judgment-debtor. In considering whether to give a literal or a less literal meaning to s. 73, I think that any Court must have regard to the consequences which are likely to follow from either construction. It seems to me that the grossest injustice and absurdity may follow from holding that decrees against the same person must always be regarded as decrees against the same judgment-debtor for the purposes of s. 73. One may have creditors of estate of A, which is solvent, being compelled to share the assets of that estate with the creditors of estate B, which is insolvent and possesses no assets, merely because there is a common trustee of the two estates. It is not difficult to imagine the confusion which might arise in the case of a corporation sole, like the Official Assignee of Bombay, who may have decrees passed against him as representative of many different estates. No doubt, if the language of an Act of Parliament is sufficiently clear, the Court can only give effect to it, however inequitable or unjust the result of such a construction may seem to the Court to be. But if the Court can avoid construing an Act of Parliament so as to cause what the Court regards as injustice, in my opinion, it certainly ought to do so. I think it is not unduly stretching the expression "the same judgment-debtor" to say that it denotes identity, not only of individuality but of character or interest.

Coming now to the authorities, no doubt the Calcutta High Court in Hemendra Nath Chaudhuri v. East Bengal Commercial Bank (supra) has adopted a strict construction of the expression "the same judgment-debtor," and has held that, if the individual against whom two decrees are obtained is the same, then one cannot look further and consider whether his interests or character are the same. In so construing the Act the Court has to some extent purported to follow the decision of this Court in Govind Abaji Jakhadi v. Mohoniraj Vinayak Jakhadi.<sup>1</sup> That was a case in which there was one decree against a deceased person and another decree against his legal representative, and this Court held that inasmuch as the decrees were against two distinct individuals, they could not be said to be against the same judgment-— held that in such a case the judgment-debtor is the same. The most recent JAMİYATRAM case is Rama Krishnan Chettiar v. Viswanathan Chettiar.<sup>1</sup> We are not con-

 UMIYA- quite another to say that decrees against the same individual, though in differ-SHANKAR ent capacities, must be regarded as decrees against the same judgment-debtor.
 PRAN-
 SHANKAR

Other High Courts have taken the same view of s. 73 as I do. In *Rama
 Beaumont C.J. Krishnan Chettiar v. Viswanathan Chettiar (supra)* Mr. Justice Pandrang
 — Row in the course of his judgment says (p. 98) :

“It has also been held, and here too there is no dispute, that even though the person against whom the decrees were passed is the same in name, section 73 will not apply unless that person occupied the same character in all the decrees; for instance, where one decree was passed against A in his personal capacity and another against him as heir of P, the two decrees are not against the same judgment-debtor.”

The same view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court in Bhola Nath v. Maqbul-un-nissa<sup>2</sup> and by the Lahore High Court in Sadhu Ram v. Dhanpat Rai-Tehu Ram<sup>3</sup> and there is a dictum to the same effect in Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadunath Banerjee.<sup>4</sup> The balance of authorities is in favour of the view which, I think, is the right one of the construction of the expression “the same judgment-debtor.” We must hold, therefore, that in this case there is no right of rateable distribution, and that was the view taken by the lower Court.

The revision application, therefore, will be dismissed with costs.

* Criminal Application for Revision No. 69 of 1941, from an order of externment passed by W. R. G. Smith, Commissioner of Police, Bombay.

In passing an externment order under s. 27 of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, as amended by the City of Bombay Police (Amendment) Act, 1938, the Commissioner of Police acts as an executive officer and not as a Court subordinate to the High Court. The High Court, therefore, has no jurisdiction to interfere in revision with such an order. The order can only be called in question by a Court on the grounds mentioned in s. 27(7) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, or under the circumstances referred to in Emperor v. Anna Vithoba<sup>1</sup> and Emperor v. Yarmahomed Ahmedkhan,<sup>2</sup> as for instance, when an attempt is made to impose a penalty for breach of the order.

An application for revision of an externment order under s. 27 of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, does not lie direct to the High Court.

ORDER of externment under the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902.

The applicant, Alla Datta, was residing in Bombay for seventeen years.

On September 26, 1939, the police took proceedings against him and six other persons, under Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, in the Court of the Presidency Magistrate, Second Court, for an order directing each of them to execute a bond of Rs. 100 with one surety in like amount to keep the peace for one year. The police alleged that there was a long standing enmity between the parties. The proceedings were dismissed on September 27, 1940 for want of prosecution.

On November 11, 1940, the applicant was arrested by a warrant under s. 27 (5) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, and was released on bail of Rs. 200 in cash and a surety for Rs. 500.

On December 6, 1940, the Commissioner of Police passed an order of externment against the applicant directing him to leave the city of Bombay for two years.

On December 16, 1940, the applicant appealed to the Government of Bombay against the order of the Commissioner of Police, but his appeal was rejected on December 19, 1940. He left Bombay on that day.

The applicant, thereafter, applied to the High Court in revision.

B. R. Ambedkar, with G. J. Mane, advocate for the petitioner.

M. C. Setalvad, Advocate General, with R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

BROOMFIELD J. This is an application for revision by one Alla Datta Mahamad Siddik against whom the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, has made an order under s. 27(1)(a) of the City of Bombay Police Act (Bom. IV of 1902) as amended by Bombay Act XIV of 1938 directing him to remove himself from the City of Bombay.

The Advocate General, who appears for the Crown, has taken a preliminary objection that the revision application does not lie. So far as we are aware the only precedent for an application to the High Court seeking to revise an order by the Commissioner of Police is Emperor v. Gulabdin Pathan,<sup>3</sup> which was disposed of by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice N. J. Wadia in February, 1935. This Court was of opinion that the Police Commissioner's order, which

3 (1935) Criminal Application for Revision No. 504 of 1934, decided by Beaumont C. J. and N. J. Wadia J., on February 8, 1935 (Unrep.).

A. Cr. J. of course was made under the Act as it stood before the amendment, was not 1941 justified by the provisions of the Act. Nevertheless it was held that, as the ——— Commissioner was not a Court subordinate to this Court, there was no juris-EMPEROR diction to interfere with the order.
 v.

ALLADATTA The position is of course different where a person is prosecuted and a Court ——— is asked to impose a penalty for breach of the order. It was held in Emperor Broomfield J. v. Anna Vithoba,<sup>1</sup> that, though the order of an executive officer, not being an order of an inferior criminal Court, cannot be set aside in revision, nevertheless when an executive officer makes an order or issues a notification, and an attempt is made to enforce the exaction of a penalty against a person committing a breach of such order or notification, it becomes the duty of the judicial authority to consider whether the order is properly made or not. This case was followed and the principles laid down in it were explained by a full bench decision, Emperor v. Yarmahomed Ahmedkhan.<sup>2</sup> In the course of his judgment the learned Chief Justice said (p. 492) :

"It may be conceded that an order made under s. 27 is an order made by an executive officer, and is not subject to appeal or revision in any Court. But it is a very different matter to affirm that when an attempt is made to impose a penalty for breach of an order made under the section, the validity of the order cannot be impeached."

Further on he said (p. 493) :

"In all charges before a Magistrate under s. 128 of the City of Bombay Police Act, (that is the section by which breaches of orders under s. 27 are made punishable), it is, in our judgment, incumbent upon the Magistrate to be satisfied, first, that the accused was informed by the Commissioner of the charge against him with sufficient particularity to enable him to answer the charge, and that he was given an opportunity of so answering; and, secondly, that there was material before the Commissioner of Police on which he could properly hold that the conditions of s. 27 had come into operation."

It is clear from these authorities and it is conceded that prior to the amendment of the Bombay City Police Act by Act XIV of 1938 the order of the Police Commissioner was not subject to revision by the High Court. It is contended, however, on behalf of the applicant here that the changes made by that amending Act have altered this position. It is necessary, therefore, to notice what these changes are. There is first of all an alteration in the language of s. 27(1)(a). Whereas the original provision dealt with the movements and designs of gangs or bodies of persons, the clause as amended provides that the movements or acts of any person may be regulated as provided in case it shall appear to the Commissioner that they are causing or calculated to cause alarm, danger or harm. Then there are a number of sub-sections which are newly enacted. Sub-s. (4) provides that before an order is made under the preceding part of the section the Commissioner shall inform the person concerned in writing of the general nature of the allegations against him and give him a reasonable opportunity of explaining those allegations.
 Provision is also made for the examination of witnesses offered by the person concerned and for his appearance before the Commissioner of Police. Subsection (5) provides that the Commissioner or other officer authorised in this behalf may exercise all or any of the powers of a Court under ss. 75 to 77

of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Those are the sections of the Code dealing with warrants of arrest. Sub-section (6) provides that any person aggrieved by an order made by the Commissioner of Police under the preceding part of the section may appeal to the Provincial Government within thirty days from the date of the order. Sub-section (7), which is the one on which the applicant mainly relies, is in these terms :

"An order passed by the Commissioner of Police under sub-section (1), (2) or (2A) or by the Provincial Government under sub-section (6) (i.e. in appeal) shall not be called in question in any Court except on the ground that the Commissioner of Police or the officer authorized by him under sub-section (4) had not followed the procedure laid down in the said sub-section or that there was no material before the Commissioner of Police upon which he could have based his order or on the ground that the Commissioner of Police was not of opinion that witnesses were unwilling to come forward to give evidence in the public against the person in respect of whom an order was made under sub-section (1)."

Sub-section (8) provides that notwithstanding the preceding provisions no police-officer shall be required to disclose either to the person against whom an order is made or to the Court the sources of his information.

It is conceded by the learned counsel on behalf of the applicant that if the High Court is competent to entertain this application it must be on the footing that a revision application lies under s. 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code by which the High Court has power to revise the proceedings of Courts subordinate to it. Dr. Ambedkar's argument is that the amendments to which I have drawn attention have the effect of constituting the Commissioner of Police a Court for the purposes of s. 27, so that when he makes an order under that section he is no longer merely an executive officer but a Court subordinate to the High Court whose proceedings are subject to revision. In support of that argument he mainly relies, as I have said, on the provisions of sub-s. (7). We are unable to agree, however, that this new sub-section has the effect for which he contends.

Before we come to sub-s. (7) it may be pointed out that sub-s. (4) in requiring that due notice of the nature of the allegations should be given to the person concerned and in providing that he should have a reasonable hearing is merely giving effect to the findings of the full bench case, Emperor v. Yarmahomed Ahmedkhan. Sub-section (5), in our opinion, is opposed to the argument that it was intended to make the Commissioner of Police a Judicial Officer or Court. If it was intended that he was to be a Court, it would have been superfluous to provide that he was to exercise all or any of the powers of a Court. The provision in sub-s. (6) for an appeal to Government is also we think difficult to reconcile with the view that the Commissioner's order was intended to be regarded as a judicial order of a Court.

Sub-section (7) is in a negative form. It does not on the face of it empower the High Court or any other Court to do anything but merely provides that the Commissioner's order or an order by the Provincial Government in appeal shall not be called in question in any Court except on certain grounds. The grounds stated are practically the same as those mentioned in the full bench judgment as matters to be considered by a Court when the validity of an executive order is called in question in a prosecution for breach of the order. Dr. Ambedkar says that if the position of the Commissioner and the

A. Cr. J. nature of the orders made by him were not intended to be changed, there was 1941 no reason to enact sub-s. (7), the provisions of which might have been left EMPEROR to be deduced from the full bench judgment. This argument, we think, is
 v. unconvincing. It by no means follows that the legislature intended to go ALLADATTA beyond the provisions of the full bench judgment because the effect of that judgment is included in the Act as amended.
 Broomfield J. In our opinion, so far as the point now before us is concerned, viz., the question whether an order of the Commissioner of Police under this section can be revised by the High Court, the position is precisely the same as it was before the amendment. We cannot accept the contention that the effect of these provisions is that the Commissioner is now a Court subordinate to the High Court. We think he remains as before an executive officer. His orders may be called in question as before in the circumstances referred to in Emperor v. Anna Vithoba and Emperor v. Yarmahomed Ahmedkhan. But no application for revision of his orders lies direct to the High Court. That being so, we have no jurisdiction to deal with the application on the merits and the rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

In suits under s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, it is for the Court to decide, as in any other suit, whether an amendment of the plaint is permissible, and the consent of the Advocate General or the Collector, as the case may be, is really evidence which has to be taken into consideration before deciding whether the amendment should be allowed. Amendments which do not substantially change the character of the suit or enlarge the scope of it may be made by the Court itself without the sanction of the Advocate General or the Collector. Amendments which enlarge the scope of the suit, for instance by allowing further reliefs, without substantially changing its character, may be made with the sanction of the Advocate General or the Collector, such sanction being evidence that the suit after amendment is to all intents and purposes the same suit and not a different one. Amendments which substan-

Vinayak and others (plaintiffs), who were residents of Mangur in the Chikodi Taluka of Belgaum District, claimed an interest in the Hindu temple of Shree Kalleshwar at Mangur. Bapugouda (defendant No. 4) claimed to be hereditary vahivatdar of the temple and all its properties. The plaintiffs made an application to the Collector of Belgaum praying that they should be allowed to file a suit against defendant No. 4 and others under s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

By a Government Resolution dated August 8, 1934, the Government of Bombay authorized the Collector to give sanction for the institution of a suit by the plaintiffs under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code.

On August 18, 1934, the Collector gave sanction to the plaintiffs for the institution of a suit to frame a scheme of management in respect of the temple.

On August 26, 1935, the plaintiffs filed the present suit against the defendants on the strength of the Collector's sanction. The reliefs claimed in the plaint were (1) a scheme of management, (2) appointment of new trustees, (3) order for vesting of the property and (4) such further reliefs as the nature of the case required.

Defendant No. 4 took objection to the plaint as it asked for further reliefs in addition to settling a scheme as sanctioned by the Collector.

On February 11, 1937, the plaintiffs made an application to the Collector and he gave sanction to the plaintiffs to claim further reliefs in the suit, viz. (1) removing the old trustees, (2) appointing new trustees, (3) vesting the property in the trustees, (4) directing accounts and inquiries, (5) declaring what proportion of the trust property shall be allocated to any particular object of the trust, and (6) granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

On July 29, 1937, the plaintiffs applied to the Court for permission to amend their plaint stating that they had regarded these further reliefs as being merely ancillary to the prayer for the framing of the scheme. The Court allowed the amendment holding that the additional reliefs sought were not inconsistent with the suit as originally instituted.

Defendant No. 4 contended inter alia that the sanction given by the Collector on February 11, 1937, was not legal and proper in view of the provisions of s. 92(2) of the Civil Procedure Code, as it should have been obtained before the institution of the suit; that he was the hereditary vahi-vatdar of the temple and all its properties, that he was carrying on the management according to the religious rules, and that there was no need for any directions of the Court.

The trial Judge held that the sanction obtained by the plaintiffs from the Collector was legal and proper. He framed a scheme of management of the temple, removed defendant No. 4 from the trusteeship of the temple, and restrained him from making vahivat of the temple and its property. In his judgment he observed as follows :—

“Defendants Nos. 4 to 9 urge that this sanction under exhibit 119 is not legal and proper in view of the express provisions of s. 92, para 2, Civil Procedure Code. They urge that this sanction, exhibit 119, should have been obtained before the institution of the suit and that such a sanction obtained after the institution of the suit is not legal and valid in law. In support of this proposition they rely on a number of rulings. They are : Abdul Rahim v. Mohammad Barkatalli, (55 Cal. 519, 524), 30 Bom. L. R. 774, 32 Bom. 435 and 446, A. I. R. 1931 Bom. 33 (Narsidas v. Ravishankar), 21 Bom. 257 (Sayad Hussien v. The Collector of Kaira), 30 Bom. 603 and 606 (Darves Haji v. Jainuddin) 26 All. 162 (Gopal Dei v. Kanno Dei) and Ghosh's Law of Endowment, edition 1932, page 308. Plaintiffs' pleader on the other hand relies on 36 Bom. 168, 171, paras 1 and 2 and 172 last para. (Abdul Rehman v. Cassum Ibrahim), 30 Mad. 138 (Prayag Doss v. Tirumala).

It is true that when the plaint was filed the sanction of the Collector, exhibit 42, did not mention the reliefs in clauses 2 to 4 of para 20 of the plaint. The sanction in regard to these reliefs has been granted by the Collector on February 11, 1937 (vide exhibit 119). After this sanction, exhibit 119, plaintiffs have applied for the amendment of the plaint praying that the reliefs claimed therein be embodied in the plaint. In my opinion this sanction, exhibit 119, is perfectly legal, proper and valid. The rulings relied on by defendants Nos. 4 to 8 in support of their proposition can be easily distinguished and they cannot apply to the facts of the present case. As the defendants' pleader hotly contests this point, I deem it necessary to discuss each ruling quoted by them.

The case in 55 Cal. related to a Wakf's case; parties were impleaded in that suit later on and certain reliefs were claimed against this added parties without the sanction of the Advocate General. In the present case, sanction has been obtained before the amendment application, exhibit 109, was presented to the Court. This ruling cannot therefore apply to the present case. The next ruling is 30 Bom. In this case one plaintiff only had brought the suit. An amendment for an addition of another plaintiff was sought. This was not allowed. Originally this suit in 30 Bom. was defective ab initio. It was, therefore, rightly held that amendment could not be granted as the suit was defective in its inception. Such is not the case in the present case. The third ruling is 26 All. 162. In this case, sanction was given in the name of one person by name and another. It was held that sanction should have been given in the name of definite persons. The sanction in this case also was illegal in its inception. Such is not the case in the present suit. The sanction is perfectly valid as it has been given prior to the amendment of the plaint. The next ruling is 21 Bom. 257. In this case also new defendants were added and subsequent reliefs claimed were without sanction. It was therefore rightly held that the suit was not maintainable. This ruling also does not and cannot apply to the facts of the present case. The last ruling is 32 Bom. L. R. 435. In this case, the plaintiffs were pujaris claiming reliefs against the persons in possession of the trust property. There was no sanction by the Advocate General. Relief was for possession and accounts. So far as possession was concerned sanction was not necessary. For accounts sanction was necessary. This had not been obtained and the Court held that the suit was not tenable without such sanction.

I now discuss the rulings relied on by plaintiffs. In my opinion, 36 Bom. 168, relied on by the plaintiffs, applies to the present case. In this ruling one defendant was impleaded later on and three more prayers were sought by an amendment. The High Court held that this could not be granted without the express sanction of the Advocate General. On page 171, para. 3 of this ruling, it is remarked that 'It is quite clear that previous sanction of the Attorney General is necessary before an amendment could be made in an action instituted by relators in respect of public charitable properties.' Again on page 172, para. 4, it is remarked as follows: 'If it is a condition precedent to the institution of the suit, it is quite clear that it is equally a condition precedent to the amendment of the plaint, more especially if by the amendment other party or parties are added to the suit and other reliefs are claimed against such added parties.' This ruling clearly lays down that all that is necessary, for the granting of an amendment of the plaint after the suit is filed under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, is that a sanction should have been obtained previously. This is exactly what has happened in the present case. Prior to the amendment application, exhibit 109, plaintiffs have obtained a sanction, exhibit 119. If this is so, then the amendment has been rightly granted and I do not think that it is open to defendants Nos. 4 to 8 to urge that this sanction is not valid and proper. The next ruling relied on by plaintiffs is 30 Mad. 138. This is no doubt a ruling of the Privy Council, but prior to the addition of para 2 to s. 92, Civil Procedure Code. It is true that in this ruling an amendment was sought and was allowed. But as the case is prior to the addition of para 2 to s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, I do not think that this ruling will help plaintiffs much. I am supported in this finding by the remarks of A. Ghosh in his book, the Law of Endowment, 1932 edition, pages 548-49. I deem it necessary to quote his remarks verbatim: 'According to the English practice previous sanction of the Attorney General is necessary before an amendment could be made in an action instituted by relators in respect of public charitable properties. Attorney-General v. Fellows, the Lord Chancellor said that an amendment could not be permitted without the sanction of the Attorney General. If it were, the whole information, except the introduction, might be changed. The Indian authorities seem to point the same way.' Later on, the ruling in 36 Bom. is also quoted on this very page by A. Ghosh. If the argument of the learned pleader for defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were to be accepted then it follows that no amendment of a plaint can ever be allowed in a suit under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code. I do not think that this was the intention of the Legislature when incorporating para 2 to s. 92, Civil Procedure Code. On a review of all these rulings, I am of opinion that the sanction obtained by plaintiffs from the Collector under exhibit 119 is quite legal and proper."

SADASHIV

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Purshottam Tricunddas, with B. Moropantih, for the appellants.

G. N. Thakor, with S. G. Chitale, for the respondents.

A. C. J. BROOMFIELD J. This is a suit under s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code 1940 relating to a Hindu temple of Shree Kalleshwar at Mangur in the Chikodi taluka. The plaintiffs are residents of Mangur claiming an interest in the institution. In the plaint they have given an account of what they say is the history of the temple and the circumstances leading to the suit. There are three fields which form the endowment. The management of the property at first belonged to the village officers and in 1883, after an official inquiry, a committee of management was formed consisting of the officiating patil and kulkarni and three other residents of the village. This committee functioned till 1893. After 1893 a member of the Kulkarni family, who was not officiating, acted as manager, and in 1899, when Yadagouda, father of defendant No. 4, ceased to be officiating revenue patil and his son defendant
 No. 4 was appointed as deputy, he still continued to be a manager of the institution. The panchas who were appointed along with the village officers died in course of time and after 1918 Yadagouda Patil and Sadashiv Kulkarni were the only trustees in management. After the death of Yada-gouda in 1928 the plaintiffs allege that Sadashiv, who incidentally was the father of plaintiff No. 1 and defendant No. 10, was in sole charge of the management.

The plaint further alleges that in June, 1930, there was a public meeting in the village at which five persons, viz. defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, one Annagonda Devgonda Patil and one Ramchandra Pandurang Kulkarni deceased were elected vahivatdars. Two of the fields belonging to the temple, survey Nos. 90 and 91, were leased to Sattu Appa, defendant No. 9, in 1926.
 His lease expired on March 31, 1931, and the plaintiffs allege that the lands were then put to auction and leased to new tenants by the five vahivatdars appointed in 1930. Defendant No. 4 and his brother defendant No. 5, and another brother, who was not among the defendants, claimed a right to manage the temple exclusively and took a lease of the fields in their own names. That led to disputes which according to the plaintiffs have endangered the proper administration of the trust. Defendant No. 9 having got a new lease in his favour brought a suit in 1931 which lasted for several years. In the course of it a receiver was appointed who took possession of the two fields. In March, 1935, the suit was withdrawn. Plaintiffs allege that because of the patil family, i.e. the family of defendant No. 4, having put forward a false claim to the property of the temple there has been a complete breach of the fulfilment of the purposes of the trust. The management of the God's affairs and the property of the deity has been endangered and it cannot be definitely stated who is responsible for the management.
 That being so, it is necessary that the direction of the Court should be obtained for the administration of the trust by appointment of new trustees and vesting of the property in them. It is stated that defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 who claim the right of management are Jains and are therefore wholly incompetent to be vahivatdars of a Hindu temple. The plaint recites that defendants Nos. 1 to 7 and 10 claim a right to management of the suit property and that defendants Nos. 8, 9 and 11 claim to be in possession of the suit lands as tenants. It may be mentioned that defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 10 are related to some of the plaintiffs. The reliefs claimed in the plaint are (1) a scheme of management, (2) appointment of new trustees, (3) order for vesting of the property, (4) such further reliefs as the nature of the case may require.

v.

Defendant No. 4 is the principal defendant. In his written statement he claims to be hereditary vahivatdar of the temple and all its properties. He does not say in so many words in his written statement that he is the sole vahivatdar, but, as he says in the course of the statement that no persons have a right to share in the management except those appointed by his ancestors or himself, it is clear that he was putting forward an exclusive claim to be the sole vahivatdar and that position was made perfectly clear by the evidence given on his behalf by his brother, defendant No. 5. Defendant No. 4 himself did not give evidence. According to the written statement from the time of his great-great-grandfather the management of the temple has been with his family and he became hereditary vahivatdar on the death of his father in 1928. He says that he has been carrying on the management according to the religious rules and that there is no need for any directions of the Court. He denies that the villagers ever had any hand in the management. He says there was no committee in 1883 and also no appointment of vahivatdars in June, 1930. The police patil, he alleges, has nothing to do with the management. Plaintiffs and those defendants who are related to them and the police patil have made common cause against him to deprive him of his hereditary right and of possession of the temple lands.

Exhibit 146 is a Government Resolution giving sanction to the Collector of Belgaum to exercise in respect of the institution of the suit by Vinayak Sadashiv Kulkarni and others relating to the Devasthan property belonging to Shri Kalleshwar Deo at Mangur the powers conferred by s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code on the Advocate General. The authority was given with special reference to this suit in consequence of the decision of the Privy Council in Prem Narain v. Ram Charan,<sup>1</sup> that it is not sufficient to empower an officer generally to exercise the powers of the Advocate General but Government must give previous sanction in the case of the particular suit. Exhibit 42 is the Collector's sanction. He gave sanction to six named persons, i.e. the present plaintiffs, for the institution of a suit to obtain a decree, settling a scheme of management in respect of the institution in question. As I have mentioned, the plaint asked for further reliefs in addition to settling a scheme and objection was taken to this on the part of defendant No. 4. An application was then made to the Collector, and by exhibit 119 he gave sanction to the plaintiffs to claim further reliefs in the suit, viz. (1) removing the old trustees, (2) appointing new trustees, (3) vesting the property in the trustees, (4) directing accounts and inquiries, (5) declaring what proportion of the trust property shall be allocated to any particular object of the trust and (6) granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require. The plaintiffs then applied to the Court for permission to amend their plaint. The application is exhibit 109 and it begins by saying that the plaintiffs had regarded these further reliefs as being merely ancillary to the prayer for the framing of a scheme. But in view of the objection taken by the defendants they had applied to the Collector for sanction to remove a technical defect. The Court allowed the amendment holding that the additional reliefs sought were not inconsistent with the suit as originally instituted. Issues were framed. The learned Judge overruled technical objections to the maintainability of the suit and held that the directions of the Court were necessary for the administration of the trust. He also held that defendant No. 4 had failed to prove his claim to be the sole hereditary vahivatdar and he drew up a scheme of management which is set out in detail in paragraph 18 of the judgment. According to this there are to be two ex officio trustees and three persons to be elected from amongst Hindu devotees of the temple. The officiating trustees are to be either the police or revenue patil and the kulkarni. The patils are to hold office for three years alternately, the first to officiate being the police patil. So that, although defendant No. 4 has not been held to be incompetent, he has been placed on the same footing as the police patil and has been omitted from the managing committee for the first period of three years.

Against the lower Court's decree, defendants Nos. 4 to 9 have appealed. Learned counsel on their behalf has raised certain technical objections to the maintainability of the suit similar to those, though not precisely the same as those, which were urged in the lower Court. The first point is that as this is a representative suit the Court ought to have taken action under Order I, r. 8, and issued notices as provided in that rule. No authority has been cited in support of this argument, and it is conceded that it never has been the practice to apply O. I, r. 8, to suits under s. 92 either on the Original Side of the High Court or in the mofussil. The only case cited in this connection is Musammāt Ali Begam v. Badr-ul-Islam Ali Khan.<sup>1</sup> The only point which their Lordships had to decide in that case was whether where sanction has been given to five plaintiffs to bring a suit under s. 92 an appeal by four of these plaintiffs with the fifth plaintiff as a respondent is competent. In connection with that narrow point their Lordships made some general observations, viz. that a suit must conform to the consent, that there is no provision in the Code for recourse being had to the Advocate General or the Collector during the course of the suit and that when once a suit is validly instituted it is a representative suit subject to all the incidents affecting suits in general and representative suits in particular. In our opinion it cannot be deduced from these observations that the procedure laid down in O. I, r. 8, must be followed in suits under s. 92. No such point was in the minds of their Lordships.

Mr. Purshottam's next point was that the amendment of the plaint by asking for further reliefs was illegal. His argument goes so far as to say that in a suit under s. 92 no amendment of the plaint can ever be made. In the present case at any rate he contends that the Court had no power to allow the amendment. The sanction of the Collector made no difference because there was no sanction of Government in that behalf. The only relief which can be granted in the present suit according to this argument is the framing of a scheme, because even the original plaint went beyond the terms of the Collector's sanction. It is difficult to reconcile this reasoning with some of the observations of their Lordships in Musammam Ali Begam v. Badr-ul-Islam to which I have just referred, for, if a suit under s. 92 once validly instituted is subject to all the incidents affecting suits in general, one of such incidents undoubtedly would be the amendment of the plaint when circumstances justify it. Darves Haji Mahamad v. Jainudin<sup>1</sup> was cited. In that case a suit under s. 92 had been brought by a single plaintiff. It was amended by adding a second plaintiff. It was held that the suit was bad at its institution and the amendment did not better it. The reason was of course that there never was in that case a suit instituted by two persons as required by s. 92. The case is no authority for holding that an amendment of the plaint can never be allowed. Gopal Dei v. Kanno Dei<sup>2</sup> is a similar case. Sanction had been given not to two specified persons but to "A and another" and this defect was remedied at a late stage of the proceedings. It was held that the authority must be given specifically to two persons and that it cannot be given after the institution of the suit.

Abdul Rehman v. Cassum Ebrahim<sup>3</sup> was a case on the Original Side of this High Court tried by Mr. Justice Davar. In that case two of the defendants were struck off and a new one was added and by an amendment of the plaint reliefs were sought against the added defendant. Mr. Justice Davar held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain the suit against the added defendant because no sanction of the Advocate General had been obtained before he was made a defendant and before the amendment of the plaint. This case is an authority for the view that amendments may be permitted with the sanction of the Advocate General as in England. In Sayad Hussein Miyan v. Collector of Kaira<sup>4</sup> the Court said that a suit under s. 92 must be limited to matters included in the sanction and it is not competent to the Court to enlarge the scope of the suit and grant reliefs other than those included in the sanction. The facts of the case were peculiar. Some new defendants were joined at the request of one of the original defendants and reliefs were granted against them. The amendments were allowed by the Court without the sanction of the Collector who was the plaintiff in the suit. The Court took the view that the procedure was illegal and that the Court had no power to grant the reliefs against the added defendants. That was because the learned Judges were of opinion that the amendments had substantially changed the character of the suit. Mr. Justice Jardine said (p. 262): "The suit actually determined is not the same as that for which sanction was accorded." Mr. Justice Ranade observed that there must be close correspondence between the suit instituted and the suit sanctioned. The judgments of both the learned Judges suggest that if the amendments had been sanctioned by the Collector they would have felt no difficulty about the case.

We were also referred to two Madras decisions. In Srinivasa v. Venkata,<sup>5</sup> which was a suit under the Religious Endowments Act, the claim for one of the reliefs, viz. damages, was dropped and the Court held that this altered the character of the suit and therefore the plaint had been rightly rejected. It was considered that on the facts of the case the dropping of that particular relief gave the suit a different character. This case, however, is no authority for the view that a suit under s. 92 must always be strictly limited to the reliefs for which sanction has been expressly given. In Pitchayya v. Venkatakrishnamachari<sup>1</sup> the Court held that where sanction has been given to file a scheme suit "no relief can be given in respect of any other matter, e.g. removal of the trustee or the appointment of new trustees." No reasons were given, however. The judgment merely refers to Srinivasa v. Venkata which certainly does not lay down any such general proposition. We were told that the decisions of the Madras High Court on this point have not been uniform, and apart from that, Pitchayya v. Venkatakrishnamachari is difficult to reconcile with the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Anand Rao v. Ramdas Daduram<sup>2</sup>. There permission had been given to institute a suit under s. 539. The application for permission had asked simply for the appointment of new trustees. The plaint prayed for the removal of a trustee and the settlement of a scheme and the Court removed the trustee and said that it would proceed to settle a scheme. On appeal the right of the trustees to take part in the management was upheld but the judgment of the first Court was otherwise confirmed. Their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed the judgment of the High Court and observed as follows in their judgment (p. 15):—

"The first point that is pleaded is that the permission to institute a suit under s. 539 does not square with the application, which was an application conceived merely for the appointment of new trustees, but it really had to be conceded, and their Lordships think it quite clear that, although the application as framed may have been for the appointment of new trustees, yet when they came before the Deputy Commissioner and explained the matter it was quite within his power to grant the sanction as he has granted it."

"The next point that is put is that when the sanction says: 'I grant them permission to institute a suit under section 539,' that does not mean any suit which may be raised under section 539, but is confined merely to one of the species of suits that could be so raised—namely, the appointment of new trustees. Their Lordships do not think that any such narrow reading can be put upon the sanction as given."

We think it is impossible to accept the proposition that no amendment of the plaint is ever permissible in suits under s. 92. If that were so, it would lead to very inconvenient results. There is clear authority in Abdul Rehman v. Cassum Ebrahim,<sup>3</sup> that amendments may be made with the sanction of the Advocate General. We see no reason why the Collector should be regarded as being in a different position. It is quite true, as Mr. Purshottam pointed out, that the Collector under the Government Resolution is only given the powers of the Advocate General in respect of the institution of the suit. But that was the only power which it was necessary to give him and the Advocate General's only power expressly given by s. 92 is to institute or consent to the institution of a suit. As their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out in Musammal Ali Begam v. Badr-ul-Islam, the Code does not provide for recourse to the Advocate General or the Collector after the suit has been instituted. Mr. Purshottam's suggestion that there should have been another Government Resolution sanctioning the amendment of the plaint is not supported by anything in the Code. It does not follow, however, from the lack of statutory provision that the Advocate General or the Collector may not take any further part in the suit.

We think the true position is that it is for the Court to decide in suits under s. 92 as in any other suit whether an amendment is permissible, and the consent of the Advocate General or the Collector as the case may be is really evidence which has to be taken into consideration before deciding whether the amendment should be allowed. We can see no reason why amendments which do not substantially change the character of the suit or enlarge the scope of it should not be made by the Court itself without sanction. Amendments which enlarge the scope of the suit, for instance by allowing further reliefs, without substantially changing its character, may be made with the sanction of the Advocate General or the Collector, that sanction, as I say, being evidence that the suit after amendment is to all intents and purposes the same suit and not a different one. Amendments substantially changing the character of the suit would we think not be permissible even with sanction. In such a case it could hardly be said that the suit in its amended form was ever validly instituted. No such point as this, however, arises in the present case. In the application which the plaintiffs submitted to the Collector asking for sanction they set out their case pretty much in the same form as in the plaint. The only relief which they mentioned there was the necessity for framing a scheme of management. But in the course of their application, as in the plaint, they had referred to the conduct of defendant No. 4. They had described him and his brothers as being incompetent to become vahivat-dars and they had therefore brought it to the Collector's notice that in framing a scheme of management the appointment of new trustees would have to be considered. Framing a scheme for the management of an institution of this kind may or may not involve the appointment of new trustees or the removal of existing trustees. Mr. Purshottam conceded that the appointment of new trustees at any rate may be involved in the framing of a scheme. It would obviously be purposeless to draw up a scheme of management without arranging for the appointment of trustees in the present case because there would be no one to put the scheme into operation.

The principal argument on behalf of the appellants in this appeal has been that defendant No. 4 is entitled to a place among the trustees to be appointed under the new scheme and that no sufficient grounds have been shown for removing him. As on this point we are in agreement with him, the technical points which have been argued have not great importance, but we may say that if we had come to the conclusion that the character or conduct of defendant No. 4 rendered it inexpedient that he should be a member of the Managing Committee, we should have felt no difficulty on legal grounds in agreeing with the trial Court.

That being so, the only matter to be considered is whether it is necessary

 YADGOUDA
 v.
 VINAYAK

to remove defendant No. 4 or to omit him from the committee of management. The plaint was a little vague in this connection and the only specific ground indicated there for the removal of defendant No. 4 was that he is a Jain and therefore incompetent to be a vahivatdar. But as the evidence shows that the family of defendant No. 4 has been associated with this institution ever since we have any record of its history, the argument that he is in any way disqualified by his religion has very little force. The evidence shows that there are a considerable number of Jains in the village, about as many Jains as Hindus, and in the past a number of Jains have been appointed as panchas. Other reasons for removing defendant No. 4 suggested in the judgment are that he has put forward an unwarranted claim to the right of exclusive management, that no religious ceremonies are now being performed, that he has not kept accounts and that he gave a remission of rent to defendant No. 9 without sufficient cause. We have examined the evidence on these points such as it is and we do not consider that there is anything in them. It has been held in a number of cases, e.g. Annaji v. Narayan<sup>1</sup>, and Damodar v. Bhat Bhogilol<sup>2</sup>, that claims such as defendant No. 4 has been putting forward in the present case do not necessarily call for the penalty of exclusion from the management. The learned Judge is no doubt right in saying that proof of breach of trust or mismanagement is not essential. The Court has a wide discretion under s. 92 to take such action as it thinks necessary or desirable for the good of the charity : Mahomed Ismail Ariff v. Ahmed Moolla Dawood,<sup>3</sup> and Mohammedally v. Akberalli.<sup>4</sup>

But when a family has been connected with an institution as long as that of this defendant, there ought to be some strong reason for depriving him of his privilege. Mr. Thakor has pointed out that for three years out of this long period Yadagouda the father of defendant No. 4 did not for some reason take part in the management. That does not affect the fact that since pre-British times this family, the family of the revenue patil, has been associated with the institution and furnished one of its trustees. We do not say that this long connection with the institution gives defendant No. 4 a legal right to share in the management. But he has a claim to share in the management which is certainly superior to that of anybody else except the kulkarni and previous association is undoubtedly one of the matters which the Court normally takes into consideration in deciding who the managers of an institution should be. Although the learned Judge does say in one passage in his judgment that defendant No. 4 is "greatly instrumental or responsible for the present state of affairs," he has nowhere stated that it was necessary to deprive him of any share in the management. The matters he has discussed in that connection merely lead him to the finding that he should not be entrusted with the sole management in the scheme to be framed by the Court. As for the present impasse we think that both parties are partly to blame and that defendant No. 4 is by no means solely responsible. It does not appear that the police patil or anyone in the family of the police patil has ever had anything particular to do with the management of the temple. We see no reason therefore why the police patil should be put on a level with the revenue patil in the scheme which has been framed. *

We propose therefore to modify the scheme framed by the learned First Class Sub-Judge by deleting the references to the police patil. The officiating members of the board of management will therefore be the officiating revenue patil and the officiating kulkarni or the talati. There is one other modification which we think it desirable to make, and we may say we do this with the concurrence of learned counsel on both sides. The scheme at present provides that the three members of the board other than the ex officio members shall be elected from amongst the Hindu devotees of the temple at a public meeting of the Hindu devotees. In view of the fact that there are so many Jains in this village and in view of the association of Jains with this institution in the past, we see no reason why Jains should be prohibited from becoming members of the board of management if elected by the devotees. The scheme will therefore provide that the trustees are to be appointed by the Hindu devotees but that both Hindus and Jains are eligible for election. In other respects we confirm the scheme framed by the lower Court. The order removing defendant No. 4 from the trusteeship is set aside. The first election of the three non-officiating members of the board of management should take place within a month of the receipt of the record of this case by the lower Court. The board should begin to function within a week from the election of the chairman of the board of management.

Defendant No. 4 took up an extreme position in the trial Court which he maintained in his memorandum of appeal. Had he been more accommodat- ing there might have been no need for litigation. At any rate it would not have been so long drawn out. Under the circumstances we think the proper order to make as to costs will be that defendants Nos. 4 to 9 do pay half the costs of the plaintiffs in the suit and do recover half the costs of the appeal from the respondents.

SCHEME RELATING TO THE KALLESHWAR TEMPLE AT MANGUR VILLAGE, CHIKODI TALUKA, AS MODIFIED BY THE HIGH COURT IN FIRST APPEAL NO. 179 OF 1939.

1. The Court directs that the management (in respect of the property belonging to the Kalleshwar Temple) shall be in the hands of at least five persons (trustees); two of whom shall be ex-officio members of the board or the committee.
2. The officiating revenue patil and the officiating kulkarni or the talathi will be the ex-officio members of the board of trustees.
3. The other three persons shall be elected from among the Hindu devotees of the temple.
4. The trustees are to be appointed by the Hindu devotees.
5. Both Hindus and Jains will be eligible for election.
6. For the purpose of election, the officiating revenue patil and the kulkarni shall convene a public meeting of the Hindu devotees of this temple after due advertisement of the date, say, at least a week before the meeting.
7. The revenue patil and kulkarni now officiating shall first take the initiative in this matter of forming the board of management.

A. C. J. 8. After these three persons are elected, these three elected people and 1940 the two village officers shall form a board of management.

— 9. The chairman of this board shall be elected by the five members constituting BAPUGOUDA the board, by a vote of majority.

YADGOUDA 10. A fresh election shall take place every three years.

v. 11. The first election of the three non-officiating members of the board of VINAYAK management should take place within a month from the receipt of the record of SADASHIV the case by the lower Court. The chairman shall be elected within a week after these elections are over, so that the board should begin to function within a week Broomfield J. from the election of the chairman of the board of management.

— 12. The chairman of this committee shall be the treasurer of the funds of the deity.

13. This board shall be in existence for a period of three years.

14. All matters relating to this temple on which the board is not unanimous are to be decided by a majority of votes. The chairman elected shall have a casting vote.

15. As soon as the board begins to function, a budget shall be prepared giving the income and expenditure of the temple property. The budget shall make provision for the performances of all the religious ceremonies, that were being done till this litigation began. If any surplus amount remains at the end of the year, the chairman shall deposit it in a safe bank likely to carry some interest.

16. No immoveable property of the temple shall be given on lease for more than three years. No property of the deity whether moveable or immoveable shall be sold by this board without the sanction of this Court.

17. Accounts of the income and expenditure shall be regularly kept by the chairman and they shall be available for inspection by any Hindu devotee of the temple.

18. A record of the proceedings of all meetings held prior to the election as well as after the election should be kept.

19. The chairman of this board shall submit to the Court, before the 1st April each year, a statement of account of the previous year as well as the budget for the next year sanctioned by the board.

20. Liberty is given to the board and any Hindu devotee of the temple to apply to this Court for any modification of this scheme that may appear to be necessary or convenient in the light of the experience gained.

21. If the chairman of this board finds that it is necessary for him to incur expenditure on any head of the budget substantially in excess of the amount proposed in the draft budget, or if he finds that it is necessary to depart materially from any of the directions decided by the board, he shall, if the time available allows it, call a meeting of the board and lay his proposals before them. If there

Order XXII, r. 10, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, applies to execution proceedings. An order made under that rule is appealable under the provisions of O. XLIII, r. 1, sub-cl. #### APPLICATION in execution.

The property in suit originally belonged to one Narayan Ramji of Kopergaon. On April 15, 1916, he mortgaged the property to the father of Krishnaji (applicant). On June 7, 1917, he again mortgaged the property to one Bhikchand (opponent).

On August 17, 1922, Bhikchand obtained a mortgage decree and on March 3, 1931, he purchased the mortgaged property in execution proceedings of his own decree. The sale was confirmed on May 25, 1931. In the meantime the Court of Wards, as the applicant was then a minor, brought suit No. 136 of 1923 against Narayan and obtained a decree upon the prior mortgage of 1916 on August 4, 1923. Bhikchand was not joined as a party to this suit.

The Court of Wards filed darkhasts in 1927 and 1930, but these were not prosecuted. The Court of Wards filed the present darkhast (No. 360 of 1931) on March 21, 1931. On April 5, 1931, the Court of Wards applied to add Bhikchand as a party to the darkhast.

The trial Judge dismissed the application holding that O. XXII, r. 10, and s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, did not apply to an auction-purchaser in execution proceedings. In his judgment he observed.—

 KRISHNAJI RAM-CHANDRA v. BHIKCHAND RAMKARAN

"The words 'during the pendency of a suit,' [in O. XXII, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code] read together with the marginal note, make it clear that the provisions of the rule apply only 'before a final decree or order has been made in the suit. It follows, therefore, that they will not apply after the termination of the suit, for instance, to execution proceedings."

On appeal the order of the trial Court was confirmed and the appeal was dismissed.

The applicant appealed to the High Court.

J. G. Rele, for the appellant.

K. N. Dharap, for the respondent.

N. J. WADIA J. This appeal arises out of an application made by the appellant in execution proceedings which had been started by him to execute a mortgage decree obtained by him in suit No. 136 of 1923. The property involved in the suit had been mortgaged to the appellant-plaintiff by one Narayan Ramji on April 15, 1916. Subsequent to this the same property was mortgaged by Narayan to the respondent Bhikchand Ramkaran Marwadi on June 7, 1917. In 1921 Bhikchand filed a suit on his mortgage and obtained a mortgage decree on August 17, 1922, and in the course of the execution proceedings on that decree he himself purchased the property on March 3, 1931, the sale being confirmed on May 25, 1931. In the meanwhile the plaintiff filed his suit, No. 136 of 1923, and obtained a decree on August 4, 1923. To this suit Bhikchand had not been joined as a party. The plaintiff filed darkhasts in 1927 and 1930, but these were not prosecuted. Finally darkhast No. 360 of 1931, from which this appeal arises, was filed by him on March 21, 1931, prior to the confirmation of the sale of the property, to Bhikchand. On April 5, 1933, the Court of Wards on behalf of the plaintiff applied in darkhast No. 450 of 1931 to add Bhikchand as a party. The learned trial Judge rejected the application holding that it could not be made under O. XXII, r. 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, upon which the applicant relied, because in his view that rule did not apply to execution proceedings. He also held that Bhikchand being a purchaser at a Court sale was not the legal representative of the judgment-debtor. Against this order there was an appeal to the District Judge of Ahmednagar who dismissed it, and the applicant has come in second appeal.

A preliminary objection has been raised by Mr. Dharap for the respondent that no second appeal lies. His contention is that the appellant's application to add Bhikchand as a party to the darkhast is an application under O. XXII, r. 10, and against an order made under that rule an appeal lies under the provisions of O. XLIII, r. 1, sub-cl. (1), and under the provisions of s. 104, cl. (2), of the Code of Civil Procedure, no second appeal lies from any order passed in appeal under O. XLIII, r. 1. The question therefore is whether the provisions of O. XXII, r. 10, applied to the present application which was one made in the course of execution proceedings. For the appellant it is contended that O. XXII, r. 10, does not apply to execution proceedings. In support of that contention reliance is placed on the language of the rule itself which is as follows :

"In other cases of an assignment, creation or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit, the suit may, by leave of the Court, be continued by or against the person to or upon whom such interest has come or devolved."

N. J. Wadia J.

The marginal note to the rule shows that it deals with the "Procedure in case of assignment before final order in suit." It is argued that the words "during the pendency of a suit" clearly indicate that the rule could not apply to execution proceedings after a decree has been passed. The question whether the provisions of this rule apply to execution proceedings is one not free from doubt and there have been conflicting rulings of the different High Courts on the point. Our attention has not been drawn to any decision of our own High Court on this question. Rule 12 of O. XXII, says that "nothing in rules 3, 4 and 8 shall apply to proceedings in execution of a decree or order." It would seem to follow from this express reference to rr. 3, 4 and 8, that the remaining rules of this Order including r. 10 would apply to proceedings in execution. Sir Dinshah Mulla in his Commentary on the Code, 10th edn., page 850, says that the provisions of O. XXII apply to execution proceedings except rr. 3, 4 and 8. The fact that the rule refers to "an assignment, creation or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit" would not necessarily mean that it could not apply to execution proceedings. Applications in execution are proceedings in the suit as was held in Virupakshappa v. Shidappa and Basappa<sup>1</sup> and in that sense the assignment, creation or devolution of any interest during the pendency of execution proceedings could be said to be during the pendency of the suit. The question whether O. XXII, r. 10, applies to execution proceedings was considered by a full bench of the Madras High Court in Muthiah Chettiar v. Govinddoss Krishnadoss<sup>2</sup> and the view taken by the majority of the full bench was that it did apply. Wallis C. J. in dealing with the contention that O. XXII, r. 10, did not apply to execution proceedings said (p. 923) :

"Generally, an application for execution is a proceeding in a suit, as held in Virupakshappa v. Shidappa and Basappa<sup>1</sup> and Shaik Davud Rowther v. Paramasami Pillai<sup>3</sup> and I think that the present Code has been drafted on this basis. It expressly provides by Order XXII, rule 12, that nothing in rules 3, 4 and 8 of that Order, which provide for abatements, shall apply to execution, and in Order XXIII, rule 4, that nothing in that Order shall apply to execution, while it contains no such provision in Order XXXIII, as to minors or persons of unsound mind which must none the less be equally applicable to execution.

"A further objection has been taken that an application in execution cannot be an application 'during the pendency of a suit', within the meaning of Order XXII, rule 10, but, if for the purposes of the Order applications in execution are applications in suits, they must in my opinion equally for the purposes of the Order be applications during the pendency of suit."

The decision in Muthiah Chettiar v. Govinddoss Krishnadoss however was not rested upon this conclusion. In a subsequent decision of the Madras High Court in Srinivasa v. Pratapa Simha<sup>4</sup> a division bench of the Madras High Court held that O. XXII, r. 10, applied only to pending suits. In Mayankutti v. Biyyathumma<sup>5</sup>, which was a decision of a single Judge, the question again arose whether O. XXII, r. 10, applied to proceedings subsequent to a decree, and it was held following the decision in Srinivasa v. Pratapa Simha that O. XXII, r. 10, would not apply to post-decree proceedings. The decision of the full bench in Muthiah Chettiar's case was referred to but was not followed on the ground that the decision of the case rested on other grounds and not on the view that O. XXII, r. 10, applied to execution proceedings. In Midnapore Zamindari Co. Ltd. v. Naresh Narain Roy<sup>1</sup> a division bench of the Calcutta High Court also expressed the opinion that the provisions of O. XXII, r. 12, would seem to imply, by the principle of exclusion, that all the rules of that Order, except rr. 3, 4 and 8, are applicable to proceedings in execution of a decree or order, and that r. 10 was therefore so applicable. But this was a mere expression of opinion, the actual decision being based on the view that the proceedings in that case, which were proceedings for assessment of mesne profits after a decree had been obtained in a suit for the recovery of possession of immoveable property were proceedings in continuation of the original suit, and the case was therefore treated as a case of devolution of interest by sale during the pendency of the litigation.

I am with respect of opinion that the view expressed by the majority of the full bench in Muthiah Chettiar v. Govindoss Krishnadoss and by the Calcutta High Court in Midnapore Zamindari Co. Ltd. v. Naresh Narain Roy that O. XXII, r. 10, applies to execution proceedings, is correct. It is difficult to reconcile the opposite view with the provisions of r. 12 of the Order. If the Legislature had intended that r. 10 should not apply to execution proceedings, that rule would have been mentioned in r. 12 along with rr. 3, 4 and 8. It was argued that the language of r. 10 itself precluded its application to execution proceedings since it referred to suits. But there is a similar reference to suits in rr. 1, 2, 7 and 9 of the Order and it is not contended that these rules also do not apply to execution proceedings. The appellant's application must therefore be treated as an application made under O. XXII, r. 10, and that being so, no second appeal lies. The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

We have been asked to treat this appeal as a revision application. But as the power to add the name of any person upon whom any interest has devolved as a party to the proceedings is one within the discretion of the Court, we see no reason to allow the application to be argued as an application in revision.

WASSOODEW J. I agree in holding that O. XXII, r. 10, of the Civil Procedure Code, applies to execution proceedings. In terms that rule lays down the procedure in cases of assignment, creation or devolution of any interest "during the pendency of a suit." That expression has given rise to a conflict of opinion among the different High Courts: see Goodall v. The Mussoorie Bank, Limited<sup>2</sup>, Midnapore Zamindari Co. Ltd. v. Naresh Narain Roy<sup>3</sup>, Musammatt Gulab Kuer v. Syed Mohamed Zaffar Hassan Khan<sup>4</sup> and Muthiah Chettiar v. Govindoss Krishnadoss.<sup>5</sup> It is contended that the expression "during the pendency of a suit" in r. 10 implies the interval between the filing of the plaint and the passing of the final decree, and that therefore the Legislature contemplated that the rule would apply to an application made before the decree or final order in the suit. There is no reported decision of this Court on the application of that rule. It has been held in a series of decisions of this Court and other Courts,—see Virupakshappa v. Shidappa and Basappa<sup>1</sup> and Shaik Dawud Rowther v. Paramasami Pillai<sup>2</sup>—that an application in execution is a proceeding in a suit, or, in other words, execution is a continuation of the suit. If that view is correct, an application in execution would necessarily be an application "during the pendency of the suit." It has been urged that the contrary view is supported by the marginal note to the rule which says that it relates to the "procedure in case of assignment before final order in suit." But the marginal note cannot be used to limit the construction of the provisions of the statute and it does not form part of it. The other provisions of O. XXII show, as my learned brother has pointed out, that the Legislature drafted those provisions on the basis that the execution was a continuation of the suit. Rule 1 of O. XXII as regards abatement necessarily applies to execution proceedings, and it has not been suggested that it does not. Wherever the application of the rules as to abatement to execution proceedings was considered objectionable, the Legislature has said so. That affords an explanation for the existence of r. 12 of O. XXII which excludes the operation of rr. 3, 4 and 8 of O. XXII to execution proceedings. Whenever the Legislature intended that certain rules of the Code which in terms apply to suits should not apply to execution proceedings, it has been expressly so provided. See O. XXIII, r. 4.

But the principal contention of the appellant is that inasmuch as the executing Court could pass orders upon the application in question under s. 47 of the Code, because that section confers jurisdiction to deal with questions as to representation, the application itself is referable to the provisions of that section. That section does not lay down the procedure by which an assignee of an interest of a party to a decree could be added as a party to the execution proceedings, although it confers jurisdiction on the Court to decide his representative character. There are several rules in O. XXII which confer jurisdiction to decide questions relating to the representative character of persons sought to be joined or already joined as parties. Rules 2, 3 and 4 deal with cases of devolution of interest on the death of a party to a suit. Rule 5 expressly confers power on the Court to determine the question as to legal representation. Rule 7 deals with the case of creation of interest on husband on marriage. The Legislature however considered it essential to lay down the procedure for adding persons as parties acquiring interest by other modes of assignment by framing r. 10. That was done for obvious reasons. Before the jurisdiction as to the determination of representation can be exercised every party has to follow the preliminary procedure of bringing the person whose representative character is to be determined before the Court. For that purpose rules laying down the procedure will be necessary.

February 27.

VISHNU RAMCHANDRA KALLOL.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 16—Mortgage decree—Decree-holder declared insolvent by foreign Court—Receiver appointed by foreign Court—Whether such receiver can execute decree in British India.

The expression "by operation of law" in O. XXI, r. 16, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, means by operation of the appropriate law and does not include the law in force in an Indian State.

A mortgage decree was passed by a Court in British India in favour of the plaintiff which directed that the plaintiff could get the defendants' properties sold if he was not paid certain instalments. The plaintiff was afterwards declared an insolvent by a Court of an Indian State and a receiver was appointed. The receiver then applied in his own name, to the Court in British India, to execute the mortgage decree by sale of the mortgaged property, as there was default in payment. On the question whether the "receiver" was entitled to execute the decree :—

Held, that the title of the receiver, appointed by the Court of the Indian State, to execute the decree could not be recognized by the Court in British India; and that therefore, without a proper assignment of the decree in his favour, he was not entitled to execute the decree.

EXECUTION proceedings.

One Harilal Narayan on February 1, 1932, obtained a mortgage decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Belgaum, against Vishnu and others (respondents). The decree directed payment to Harilal of a sum of Rs. 13,000 by certain instalments and provided that in case the respondents failed to pay any two instalments, Harilal could recover the whole amount by getting the mortgaged property sold.

In 1936 Harilal was declared an insolvent by the District Court at Miraj in the Miraj State, and one Dattatraya (appellant) was appointed a receiver by the Miraj District Court.

of V. R. Mangalvedhekar, First Class Subordinate Judge at Belgaum, in Darkhast No. 46 of 1937.

The appellant then applied, in his own name, to the Subordinate Judge at Belgaum, to execute the decree of 1932 by sale of the mortgaged property, there having been default in payment of two instalments. The trial Judge held that the appellant was not entitled to execute the decree as he was a receiver appointed by a foreign Court and observed as follows :—

CHANDRA

“Prima facie, the Miraj Court has no jurisdiction to deal with property of the insolvent in British India. In my opinion, the present procedure adopted by the receiver is not correct. If he is an assignee of the decree in question by operation of law, the proper procedure for him is to apply to the Court which passed the decree for a certificate as is required by law. He cannot at once give this Darkhast on the ground that he is appointed a Receiver of the insolvent in the Miraj Court. Even when there is reciprocity between the British Court and a Native State Court, a decree obtained in a State Court cannot be executed in a British Court unless the proper procedure laid down is followed. In the present case no such procedure is followed. The Receiver has straightaway filed the Darkhast on the ground that the decree has been obtained by the insolvent in this Court and that he is appointed Receiver of the insolvent. The mere fact that the Miraj State has introduced the same Insolvency Act that is in force in British India would not suffice the present Darkhastdar to step in the place of the insolvent and give this Darkhast as the representative of the insolvent. The British Court cannot recognize the status of the present Darkhastdar to present this Darkhast.”

The appellant appealed to the High Court. The appeal was heard by Divatia J. who on March 20, 1940, confirmed the order of the trial Court and dismissed the appeal. His Lordship's judgment is as follows :—

DIVATIA J. I think the order of the lower Court is correct and must be confirmed. The appellant, who is the darkhastdar, is the receiver of one Hari Narayan appointed by the Court in the Miraj State with regard to his property situated in that State. This Hari Narayan had obtained a decree in British India against the present respondents. The receiver appointed by the Miraj Court now applies for execution of that decree, and the judgment-debtors objected that he has no locus standi to apply because British Indian Courts cannot recognise a receiver appointed in the Miraj State. The only provision of law under which this application for execution could be made is O. XXI, r. 16, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. Under that rule the decree must be transferred by an assignment in writing or by operation of law. I cannot see how the decree could be deemed to have been transferred by the operation of law simply because the receiver appointed in the Miraj State applied for execution of the decree. It may be that the law of insolvency in the Miraj State is the same as that in British India, but that does not necessarily mean, unless there is an agreement of reciprocity, that a receiver appointed in an insolvency proceeding in a foreign Court must be deemed to have the right to apply for the insolvent for execution of a decree in British India. Whatever may be the law with regard to moveable property, it is clear that so far as immoveable property is concerned, the receiver appointed by a foreign Court cannot have the right to make such an application in British India. The proper course for the receiver is to obtain an assignment in writing from the insolvent and then to apply for execution as an assignee under O. XXI, r. 16.

The order of the lower Court is, therefore, confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

v.

A. G. Desai, with G. A. Desai, for the appellant.

G. P. Murdeshwar, for respondents Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

VISHNU RAM- CHANDRA — BEAUMONT C. J. This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Divatia, and it raises an interesting question of law.

On February 1, 1932, a mortgage decree was passed in favour of one Hari Narayan against the respondents. The decree directed payment to the plaintiff of a sum of Rs. 13,000 by certain instalments, and then provided :

“ In case defendants fail to pay any two instalments, plaintiff do recover the whole of the amount by getting the below-mentioned mortgaged properties sold.”

So that it is not an ordinary preliminary decree directing that if the plaintiff is not paid, he may apply for an order for sale ; the order directs that the plaintiff may get the properties sold, if he is not paid. In 1936 Hari Narayan was declared an insolvent by a Court of the Miraj State, that is to say, by a foreign Court, and a person styled a “ Receiver ”, who is the present appellant, was appointed. The appellant then applied in his own name to execute the decree of 1932 by sale of the mortgaged property, there having been default in payment of two instalments. The learned Subordinate Judge, before whom the matter came, held that the appellant was not entitled to execute the decree being a receiver appointed by a foreign Court, and in appeal Mr. Justice Divatia agreed with that view. The question before us is whether that is the right view.

Now, under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, it is provided that where a decree is transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, the transferee may apply for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it. I apprehend that the expression “ by operation of law ” means by operation of the appropriate law, and the real question is whether the appropriate law, which in this case is the law of the Miraj State, is one which this Court can recognize as operating to transfer the decree.

In my opinion the general rule is well established that Courts in England or British India will recognize a process of universal distribution of a person's moveable property under the law of a foreign country. That principle was recognized by the House of Lords in Galbraith v. Grimshaw,<sup>1</sup> and adopted by the Privy Council in Anantapadmanabhaswami v. Official Receiver, Secunderabad.<sup>2</sup> It is clear that no Court will recognize the transfer of immoveable property situate within its own jurisdiction by the operation of a foreign system of law. The title to immoveable property is always governed by the lex loci.

The question is whether the transfer of this decree which operates upon immoveable property in the Province of Bombay can be transferred by the operation of any system of law other than that of the country where the immoveable property is situate. No doubt, a decree is generally moveable property, but this decree is a document of title affecting immoveable property. The title of a purchaser will have to be made under this decree, and his title might be challenged on the ground that the person who got the decree executed was not the proper party to do so. It seems to me that it would be contrary to the principles on which this Court acts to hold that the title to immoveable property within this Province depends on the hazard of a correct appreciation of some foreign system of law. We are told that the Miraj State has adopted a system of insolvency law similar to that which prevails in British India outside Presidency towns, and no doubt the law of the State can easily be ascertained. But some systems of insolvency law might be very difficult to ascertain. One might easily have conflicting expert opinions on one side and the other. The nature of a foreign law is a question of fact to be proved by experts, and I think it would be wrong in principle to allow title to land in this country to depend on the state of some foreign law.

In my opinion, therefore, the lower Court and Mr. Justice Divatia were right in holding that the title of the receiver appointed by the Miraj Court to execute this decree cannot be recognized. As Mr. Justice Divatia pointed out, there is no difficulty in his enforcing the decree. He can obtain from the insolvent an assignment of such interest in the decree as the insolvent possesses in British India, and I apprehend that if he were unwilling to make such assignment, the insolvency Court in Miraj could force him to do so. However, that is not a matter which concerns us.

I think the decision of Mr. Justice Divatia was right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MACKLIN J. I agree.

On July 11, 1932, the defendant obtained a money decree under which the decretal amount was payable at any time within six months of its date. On August 9, 1932, while the decree was still unexecutable, the defendant applied for an order of attachment of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property, and obtained the order on August 31. Thereafter the Court passed an order directing the attached property to be sold and issued notice under O. XXI, r. 66, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The process fee not having been paid, the Court dismissed the application, but allowed the attachment to continue. While the attachment was thus in force, the judgment-debtor sold a portion of the attached property to the plaintiff. The defendant having subsequently obtained an order for attachment and sale of the attached property including the property sold, the plaintiff filed a suit to obtain a declaration that the property sold to him was not liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree :—

Held, decreeing the suit, (1) that the order of dismissal of defendant's application on the score of non-payment of process-fees as well as of non-prosecution should be deemed to be an order passed under O. XXI, r. 57, with the result that as soon as the application was dismissed the attachment came to an end :

(2) that there having been no review or appeal from the order of dismissal, the order, though passed by the Court under a misapprehension, was still a binding order and should be taken to be an order under O. XXI, r. 57 ;

(3) that on the principle of constructive res judicata, which applied to execution proceedings, the order should be regarded as binding on the defendant in the second application ;

(4) that, therefore, in spite of the order of the Court continuing the attachment there was no legal and valid attachment after the date of the order, and the plaintiff purchased the property free from any attachment ;

(5) that the defendant should have applied to the executing Court and filed an application for an order of attachment even before the decree became executable, but he having allowed the dismissal of his application had to abide by the consequences of it.

SUIT for declaration.

On July 11, 1932, the defendant, Vijayadas, obtained a money decree for Rs. 370 against one Basangouda (in suit No. 676 of 1931). The decree made the amount payable at any time within six months of the decree, i.e. up to January 11, 1933.

Meanwhile, on August 9, 1932, the defendant filed a darkhast (No. 834 of 1932) praying that attachment be placed on the immoveable property belonging to the judgment-debtor Basangouda. The Court ordered the attachment to issue on August 31, 1932. The Court, however, proceeded further on September 27, 1932, ordered the attached property to be sold, and issued notice under O. XXI, r. 66, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The defendant did not pay process fee for the issue of notice. The Court thereupon, on November 8, 1932, dismissed the darkhast for want of prosecution, but ordered the attachment to continue.

On July 10, 1933, the plaintiff Shekharappa purchased some of the lands which were under attachment from Basangouda's heirs for Rs. 3,000.

Shortly afterwards the defendant filed a darkhast (No. 458 of 1933) for attachment and sale of the property including the one sold to the plaintiff. The plaintiff intervened and put up his objection to the attachment and sale of the property sold to him. The Court overruled the objection and ordered execution to proceed.

On March 3, 1936, the plaintiff filed a suit, under O. XXI, r. 63, alleging first that the attachment was illegal and ineffectual, and, secondly, that even if it was valid in law darkhast No. 836 of 1932 having been dismissed for want of prosecution the attachment terminated on the dismissal of the darkhast by virtue of O. XXI, r. 57, and thirdly, that even if the attachment was deemed to exist, the property should be sold subject to the prior mortgage which he had paid off from the purchase money.

“Under O. XXXVII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, property can be attached even before a decree is passed and in anticipation thereof. For a greater reason, therefore, it can be so attached after the decree though there is no express provision in the Civil Procedure Code for that and that can be done under the inherent power of the Court under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, before money becomes due under the decree. It is true that time for execution of the decree obtained by the defendant in original suit No. 676 of 1931 had not arrived when the defendant filed his darkhast No. 836 of 1932. But the express recital in that darkhast shows that the decree-holder (defendant) prayed only for attachment of property lest the judgment-debtor might sell it leaving no property against which the decree-holder could proceed. He expressly prayed only for attachment in that darkhast on that ground, which is now amply justified by subsequent events. The attachment was perfectly valid.

The darkhast (No. 836 of 1932) being only for attachment any orders after attachment was effected were redundant, improper and ineffectual. It is true that the Court passed an order for sale of the property after the attachment and that the decree-holder (now defendant), did not pay process for that and the darkhast was dismissed. This Court could not pass an order for sale in the absence of a prayer for it. That is why the decree-holder did not pay process for a step which he had not even asked for. That order was passed through oversight and that perhaps was detected later when the Court disposed of the darkhast adding an order that the attachment was to continue. The Court really disposed of the darkhast and not dismissed it as the prayer had been granted and fulfilled. There was thus, no failure to prosecute that darkhast and the darkhast was not dismissed for want of prosecution. Order XXI, r. 57, has therefore no application, and the attachment subsists after the disposal of the darkhast on November 8, 1932.

On appeal the decree was reversed and the suit was decreed by the District Judge, for the following reasons :—

“There is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code for making an application to attach property in execution of a decree which has not become ripe for execution. During the pendency of a suit the Court can order attachment before judgment. In this case there was no such attachment. In execution proceedings the Court can order attachment and sale of property. But mere attachment is not one of the modes of execution recognised by the Civil Procedure Code. Order XXI, r. 11, cl. (j), of the Civil Procedure Code requires that an application for execution of a decree shall contain particulars as to the mode in which the assistance of the Court was required, whether by delivery of property decreed, by the attachment and sale or by the sale without attachment of any property, by the arrest and detention in prison of any person, by the appointment of a receiver, or otherwise as the nature of the relief granted may require. Mere attachment is not one of the modes of execution. The decree-holder could not apply for the sale of the property as the money was not then due. The darkhast was not therefore tenable. It was then premature to file any darkhast. So the application should have been rejected as failing to comply with the mandatory provisions of O. XXI, r. 11 (vide 19 Bom. 34, P. J. for 1890, p. 22, 34 Mad. 25.). The order of attachment passed below the application was not legal. The Court, however, passed an order for attachment as well as for sale though there was no prayer for sale. The applicant did not pay any process fees, and the darkhast was dismissed for default.  1941 order also was not legal.
 — It is conceded that an order for attachment only cannot be passed in execution VIJAYADAS proceedings. It is, however, urged that the order be taken to have been passed HANUMANT- under s. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, there being no other provision of the DAS law under which it can be justified. The mere fact that there is no other remedy
 v. would not attract the application of s. 151 (vide 4 Pat. 704). The Court had no SHEKHAR- jurisdiction to pass such an order it being passed neither during the pendency of APPA a suit nor in proper execution proceedings. The attachment order is illegal and ANANTAPPA not binding.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

G. R. Madbhavi, for the appellant.

A. G. Desai, for the respondent.

DIVATIA J. This appeal raises a somewhat novel point with regard to the right of a decree-holder to attach the judgment-debtor's property before the decree becomes executable.

The facts are shortly these :—On July 11, 1932, the present appellant, who was the defendant in the suit, obtained a money decree against one Basangowda for Rs. 370. Under the decree the amount was payable within six months. It is common ground between the parties that by virtue of that direction the decree-holder was not entitled to file an application for execution before the termination of that period. On August 9, 1932, before the period of six months expired, the present defendant filed a darkhast against his judgment-debtor in which he only asked for the relief of attachment of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property. That prayer seems to have been made on the ground that the judgment-debtor was going to alienate his property to defeat the decree-holder's claim. On August 31 the Court passed an order attaching the judgment-debtor's immoveable property. Thereafter, on September 27 the Court passed a further order directing the attached property to be sold and issuing notice under O. XXI, r. 66, of the Civil Procedure Code. It is not explained under what circumstances that order came to be passed when there was no prayer for sale in the darkhast itself. However, the order for sale was passed, and there is an endorsement on the darkhast on October 11, 1932, that process fees for the notice were not paid. Thereupon on November 8 the Court passed an order "Not prosecuted. Dismissed. Attachment to continue". Several months after that order, i.e. on July 10, 1933, the present plaintiff purchased some of the immoveable property, which was attached by the Court, from the heirs of Basangowda, the judgment-debtor for Rs. 3,000. Thereafter, another darkhast No. 458 of 1933 was filed by the present defendant for the attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property including the property sold to the present plaintiff. The plaintiff intervened and objected to the attachment and sale of the property sold to him by the heir of the judgment-debtor. His objection was, however, overruled by the executing Court, with the result that he filed the present suit for a declaration that the suit property was not liable for attachment and sale in execution proceedings of the decree obtained by the defendant, and for the alternative relief of a declaration that the property was liable to be sold subject to the mortgage incumbrance of

Rs. 2,000 which the plaintiff had paid to a mortgagee in satisfaction of his mortgage on the attached property. The defendant contended that the sale to the plaintiff was hollow and that it cannot avail him as it was subsequent to the attachment of the property by him in his first darkhast, which was continued even after its dismissal.

The trial Court framed issues as to whether the attachment in the first darkhast was valid in law and whether it subsisted after the disposal of that darkhast; if not, whether the property was liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained by the defendant; and if it was liable to be sold, what limitations should be imposed on the sale. It was held that the attachment in the first darkhast was valid and subsisting after its disposal, and that the property was, therefore, liable to be sold in execution of the defendant's decree. On that finding the suit was dismissed.

That decree has been reversed by the appellate Court, which held that the defendant's first darkhast for the attachment of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property was invalid inasmuch as the only relief asked for was the attachment and that too at the date when the decree had not become executable. The defendant had not obtained any attachment before judgment in his suit, so that there was no continuing attachment after the date of the decree. It further held that the order of the Court dismissing the darkhast for non-prosecution, but continuing the attachment, which purported to have been made under O. XXI, r. 57, of the Civil Procedure Code, was erroneous inasmuch as it has been held by our as well as other High Courts that if a darkhast is dismissed for non-prosecution, the attachment ceased even though there was an express order to continue it. As a result it was held that the plaintiff purchased the property at a time when there was no subsisting attachment on the property, and he was therefore entitled to the relief of declaration prayed for by him.

The defendant has now appealed to this Court, and his contentions are, first, that the order of the Court dismissing the darkhast for non-prosecution and continuing the attachment is not made under O. XXI, r. 57, and, secondly, that it was competent to him to apply for attachment even before the decree became executable under s. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code.

On the first point, it seems to me that the appellate Court was right in taking the order of November 8 to be under O. XXI, r. 57. The order was clearly one of dismissal for non-prosecution, and as such it would fall within the purview of that rule. The further direction for continuing the attachment was, therefore, illegal, because it is expressly provided in that rule that upon the dismissal of such application, the attachment shall cease. I have held in Baba v. Kisan<sup>1</sup> that the word "default" in O. XXI, r. 57, of the Civil Procedure Code, in so far as it applies to the decree-holder, means default not merely in the sense of non-appearance or non-payment of the process fees, etc., but includes the case of non-prosecution as well. The present is a case of non-payment of the process fees as well as of non-prosecution. It is, therefore, clear, to my mind, that this order must be taken to have been passed under O. XXI, r. 57, with the result that the order of continuing the

It is next contended that the order does not fall under that rule, because although the darkhast purports to be dismissed for non-prosecution, it was an erroneous order passed under a misapprehension as there was no prayer by the defendant in his darkhast for sale of the property. It is indeed true that there was no such prayer and the executing Court seems to have passed the order for the sale under an erroneous belief that there was such prayer. It is rather curious that neither the decree-holder nor the judgment-debtor pointed out to the Court, when the order for notice under O. XXI, r. 66, was made, that no such notice was necessary at that stage, because the darkhast did not pray for the relief of sale. Not only was it not pointed out, but so far as the present appellant, i.e. the decree-holder, was concerned, he did not pay the bhatta and allowed the darkhast to be dismissed for non-prosecution. If he had pointed out to the Court that there was no question of passing an order for sale, it is probable that the Court might have vacated its order for selling the property. But the order of November 8 does stand to this day without any application on the part of the defendant for review or an appeal against it. The result, therefore, is that that order, although passed under a misapprehension, is still there as a binding order and must be taken to be an order under O. XXI, r. 57. On the principle of constructive res judicata, which also applies to execution proceedings, this order in the first darkhast must be regarded as binding on the defendant in the present, i.e. the second, darkhast, and he cannot be allowed to challenge it at the present stage. That being so, it must be taken that in spite of the order of the Court continuing the attachment on November 8, there was no legal and valid attachment after that date, and the plaintiff purchased the property free from any such attachment in July, 1933.

There is moreover another difficulty in the appellant's way and that is his prayer in the first darkhast which was filed only for the relief of attachment of the property at a time when the decree was not executable. It was not filed in the form of an ordinary application for attachment of the property before the darkhast was executable, but it was filed, as a regular darkhast in the executing Court. It is questionable whether the executing Court should have passed an order for attachment as prayed for before the decree became executable. The appellant contends that that order should be regarded as one under the inherent jurisdiction of the Court, and the argument is that just as a plaintiff can, during the pendency of a suit, apply for attachment before judgment under O. XXXVIII, a decree-holder can also apply for attachment of the property after the decree is passed but before it becomes executable; otherwise he would have no remedy if his judgment-debtor is going to dispose of the property between those two dates. Such a case would be very rare inasmuch as ordinarily a decree is executable immediately after it is passed. It is only in a case like the present where the judgment-debtor is given a period of six months for paying the decretal amount or where the decree is made payable by instalments some time after it is passed and becomes executable on failure to pay one or more instalments, that such a question would arise. But it seems to me that if in such a case the decree-holder wants the relief of attachment, he cannot go to the executing Court and file a darkhast for the purpose of getting that relief. It may be that the Court passing the decree might give him the proper relief by the appointment of a receiver under O. XL, r. 1, as a receiver can be appointed even after the passing of a decree. But, in any case, it seems to me that the procedure adopted by the defendant-decree-holder was not authorised by any of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendant allowed the darkhast to continue as such even after the Court had issued the notice under O. XXI, r. 66, and he ultimately allowed the darkhast itself to be dismissed for non-prosecution, although the attachment was continued. By his own conduct, therefore, he has allowed the execution proceedings to go on as if the executing Court had jurisdiction to proceed against the judgment-debtor's property in that darkhast, and that being so, in my opinion, he must take the consequences of proceeding in the manner in which he has done. I doubt very much whether the decree-holder can apply under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, merely for attachment and that too before the decree becomes executable, but in any case such an application would, if at all, lie to the Court passing the decree. The executing Court will have jurisdiction only after the decree becomes executable. It seems to me to be clear in any case that the subsequent order of the Court on November 8 dismissing the darkhast for non-prosecution is governed by O. XXI, r. 57, with the result that the attachment ceased in any case on that date. The plaintiff has, therefore, purchased the property free from such attachment.

The decree of the lower appellate Court, therefore, in my opinion, is correct, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVI, r. 1—"Not subject to appeal"—"Any such decree"—Interpretation—Subordinate Judge—Reference to High Court.

The words "not subject to appeal" in O. XLVI, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, mean that the law provides no appeal in any circumstances. They include a case in which it can be said that there might have been an appeal from the decree passed by the High Court, although it was extremely unlikely that there should have been one.

The words "any such decree" in the rule mean either (a) a decree in a suit where no appeal is provided against the decree, or (b) a decree in an appeal where no further appeal is provided.

A. C. J. THIS was a reference made by the Subordinate Judge of Bulsar, under 1941 O. XLVI, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

CHHOTUBHAI The reference arose out of proceedings in execution of a decree passed by BHIMBHAI the High Court in a second appeal.

B. In Regular Suit No. 171 of 1915 the plaintiff Chhotubhai obtained a decree BAI KASHI entitling him to recover a sum of money out of the money received by the — defendants as desaigiri hak. The decree was upheld by the High Court in second appeal.

In the course of the execution of the decree passed by the High Court, a question arose : Whether it is open to the executing Court under O. XXI, r. 52, of the Civil Procedure Code, to question the refusal of a public officer to pay the amount attached by a prohibitory order under O. XXI, r. 52, if the amount was due and payable on the date on which the prohibitory order was served.

The Subordinate Judge, before whom the execution proceedings were pending, referred the question to the High Court under O. XLVI, r. 1.

M. R. Vidyarthi and S. M. Vidyarthi, for the applicant.

No appearance for the opponents.

B. G. Rao, Assistant Government Pleader, for the referor.

BROOMFIELD J. This purports to be a reference under O. XLVI, r. 1, but in our opinion no reference lies.

The facts of the case briefly are as follows. A suit was filed in 1915 to obtain a share in a certain cash allowance payable at the Sub-Treasury of Jalalpur in the Surat District. The plaintiff got a decree for a sum of Rs. 9-14-0 against two defendants which amount he was held entitled to recover annually from generation to generation. Up to the year 1931 it appears that plaintiff recovered what was due, but from 1931 to 1938 nothing was recovered because, as we were informed, the judgment-debtors died and the names of their legal representatives were not brought on the alienation register. In 1938 the plaintiff brought a darkhast to recover the arrears and made an application under O. XXI, r. 52, laying claim to Rs. 69 and odd out of a sum of Rs. 182 lying in the Sub-Treasury in the names of the judgment-debtors. Order XXI, r. 52, provides that where property to be attached is in the custody of any Court or public officer, the attachment is to be made by a notice to such Court or officer, requesting that such property may be held subject to the further orders of the Court from which the notice is issued. A notice was issued to the Sub-Treasury officer to hold the amount subject to the orders of the Court and he was further directed to send the money, but on May 12, 1939, a communication was received from the Collector of the district stating that as the money had been unclaimed for six years it was liable to forfeiture. On May 29, he wrote again saying that it had actually been forfeited with the sanction of the Commissioner. Thereafter there were further proceedings in the darkhast. A notice was sent to the Collector who appeared by the Government Pleader and objected that the only procedure open to the Court was to sell the debt or appoint a receiver for the purpose of bringing a suit on the analogy of O. XXI, r. 46. After hearing the matter argued the learned Judge felt a difficulty as to the correct procedure and referred the following point for the determination of this Court : Whether it is open to the executing Court under O. XXI, r. 52, to question the refusal of a public officer to pay the amount attached by a prohibitory order under O. XXI, r. 52, if the amount was due and payable on the date on which the prohibitory order was served.

The question submitted to this Court appears to assume that the amount was due and payable on the date on which the prohibitory order was served, which is by no means clear on the record before us. However, as we are of opinion that the reference does not lie we are not going into the merits of the case.

Order XLVI, r. 1, is in the following terms :—Where, before or on the hearing of a suit or an appeal in which the decree is not subject to appeal, or where, in the execution of any such decree, any question of law or usage having the force of law arises, on which the Court trying the suit or appeal, or executing the decree, entertains reasonable doubt, the Court may draw up a statement of the facts and refer such statement for the decision of the High Court. It should be mentioned that the decree which the plaintiff has now sought to execute is the decree of this High Court. There were first and second appeals against the original decree in plaintiff's favour by which that decree was confirmed. It is well settled that when there has been an appeal, which has been heard and decided, whether the decree of the Court of first instance is confirmed or not, the only decree which can be executed is the decree of the appellate Court. So that here we are concerned with the execution of a decree of this High Court passed in second appeal.

The learned Assistant Government Pleader who appears for Government on this reference has contended that there was no further appeal and therefore the case comes within the scope of O. XLVI, r. 1, and the reference lies. On the other hand, the learned advocate for the plaintiffs contends that the decree of this Court was subject to appeal to the Privy Council, at any rate under cl. (c) of s. 109, and therefore the reference does not lie. The idea underlying the rule seems clearly to be to allow difficult points of law to be brought before the High Court in cases where that could not otherwise be done, e.g. where the original decree in a suit is final or where a matter has been decided in first appeal and no second appeal is provided. In execution proceedings one would have expected that the power to refer points would have been limited to cases where there is no appeal against the order of the executing Court. But that is not a possible construction of the rule. The power depends on whether the decree to be executed is subject to appeal or not.

Mr. Rao relied upon the fact that in the particular case no application was made to appeal to the Privy Council. But, whatever meaning is to be attached to the words "not subject to appeal" in the rule, it seems at any rate clear that they cannot mean simply that no appeal has in fact been made. Having regard to the first sentence of the rule "before or on the hearing of a suit or an appeal in which the decree is not subject to appeal", the words "any such decree" in the clause with which we are concerned must mean either (a) a decree in a suit where no appeal is provided against the decree, or (b) a decree in an appeal where no further appeal is provided. As a matter of construction, apart from questions of convenience, it seems to be impossible to say that the appeal in (b) can be limited to first appeals in cases where no second appeal is provided. On the other hand, we take the view that the words "not subject to appeal" must mean that the law provides no appeal in any circumstances. It is quite true that in a case of this kind it is exceedingly unlikely that an appeal to the Privy Council from the decree of this Court would have been made or that this Court would have certified the case to be a fit one for appeal under s. 109 (c). At the same time that might have been done; there might have been an appeal, and, if in certain circumstances there might be a further appeal, it cannot be said that the decree is not subject to appeal.

As far as we are aware this particular point is one of first impression. No case has been cited which really bears on the facts of the present case. In Oriental Loan Association, Limited v. George Pelham Hatch,<sup>1</sup> the Court was concerned with the construction of the corresponding rule in the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 in which the wording was somewhat different and instead of "decree not subject to appeal" the words "final decree" occurred. A question had been referred to the High Court by a Judge of the Consular Court at Zanzibar which arose in execution of a decree of a Division Court. It was argued that the matter ought not to have been referred on the ground that the decree was not final, because it was a decree of a Division Court against which there might be an appeal. This argument was accepted. It was held that no reference lay, the decree not being final. The reason for holding that the decree was not final was that there might have been an appeal against it. So in this case we think it can be said that as there might have been an appeal from the decree of this Court, although it was extremely unlikely that there should have been, nevertheless the decree was strictly speaking subject to appeal and no reference could therefore be made under the rule in question.

The learned Sub-Judge must therefore decide the question in dispute for himself and dispose of the application for execution. We make no other order on the reference except that the papers should be returned and costs will be costs in the cause.

The High Court will not as a rule interfere with orders of acquittal in revision at the instance of a private party, except where such interference is urgently demanded in the interest of justice. Cases of defamation, however, form an exception to the above general rule, as in such cases, which from their very nature affect private parties and not the public, Government would usually be unwilling to interfere.

On a prosecution for defamation by the complainant the accused relied on the protection afforded by exception 1 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860 :—

Held, (1) that exception 1 had no application, because assuming that the newspaper article gave a substantially correct account of the resolutions, it could not be said that their publication was for the public good ;

(2) that excessive publication took the case out of the privileges conferred by exceptions 9 and 10 of the section, for it could not be said that it was necessary for the protection of the interest of the accused or other members of the community that the resolutions should be published in a newspaper.

APPLICATION in revision against an order of acquittal.

Case of defamation.

The complainant Vinayak and the accused Shantaram were members of the Pathare Kshatriya community, the main centres of which were in Bombay and at Alibag in the Kolaba district. The community had an institution called the Pathare Kshatriya Vaktrutwotetjak Samaj, which had organised a function in the beginning of August, 1938, and of which one Gharat was the president.

The Samaj did not approve of the criticism, and its members convened a meeting on August 21, 1938, at which the following resolutions were passed :—

- "(1) That V. A. Pathare (i.e. the complainant) should not be invited for any meeting, gathering or any other function held under the auspices of the Samaj ;
- (2) that if V. A. Pathare attends a meeting or a gathering, he should be turned out ;
- (3) that a copy of the resolutions should be sent to all secretaries."

There was a weekly newspaper called "Rashtratej," which circulated mainly among the members of the community, but it had circulation among other persons as well. On September 1, 1938, the accused contributed an article in that newspaper in which he published the following resolutions as having been passed by the Samaj :—

- "(1) That no one should send an invitation to V. A. Pathare ;
- (2) that no one should bring him to a meeting of the Samaj ;
- (3) that if he attended any such meeting he should be turned out ; and
- (4) that before co-operating with and taking part in any work of other institutions, it should be made certain that those other institutions would not invite V. A. Pathare."

For publishing the above article, the complainant lodged a complaint against the accused for defamation, when the latter relied on the protection afforded by exception 1 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860.

The trying Magistrate accepted the defence and acquitted the accused, observing as follows :—

"Taking all this evidence and circumstances into consideration I hold that the accused has made out a sufficient case to show that he had published the substance of the resolutions passed by P. K. V. Samaj at the meeting of August 21, 1938, and he did it for the information of the members of his community specially and the people of Alibag generally who were offended by the publication of Ex. No. 2 by the complainant against a man whom they respected. In my opinion I hold that the accused is entitled to the benefit of exception 1 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code."

The complainant applied to the High Court in revision against the order of acquittal.

BROOMFIELD J. This is an application for revision of an order of acquittal passed by the Presidency Magistrate, Third Additional Court, Bombay. The applicant Vinayak Atmaram Pathare prosecuted the opponent Shantaram Janardan Pathare for defamation in respect of an article written by him and published in a weekly vernacular newspaper called "Rashtratej." The complainant and the accused are both members of the Pathare Kshatriya community, the members of which live mostly in Bombay and the Kolaba District. The complainant is a journalist, and in a magazine which he publishes called "Udhar" he had made criticisms on one Ramji Laxman Gharat, a member of this community, who had presided at a meeting of its members held in August, 1938. These criticisms on Mr. Gharat were resented and on August 21, 1938, there was a meeting of a society called Pathare Kshatriya Vakrutwottejak Samaj which passed resolutions condemning the complainant. The article, which was the subject of the defamation case, was published in the "Rashtratej" newspaper on September 1, 1938. It purported to give an account of the meeting of the Samaj and the resolutions passed thereat. But it was stated that some resolutions were passed which were not, in fact, passed at the meeting. The accused claimed that his conduct in writing this article was privileged and covered by the first exception to s. 499, Indian Penal Code, that is to say, his contention was that the imputation made was true and for the public good. The learned Magistrate accepted this view and acquitted the accused.

This revision application was allowed to stand over to see whether Government proposed to appeal. But there has been no Government appeal and ultimately a Rule was issued. The Government Pleader now appears in these proceedings and says that his instructions are that if any expression of opinion is called for, he should support the application.

In a well known judgment in Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Chowdhury,<sup>1</sup> Sir Lawrence Jenkins expressed the view that as a general rule it is expedient not to interfere, on revision, at the instance of a private person, with an acquittal after trial by the proper tribunal, and that applications for that purpose should be discouraged on public grounds. Even at the time of Sir Lawrence Jenkins' judgment there was a consensus of judicial opinion in favour of this view, and our own High Court has approved of the principle stated in Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Chowdhury in several cases, for instance, Fareedoon Cawasji, In re,<sup>2</sup> and Emperor v. Rameshwar Harinath.<sup>3</sup> It is clear from these cases that for a long time past this Court, like most of the other High Courts, has consistently declined to interfere in revision with orders of acquittal except where interference is urgently demanded in the interest of public justice.

Defamation cases, however, may perhaps form an exception to this general rule as was pointed out by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case to which I have referred. The reason is that in cases of defamation, which from their very nature affect private parties and not the public, Government would usually be unwilling to interfere. For that reason the High Court has interfered in revision on the application of a private party, for instance, in Asutosh Das Gupta v. Purna Chandra Ghosh.<sup>4</sup> We have accordingly heard this application argued. We have done so because it is a defamation case and not because the Government Pleader has appeared in support. The view we take is that as it is provided in s. 439, cl. (5), of the Criminal Procedure Code, that where an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed, the Government Pleader has, strictly speaking, no locus standi to appear. Certainly Government cannot avoid the obligation of

A. Cr. J. 1941 appealing in a proper case by lending support to a revision application brought by the complainant.

— Coming to the merits of the case, the resolutions which were actually passed at the meeting of the Samaj were—

ATMARAM
v.
SHANTARAM
JANARDAN
— (1) that V. A. Pathare (i.e. the complainant) should not be invited for any meeting, gathering or any other function held under the auspices of the Samaj ;
(2) that if V. A. Pathare attends a meeting or a gathering, he should be turned out ;

Broomfield J. — and it was also resolved that a copy of the resolutions should be sent to all secretaries, which means apparently the secretaries of the various branches of the Samaj.

According to the article which the accused published in the "Rashtratej" the resolutions were

- (1) that no one should send an invitation to V. A. Pathare ;
- (2) that no one should bring him to a meeting ;
- (3) that if he made himself bold to attend any meeting he should be turned out ; and
- (4) that before co-operating with and taking part in any work of other institutions, it should be made certain that those other institutions would not invite V. A. Pathare.

The article further stated that it was decided at the meeting that these resolutions should be published.

The article was correct in saying that it had been resolved that V. A. Pathare should not be invited to any meeting, and that if he came to any meeting, he should be turned out. It was not correct in stating that no one was to bring him to a meeting or that enquiries were to be made about the practice followed in other institutions. However, it would seem that the more important resolutions were undoubtedly the resolutions about not inviting the complainant and turning him out if he came, and there is, at any rate, some justification for the view taken by the learned Magistrate that the additional resolutions referred to in the article were rather by way of amplification of the resolutions actually passed and did not carry the matter much further. One Mr. Dandekar, who appears to be a prominent member of the Pathare Kshatriya Community and who was examined as a witness for the complainant, himself stated in his evidence that he could see very little difference between the actual resolutions and the form in which they were reported in the newspaper article.

The complainant's main grievance appears to be the publication of these resolutions in the "Rashtratej" rather than the form in which they were published. The learned Magistrate, having found that the imputations were substantially true, proceeded to discuss the question whether the publication was for the public good and not excessive. The accused relied on exception 1 to s. 499, and apparently the learned Magistrate thought that that was the exception governing the case. He found that the complainant's criticism of Mr. Gharat had caused great resentment in the Pathare Kshatriya community many of whom live in Alibag where the "Rashtratej" newspaper mainly circulates. He found that the complainant had published a leaflet containing abuse of Mr. Gharat, which leaflet he had distributed broadcast.

He found that this leaflet was in unbecoming language, and in view of all these circumstances, he came to the conclusion that the accused was justified in getting this article published in a newspaper which, though it circulates in other places also, has its main circulation in the Alibag Taluka and therefore among the members of this particular community.

We think that there can be no doubt that the learned Magistrate was wrong in applying exception 1 to s. 499. Assuming that it can be said that the imputation in this case was true, that is to say, that the newspaper article gave a substantially correct account of the resolutions passed by the Samaj, it cannot reasonably be argued that the publication of these resolutions was for the public good. The conduct of the complainant is a matter which concerns the Pathare Kshatriya community and does not in any way concern the public. The exceptions which would properly apply to the case are the 9th and the 10th exceptions. Those exceptions require proof of good faith. The learned Magistrate has not found in so many words that the accused acted in good faith, although it may perhaps be inferred from his judgment that he thought so. But, apart from the question of good faith, it would clearly be going too far to say that it was necessary for the protection of the interest of the accused or other members of the community in question that these resolutions should be published in a newspaper. It is no doubt an extenuating circumstance that the newspaper in question circulates mostly in Alibag, but it circulates in other places also including Bombay. That being so, it was clearly, in our opinion, excessive publication which would take the case out of the privilege conferred by exceptions 9 and 10.

We think, therefore, that on the evidence the accused might properly have been convicted. At the same time, we think that when all the circumstances are considered, the Court would not have been called upon to do anything more than impose a fine and not a heavy fine. In a revision application we cannot convert an order of acquittal into one of conviction. The most we could do would be to direct a retrial. But we think that this is a private quarrel which mainly concerns the complainant and the accused and to some extent the other members of the Pathare Kshatriya community. It is not a matter, we think, in which the public has any interest whatever. That being so, it would be waste of time and money to direct that there should be a retrial, and we have decided that we will not interfere.

The rule is accordingly discharged.

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 4(3) (i)—Exemption from liability to income-tax—Trust of property for "charitable purpose" essential—Assessment of income of property—Property must be held under trust or other legal obligation—Association for relief of poor agriculturists—Whether object of association is charitable—Whether charitable object ceases to be charitable because such association is organised by political body.

In order to avoid liability to income-tax under s. 4(3) (i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the assessee has to establish that the income assessed is derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes.

If the object of an association is relief of the poor, it is none the less charitable, because some political body may consider that it affords the best method of relieving the poor, and may, therefore, adopt the scheme.

An unregistered Association consisting only of persons who had become its members was created for the following objects:—"To raise loans, to collect subscriptions, to hold immoveable property, to invest funds under proper security, to give and take mortgage for the furtherance of hand-spinning and khaddar, to give financial assistance to khaddar organisation by way of loans, gifts or bounties, to help or establish schools or institutions where hand-spinning is taught, to help or open khaddar stores, to establish a khaddar service, to act as agency on behalf of the Congress to receive self-spun yarn as subscription to the Congress and to issue certificates and to do all the things that may be considered necessary for the furtherance of its objects, with power to make regulations for the conduct of affairs of the Association or the Council and to make such amendments in the present constitution, as may be considered necessary from time to time." The Income-tax Officer assessed the association to income-tax and super-tax on the total income of Rs. 88,601 for the year 1936-37, overruling its contention that it was not assessable to income-tax by reason of the exemption contained in s. 4(3) (i) of the Indian Income-tax Act. This was confirmed on appeal to the Assistant Commissioner. The assessee then applied to the Commissioner either to revise the order or to state a case to the High Court; but the latter refused to do so. The association then applied to the High Court under s. 66(3) of the Act and the High Court directed the Commissioner to state a case. The Commissioner thereupon referred the following question to the High Court—"Whether having regard to the objects of the Association and the manner in which they are carried out and the purpose for which its funds are applied the income of the Association is liable to income-tax and/or super-tax." The Commissioner was of opinion that the objects of the Association were not charitable and therefore the Association was properly assessed:—

therein which limited in any way the purposes for which any profits derived by the Association could be applied ;

that the Association had failed to show that the property from which the profits were derived was property held under trust or other legal obligation for charitable purposes and that there was a binding legal obligation to devote its profits to charitable purposes ; and that, therefore, the Association had not brought itself within the exemption in s. 4 (3) (i) of the Indian Income-tax Act and was rightly assessed to income-tax and super-tax.

The All India Spinners' Association was taken on the assessment list of Ahmedabad city, within which area the head office and the principal place of the business of the Association were situated, for the first time for the assessment year 1925-26. It was then known by the name of "The Bharat Charkha Sangha". For each of the financial years up to and including 1930-31 the Association worked at a loss and was for that reason not assessed. For the assessment year 1931-32 it was assessed to tax by the Income-tax Officer on an income of over Rs. 24,766. On appeal the Assistant Commissioner cancelled the assessment holding that the Association had been formed for the advancement of an object of general public utility and its income was therefore not liable to tax having regard to the provisions of s. 4(3) (i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. Thereafter the Association was not assessed to tax up to and including the financial year 1935-36.

A notice was, however, issued under s. 34 of the Act to the Association by the Income-tax Officer for the assessment year 1936-37. After considering the plea of the Association that it was not liable to tax by reason of the provisions of s. 4(3) (i) of the Act, the Income-tax Officer assessed the Association to income-tax and super-tax on the total income of Rs. 88,601 for the assessment year 1936-37 by his order dated February 23, 1939.

On March 25, 1939, the Association presented an appeal to the Assistant Commissioner, Income-tax, Northern Division, against that order, contending inter alia that its income was not liable to tax having regard to the provisions of s. 4(3) (i) of the Act. At the hearing of the appeal the Assistant Commissioner confirmed the assessment made by the Income-tax Officer under s. 31 of the Act by his order dated May 6, 1939.

On July 12, 1939, the Association petitioned to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, praying under s. 33 of the Act for a revision of the assessment made, and asking the Commissioner, in the alternative, to refer for the decision of the High Court the question of law mentioned in the petition under s. 66(2) of the Act. The Commissioner of Income-tax came to the conclusion that no question of law arose which required a reference to the High Court for decision, and by his order dated September 5, 1939, refused to state a case to the High Court and declined to interfere with the order of the Assistant Commissioner confirming the assessment.

SPINNERS'

ASSOCIATION High Court :—

"Whether having regard to the objects of the Association and the manner in which they are carried out and the purpose for which its funds are applied the income of the Association is liable to income-tax and/or super-tax."

The opinion of the Commissioner was as follows :—

"The contention of the Association is that its income is not liable to tax by reason of the provision of s. 4(3) (i) of the Act as its income is derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for charitable purposes. Before the Assistant Commissioner it was contended by the Association that its income was applied to objects of general public utility which were a charitable purpose within the meaning of the said section. In its said petition it has been contended by the Association that the object of the Association from its very commencement has been the relief of the poor through the propagation of hand-spinning and hand-weaving which is a charitable purpose within the meaning of the said section.

As s. 66 of the Act requires that I should state my opinion on the question raised, I have the honour to state that in my view s. 4(3) (i) of the Act does not apply to the income of the Association, as (1) the dominant purpose of the Association is a political purpose; (2) the main purpose of the Association is in any event not a valid charitable purpose in law; and (3) some of the objects of the Association are clearly not charitable objects...

It is submitted that it clearly appears from what has been stated above that the Association forms an integral part of the Congress organisation and has been at all material times utilised by that organisation for the purpose of carrying out its political objects. It is noticeable that the constitution of the Association nowhere refers to the relief of the poor or the giving of employment to the unemployed or to the partially employed as its objects. Hand-spinning and hand-weaving is an essential part of the programme of the Indian National Congress which is admittedly a political organisation. The Association has been formed and promoted by the Congress and has carried on its activities under the guidance of the Congress for the purpose of carrying out of this part of the programme of the Congress. The wearing of khadi is the symbol of the Congress and the Association has in furtherance of the objects of the Congress conducted propaganda in villages with the objects of increasing production of khadi and thus spreading far and wide the influence of the Congress organisation. It may be that the carrying out of this part of the programme of the Congress and of the activities of the Association involves the employment of many people who are either totally unemployed or partially employed and thus helps them to earn wages. It is submitted however that from the fact that the working of this part of the programme of the Congress results in giving such employment and wages it cannot be inferred that the dominant purpose and object of the Association is charitable and not political. On the contrary the facts above stated clearly show that the Association and its activities are entirely dominated by the National Congress and are a part of the political activities of that body. The conclusion is, therefore, irresistible that the dominant and governing purpose of the Association is a political purpose. In this connection I beg to rely on Bowman v. Secular Society Ltd., [1917] A. C. 406; In re Tetley, [1923] 1 Ch. 258; The Trustees of the Tribune Press of Lahore v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 41 Bom L. R.

1150; and Subhas Chandra Bose v. Gordhandas I. Patel, 42 Bom L. R. 89, wherein it has been laid down that a trust having for its objects the promotion of a political purpose would not be regarded as a charitable trust.

Even assuming that the dominant purpose of the Association is not political, the further question that arises is whether its dominant purpose is a good charitable purpose in law. In this connection attention may be invited to what has been stated above as the main object of the Association, viz., the establishment of an expert organisation for the development of hand-spinning and khaddar. The way in which this main object of the Association may be carried out is laid down in clause 4 of the constitution of the Association. Paragraphs 2 to 4 of the petition of appeal of the Association to the Assistant Commissioner, dated March 25, 1939, Exhibit 'B' hereto, state the means adopted by the Association to give effect to its aforesaid main object. It is submitted that the said main object of the Association is not in any way different from that of any other Association formed for the purpose of organising and advancing a particular industry, e.g., the mill industry. Its object is the promotion and organisation of the hand-spinning and weaving industry. That object is carried out by the Association on a strictly trading basis, viz., by employing workers who are paid on a piece wage system on the basis of the quality and quantity of the hand-spun yarn and cloth purchased from them. The cloth produced is ultimately sold at a price which would cover all the charges incurred in respect of it and provides a further margin for the accumulation of a surplus. It is submitted that this activity of the Association is in no way different from the activity of a trading concern. Every trading or industrial concern employs labourers many of whom are poor and in need of employment. The fact that employment is afforded to persons who may be wholly or partially unemployed cannot result in the inference that the concern is established with the object of and is carried on for the purpose of giving relief to the poor or the unemployed. The relief of the poor and the employment of the unemployed or the partially employed would be merely an incidental result of the carrying on of the trade or the industrial concern. In this connection it has to be noticed, as pointed out above, that the relief of the poor or the unemployed or the partially employed is not stated in the objects of the Association to be its purpose. The Association does not incur any expenditure for the relief of the poor in the shape of giving them food, clothing or shelter because they are poor. The workers employed by the Association are employed by them irrespective of the fact as to whether they are poor or well-to-do and the wages paid to them have reference not to their needs but the amount of the work turned out by them. It is, therefore, submitted that the object of the Association is not the relief of the poor and is not, therefore, a charitable object in law.

It is further submitted that the aforesaid object of the Association cannot in law be regarded as an object of general public utility. The Association can at most be said to benefit not the general public as a whole but a section of it only. I invite attention in this connection to the case of The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. The Grain Merchants' Association of Bombay, decided by this Hon'ble Court and reported in 6 I. T. R. 427.

Finally it is submitted that in any event and assuming that some of the objects of the Association are charitable, some of its objects are clearly not charitable objects in law and that under the circumstances the Association cannot claim the benefit of the exemption given by s. 4(3)(i). In this connection, I rely on some of the objects to which I have already drawn attention above and which do not fall within the category of charitable objects. In this connection I rely on the decisions in Mahomed Ibrahim Riza Malak v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Nagpur, reported in 32 Bom. L. R. 1538; N. C. Kelkar v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 10 I. T. C. 65; and Rex v. The Special Commissioner of Income-tax (Ex parte The Headmasters' Conference, and the Incorporated Association of Preparatory Schools) 10 T. C. 63.

O. C. J. For the reasons stated above, I invite your Lordships to answer the question 1941 set out in paragraph 7 above in the affirmative."

V. F. Taraporewala, with D. B. Desai, for the assesseees.

M. C. Setalvad, Advocate General, with G. N. Joshi, for the Commissioner of Income-tax.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a reference made by the Commissioner of Income-tax raising a question which he was directed to raise by this Court under s. 66(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. The question is:—

"Whether having regard to the objects of the Association and the manner in which they are carried out and the purpose for which its funds are applied the income of the Association is liable to income-tax and/or super-tax."

The Association in question is the All India Spinners' Association. It was formed as an unregistered Association in the year 1925, and in the year 1937 it was registered under Act XXI of 1860. In the month of March 1938, notice was served on the assesseees under s. 34 of the Act claiming that income had escaped assessment for the accounting year ending December 31, 1935, and at the same time notice was also served on the assesseees under s. 22 claiming a return in respect of the accounting year ending December 31, 1936. So that the income with which we have to deal is income which was earned in years when the Association was an unregistered Association. It is claimed that the Association is not assessable to income-tax in respect of profits admitted to have been earned in the accounting years by reason of the exemption contained in s. 4(3)(i) of the Act of 1922. That sub-section provides:—

"Any income, profits or gains falling within the following classes shall not be included in the total income of the person receiving them:—

(i) Any income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes, and in the case of property so held in part only for such purposes, the income applied, or finally set apart for application, thereto."

Then there is a proviso at the end of the sub-section which reads:—

"In this sub-section 'charitable purpose', includes relief of the poor, education, medical relief and the advancement of any other object of general public utility, but nothing contained in clause (i), (ia) or clause (ii) shall operate to exempt from the provisions of this Act that part of the income of a private religious trust which does not enure for the benefit of the public."

So that what the assesseees have to establish, if they are to avoid liability to tax, is that the income assessed is derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation for religious or charitable purposes.

The Association never possessed any formal trust deed, but there was a document, intended apparently to define its objects, which is exhibit G. It provides in cl. (1):—

"Whereas the time has arrived for the establishment of an expert organisation for the development of hand-spinning and khaddar and whereas experience has shown that such development is not possible without a permanent organisation, unaffected and uncontrolled by politics, political changes or political bodies, an organisation called the All India Spinners' Association is hereby established with the consent of the All India Congress Committee as an integral part of the Congress organisation, but with independent existence and powers."

In point of fact, the Association could not have any independent existence.

It was not registered, and, therefore, consisted only of the persons who had become members of the Association. Clause 2 contains the names of the members of the Board of Trustees and Executive Council, and, no doubt, those names suggest that the Association was formed in connection with the Congress Party, a political body. Indeed, that is not disputed. Then cl. (4) deals with the objects of the Association, and is in these terms :—

Beaumont C.J.

"The Council shall have the right to raise loans, to collect subscriptions, to hold immoveable property, to invest funds under proper security, to give and take mortgage for the furtherance of hand-spinning and khaddar, to give financial assistance to khaddar organisation by way of loans, gifts or bounties, to help or establish schools or institutions where hand-spinning is taught, to help or open khaddar stores, to establish a khaddar service, to act as agency on behalf of the Congress to receive self-spun yarn as subscription to the Congress and to issue certificates and to do all the things that may be considered necessary for the furtherance of its objects, with power to make regulations for the conduct of affairs of the Association or the Council and to make such amendments in the present constitution, as may be considered necessary from time to time."

It is to be noticed that that document is couched not in the language of obligation, but of permission. Assuming, however, that it does define the objects, there is nothing therein which limits in any way the purposes for which any profits derived by the Association can be applied. The objects specified do not suggest that profits will be made. The only object, which can result in profits, seems to be that of opening khaddar stores. It is further to be noticed that under the concluding words the Council can amend the constitution as may be considered necessary from time to time.

The method in which the Association works and the manner in which the Association's profits were earned are set out in cl. (4) of the petition, which the assessee presented to the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, appealing against the assessment, and I think I cannot do better than read out the passage. It reads :—

"The Association carried out the said objects inter alia in the following manner :— Out of the funds in its hands which have mostly been contributed by donations from the public and subscriptions from the members of the Association, the Association buys Charkhas and handlooms, and supplies them to the inhabitants of villages within the limits of the various branches of the Association free of charge and further buys raw cotton and gives the same to the said persons for the purpose of spinning yarn from such cotton. The Association gives a certain wage to the said persons which, in some cases, is the sole source of income to these persons and in others adds to the earnings of the said persons so as to enable them to maintain and support their families. The yarn so spun is taken over by the Association and supplied to the other persons for weaving cloth on handlooms. The Association also buys hand-spun yarn from the said persons who have spun the same out of their own raw cotton paying them for the same on the basis of the cost of the raw cotton and the wages for spinning the same into yarn. The persons to whom all the yarn is handed over for weaving are also paid a certain wage sufficient either in itself or as an addition to the other income of the persons to maintain and support their families. The wages so paid to the spinners and weavers are not based on the current wages prevailing

O. C. J. for similar work but are fixed on the basis of giving to the said persons as far 1941 as possible an income sufficient to enable them to support their families. The — cloth so woven is taken over by the Association and is sold in the Khaddar stores
In re established by the Association in various centres by the branches of the Association.
 THE The price charged to the public for such cloth is calculated on the basis of the ALL-INDIA cost price incurred by the Association in the manner hereinbefore stated plus a SPINNERS' certain percentage for shop and overhead charges, without any reference to or ASSOCIATION connection with the demand for the same and the price of similar mill cloth — sold in the market. In the ordinary course the moneys realised by the Association
Beaumont C.J. by such sales are a little more or less than the cost calculated on the aforesaid — basis."

It appears that for the years with which we are dealing the Association had decided to increase the amount of wages to be paid to spinners and weavers, with the result that the price which they charged for completed hand-spun cloth had to be increased. However, as I understand it, they sold their stocks of cloth at a price based on the increased wages to be paid, whereas in fact that cloth had been manufactured when the reduced scale of wages was in force. The result was that the Association made a profit, and the question is whether such profit is derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation for religious or charitable purposes.

Now, it is argued that this scheme is a scheme for poor relief, the idea being to provide work at certain remuneration for poor agriculturists during that season of the year in which they are not engaged in active agricultural employment. The plan involves, no doubt, subsidising what is essentially an uneconomic industry, because it is admitted that the hand-spun cloth is sold at a price which cannot compete economically with cloth manufactured in the mills, but it is said that the object of the scheme, being to relieve poverty amongst agriculturists, is in its essence a charitable object. If we had to decide whether the scheme falls within the words "object of public utility," it would be pertinent to observe that the plan is open to criticism. Some economists think that any scheme for diverting industry into uneconomic sources is in the long run bad for a country; other economists may take the view that an industry, although producing no profits, may nevertheless be beneficial to the inhabitants of the country by providing work for an essential class. It may be said too that if this scheme succeeds, and if a large amount of hand-spun cloth is sold, the result will be to diminish the sale of cloth manufactured in mills, and, therefore, whilst relieving poverty amongst agriculturists, the scheme may create poverty amongst millhands. But those are really economic questions, and if I had to decide them judicially, I should require to be fortified by opinions of experts. However, I am prepared to assume for the purpose of the present case that this is a scheme for the relief of the poor, and, if so, it is a charitable purpose, whether or no the Court considers the scheme a wise one. The learned Commissioner considers that it is not to be regarded as a charitable purpose, because in its essence it is intended to advance the purposes of the Congress, which is a political body. But if one assumes that the purpose of the Association is relief of the poor, it is none the less charitable, because some political body may consider that it affords the best method of relieving the poor and may, therefore, adopt the scheme.

But assuming that the Association is in fact carrying out a scheme for the relief of the poor, it seems to me that it fails to bring itself within the exemption under s. 4(3)(i). The Association does not show that the property from which these profits were derived, namely, the hand-spun cloth sold in the Association's shops, is property held under trust or other legal obligation for charitable purposes. At the time when these profits were made, there was no legal obligation upon the Association to devote their profits derived from the sale of cloth to any particular purpose, and the fact that they have in practice, as I will assume, devoted their profits to charitable purposes, does not create any legal obligation. Many people devote a part of their income to charitable purposes, but that does not secure them any exemption from income-tax. There must be a binding legal obligation to devote the income to charitable purposes. It seems to me quite impossible to hold that this Association was bound to devote its profits to charitable purposes. The members of the unregistered Association were free to apply their profits to any purposes they chose.

That being so, in my view the Association have not brought themselves within the exemption, and we must, therefore, answer the question raised in the affirmative.

The assessee to pay costs of the Commissioner.

B. J. WADIA J. I am of the same opinion. The question raised by the reference involves consideration of a point of law based on s. 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act of 1922, read with the proviso at the end of the sub-section. According to that proviso the expression "charitable purposes" referred to in the section includes relief of the poor, education, medical relief, and the advancement of any other object of general public utility. Reading the relevant parts of the sub-section and the proviso together, so far as they are applicable for the purposes of the present reference, it follows that in order that the income in dispute may be exempt from payment of income-tax, it must be income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly either for the relief of the poor or for the advancement of any other object of general public utility. There are, therefore, two points which arise for consideration, namely, (1) whether the property held by the All India Spinners' Association is held under a trust or other legal obligation, and (2) whether it is so held for the purpose mentioned above. The amount of the assessment is not in dispute.

Taking the second point first, it was argued that the real purpose for which the property was held was to relieve the poor agriculturists living within the limits of the various branches of the Association. The learned Advocate General, however, pointed out that the main object was the development of hand-spinning and khaddar as stated in the first clause of the constitution of the Association, and he argued that the carrying out of this object involved only incidentally the relief of the poor agriculturists, like any other industrial venture. I am, however, prepared to assume on reading the constitution that the real, underlying object of the Association was to benefit the poor agriculturists in the villages, specially at that time of the year when they are not actively engaged in agricultural operations. Whether the method employed to relieve this poverty is effective or reasonable from the economic point of view is a matter outside the Court's consideration. But if the object of the Association is the relief of poverty, the fact that the Association is "an integral part of the Congress organization", as described in its constitution, is not really material. The income-tax authorities have laid great stress on this point of the connection of the Association with the Congress. They say in one place that "the main object of the Association in furthering the production of khadi is political". In another place it is stated that "the wearing of khadi is the symbol of the Congress Party just as the wearing of black shirts is the symbol of the Fascists in Italy". In yet another place it is stated that one of the main objects of the Association was "to effectively boycott Lancashire cloth". Whether all this is true or not is also not for the Court to consider. If an association is set on foot by a political organization and is connected with it, but still has for its real object the relief of poverty, its connection with the political organization does not, in my opinion, make its real object any the less charitable.

The other point for consideration is whether the property from which the Association derived its profits was held by it under a trust or other legal obligation. A trust is an obligation annexed to the ownership of property. There is, however, no trust-deed nor any clear declaration of trust in this case. It is true that no formal or particular words are necessary to create a trust or a legal obligation; but the language used must make it certain that the author of the trust intended to create a trust or a legal obligation binding on himself or on the person to whom the property was given. The intention to create a trust or other legal obligation must be indicated with reasonable certainty. Reading all the words of cl. 4 of the constitution of the Association which are relied on, they do not indicate a trust or other legal obligation with such certainty; and the Court will not raise such trust or obligation where from the words used the intention to create a trust or obligation is not clearly and definitely expressed. One essential of a trust or a legal obligation is that it should be imperative. In my opinion cl. (4) is not couched in language which is imperative or which creates a trust or any other legal obligation. I may also point out that the clause begins by saying that the Council of the Association shall have the "right" to do all that is mentioned in that clause, and at the end it is stated that the Council may also make such amendments in the present constitution as may be considered necessary from time to time. There are no words in the whole clause which have the binding force of a legal obligation, nor are the real elements of a trust present in them. Clause 3 does not carry the case of the Association any further.

Reference was made in the argument to the case decided by the Privy Council, Trustees of Tribune Press v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab<sup>1</sup>. But in that case it was not disputed that the will of the testator created a trust and directed his trustees to maintain the Press in question and the newspaper, namely, the Tribune, for the purpose or object mentioned. The only dispute was whether the purpose or object was one of general public utility within the meaning of the section of the Indian Income-tax Act, and their Lordships held that it was.

It was stated on behalf of the Association that the surplus amount realised by the sale of the cloth woven out of the hand-spun yarn was also utilised in the same manner as the other funds of the Association, namely, inter alia in getting yarn and cloth manufactured, and providing wages for the persons engaged in such manufacture. The learned counsel for the Association contended that the surplus income was in fact wholly applied or set apart for the same charitable purpose. It seems that that has been the practice of the Association, and that it has been followed ever since it was founded. But a practice, however long, cannot create a trust or a legal obligation under which the property must be held, in order that the income derived from it may be exempt from assessment. It may be that the practice has been followed by the Association because they feel they are bound to do so out of motives of patriotism. But that also cannot create a trust or an obligation which is binding in law. The real question for consideration is whether the income assessed by the income-tax authorities is income derived from property held under a trust or other legal obligation, and the words and acts relied upon do not effectively create such trust or other legal obligation within the meaning of the section.

For these reasons the question raised in the reference must be answered in the affirmative.

A person after obtaining a decree for maintenance assigned certain arrears of maintenance under that decree to the applicant. The applicant applied, under O. XXI, rr. 11 and 16, of the Civil Procedure Code, to the Court passing the decree to execute it. The judgment-debtor contended that the arrears of maintenance purported to have been assigned to the applicant had in fact been paid, and, therefore, there was no effective assignment. The alleged payment was, however, not certified or recorded as required by O. XXI, r. 2(1)(2) :—

PROCEEDINGS in execution.

One Chandrabai obtained a decree against her step-son Krishnaji, on March 29, 1927, directing payment of maintenance to her at the rate of Rs. 90 per year.

On March 5, 1935, the decree-holder assigned by a registered deed her right to recover maintenance due to her for the years 1932-1934 (i.e. Rs. 270) to Moolchand Keshavchand (assignee).

The assignee applied to the Court which passed the decree for the recovery of Rs. 270 from the judgment-debtor. The Court ordered notices to issue to the judgment-debtor under O. XXI, rr. 16 and 22. In answer to the notices the judgment-debtor set up the plea that on January 21, 1935, he had paid Rs. 250 to Chandrabai (decree-holder) in satisfaction of arrears of maintenance for the years 1932-1934, and that she had remitted the balance due. The payment was evidenced by a receipt, which bore the thumb impression of the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor produced the receipt on August 10, 1935.

The assignee then raised the plea that the receipt was a forged one, and that the thumb impression on it was false. At his instance the receipt was sent to the Deputy Inspector of Police, C.I.D., Bombay Presidency, but that officer did not pronounce any opinion as the thumb-impression on the receipt was not clear. The receipt was next submitted to Charles E. Hardless of Allahabad, finger-print expert, who opined that the impression on the receipt and that on the registered deed of assignment in favour of the assignee were from the same thumb.

The Subordinate Judge held, relying on the above opinion, that satisfaction of the amount claimed was proved and dismissed the darkhast with costs.

On appeal, the District Judge excluded the opinion of the finger-print expert from consideration, found on evidence that the decree-holder's statement that she was not paid Rs. 250 was true, and that the judgment-debtor had failed to prove that the receipt was genuine. The execution proceedings were therefore allowed to proceed.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court, contending inter alia that the lower Court ought to have held that the deed of assignment did not entitle the assignee to claim the amount in question and that the said amount had been paid to the decree-holder and there was nothing which could be assigned or transferred to him.

On February 25, 1941, the appeal was placed for disposal before Sen J., but his Lordship referred it to a division bench.

On February 27, 1941, the appeal came up for hearing before Beaumont C. J. and Macklin J., who heard it on that day and on March 5, 1941. On the latter date, their Lordships referred the case to a full bench.

Accordingly, on March 6, 1941, a full bench consisting of Beaumont C. J., and Macklin and Sen JJ. heard the appeal.

K. G. Datar, for the appellant. The question for consideration in this appeal is whether a judgment-debtor, debarred under r. 2 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, from pleading satisfaction of a decree, can nevertheless plead such satisfaction when objecting to an assignment of the decree in answer to the notice under r. 16 of O. XXI of the Code.

The provisions of r. 2 of O. XXI make it clear that it is only the Court executing the decree which will not recognise any payment or adjustment if the same has not been certified or recorded as required under that rule. The prohibition of recognition of uncertified payments is thus confined only to executing Courts and such payments can be recognised by other Courts. The payment itself is not invalid inasmuch as a suit could be based upon such uncertified payment and the judgment-debtor may sue the decree-holder for recovery of the same.

Then the question arises when does the Court commence to act as the executing Court? Under s. 38 of the Code a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is transferred for execution. Section 39 sets out under what circumstances a decree may be transferred to another Court for execution. The transferring Court is described as the Court which passed the decree. When it sends the decree to another Court for execution, I submit, it is not itself acting as an executing Court. The executing Court in such a case is the Court to which the decree is transferred. Again s. 41 uses the words "the Court which passed the decree". The words "Court executing the decree" occur in s. 42. Both the phrases occur in s. 50. Even r. 2, sub-r. (1), of O. XXI, makes it clear that the Court when recording the payment or adjustment is not necessarily the Court which is executing the decree. Payment may be made by the judgment-debtor out of Court as contemplated by r. 1 of O. XXI, even before any execution proceedings have been started by the decree-holder. In such a case the Court records the payment not as a Court executing the decree but as a Court whose duty it is to execute the decree. In other words, at the time when it records such payment, it has not yet become the Court executing the decree. It is thus clear that these provisions refer to a point of time when the Court acts under these provisions even after the decree is passed in the suit but before the commencement of any execution proceedings. Rules 3 to 9 of O. XXI form one group and they indicate what Courts are Courts executing the decree.

Rules 10 and 11 may be read together. I submit that it is only after an application under r. 10 is filed that the Court may be said to commence to act as an executing Court. Anything done by the Court before an application under r. 10 is filed, as for instance certifying or recording under r. 2 or transferring the decree for execution under s. 39, is done by the Court not as purporting to act as an executing Court but as a Court which passed the decree.

Now under r. 16 of O. XXI, when the assignee wants to proceed with the execution of the decree, he has first to establish his title under assignment. Ordinarily it is only the person appearing on the face of the decree as the decree-holder who is entitled to execution, unless it be shown by some other person under O. XXI, r. 16, that he has taken the place of the decree-holder. What he has therefore to establish in the first instance is his own title under the assignment and this must be done in the Court which passed the decree. The term 'which passed the decree' is used in r. 16 not merely to contradistinguish the Court from the Court to which execution is transferred but in my submission it also excludes the idea of itself being the executing Court as well. In fact the Court which passed the decree has not yet reached the stage when the Court becomes the executing Court. The question as to assignment arising under this rule is regarded as a preliminary question and the Court considering it is the Court which passed the decree, and until that question has been disposed of no question of execution can arise and therefore there is no Court at that stage which can be termed "the Court executing the decree". See Raghunath Govind v. Gangaram Yesu.<sup>1</sup> The proviso to r. 16 also indicates that execution is to commence only after the objections as to assignment are heard and decided.

It is only when the assignee after establishing his title makes an application under r. 10 of O. XXI that the execution of the decree is said to have commenced and the Court becomes the executing Court. Even the assignee is bound to make an application under rr. 10 and 11. This application, it may be noted, must be made to the executing Court and in the case when the decree is transferred for execution from one Court to another—to the latter Court which is alone the Court executing the decree. Co.<sup>1</sup> It is true that the other High Courts have taken a different view, and the rulings which our Court approved of and relied on in Raghunath Govind v. Gangaram Yesu were considered and overruled by the full bench case of Subramanyam v. Ramaswami.<sup>2</sup> See also Murari Lal v. Raghur Saran.<sup>3</sup>

But our Court has uniformly followed the ruling in Raghunath Govind v. Gangaram Yesu and having regard to the longstanding practice in this respect their Lordships in the unreported case (Bapu Damodar Bhadre v. Sadas Shiv Krishna Joshi) did not think it necessary to refer the question to a full bench for examining the correctness of the view taken in Raghunath's case in the light of recent decisions of other High Courts. I, therefore, submit that this practice which only relates to procedure may not be disturbed.

Finally, I submit when a stranger comes to the Court and wants to take the position of the decree-holder, it should be open to the judgment-debtor to challenge his right on all possible grounds if only because a new situation has arisen by the interposition of the assignee and this new situation for which the decree-holder himself is responsible should give the judgment-debtor an opportunity to plead an uncertified payment though that opportunity is lost to him as against the decree-holder.

Cases of fraudulent assignments may also be easily conceived ; and in such cases I submit equities would require that the judgment-debtor should be able to plead satisfaction even though he has not complied with the provisions of r. 2 of O. XXI.

K. N. Dharap, for the respondent, was not called upon.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a second appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Belgaum, and has been referred to a full bench, because it raises a question, whether the decision of a bench of this Court in Raghunath Govind v. Gangaram Yesu<sup>4</sup> is correct.

There was a decree in this case for maintenance, and the decree-holder assigned certain arrears of maintenance under that decree to the present respondent. The present respondent applied to execute the decree under O. XXI, rr. 11 and 16, of the Civil Procedure Code. The answer made by the judgment-debtor was that the arrears of maintenance purported to have been assigned had in fact been paid, and, therefore, there was no effective assignment. The trial Judge held the satisfaction proved and dismissed the dakhast. The learned District Judge, in appeal, held on a legal point that the satisfaction was not proved and directed execution to proceed. In this Court the first point taken is that inasmuch as the alleged payment has not been certified under O. XXI, r. 2, it is not open to the judgment-debtor to prove such payment, even if in fact it took place.

Order XXI, r. 2, provides in sub-r. (1) that when a decree is adjusted out of Court, the decree-holder has to certify such adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, and the Court is required to record the same accordingly. Then sub-r. (2) enables the judgment-debtor to get payment or adjustment recorded, where the decree-holder fails to do so. Then

F. B. sub-r. (3) provides that a payment or adjustment, which has not been certified or recorded, shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree. 1941 I apprehend that that rule was passed in the public interest. No doubt, KRISHNA sometimes it operates harshly by preventing an honest debtor, who has paid GOVIND off his creditor, from proving the fact; but, on the other hand, it prevents MOOLCHAND false claims of payment having been made being presented to Courts in v. execution. The Legislature having enacted that rule, it is the duty of Courts KESHAV- to give effect to it. Rule 10 provides that where the holder of a decree desires CHAND to execute it, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree, or if the Beaumont Cj. decree has been sent under the provisions in the Code to another Court, then to such Court. Rule 11 specifies the particulars which have to be given in an application for execution. Then r. 16 deals with the assignment of a decree and provides, so far as material, that where a decree is transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, the transferee may apply for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it; and the decree may be executed in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application were made by such decree-holder. Those last words certainly seem to suggest that the assignee will be placed in the same position as the decree-holder, if the Court is satisfied that the assignment is in order. The first proviso to the rule requires notice to be issued to the transferor and the judgment-debtor, and the Court has to hear their objections to the execution of the decree.

Now, the view which this Court took in Raghunath Govind v. Gangaram Yesu was that inasmuch as under r. 16 the application has to be made to the Court which passed the decree, which may not be the Court for the time being executing the decree, because execution of the decree may have been transferred to another Court under the provisions of ss. 38 and 39 of the Code, the Court hearing an application under r. 16 is not a Court executing the decree within O. XXI, r. 2, sub-r. (3). The Court in effect treated the application under r. 16 as being an application for leave to execute the decree, and considered that until that leave was given, the Court which passed the decree was not a Court executing the decree. But, with all respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, they have overlooked the fact that an application under r. 16 is in the express words of the rule an application for execution of the decree, and it is not an application for leave to execute the decree. Form No. 7 in Appendix E, which is the form of notice to be issued under r. 16, recognises that an application has been made to the Court for execution of the decree on the allegation that the decree has been transferred to the applicant, and then it gives notice to show cause why execution should not be granted, not why leave to execute should not be granted. So that, in my opinion, on the wording of O. XXI, r. 16, it is clear that the Court to which the application is made, which is the Court which passed the decree, is hearing the application as an executing Court, and is accordingly bound by the prohibition contained in r. 2(3).

Mr. Datar contends that there must always be two applications,—one under r. 16 to get the assignment recognised and a further application under r. 11 giving the particulars of the methods in which execution is prayed, and that the first application is really not one for execution. No doubt, it is open to the assignee to make two applications as was held by Mr. Justice B. J. Wadia in Baijnath v. Birraj: In re Jankiprasad,<sup>1</sup> and in a case where there are any complications, or where the decree has been transferred for execution at the instance of the decree-holder to another Court, that may be a desirable course. But I entertain no doubt that it is not necessary to have two applications. A single application may ask that the decree be executed at the instance of the assignee in the manner specified, complying with the requirements of r. 11, and that course was in fact adopted in the present case.

The decision of this Court in Raghunath v. Gangaram was followed by a bench of this Court in Ganpaya v. Krishnappa<sup>2</sup> but Mr. Justice Shah, who was the only Judge who had not been a party to the decision in Raghunath v. Gangaram (supra), in following the decision expressed a difficulty in seeing how the assignee of the decree could be in a worse position than the decree-holder. No doubt, the decision has been followed in unreported cases in this Court, but it has not met with the approval of other High Courts. It was dissented from by a full bench of the Madras High Court in Subramanyam v. Ramaswami<sup>3</sup> where earlier decisions of that Court, which had been relied on by this Court in Raghunath v. Gangaram (supra), were overruled. The decision has also been dissented from by the Allahabad High Court in Murari Lal v. Raghubir Saran.<sup>4</sup>

It is said that on the principle of stare decisis we ought not to overrule the decision, but it is not a decision which enacts any principle of law, or which affects title to property. It seems to me to be a decision which is based on a plain misconstruction of the words of r. 16, and as it has not been followed in other High Courts, I think it is desirable that this Court should come into line with the rest of the High Courts, and that we should overrule the decision in Ganpaya v. Krishnappa.<sup>5</sup>

On that view of the case, it is not necessary to consider the view which the learned District Judge took on the question whether payment was proved, but I must not be taken as doubting the correctness of the view of the law which the learned District Judge took on that part of the case. It is, however, not necessary to deal with that matter.

The appeal, therefore, will be dismissed with costs.

MACKLIN J. I agree.

Execution—Attachment of portion of public servant's salary—Order imposing liability made against Government or public body—Right of Government or public body to move Court to shew illegality of order—Inherent jurisdiction of Court to hear such application—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sec. 60(i), O. XXI, rr. 48 and 58—Attachment of salary of public servant which is exempt from attachment under s. 60(i) of Civil Procedure Code—Whether public servant can contract himself out of statutory provision or waive his right—Voluntary transfer of part of salary by public servant—Public policy—Illegality of such transfer—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), Sec. 6 (f)—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), Sec. 23.

Where an order is made against Government or a public body, and the law imposes liability in case the order is not obeyed, it is open to Government or the public body to move the Court and contend that the order is not justified by the law, and the Court has inherent power to consider such an application.

Dictum in Governor General in Council v. Magniram Mayachand,<sup>5</sup> not approved.

A public servant, whose salary is exempt from attachment under s. 60 (i) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, cannot contract himself out of this statutory provision. Such a contract is opposed to public policy and is void under s. 6(f), of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

The principle of waiver does not apply to a statutory prohibition based on public policy.

A decree for Rs. 236 was passed against a peon serving in a Government Post Office and drawing a monthly salary of Rs. 41. The judgment-creditor got him arrested in execution of the decree. In order to escape from arrest he entered into a compromise with the judgment-creditor whereby he agreed that a sum of Rs. 6 per mensem should be deducted from his salary until the decree was satisfied. The Court recorded the compromise and passed an order under O. XXI, r. 48, Civil Procedure Code, directing the Post Master General to send Rs. 6 every month to the Court till the decree was fully satisfied. The Post Master General applied under O. XXI, r. 58, to set aside the order on the ground that it was illegal in virtue of the provisions of s. 60 (i) of the Civil Procedure Code, s. 6(f) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and of s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. The lower Court overruled the contention holding that the order was not illegal and that the Post Master General had no locus standi to apply under O. XXI, r. 58, and it therefore refused to raise the attachment. On appeal :—

Held, reversing the order of the lower Court, (1) that O. XXI, r. 48, was subject to the provisions of s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Post Master General was entitled to bring to the notice of the Court the illegality of the order of attachment as Government would be liable for any sum paid in contravention of the section ;

(2) that the agreement between the judgment-creditor and the judgment-debtor amounted to a voluntary transfer of a part of the latter's salary and was opposed to the provisions of s. 6(f) of the Transfer of Property Act and s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code ;

(3) that it was not open to the judgment-debtor to contract himself out of those statutory provisions or to waive their benefit ; and

(4) that, therefore, the attachment of the salary and the transfer thereof were illegal and opposed to public policy.

APPLICATION to raise attachment.

One Mayachand, father of Chenmal and his brothers (opponents Nos. 1-4), obtained a decree for Rs. 236 against the applicant Gangaram in the Small Causes Court, Poona. Gangaram was employed as a postman on a monthly salary of Rs. 41 in the City Post Office, Poona.

Mayachand filed a darkhast in 1938 for execution of the decree praying for the arrest of Gangaram. Gangaram was arrested and there was a compromise between him and Mayachand whereby it was agreed that Rs. 6 should be withheld every month from his salary by his superior officer and paid to Mayachand until the decretal amount was satisfied. The Court ordered the compromise to be recorded.

As nothing was paid under the decree the sons of Mayachand, opponents Nos. 1 to 4, filed a darkhast for executing the decree and prayed for attachment of Gangaram's salary to the extent of the amount of the decree.

On March 14, 1939, the Small Causes Court at Poona sent an order under O. XXI, r. 48, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to the Post Master General, Bombay directing him to send Rs. 6 every month to the Court in satisfaction of the decree against Gangaram.

CHENMAL

The Post Master General (applicant) applied to the Small Causes Court under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, to raise the attachment and cancel the order served on him on the ground that Gangaram's salary being Rs. 41 per month, no portion of it was liable to attachment under s. 60 (i) of the Civil Procedure Code. He also urged that the agreement between Mayachand and Gangaram being a voluntary transfer of a public servant's salary was illegal and opposed to public policy under s. 6 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, and that the right of exemption from attachment and the restriction against voluntary transfer could not be waived by Gangaram as the attachment and the transfer were void on the ground of public policy. Gangaram also made a similar application to the Court.

The Court of Small Causes rejected both these applications holding that the Post Master General was not entitled to apply under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, that Gangaram was entitled to waive the benefit of s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the compromise by which the benefit had been waived was neither illegal nor against public policy. In the course of its judgment it observed.—

"There is no doubt that such an agreement contravenes the provisions of s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code inasmuch as it allows the creditor to attach a moiety of pay which is not attachable. Section 60 confers certain benefits on the debtors by giving a statutory right, but such a right can be waived and the claim to the benefit can be given up by contract. (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXVII, p. 196). There are many decided cases in India which recognise this principle. In Ganga Bishnu v. Jay Mohan Ram (102 L. C. 616) it was held that an agriculturist can waive the privilege of the non-attachability of his house under s. 60, Civil Procedure Code. In Hukum Chand Oswal v. Taharunessa Bibi (16 Cal. 504) there was an agreement in contravention of s. 257A of the old Civil Procedure Code. It was held that a suit on such an agreement was maintainable and that the agreement was not void under s. 23 of the Contract Act. It is laid down that the words 'any law' in s. 23 refer to some substantive law and not to an adjective law such as the Procedure Code is. The case of Uzir Biswas v. Hardev Das (1920, A. I. R. Cal. 424) related to the house of an agriculturist and it was held that he cannot object to its attachment in execution since he had created a charge on it by a compromise. In Ramdhir v. Sheodutta it is held that the protection given under s. 60, Civil Procedure Code, is for the benefit of the judgment-debtor and can be waived by him. In Lila Ram v. Phusalsingh (1927, A. I. R. Lah. 939) a voluntary transfer by an agriculturist judgment-debtor in satisfaction of a decree was held not prohibited by law. The document though not registered was held admissible for showing that the judgment-debtor had waived his right of objecting to the attachment. In Bombay a compromise in contravention of s. 15B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was held to be not bad in law (Shivayagappa v. Govindappa, 37 Bom. 314, F.B.). In another case (Basangounda v. Baslingappa, 38 Bom. L. R. 593) a decree embodying a compromise in contravention of s. 5 of the Hereditary Offices Act was held to act as an estoppel until it was set aside. It would appear as if a different principle is laid down in Shankarlal v. Raghunathdas (37 Bom. L. R. 778). It is decided that the waiver of his status by an agriculturist does not preclude him from raising the plea of that status under s. 21 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act when he is sought to be arrested in execution of that decree. Certain remarks in the judgment of Murphy J. show that their Lordships confined the decision to the facts of the particular case. At page 783 there is the following remark :

"Ordinarily except in India under the Indian Limitation Act, and perhaps in one or two other cases, it is open to an individual to waive a right he has or to concede an advantage given him by law; or so to speak, to barter it away for a valid consideration."

The case before their Lordships was decided on two broad principles namely that under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act "the Court is bound to set the original contract aside, whatever the agriculturists may have bound themselves to and secondly that the Statute (D. A. R. Act) is based on public policy. In my opinion the 'general' principle that a party can waive a statutory right is not affected by this case. On the strength of the authorities cited above I hold that the compromises in question are legal and binding.

The matter can be looked at from another point of view. The agreement amounts to a charge on the future earnings of the judgment-debtor so far as the amount agreed to be deducted is concerned. In Bansidhar v. Sant Lal (10 All. 133) hypothecation of certain future indigo produce was held to be valid. In Palaniappa v. Lakshmanan (16 Mad. 429) an equitable assignment of proceeds of an appeal was held legal. The case of the Co-operative Hindustan Bank, Ltd. v. Surendranath De (59 Cal. 667) is an authority for holding that hypothecation of future moveables creates a lien. It is stated that such a lien may be enforced by a suit. In Lagdir Nanji v. Surandra Mohun (1938, A. I. R. Cal. 606) it is held that an assignment by way of charge on future property is a perfectly valid assignment in equity which will attach to the property. From this point of view also the compromises in question are valid. (See also H. V. Law and Co., Ltd. v. Pulubharilal Singh, 59 Cal. 1372)."

Both the Post Master General and the judgment-debtor, Gangaram, made separate applications in revision to the High Court.

R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the applicant. The order of attachment is illegal. The order made under O. XXI, r. 48, is subject to the provisions in s. 60(i) which says that the salary shall not be liable to attachment. The agreement made by the judgment-debtor is illegal both under s. 60(i) of the Civil Procedure Code, and s. 6(f) of the Transfer of Property Act.

I submit that the decision in Governor General in Council v. Magniram Mayachand<sup>1</sup> is wrong.

As to the maintainability of the application under O. XXI, r. 58, my submission is that the application is maintainable. The Post Master General is interested in the property and is also possessed of the property. On this point the case of Brown v. Hanson<sup>2</sup> and the case of Calcutta Port Commissioners v. Bhubaneswar Prasad<sup>3</sup> are in my favour. In the latter case it was held that the petitioners had locus standi to make the application.

The compromise in the present case amounts to a transfer of the salary of a public officer. Section 6(f) of the Transfer of Property Act is based upon public policy. Section 23 of the Indian Contract Act is also clear. I contend that it was not open to the debtor to waive the benefit since both s. 60(i) and s. 6(f) are founded on public policy.

Choses in action are not assignable whether they are salaries of high officers or they are the wages of officers of a lower grade.

BOMBAY
v.
CHENMAL

Y. V. Dixit, for opponent No. 1. It is said that no portion of the salary could be attached. This is not correct since the present case is governed by s. 3 of Act IX. of 1937.

The first question is whether the application is maintainable. I submit that the Post-Master General has no locus standi to make the application. The application purports to have been made under O. XXI, r. 58, of the Civil Procedure Code. It cannot be said of the applicant that he has interest in the property attached. That is a requirement of r. 59. In a claim petition under r. 58 the third party has to show interest in the property attached adversely to the judgment-debtor and it could hardly be suggested that that is the case here. The case of Brown v. Hanson<sup>2</sup> is distinguishable. In the Calcutta case the application was not one under O. XXI, r. 58.

First, as to the argument based upon s. 60(i). In the present case the debtor agreed to have a portion of his salary attached in order to secure his release from arrest. Section 60 confers upon him a benefit which it would be open to him to waive. His salary was Rs. 41 and he agreed to have Rs. 6 only attached. This agreement need not be regarded as contrary to public policy. See Halsbury's Laws of England, (Hailsham's edn.), Vol. VII, p. 168, and see also Griffiths v. The Earl of Dudley.<sup>3</sup>

The case of Shivayagappa v. Govindappa<sup>6</sup> supports my contention. There was a breach of s. 15B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and it was held that the compromise was not bad in law. Basangouda v. Basalingappa<sup>7</sup>, in which the compromise was contrary to s. 5 of the Watan Act, is also in my favour. Therefore, even if the compromise was contrary to the provisions of s. 60(i) of the Civil Procedure Code and to s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, the compromise need not be regarded as illegal and contrary to public policy.

DIVATIA J. These two revisional applications have been preferred against one judgment of the Small Causes Court Judge at Poona.

The facts leading to the applications are shortly these :—On July 25, 1935, the father of opponents Nos. 1 to 4 obtained a decree for Rs. 236 against one Gangaram, employed as a postman in Poona. In 1938 the decree-holder filed a darkhast and prayed for the judgment-debtor's arrest. After he was arrested there was a compromise between him and the decree-holder on January 7, 1939, whereby it was agreed that the judgment-debtor's officer should withhold every month Rs. 6 out of his salary of Rs. 41 per month until the decretal amount was satisfied. The judgment-creditor made an endorsement on the agreement to the effect that an order may be passed to withhold Rs. 6 per month from his salary, and on the same day the learned Judge ordered the agreement to be recorded. The amount was not received by the judgment-creditor and he therefore filed darkhast No. 1251 of 1939 for executing the decree and prayed for attachment of the judgment-debtor's salary to the extent of Rs. 258. On March 14, 1939, the Small Causes Court sent an order under O. XXI, r. 48, to the Post Master General at Bombay asking him to send Rs. 6 every month to the Court in satisfaction of the decree. Thereafter on July 31, 1939, an application was made by the Post Master General to the Court out of which the first of the two revision petitions arises.

That application purports to have been made under O. XXI, r. 58, of the Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the order was illegal as no portion of the judgment-debtor's salary was liable to attachment under s. 60 (i) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was also urged that the agreement between the judgment-creditor and the judgment-debtor on which the order of attachment was based being a voluntary transfer of a public officer's salary was also illegal and opposed to public policy under s. 6(f) of the Transfer of Property Act as well as under s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act. It was further urged that this right of exemption from attachment and the restriction against voluntary transfer cannot be waived by the judgment-debtor as the attachment as well as transfer were void on the ground of public policy. It was therefore prayed that the attachment of the portion of the judgment-debtor's salary be raised and the order under O. XXI, r. 48, served on him should be cancelled.

On August 2 of the same year the judgment-debtor also applied to the Court to the same effect urging that the attachment was void under s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the agreement entered into by him with the judgment-debtor was also void. The second revision petition arises out of this application.

Both these applications were heard together and the learned Judge framed issues as to whether the Post Master General was entitled to file the application, whether the judgment-debtor was entitled to waive the benefit under s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code and whether the compromise by which the benefit had been waived was illegal and against public policy. He held that the Post Master General was not entitled to file the application, that the judgment-debtor was entitled to waive the benefit of s. 60 and that the compromise was neither illegal nor against public policy. For these reasons he rejected both the applications, and hence the Post Master General as well as the judgment-debtor have come to this Court in revision.

The main questions arising in both the applications are the same. With regard to the maintainability of the application by the Post Master General, the learned Judge held that it is not competent to the Post Master General to apply under O. XXI, r. 58. That rule provides that where any claim is preferred to, or any objection is made to the attachment of, any property attached in execution of a decree on the ground that such property is not liable to such attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim or objection. Rule 59 provides that the claimant or objector must adduce evidence to show that at the date of the attachment he had some interest in, or was possessed of, the property attached. The learned Judge was of opinion that the Post Master General had no interest in the salary due to the judgment-debtor nor was he possessed of the same. Rule 60 says that the Court has to investigate as to whether for the reason stated in the claim or objection such property was not, when attached, in the possession of the judgment-debtor or of some person in trust for him and there too the learned Judge was of opinion that it cannot be said that the Post Master General came within its provisions. Now the Post Master General's application was to set aside the order of attachment which the learned Judge sent to him under O. XXI, r. 48. Under that rule where the property to be attached was the salary or allowance of a public officer, the Court may order that the amount shall, subject to the provisions of s. 60, be withheld from such salary or allowances either in one payment or by monthly instalments as the Court may direct, and that upon notice of such order the officer shall withhold and remit to the Court the amount due under the order. It is provided under sub-r. (3) that every order made under that rule shall bind the Government while the judgment-debtor was within the local limits to which the Civil Procedure Code for the time being extended and that the Government shall be liable for any sum paid in contravention of this rule. The application purports to have been made under O. XXI, r. 58, and there is some force in the argument that he was not entitled to apply under the provisions of that rule read with rr. 59 and 60. But in my opinion there can be no doubt as to the Post Master General's right to apply to the Court if he thought that the order which he was asked to obey related to an attachment which is illegal and prohibited by statute. Order XXI, r. 48, is expressly subject to the provisions of s. 60 and all that he was doing was to bring to the Court's notice the illegality of the order especially as the Government would be liable for any sum paid in contravention of this rule. That would not amount to sitting in judgment over the order. It is only an application by a person who would be affected by the order that it should be vacated on the ground of illegality. The authority on that point which comes nearest to this case is in Calcutta Port Commissioners v. Bhubaneshwar Prasad<sup>1</sup>. There the judgment-debtor was a servant of the Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta and an order of attachment of his salary was sent to the Port Commissioners. They informed the Court that the wages of the judgment-debtor could not be attached as he was a seaman under the Indian Merchant Shipping Act. The judgment-debtor also applied in execution stating that his wages were not attachable. The Court, however, rejected that petition holding that the salary was not exempt from attachment and informed the Port Commissioners by a letter to send the attached sum to the Court. Thereupon the Port Commissioners applied to the High Court in revision to set aside that order. On behalf of the decree-holder an objection was taken to the locus standi of the Port Commissioners to apply to the Court for setting aside the attachment. It was held, however, that the Port Commissioners having received a direction from the Court in accordance with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 48, of the Civil Procedure Code, they were entitled to apply to the Court for setting aside the order of attachment. It was further held that under sub-r. (3) of that rule the Government would be held liable for any sum paid in contravention of the direction of the Court and that therefore it cannot be said that they had no grievance. Their application was, therefore, entertained by the Court and the preliminary objection overruled. On similar reasoning, the Post Master General in the present case is entitled to come to the Court because the direction under O. XXI, r. 48, was also sent to him by the Court and he is affected by the order. I do not think, therefore, that the application of the Post Master General is not maintainable simply on the ground that it purports to be made under O. XXI, r. 58, which in terms may not apply to the facts of the case. In fact in one decision reported in Secy. of State v. Ishar Das,<sup>1</sup> the Court went to the length of holding that the Secretary of State's objection to the attachment of salary came under O. XXI, r. 58. Even though one may not go so far, it cannot be said that the application is not maintainable. It can even be preferred under the inherent jurisdiction of the Court.

On the merits it is contended on behalf of the applicants that the order of the learned Judge was illegal inasmuch as he has misapplied the provisions of s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code as well as s. 6 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act. Under s. 60, proviso (i), the salary or allowance of a public officer or servant up to a certain limit shall not be liable to attachment or sale, and under s. 6 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act the salary of a public officer cannot be transferred whether before or after it has become payable. It is common ground that a postman is a public servant.

Taking the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act first, the learned Judge was of opinion that it did not apply to the agreement in the present case because the agreement created only a charge on his salary and the charge did not amount to a transfer. It is, however, clear that the learned Judge has erred in construing the agreement between the parties. The agreement was that the decree-holder was to receive Rs. 6 per month from the judgment-debtor's salary from his superiors before it was paid to him and that an order should therefore be passed on the defendant's officer to withhold Rs. 6 from his pay until the balance was satisfied. It means that that much part of his salary was transferred to the decree-holder for his decretal debt until it was satisfied. It does not amount to creating a charge on a part of the salary but it purports to assign the same in favour of the decree-holder who can recover it from the postal authorities. The agreement therefore amounts to a voluntary transfer and the judgment-creditor's application is to attach Rs. 6 every month out of the salary so assigned. Thus the case falls both under s. 6 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act and s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is obvious that the object of both these provisions of the prohibition of voluntary as well as involuntary transfers of the same kind of property must be the same. That object cannot be anything else except public policy or interest.

As observed in Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham Edition), Vol. IV, para. 869, p. 471 :

"There are some choses in action which have never been assignable ; and broadly speaking, it may be said that the ground of their non-assignability is denoted by that comprehensive expression 'public policy'. Thus public policy forbids that effect should be given to assignments of pensions and salaries of public officers payable to them for the purpose of maintaining the dignity of their office, or to assure a due discharge of its duties."

The question then is whether it is open to a person to contract himself out of these provisions or to waive their benefit. It is no doubt a general rule that any one may renounce a law introduced for his own benefit. But that rule applies only to rights and benefits of a personal and private nature created under an agreement or granted by law. There is a clear distinction between a contractual or a statutory right created in favour of a person for his own benefit and a right which is created on the ground of public interest and policy.

The rule of waiver cannot apply to a prohibition based on public policy. In Graham v. Ingleby,<sup>1</sup> Baron Alderson observes (p. 657):—"The principle upon which cases proceed is well founded and it is this that an individual cannot waive a matter in which the public have an interest. This principle has been recently applied by the Privy Council in Gaekwar Baroda State Railway v. Hafiz Habib-ul Haq<sup>2</sup> and by the Calcutta High Court in Joggeshwar Mahata v. Jhupal Santal.<sup>3</sup> Our High Court has similarly applied it to the rights created in favour of agriculturists in Shankarlal v. Raghunathdas.<sup>4</sup>

The learned advocate for the opponent has relied on a decision in Shivayagappa v. Govindappa.<sup>5</sup> It was held there that a compromise decree in a suit under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was not bad in law because it was not made in compliance with the special provisions of s. 15-B of that Act. That decision has, however, no application to the facts of the present case. The agreement there was in substitution of the provisions of s. 15-B and it was held that the decree based on the agreement was not unlawful or contrary to public policy. It was further held that that section would apply only where the Court in its discretion directed that the amount due was payable by instalments and that it should not be applied by analogy whenever a compromise was entered into.

The learned advocate for the opponents further relied upon two recent decisions of the Lahore High Court. The first one is in Jagan Nath v. Allah Dad.<sup>6</sup> There an employee of the North Western Railway had consented to a compromise decree in favour of his creditor agreeing to pay the decretal amount by monthly instalments. There being a default in payment of the instalments the decree-holder took out execution and attached the judgment-debtor's salary. Although the judgment is not quite clear, presumably the decree-holder was, under the compromise, given the right to satisfy the decree from the judgment-debtor's salary. It was held that the latter must be deemed to have contracted himself out of any benefit that s. 60 conferred upon him in the matter of the attachment of his salary and that it was open to him to waive that benefit. Reliance was placed upon a former decision in Chittar Mal v. Mt. Ram Devi<sup>7</sup> in which it was held that there was nothing in s. 60 to prevent an agriculturist voluntarily selling or otherwise alienating his house. Applying that authority by analogy it was held that a public officer can also enter into a compromise on similar terms with regard to the attachment of his salary. The effect of s. 6 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act was not considered. With respect, the decision is, in my opinion, wrong even under s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code. As I have shown above, the compromise being opposed to public policy, a decree giving effect to it is also vitiated and cannot be executed by attachment of the salary.

The second case is reported in Rajindar Kumar v. Chetan Lal.<sup>1</sup> That was a case of a servant in the postal department. There again there was an award decree between the judgment-creditor and the postal servant. The question for decision was whether the provisions of s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code could be waived by the judgment-debtor. It was held that that section was a prohibition only against forcible attachment and there was nothing in law to prevent a judgment-debtor from agreeing to the attachment of half of the salary even though it is exempt from attachment. Here also the provisions of s. 6 (f) were not considered. The same criticism would apply to this decision as to the former decision in Jagan Nath v. Allah Dad. In my opinion no distinction could be made between a forcible attachment under s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code and a voluntary transfer under s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, if both these provisions are governed by public policy.

As a result, therefore, it must be held that the attachment of the salary as well as the transfer thereof are illegal and opposed to public policy. The decision of the lower Court is reversed and the rules in both the applications are made absolute with costs. Rule made absolute with costs in the stay petition also.

BROOMFIELD J. The principal point in these revision applications is whether a public officer, whose salary is exempt from attachment under s. 60 (i) of the Civil Procedure Code, can contract himself out of this statutory provision. The public officer in question is a postman or postal peon now drawing a salary of Rs. 41. A creditor got a decree against him for Rs. 236 and had him arrested, and in order to escape from arrest he agreed with his creditor that a sum of Rs. 6 per mensem should be deducted from his pay until the debt was paid. The executing Court acting on this agreement made an order under O. XXI, r. 48. This order was objected to both by the Post Master General and by the judgment-debtor, but the executing Court, the learned Small Causes Court Judge, Poona, overruled the objections, and revision applications have been made to this Court by both the Post Master General and the judgment-debtor.

Order XXI, r. 48, under which the salary of a public officer may be attached is expressly made subject to s. 60. The learned Small Causes Court Judge took the view that the exemption can be waived, relying on the principle which is expressed in the maxim quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. But to this principle there are many exceptions. If the privilege is purely personal, if the interests of third parties are not affected and in particular if there is no question of public interests or policy, no doubt the maxim is good law. But where a privilege is conferred for reasons of public policy, it is very well settled that it cannot be waived. My learned brother

The learned Judge below was apparently of opinion that no question of public policy was involved. But that view is obviously untenable. No other reason for the enactment of s. 6 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act can be suggested except public policy, and, as Sir Dinshah Mulla has pointed out in his commentary on the Act, it is opposed to public policy that the public officer should transfer the salary of his office, for the salary is given for the purpose of upholding its dignity and the performance of its duties.

On behalf of the opponent it was argued that in this particular case the agreement need not be regarded as contrary to public policy, because the amount to be withheld was only Rs. 6 out of a salary of Rs. 41. But the answer, to that is that the legislature has fixed the amount of salary which is to be exempted in the interests of public policy and it is not for the Courts to say that it is sufficient to reserve a lesser amount.

Although the learned Small Causes Court Judge seems to have taken the other view, it seems to me to be beyond dispute that this agreement was obnoxious to the provisions of s. 6(f) of the Transfer of Property Act. It was to all intents and purposes a transfer of the judgment-debtor's salary as it fell due in the future. The agreement must also be regarded as void under s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act.

We were referred to certain cases, decisions of single Judges in which it has been held that the provisions of s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code can be waived. But there was no discussion there of s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, and with all deference to the learned Judges who decided those cases I am not prepared to follow them.

The other point which has been argued is whether the Post Master General has any locus standi to contest the order of attachment. The learned Small Causes Court Judge held that he had not, relying on r. 59 of O. XXI. There are no doubt difficulties in the way of holding that the Post Master General's objection came within the terms of r. 58 under which it purported to be made. The difficulty seems to me to lie not so much in the terms of r. 59, which are sufficiently general, but in the fact that the subsequent rr. 60 and 61 suggest that the sort of objection contemplated in these rules is an objection by a person claiming some interest in the property for himself and adversely to the judgment-debtor. However this may be, similar applications have been held to come under r. 58, e.g. in the case to which my learned brother has referred, Secy. of State v. Ishan Das,<sup>2</sup> and in Calcutta Port Commissioners v. Bhubaneswar Prasad<sup>3</sup> it was held that a public body was entitled to appear and object to an order under O. XXI, r. 48, in respect of one of their employees. The reason given for this view was that they would be liable for any sum attached in contravention of the direction of the Court by reason of sub-r. (3) of r. 48. So that it could not be said that they had no grievance and must be held that they had a locus standi to make the application.

In Shamus Patter v. Abdul Kadir Ravuthan<sup>1</sup> their Lordships of the Privy Council said that even in the absence of an express provision in the Code "every Court trying civil causes has inherent jurisdiction to take cognizance of questions which cut at the root of the subject-matter of controversy between the parties." Where an order is made against Government or a public body, and when the law imposes liability in case the order is not obeyed, as is the position here, it would in my opinion be unreasonable and unjust to hold that it is not open to Government or to the public body as the case may be to move the Court and contend that the order is not justified by the law, and there must I think be inherent power in the Court to consider such an application. This view has also been taken in Prem Chand v. Mulkh Raj.<sup>2</sup>

We have only been referred to one case in which it has been held that the disbursing authority in a case of this kind is not competent to apply to the Court, and that is a decision of Mr. Justice Wassoodew in Governor General in Council v. Magniram Mayachand.<sup>3</sup> The facts there were not the same. The Postal Officer to whom an order under O. XXI, r. 48, had been sent refused to obey the order on the ground that it was contrary to s. 60. The decree-holder made Government a party and after hearing the parties it was directed that the prohibitory order should be returned to the Postal Department for necessary action. Government then filed a revision application. Mr. Justice Wassoodew said that having regard to the provisions of O. XXI, r. 48, the officer of the Postal Department could not sit in judgment over the order of the executing Court and he also said that the Court alone has to decide whether the salary is attachable or not and it is principally a question between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder with which the officer is not concerned. With all deference to the learned Judge, we consider that, though the Court's order must of course be obeyed and there is no question of the officer to whom it is sent sitting in judgment over it, there is nothing in law which prevents him protesting against the validity of the order. There can be no reason why an officer of Government should be in a worse position in that respect than an ordinary party. We are, moreover, unable to agree with the dictum of the learned Judge that in cases like this there is nothing but a question between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder with which Government is not concerned. If, as we think, questions of public policy are involved, Government is undoubtedly concerned in the matter. The question cannot be regarded as purely academic since the public officer whose pay is attached or sought to be attached may not always be willing to make an application himself, and if no application could be made by Government or the public body, the provisions of s. 60 of the Code and of s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act might become a dead letter.

I agree, therefore, with the order proposed by my learned brother.

MOTIBAI BURJORJI CHHOR.*

Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), Sec. 219—Letters of administration—Joint grant—Persons standing in equal degree of kindred to deceased—Discretion of Court.

Under s. 219 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, the Court has a discretion whether, or not, to grant joint letters of administration to persons who stand in equal degree of kindred to the deceased. It is not bound to make a joint grant; it may grant letters of administration to any one of them.

PETITION for letters of administration.

A Parsi by the name of Ijiarji Behramji died on April 25, 1916, leaving behind him his widow, Rudibai, and four daughters, Awabai, Virbai, Dinbai and Motibai.

After Ijiarji's death, his widow, Rudibai, and daughter, Awabai, took out letters of administration to his estate. They brought a suit against Ijiarji's brothers and a nephew to recover Ijiarji's property in their possession. A decree was obtained in the suit and a darkhast was filed by them to execute that decree, but both of them died subsequently and the decree remained unexecuted. The property of Ijiarji, which was the subject-matter of the suit, was in possession of a receiver appointed by the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court, Thana.

Awabai died leaving her husband and three minor daughters.

Virbai died leaving three children.

Motibai then applied for letters of administration de bonis non to the estate of Ijiarji.

Dinbai, who was older than Motibai, had sold away her interest in her father's estate, but she objected to the granting of letters of administration to Motibai alone. She alleged that Motibai had also disposed of her interest in the estate and submitted that she was entitled with Motibai to a joint grant. Motibai produced a decree declaring the assignment of her interest in the estate to be null and void.

The Assistant Judge, who heard the petition, held that Motibai was beneficially entitled to a share in the estate of her father and granted letters of administration to her.

Dinbai appealed to the High Court.

BEAUMONT C. J. The question on this appeal is whether the appellant or respondent No. 1 should be granted letters of administration de bonis non to the estate of one Ijjarji, a Parsi, who died in 1916. Letters of administration were granted after a suitable interval, that is in 1924, to the widow and one daughter. The parties seem to have been litigating ever since, and the estate has not been administered. We are told that in fact nothing has been done towards the administration of the estate. The widow and the daughter, who were the administrators, have died, and an application was made by the plaintiff, who is another daughter, for letters of administration de bonis non, and that was opposed by defendant No. 1, who is an elder daughter. The learned Assistant Judge refused to grant letters of administration to defendant No. 1, because she admitted that she had disposed of the whole of her interest in the estate. She alleges that the plaintiff has also disposed of her interest. But the plaintiff has succeeded in obtaining a decree from the Subordinate Judge of Dahanu declaring the assignment of her interest in the estate to be null and void. The learned Assistant Judge, from whose decision this appeal is brought, took the view that the plaintiff was entitled to receive grant.

The question as to the persons entitled to a grant in the case of a deceased, who is not a Hindu, Mahomedan, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain, is determined by s. 219 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925. Sub-clause (c) provides that if there is no widow, or if the Court sees cause to exclude the widow, it shall commit the administration to the person or persons who would be beneficially entitled to the estate according to the rules for the distribution of an intestate's estate. I apprehend that that means who would be beneficially entitled to the estate, if nothing had intervened to prevent them being so entitled. That is to say, the Court has to look at the rules for the distribution of the intestate's estate and find out who according to those rules would be entitled to the estate, if there was any estate, because the whole estate may be going to creditors. I doubt whether the fact of one of the beneficiaries having assigned her share is relevant. Now, here the appellant and respondent as two daughters stand in equal degree of kindred to the deceased and under sub-clause (d) are equally entitled to administration. It is argued therefore for the appellant that she is entitled with the respondent to a joint grant.

The respondent has referred us to Stoney v. Stoney<sup>1</sup> in which case the learned Chief Justice in his judgment refers to s. 204 of the Indian Succession Act then in force, which corresponds to s. 219 of the present Act, and comes to the conclusion that the Court is not bound to grant joint letters of administration to the parties entitled in equal degree, and that prima facie the Court should lean against joint administration. That decision was given in 1923, that is to say, before the present Indian Succession Act was passed, and the wording of the relevant section was maintained. So that one may assume that the legislature was not minded to overrule that decision. Whether I should have arrived at the same conclusion myself, it is not necessary to consider, because the construction put upon the Act is an eminently sensible one, and I think, we may follow it. If we have any discretion in the matter, it seems to me perfectly clear that

v.

Hindu law—Maintenance—Widow—Joint family—Claim for arrears of maintenance during husband's life-time—Right attaches to property in which her husband has interest—Liability of person in possession of such property—Suit brought against coparcener for arrears of maintenance after husband's death—Right of widow for maintenance not similar to right of creditor.

Under the Hindu law the right of a wife or a widow for maintenance against the husband as well as the members of her husband's joint family is not the same as the right of a mere creditor against the estate arising out of contract, but is a right which attaches to her status as a member of the joint undivided family. In the case of a widow this right attaches to the undivided share in the property which her husband would have got by partition if he had been alive and she is entitled to follow the property in the hands of the coparcener taking it. The property is liable as much for arrears of past maintenance as for future maintenance. The right to demand the arrears exists against the husband or the surviving coparcener or any person who has inherited his separate property.

The rule that a creditor cannot follow the property in the hands of a surviving coparcener, unless it has been previously attached during the lifetime of the deceased coparcener, does not apply to the case of a Hindu widow both for arrears of maintenance as well as for future maintenance.

The claim of a Hindu widow for arrears of maintenance, which have accrued due during the lifetime of her husband, is not a personal cause of action which dies with his death, but it exists against the husband's property which comes to the hands of either his heir or his surviving coparcener.

SUIT for arrears of maintenance.

The plaintiff Dwarkabai's husband, one Jagannath, and his brother the defendant, Raghunath, were members of a joint Hindu family. She was married to Jagannath in 1924. She alleged that her husband, her mother-in-law and the defendant, treated her with cruelty and that about the middle of 1926 she was driven out of the house by her husband.

* Second Appeal No. 448 of 1939, from the decision of T. B. Shanbhag, Assistant Judge, Jalgaon, in Appeal No. 138 of 1937, confirming the decree passed by R. H. Mirajkar, Subordinate Judge, Yawal, in Regular Civil Suit No. 720 of 1935.

1 [1925] A. I. R. Mad. 757.

Jagannath married a second wife and died in 1934. The defendant was the sole surviving coparcener and was in possession of the entire joint family property. The plaintiff filed a suit on September 19, 1935, against the defendant claiming arrears of maintenance from September 24, 1926, down to the date of the suit at the rate of Rs. 500 per year.

The defendant in his written statement contended inter alia that the plaintiff was never ill-treated by any one, that she did not stay with her husband although repeated attempts were made to fetch her, that she was not driven out of the house, that the joint family was not liable for the plaintiff's claim for arrears of maintenance during her husband's lifetime, and that he was willing to pay Rs. 75 as maintenance for the year 1935-36.

The Subordinate Judge awarded arrears of maintenance at the rate of Rs. 300 per year for the period of nine years claimed in the suit. He passed a decree for Rs. 2,700 with costs in favour of the plaintiff.

On appeal the Assistant Judge confirmed the decree.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

A. G. Desai, for the appellant.

DIVATIA J. This appeal arises in a suit by the plaintiff to recover Rs. 4,000 by way of arrears of maintenance from the joint family estate in which her deceased husband had a half share. The plaintiff is the widow of one Jagannath who died in the year 1934. Her marriage took place in 1924, but two years thereafter she had to leave her husband's house on account of excessive cruelty and ill-treatment by her husband and mother-in-law. Thereafter she remained in her father's house and in 1935, after the death of her husband, she brought the present suit to recover the arrears of her maintenance at the rate of Rs. 500 per year from 1926 up to the date of the suit in September, 1935. The claim is confined to this period and does not extend to her future maintenance out of the joint family property. The defendant is her husband's brother who has taken the whole of the family property by survivorship. The plaintiff was met with the plea that she was not driven out of the house but she went away of her own accord, that she was maintained all along by her father and that the defendant was not, therefore, liable for the maintenance claimed by her. It was also contended that the claim, which was restricted to arrears of maintenance during her husband's lifetime and for one year after his death, cannot be enforced against the defendant who has taken the property in his independent right as a surviving coparcener.

Both the lower Courts have granted the plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs. 300 per year, and have decreed the amount of Rs. 2,700 for the arrears of maintenance for nine years. The finding of the lower appellate Court is that the plaintiff was exceedingly ill-treated, that she was put in fear of her life, and that notwithstanding her submission to these cruelties, she was driven out of her husband's home for no fault of hers. It was also found on the evidence that the income of the joint family property was between Rs. 4,000 and Rs. 5,000 a year during the period in dispute, and the defendant as a surviving coparcener was now in possession of the whole of the family income. There was another widow of Jagannath as well as his mother who were also entitled to maintenance out of the joint family estate, and taking that fact into consideration the lower Courts have allowed the plaintiff Rs. 300 per annum.

The defendant now appeals against that decree, and the principal point urged on his behalf is that he as a surviving coparcener is not bound to pay any amount for arrears of maintenance. The contention is that whatever may be the defendant's liability for the future maintenance of the plaintiff which is not claimed in the present suit, there is no liability for arrears inasmuch as it was only a personal claim against Jagannath for which the latter might have been liable if the suit was brought during his lifetime, but that cause of action does not survive on his death with the result that the property which the defendant gets by survivorship is not in any way responsible for the plaintiff's claim. It is also contended that if the arrears of maintenance are to be regarded as analogous to a debt due by the husband to the plaintiff, the defendant is not liable after the husband's death unless the husband's share had been attached during his lifetime in a suit by the plaintiff as a creditor.

The latter argument may be disposed of first. It is clear that under the Hindu law the right of a wife or a widow for maintenance against the husband as well as the members of her husband's joint family is not the right of a mere creditor against the estate arising out of a contract, but is a right which attaches to her status as a member of the joint undivided Hindu family. It is a cardinal principle of Hindu law that although she is not a coparcener taking interest by birth, she is a member of the joint family and continues as such even after her husband's death. Uptil the passing of the recent Act of 1937, by which the right to a share was given to her after her husband's death, she had a right during as well as after her husband's lifetime of demanding maintenance as well as residence from the property, whether it is undivided or divided, belonging to her husband. It has been laid down in a number of decisions that this right of a widow attaches to the undivided share in the property which her husband would have got by partition if he had been alive. As I have recently observed in the case of Secretary of State v. Ahalyabai,<sup>1</sup> this right of maintenance attaches to the property itself which is taken by the surviving coparcener, and it has been treated as a burden on inheritance with the result that the widow is entitled to follow such property in the hands of the coparcener taking it. This proposition is conceded by Mr. Desai on behalf of the appellant in so far as her right to future maintenance is concerned. But I am of the opinion that it also applies to the arrears of maintenance accrued due, because if the property belonging to the husband is liable for her maintenance, it must be liable as much for arrears as for future maintenance. It is true that the amount as well as the period for which arrears are to be decreed will depend upon the exigencies of the widow and the facts of each particular case, but the right to demand the arrears does exist whether against the husband or against the surviving coparcener or any person who has inherited even the separate property of her husband. That being so, the rule that a creditor cannot follow the property in the hands of a surviving coparcener unless it has been previously attached during the lifetime of the deceased coparcener, cannot apply to the case of a Hindu widow both for arrears of maintenance as well as for future maintenance.

The next point is whether a claim for arrears, which have accrued due during the lifetime of the husband, is such a personal claim as would die with his death. In Ramabai wife of Bhikaji Bhaskar v. Trimbak Ganesh Desai<sup>1</sup> our High Court allowed a claim for maintenance in favour of a wife, who had been deserted by her husband, as against the manager of a joint family although the husband was alive. It was held that the husband had gone away out of the family and his share in the property remained in possession of the manager of the joint family. The manager was therefore liable for the wife's claim for maintenance on the principle of Hindu law that the undivided share of the husband in the family property is liable for the wife's claim for maintenance. Here, the husband is now dead and the cause of action against the husband for arrears of maintenance for eight years no doubt arose during his lifetime. But was the widow bound to sue during his lifetime? If the widow is entitled to sue for arrears of maintenance, it would not matter whether the arrears claimed accrued during her husband's lifetime or thereafter so long as there is property against which they can be enforced. It would follow from the principle that the husband's property was always liable, that even for arrears of maintenance the surviving coparcener would be liable if he is in possession of the husband's share.

There is at least one decision, though not in the authorised series of reports, which applies to the facts of the present case. That is a decision of the Madras High Court in Lakshmi Devi Amma v. Naganna.<sup>2</sup> There maintenance was claimed by the wife of a Zamindar who had abandoned her after having treated her with habitual cruelty. She lived away from him for nearly twenty-three years and then sued him for arrears of maintenance for twelve years preceding the suit. The husband died during the pendency of the suit and his two sons were brought on the record in his place in the suit. The claim for arrears of maintenance for twelve years was decreed against the sons on the ground that the death of the husband pending the suit did not deprive her of her rights of maintenance and that she could enforce the rights against the husband's heirs at law. The decision is based on two grounds, firstly, that the obligation of a husband to maintain his wife is one arising not out of contract but out of the status of marriage, that is a liability created by the Hindu law and that it could be enforced against the property belonging to the husband in the hands of the surviving coparcener as well as the heir. Secondly, the general rule of a personal action dying with the person does not apply to the right of a Hindu wife against her husband for maintenance, that there was an obligation arising out of status, that under the Hindu law although the wife of a coparcener may not be entitled to a share in the estate of the family or to enforce a partition, there was no doubt as to her being entitled to maintenance from the joint family estate, that on the death of the husband the true legal representatives in the action would be the surviving coparceners of the family, or the personal legal representatives of the deceased husband, and that the arrears of maintenance due and payable to a wife by her husband could also be held to be a debt within the meaning of the Hindu law, which has regard only to undischarged obligations and to which the distinction between debts and damages was foreign.

With respect I entirely agree with the reasons given by the learned Judges in that decision. The only difference between that case and the present is that here the suit is brought one year after the death of the husband, while there the suit was filed against the husband and he died during the pendency of the suit. But the point involved is the same, namely, whether the claim for arrears accrued due during the lifetime of the husband is a personal cause of action or whether it is one against the property in the hands of either the heir or the surviving coparcener. It is no doubt true that the husband's liability to maintain his wife is personal in its nature. That does not, however, mean that the liability is only of the nature of a personal obligation, and therefore affords only a personal cause of action. It is also a liability which attaches to property. What is meant by personal liability of the husband is that it could be enforced not only against the property belonging to the husband, but in absence of such property also against the person of the husband by his arrest and detention in prison. It has been held that though the future maintenance cannot be assigned, arrears of maintenance can be assigned by a widow. That is to say, it has been regarded as a debt which could be transferred, and it is so because it is a debt which can be enforced against any person. If the husband had been sued during his lifetime, he would clearly have had no answer to the wife's claim, and there is no reason why the surviving coparcener, whose share in the estate is enlarged by the husband's death, should not be bound to pay not only future maintenance but also arrears of maintenance accrued due during the husband's lifetime, if the right of maintenance is founded upon the property of her husband and is not merely a personal obligation.

Mr. Desai sought to make a distinction between an heir and a surviving coparcener but no such distinction could be recognised with regard to the claim of a widow for maintenance which is founded not upon the nature of the succession but upon possession of the property belonging to the husband. The principle is that whoever has got the property is liable for the widow's maintenance. If the heir is liable, much more would the surviving coparcener be liable inasmuch as he was a member of the joint family along with the deceased, and, therefore, liable to maintain his widow who is also a member of the joint family.

I think, therefore, both the lower Courts were right in holding that the defendant was liable for the plaintiff's claim for arrears.

The other contentions are with regard to the amount as well as the period. So far as the period of maintenance is concerned, the recent decision of the Privy Council in Ekradeshwari Bahuasin v. Homeshwar Singh<sup>1</sup> is a clear authority for the proposition that a widow is entitled to maintenance as well as arrears thereof from the date of her leaving her husband's residence, although she does not prove that she had incurred debts in maintaining herself.

Then with regard to the amount, both the lower Courts have held that Rs. 300 per year would be a reasonable amount. Looking to the income of the family, which is about Rs. 4,000 to Rs. 5,000 per year, I do not think that I would be justified in interfering with the discretion which the lower Courts have exercised on the facts in granting Rs. 300 per year for arrears of maintenance.

It is unfortunate that the widow did not pray for future maintenance in this suit which is confined only to the arrears. However, I am told that a separate suit has been filed by her for future maintenance. This suit being confined to arrears, there is no question of making any distinction between future maintenance and arrears, and the lower Courts were, therefore, justified in viewing the evidence only from the standpoint as to whether the widow was entitled to arrears and, if so, how much.

The decree of the lower appellate Court is, therefore, confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu law—Endowment—Dedication—Complete or partial dedication—Relinquishment of property by donor—Ghat on the Ganges at Benares—Ghatias of Benares—Right of ghatias over the ghat—Practice—Suit decreed as prayed, not a proper form of order.

Under Hindu law, the dedication of property to religious or charitable uses may be complete or partial. In the absence of a formal and express endowment evidenced by deed or declaration, the character of the dedication can only be determined on the basis of the history of the institution and the conduct of the founder and his heirs. Partial dedication may take place not only where a mere charge is created in favour of an idol or other religious object, but also where the owner retains the property in himself and grants the community or part of the community an easement over it for certain specified purposes.

Under Hindu law in the usual case of complete dedication made to an idol the property ceases altogether to belong to the donor and becomes vested in the idol as a juristic person. Complete relinquishment by the owner of his proprietary right is by no means the only form of dedication known to the law and is very different from anything that can ordinarily be inferred from the public user of a highway. From the standpoint of the Hindu law it is not essential to a valid dedication that the legal title should pass from the owner nor is it inconsistent with an effectual dedication that the owner should continue to make any and all uses of the land which do not interfere with the uses for which it is dedicated.

Whether the property be charged with a sum of money for the worship of an idol or be subjected to a right of limited user on the part of the public, it descends and is alienable in the ordinary way, the only difference being that it passes with the charge upon it.

The land or other property of a bathing ghat on the banks of the Ganges at Benares dedicated to such a purpose, is dedicated to an object both religious and of public utility, notwithstanding that it is not dedicated to any particular deity; but from such dedication it cannot be at once concluded that in any particular case there has been a dedication in the full sense of the Hindu law which involves the complete cessation of ownership on the part of the founder and the vesting of the property in the religious institution or object.

The river bank at Benares is a sacred and historical spot with a powerful claim to the regard of a pious Hindu; but the practice of bathing in the Ganges is not in general so directly connected with the worship of a particular deity that nothing short of complete dedication would be appropriate for a public bathing ghat. The character of the use to be made of the bank does not require it. Nor does the public right of use for purposes of bathing take its origin as a rule from an immediate and express act of dedication; rather does it begin by acts of user which are acquiesced in by the owner of the property who in due course makes provision for the public needs as an act of charity or piety.

The ghatias of Benares as members of a class have no customary right to claim exclusive possession of portions of a public bathing ghat by placing platforms or canopies over them in order to carry on their profession. No individual ghatia can have any right by custom to exclusive possession of any parts of the ghat either by prescription or lost grant.

A right to stand, sit or squat on a ghat for the purposes of exercising the profession of ghatias may be acquired by consent of the owner of the ghat.

It is the usual but not correct practice to order "that the plaintiff's suit as prayed be decreed" without formally stating the terms of the various orders, declarations and injunctions which the Court is granting.

There was a ghat on the bank of the river Ganges as it flowed past the city of Benares, which the plaintiff's predecessor had purchased and rebuilt in the year 1814. No express dedication of the ghat to the public was proved by the production of a deed of endowment or otherwise. No manager was ever appointed, nor was it shown that the plaintiff or her predecessor had purported to act as superintendent, sebaite or mutawalli. They were treated as owners whenever there was disrepair of the ghat, which they repaired at their own expense. They closed it to bathers on proper occasions and levied tolls on the keepers of shops at festivals. Their expenditure on the ghat often exceeded their receipts and they never wished to make a profit from the tolls. There was evidence as to agreements taken from ghatias upon nearby ghats :—

Held, that the above evidence pieced together showed that the plaintiff had a proprietary right in the ghat and the soil underneath it.

THE plaintiff Maharani Hemant Kumari Devi sued to establish her proprietary right to a ghat on the river Ganges at Benares which was known as the Prayag Ghat and to which the Hindu pilgrims resorted for bathing and for performance of religious ceremonies. She also sought to eject the defendants from the ghat. The defendants, who were ghatias engaged in assisting pilgrims in the performance of their religious rites, disputed the plaintiff's claim to proprietorship and to her right to eject them.

Benares or Kashi was a holy city for the Hindus. The river Ganges or Ganga was held sacred by the Hindus and more particularly in its passage by Benares. A pilgrimage to Benares was incomplete without bathing in the river and bathing was not efficacious without the performance of essential religious ceremonies. The performance of religious rites required the presence of a priest. From times immemorial classes of priests known as ganga-putras, sons of the Ganga, and ghatias, or men of the ghats, ministered to the pilgrims resorting to the river ghats or banks for the performance of religious ceremonies.

"They (ghatias) place takhats (wooden platforms), make kachcha (temporary) chabutras on the steps of the ghat, put up palm leaf umbrellas to afford shelter to the pilgrims from the sun and the rains. They shift their positions at the ghat according to the rise and fall of the river and look after the clothes and other articles which are entrusted to them by the bathers. They provide 'asan', kusha, rori, comb, mirror and chandan to the pilgrims after the completion of their baths and also recite 'tarpan' and 'sankalp' for those who ask for them and assist the bathers in their religious performances. They also tie cows to induce the people to acquire the merit of 'Gaudan' by spending a few pice. In lieu of the services which are rendered by them, they receive alms in the shape of pice, half pice, dal, kichri, grain, vegetables, sweets, and thus eke out their livelihood. They have been plying their profession in this manner from times immemorial."

Wealthy and pious Hindus built ghats of masonry structure with steps down to the river and dedicated them to the public. The predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff built a ghat called the Prayag Ghat and dedicated it to the public.

On February 15, 1929, the plaintiff brought the suit alleging that she was the owner of the ghat; that the defendants who were ghatias had been sitting on the ghat with her leave; that they had abused the leave by putting temporary platforms which were causing inconvenience to the bathers and pilgrims; that the defendants were causing damage to the ghat by cutting holes in the stairs and pavement and fixing poles, by constructing fire hearths, &c.; that the defendants were mere squatters and had no right to sit on the ghat as ghatias without her leave ; and that she was unwilling to permit them to sit on the ghat. She prayed for a declaration that she was the owner of the Prayag Ghat and that the defendants had no right to sit on the ghat. She prayed for a decree ordering the ejectment of defendants from the ghat and for removal of the railings; planks, fire hearths, canopies, etc., which might be found to have been placed by the defendants on the ghat. She also sought for a permanent injunction restraining them from using as ghatias any portion of the ghat.

The defendants' principal pleas were that they belonged to the community of ghatias which had been engaged for centuries in assisting the Hindu pilgrims at the ghat ; that their services were essential for the performance by the Hindu public of their religious ceremonies ; that the plaintiff had, by reason of the dedication of the ghat, ceased to be its owner ; and that they had a right to continue to sit on the ghat as ghatias. They also pleaded that they had acquired a right whether by grant, prescription or custom to the portions of the ghat habitually occupied by them and that they had a right to retain their paraphernalia on the ghats for the proper and efficient discharge of their duties as ghatias.

The trial Judge held that the ghat had been dedicated to the public, but, in his opinion, such dedication did not divest the donor of his right of ownership. He also held that the ghatias had acquired no rights by adverse possession or by custom and that they were liable to be ejected. In the result, he passed a decree as claimed by the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed to the High Court. On March 27, 1935, Thom and Iqbal Ahmad JJ. were of the opinion that the appeal should be heard by a full bench. Accordingly, on January 3, 1936, a full bench of the High Court, consisting of Sir Sulaiman C. J., Bajpai and Ganga Nath JJ., held that as the ghat had been dedicated to the public, the plaintiff could not claim ownership over it and she was not entitled to the declaration that the ghat was her property. In their view, the plaintiff was manager of the ghat and was entitled to maintain the suit. As to the position of the ghatias, they held that the ghatias had not acquired any right by prescription nor were they entitled to occupy portions of the ghat exclusively by custom. The public, however, had a right to be served by ghatias and as such the ghatias by reason of their being ghatias and as members of the public would be entitled to sit on the ghat and receive remuneration for their services. The ghatias were, however, not entitled to put up takhats, &c., as that would interfere and restrict the right of the public. In the result, they refused the declaration sought by the plaintiff that she was the absolute owner of the ghat and also rejected her claim to eject the defendants from the ghat. They, however, upheld her claim to a decree for the removal of the railings, planks, fire hearths, earth-mounds, canopies, bamboo poles, &c., which might be found to have been placed by the defendants (58 All. 818).

The plaintiff appealed to His Majesty in Council.

C. S. Rewcastle K. C. and C. Sidney Smith, for the appellant. The ghat came to the plaintiff's estate by purchase. She and her predecessors-in-title have always treated the ghat as being part of their own property, and have spent considerable sums in repairs accordingly.

The presence of ghatias is in no way essential to the carrying out of holy bathing rites, and they did not exist before 1821. Evidence was before the High Court with regard to the position in other ghats which ought to have made it impossible to hold that the defendants had the right which the Court has accorded them. Ghatias in other ghats were proved only to be sitting there by leave and licence of the owners, and the evidence clearly showed that those ghatias were not protected by any custom, or by any right by grant or prescription to any specific part of any ghat. The Court should have made similar findings with regard to the defendants here. It is submitted that if the defendants have no right or duty to minister to members of the public visiting the ghat in order to bathe, they cannot lay claim to specific sites on the ghat. The two claims are inseparable; the first is clearly not maintainable, therefore the second, it is submitted, necessarily fails.

Next, there cannot be any valid ground for holding that the plaintiff is a mere mutawalli of the ghat; what dedication of the ghat for use by the public for bathing has taken place is not such as to have deprived the plaintiff's predecessors of their full ownership. The law relating to dedication of highways is applicable. That law in India is the same as in England: Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Paresh Nath Singh.<sup>1</sup> [Counsel referred by name to the leading English cases on dedication].

J. M. Parikh, for the respondents. The respondents ghatias claim nothing but a right to sit on the ghat, and of that right they ought not be deprived by ejectment. They are prepared to refrain from causing any obstruction because they are only concerned to perform the ceremonies for which they frequent the ghat. What is given to these Brahman ghatias by the bathers is not alms, it is a pious gift. The services which the ghatias render to bathers are essential to the proper use of the ghat for bathing purposes. The ghatias have the right to frequent the ghat both as members of the public and because of their function of ministering to the needs of the pilgrim bathers. It is no part of the respondents' case that they are entitled to occupy any specific part of the ghat, or that they have any proprietary right in its soil. [Counsel referred to Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar.<sup>2</sup>]

Next, it is submitted that the ghat is the subject of a dedication at Hindu law. Such a dedication is complete, and left the plaintiff's predecessors, as it now leaves her, a mere mutawalli of the ghat. The Mitakshara recognises no such limited dedication as that for which the plaintiff contends. The dedication has clothed the ghat with the character of a public trust; it is trust property in which the plaintiff can have no rights of ownership. The suggestion that the ghat is subject only to a limited dedication for the purpose of granting the public a right of passage to and from the river is untenable. This is a full dedication, the donee being the ghat itself, in the absence of any temple. From the fact of the dedication it follows that the public should be afforded all facilities in and about the performance of religious duties at the ghat. The principle laid down in Chotalal Lakhmi-ram v. Manohar Ganesh Tambekar<sup>1</sup> is applicable.

These ghatias, it is submitted, are clearly persons whose rights, by virtue of long-established practice, should be protected. There is even evidence that succession is operative among them.

[LORD THANKERTON. The plaintiff here sues as owner. She can only be debarred from suing in that capacity if, as you contend, a dedication has taken place which has deprived her predecessors of their ownership.]

This is a very ancient dedication. A dedication is analogous to a gift. Counsel referred to Mulla's Hindu Law (8th ed.), s. 406 and to Macnaughten's Hindu Law (1829), pp. 213-217. The Mitakshara nowhere suggests that the kind of right which flows from dedication can be conferred apart from the property itself. There is no power under the Mitakshara to make a gift of incorporeal property : see Mulla, ss. 406, 407.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN. The sanctity which Hindu thought and feeling attribute to the Ganges and the special veneration which its stream commands at it flows past the holy city of Benares (Kashi) are manifested by the temples and bathing ghats upon the banks. The efficacy of its waters to wash away every form of sin and pollution is widely accepted doctrine among the orthodox and brings the Hindu pilgrim in large numbers seeking to acquire religious merit and advantage. According to evidence given in the present case "Mankarnika, Dasaswamedh, Panch Ganga, Assi and Barna are the panch tirthas of Kashi : one who comes to Kashi on pilgrimage has to visit all these five places." In this appeal their Lordships are concerned with a bathing ghat which is known as the Prayag or Puthiya ghat and which is covered by the name Dasaswamedh—the name of a mohalla of the city.

The suit was brought on February 15, 1929, in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Benares. The plaintiff was Maharani Hemanta Kumari Debi, widow of the last male owner of the Puthiya Raj estate. She claimed to be owner of the ghat. She will be referred to as "the plaintiff" notwithstanding that pending this appeal she has by relinquishment accelerated the interest of her husband's reversioners who have been joined with her as appellants to His Majesty in Council. She impleaded six sets of defendants, fourteen persons in all, alleging that they belonged to a class of Brahmins known as ghatias and that they, and their predecessors, had been allowed by the owners of the ghat to sit on different portions of it in order to gain a livelihood by receiving alms and gifts from pilgrim bathers. She complained that the defendants were abusing the permission granted to them, by altering the condition of the steps, putting down platforms of earth and wood, erecting canopies, and blocking up the free space to the detriment of the utility, cleanliness and beauty of the ghat. She alleged that the defendants were mere squatters; that she had been willing to allow them to continue to sit on the ghat if they would execute written agreements for the proper conduct of the ghat; but that they had failed or refused so to do. She asked for relief in different forms—a declaration that she was the owner of the ghat and that the defendants had no right to sit on any portion of it; an order of ejectment of the defendants; an order for removal of the various obstructions put up by the defendants; and an injunction restraining the defendants “from using any portion of the said Prayag ghat as ghatias in any season of the year and from sitting and squatting over the same for the purposes of collecting dan dakshina from the bathers.”

A number of written statements were filed. The defendants numbered 2, 8 and 11 pleaded that they were mere servants of other defendants. The main defence as pleaded on behalf of the rest denied the plaintiff's proprietary right and set up that the ghatias were a community whose business and duty it was to assist bathers; that a ghat necessarily involved a right on the part of some members of this community to occupy portions of it by the use of seats or platforms of the kind known as chaukis or takhts; that this right was a form of property heritable and transferable by the Hindu law; that the defendants and their ancestors had been in occupation of definite sites on the ghat for hundreds of years; and that they had been guilty of no impropriety. They maintained that a right to occupy sites on the ghat by laying out chaukis and takhts had become vested in them by lost grant, prescription or custom.

The learned trial Judge heard more than twenty witnesses and by his judgment (June 25, 1930) came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's ownership of the ghat was proved and that she had a right to sue as owner notwithstanding that the ghat was dedicated to the use of the public for purposes of bathing. He found that the ghatias do not belong to any particular class or community but are called ghatias because they sit on the ghats. He thought that there was nothing in any Shastra to show that their presence at the ghat is indispensable for the performance of religious ceremonies or that a bath in the Ganges would not yield any spiritual benefit unless accompanied by gifts to them. He found that in the case of plaintiff's ghat and neighbouring ghats the ghatias had sat by leave and licence of the owners. He negatived the existence of any customary right in the defendants and found that at no time had any grant of any interest in the ghat been made to them. He further held that they could have no claim by prescription to an exclusive right to occupy any specific portion of a bathing ghat dedicated to the use of the public. In the result he found for the plaintiff, but, following a practice which is not to be commended, he contented himself with ordering "that the plaintiff's suit as prayed be decreed" without formally stating the terms of the various orders, declarations and injunctions which he was granting, save by this reference to prayers in the plaint which might well have been improved by revision.

An appeal to the High Court was taken by a number of the defendants.

On March 27, 1935, it came before a division bench, who, in referring it to a full bench, recorded an order mentioning that before them it was not in dispute that the plaintiff was owner of the ghat or that the defendants or their predecessors had sat on different portions of the ghat for generations; also that the defendants did not claim any right by virtue of adverse possession but that they did claim a right of property in the ghat in respect of their long use of it for the purpose of assisting the bathers. A single judgment was given by the full bench (Sulaiman C. J., Bajpai and Ganga Nath J.J.) on January 3, 1936. The learned Judges maintained the decree of the trial Judge in so far as it directed removal of railings, planks, canopies and other articles of obstruction but discharged the trial Judge's order of ejectment and the injunction granted by him to restrain the defendants from using the ghat as ghatias or sitting or squatting over the same. They discharged also the declaration made by the trial Judge that the plaintiff was owner of the ghat.

The plaintiff upon this appeal complains of these variations and asks that the decree of the trial Judge be restored.

In the view of the learned Judges of the full bench the right claimed by the defendants may be divided into two parts: (1) a right to exclusive possession over specific plots of land and to place platforms and canopies over them; (2) the right to minister to the needs of the bathing public and to receive alms and gifts for their services. As regards the first, the full bench found some difficulty in appreciating the nature of the right claimed, but they found that ghatias as members of a class have no customary right and that the individual defendants could have no right by custom to exclusive possession of any parts of the ghat. The claim to such a right by prescription or lost grant was also held to be bad. The full bench considered it to be proved that the takhts and canopies had been obstructions leaving little space for passage, injurious to the pavement and dangerous to the public using the ghat. In their Lordships' view, the reasons given by the learned Judges in their judgment fully justify their order for removal of the obstructions, and their rejection of the defendants' claim to have acquired any rights in this ghat whether by custom, prescription or grant. The defendants have not appealed from the High Court's decree.

But the full bench set aside the trial Judge's decree of ejectment and the injunction granted by him on the ground that such relief would interfere with the right of "the bathing public" to take to the ghat persons who may help in the proper performance of "spiritual ablutions" and ceremonies. It would be inconvenient, in a suit not constituted for the purpose, that an attempt should be made to define with exactness the extent of the user which the public have as of right in this ghat. But if it be assumed that any bather may bring with him his own priest or his own friend to assist in ceremonial ablutions, this is not in their Lordships' view a valid reason for refusing to the plaintiff an order in ejectment together with a properly framed injunction. The defendants have been sitting on the ghat for the purpose of carrying on their occupation there and have claimed to be entitled to exclusive possession of parts of the ghat as a right of property. If the plaintiff's ownership and possession entitle her to relief, then, upon it appearing that the defendants have no such rights as they claim, she is as well entitled to an order that the defendants should remove themselves as to an order for removal of their canopies. They are not persons who come with bathers to the ghat but persons who cumber the ghat in order to intercept the bathers and who do so continuously habitually and as an occupation or profession. A right to stand, sit or squat on the ghat for the purposes of exercising the profession of ghatias may be acquired by consent of the plaintiff, but as matters stand it is not the right of any of the defendants.

As the rights claimed by the defendants have not been established, it is not clear that they have anything to gain by disputing whether the plaintiff is owner of the ghat or is merely the hereditary superintendent of a religious endowment. In either case she would be entitled to maintain a suit in respect of the grievances complained of, and to obtain the same or similar relief. But as the plaintiff sued as owner and as the full bench appear to have held that she was a mere manager or mutawalli, it is right to consider whether the trial Judge's declaration of the plaintiff's ownership was well founded.

A bathing ghat on the banks of the Ganges at Benares is a subject-matter to be considered upon the principles of the Hindu law. If dedicated to such a purpose, land or other property would be dedicated to an object both religious and of public utility, just as much as is a dharamsala or a math, notwithstanding that it be not dedicated to any particular deity. But it cannot from this consideration be at once concluded that in any particular case there has been a dedication in the full sense of the Hindu law which involves the complete cessation of ownership on the part of the founder and the vesting of the property in the religious institution or object. There may or may not be some presumption arising in respect of this from particular circumstances of a given case, but, in the absence of a formal and express endowment evidenced by deed or declaration, the character of the dedication can only be determined on the basis of the history of the institution and the conduct of the founder and his heirs. That the dedication of property to religious or charitable uses may be complete or partial is as true under the Benares as under the Bengal school of Hindu law. Partial dedication may take place not only where a mere charge is created in favour of an idol or other religious object, but also, as Mr. Mayne in his well-known work was careful to notice, "where the owner retained the property in himself but granted the community or part of the community an easement over it for certain specified purposes" (Hindu Law and Usage, 6th edn., 1900, s. 438, p. 567). In Jaggamoni Dasi v. Nilmoni Ghosal<sup>1</sup> the plaintiff's ancestor had built a temple and bathing ghat, as well as a room and another ghat for use by persons at the point of death. The defendant having used the ghat for the landing of goods, Field J. observed (p. 76) :—

“There is here no deed of endowment, and no evidence has been taken as to the exact purpose and object of this so-called endowment. The first question which suggests itself is whether the plaintiff's father, in building these temples, this antorjoli room, and this ghat, intended to give to the Hindu community a right of easement over the soil, or intended to transfer the ownership of the buildings as well as the ownership of the soil to such community. It by no means necessarily follows that, because the plaintiff's father erected this ghat and this antorjoli-room, and allowed the Hindu community to use them for the purposes set out in the plaint, he intended to divest himself of the ownership of the soil, &c.”

The judgment of the full bench in the present case is open to criticism in respect that it does not take due account of this distinction. Speaking of the tolls collected from shopkeepers on the ghat at festivals, the learned Judges, though noticing that no trustee or manager had ever been appointed and that the plaintiff and her predecessors had bought the land, built the masonry steps and had always looked after and repaired the ghat, say :—

“The ghat having been dedicated to the public, it is not conceivable that the plaintiff or her predecessors could have ever wished to appropriate its income to their private use, nor has the plaintiff made any attempt to show that its income was ever appropriated by her or her predecessors. It therefore appears that the plaintiff and her predecessors realised the income of the ghat and made repairs as a manager or mutwalli and not as an absolute proprietor ... The plaintiff is not entitled to a declaration of an absolute proprietary title in the ghat, as the same has been dedicated to the public, and the plaintiff has only the right of reversion if ever the ghat ceases to be used as such.”

“The ghat having been dedicated to the public, the defendants could not have acquired any right under any grant or prescription which might interfere with or limit the rights of the public. As already stated, there is no difference in principle between the dedication of a ghat to the public and the dedication of a highroad.”

Now there is the very broadest distinction between saying that the plaintiff's ownership is not absolute because it is qualified by the public's right of user for purposes of bathing, and saying that the plaintiff is not the owner at all, but a mere mutawalli in whom nothing vests because her predecessor had dedicated the ghat in the full sense of divesting himself completely of all interest therein. When in English law the owner of land is said to have dedicated it for a highway it is not intended or implied that his right of ownership has been divested. On the contrary if any member of the public exceeds the permitted user, a right of action in trespass arises to the dedicator or his successor in title by virtue of his ownership and possession : St. Mary, Newington v. Jacobs<sup>1</sup> and Harrison v. Duke of Rutland.<sup>2</sup> Dedication in the full sense known to the Hindu law is a different matter. In the usual case of complete dedication made to an idol, for example, the property ceases altogether to belong to the donor and becomes vested in the idol as a juristic person. Complete relinquishment by the owner of his proprietary right is however by no means the only form of dedication known to the Hindu law and is very different from anything that could ordinarily be inferred from the public user of a highway. From the standpoint of the Hindu law "it is not essential to a valid dedication that the legal title should pass from the owner nor is it inconsistent with an effectual dedication that the owner should continue to make any and all uses of the land which do not interfere with the uses for which it is dedicated." The Chairman, Howrah Municipality v. Khetra Kristo Mitter,<sup>1</sup> (per Mookerjee J., at p. 348). When the dedication is only partial the property in some parts of India might none the less in common parlance be described as devottar; but whether it be charged with a sum of money for the worship of an idol or be subjected to a right of limited user on the part of the public, it would descend and be alienable in the ordinary way; "the only difference being" as Mr. Mayne observes in the passage already referred to in this judgment "that it passes with the charge upon it." (Hindu Law and Usage, 6th edn., 1900, s. 438, p. 567).

The conclusion of the full bench that the plaintiff had only the right of reversion if ever the ghat ceases to be used as such appears to have been drawn from the mere fact that the ghat was "dedicated to the public." But a review of the history of the ghat and the conduct of the plaintiff and her predecessors is required to determine whether the river bank at this spot was dedicated in such sense as to make an end of private ownership therein. The written statements of the defendants set up that "the land on the bank of the holy River Ganges between the two confluents of Baruna and Assi rivulets in the city of Benares is waqf property from time immemorial the same having been dedicated to the Hindu community at large." The exceeding sanctity of the river is not of itself a reason why a pious benefactor of the public should do more than provide access to its waters. Whether the question be limited to the ghat in suit or be enlarged by consideration of the evidence about neighbouring ghats, it seems to their Lordships that there is no substantial ground for holding that the plaintiff's predecessors or any of them had divested themselves of all property in this ghat and had accepted the position of having a mere right of management. No express dedication has been proved by production of a deed of endowment or otherwise. No manager has ever been appointed. Not one instance has been shown in which the plaintiff or any predecessor has purported to act as superintendent, sebaite or mutawalli. On the contrary they have been treated as owners whenever by disrepair the ghat has attracted the attention of public authority. They have repaired and substantially improved the ghat at their own expense. They have closed it to bathers on proper occasions and have levied tolls on the keepers of shops at festivals. That their expenditure upon the ghat has exceeded their receipts and that they would not wish to make a profit from the tolls is probable enough, but in no way tends to prove that they have parted with all right as owners of the soil. The evidence as to agreements taken from ghatias upon nearby ghats is strong to show that in them the proprietors have retained their rights of ownership notwithstanding that the ghats are public bathing places. The learned trial Judge very reasonably thought that the evidence was overwhelming to show the plaintiff's proprietary right, and their Lordships, though bearing well in mind that there was a bathing ghat at this spot before the purchase of the plaintiff's predecessor in 1814, think that there is little to support a contrary view. The river bank at Benares is a sacred and historic spot with a powerful claim to the regard of a pious Hindu : but the practice of bathing in the Ganges is not in general so directly connected with the worship of a particular deity that nothing short of complete dedication would be appropriate for a public bathing ghat. The character of the use to be made of the bank does not require it. Nor does the public right of use for purposes of bathing take its origin, as a rule from an immediate and express act of dedication : rather does it begin by acts of user which are acquiesced in by the owner of the property who in due course makes provision for the public needs as an act of charity or piety. It may well be doubted whether a complete abandonment of the owner's rights is at all usual in the case of public bathing ghats : though it might be common enough in the case of tanks dedicated to the public for bathing purposes : even then the ownership of the banks would be another matter.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the declaration made by the trial Judge as to the plaintiff's ownership as well as his order of ejectment against the defendants was correct. They think that the terms of the permanent injunction to be granted to the plaintiff should restrain the defendants from frequenting the Prayag ghat, without the consent of the plaintiff or her successor in title, for the purpose of acting as ghatias thereon, and from sitting or squatting upon the same without such consent in the exercise of the profession or occupation of ghatias.

They will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, that the decree of the High Court dated January 3, 1936, be set aside and that the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Benares dated June 25, 1930, be restored, with the variation mentioned as to the terms of the permanent injunction. The respondents will pay the costs of the plaintiff in the High Court and of the appellants in this appeal. The appellants must, however, pay to the respondents the costs of the application to restore the appeal, which had been dismissed for non-prosecution, as directed by the Order in Council of July 25, 1939, and there must be a set-off as regards these costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 6—Personal decree—Mortgagee of leasehold—Whether privity of estate or privity of contract between such mortgagee and lessor.

In the case of a mortgage of leasehold interest, as between the lessor and the mortgagee of the leasehold interest from the lessee, there is neither a privity of estate such as to render the latter liable for the burdens of the lease, nor is there a privity of contract between them in respect of the rent and lessee's covenants, irrespective of the fact that the mortgagee has entered into possession of the mortgaged property.

Where, therefore, the lease creates a charge on the lessee's interest in the leasehold property for payment of rent or other obligations and in pursuance of such charge the leasehold property is sold and the sale proceeds are not sufficient to satisfy the claim of the lessor, the lessor cannot apply for a personal decree against such a mortgagee for any deficit under O. XXXIV, r. 6, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree of the High Court, Patna, dated February 18, 1938, which reversed a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad in the district of Manbhum, dated December 6, 1934.

On April 24, 1907, defendant No. 1, C. J. Smith, predecessor of respondents No. 2, executed two kabuliyats in favour of the plaintiff's (respondent No. 1's) predecessor-in-title, one in respect of the surface rights in 650 bighas of Mouzah Jinagara for a term of 999 years at a fixed annual rent of Rs. 650 and the other in respect of the sub-soil rights in those 650 bighas, likewise for a term of 999 years, at a specified rate of royalty on the coal raised each year, with a minimum annual royalty of Rs. 975. In the former kabuliyat, liberty was given to the lessee "to transfer the leasehold land by sale, gift or otherwise," but it was declared nevertheless that "the leasehold land remains wholly hypothecated for the amount of rent and the amount of rent will be treated as the first charge." In the second kabuliyat there were similar provisions, namely :—" (8) that for the amount of royalty the leasehold land and the machineries and (illegible) remain wholly hypothecated. If I make default in payment of the amount of royalty you will be competent to realise the same by selling the leasehold land. In regard to the same I or my heirs or successors-in-interest shall have no objection ; (9) that I shall be competent to transfer the leasehold land by gift sale or otherwise according to my wish. But thereby there will be no obstacle to the priority of dues, i.e., the transferee will remain wholly bound to pay the amount of royalty ;

On February 4, 1920, defendant No. 1 mortgaged inter alia his rights under the kabuliyats to the appellants-mortgagees to secure repayment of amounts to be advanced to him from time to time by the mortgagees on current account up to a maximum amount of Rs. 3 lacs. Defendant No. 1 undertook to repay "the full amount of the floating balance" on February 4, 1923, and to pay "interest at the rate of eleven per cent. per annum on the balance for the time being due on the said cash credit loan account by monthly payments with half-yearly rests."

Under the liberty given the mortgagees eventually took possession of the mortgaged leaseholds by collecting rents and profits from the mortgagor's sub-lessees.

On April 20, 1928, the receiver of the Jharia raj instituted a suit against defendant No. 1 to recover arrears of rent and royalty with cess and interest under the two kabuliyats for the period April, 1917, to April, 1928. He provisionally fixed the amount to be recovered at Rs. 31,058-11-6, but asked for an account of the coal actually raised during the said period and for leave to adjust his claim on the taking of such account. The prayers were for an account and for reliefs as in a mortgage suit, namely, a decree for payment of the amount found due on the account and, in default of payment by a date to be fixed by the Court, for realisation of the decretal amount by sale of the leasehold properties with tools, machineries and boilers, &c.

On June 12, 1929, the plaintiff and the third respondents arrived at a compromise whereby the latter undertook within a month to submit correct accounts of raisings of coal for the period claimed, and it was declared that the plaintiff would have no right either to sell that company's sub-lease or to a personal decree against the company, in other words, that "in case of default of payment of the decretal amount to be ascertained by final decree the decretal amount may be realised by sale of the right title and interest" of the second respondents and the mortgagee company.

On June 14, 1929, a preliminary decree for account was passed on contest against the second respondents, on compromise against the respondent company, and ex parte against the mortgagee company.

No accounts having been submitted, a commissioner was appointed to take accounts, and on December 9, 1929, judgment was given on the basis of the commissioner's report and a preliminary decree for sale passed on contest against the second respondents, on compromise against the respondent company, and ex parte against the mortgagees for the payment of Rs. 2,90,000-11-6 by June 9, 1930, and, on default, the decretal amount was ordered to be realised by sale of the interest of the second respondents and the mortgagees in the property under charge.

On August 30, 1930, the Subordinate Judge passed ex parte a final decree for sale of the interests of the second respondents and the mortgagees and on June 25, 1931, they were sold and purchased by the plaintiff for Rs. 1,00,000.

On June 23, 1934, the plaintiff (the receiver having in the meantime been discharged) made the present application in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a personal decree under O. XXXIV, r. 6, for the recovery of the balance of the decretal amount from the second and third respondents and the mortgagees.

The latter objected in writing that they were not and never had been the plaintiff's tenants; that there never had been any contract between them and him for payment of his dues on account of rent, royalty or commission; that there was not and never had been any privity of contract or privity of estate between the parties for payment of such dues; that by the sale in execution of the final decree the mortgagees' mortgage interest had been destroyed since the plaintiff had the first charge, but that the mortgagees were not personally liable for the balance of the decretal amount. The second and third respondents also filed written objections.

On December 6, 1934, the Subordinate Judge gave judgment stating that at the hearing the plaintiff had withdrawn his claim for a personal decree against the respondent company, but pressed his claim against the second respondents and the mortgagees.

As regards the former it was conceded that they were liable to the extent of the assets of the lessee which had come to their hands in respect of arrears of royalty, &c., which fell due six years before the suit was brought. As regards the mortgagees, the Judge considered that the sole question of their liability turned upon the point whether on the basis of the mortgage bond their position could be said to be that of assignees of the leasehold property. He said that the bond made it clear that the mortgagor did not thereby transfer his whole interest to the mortgagees so as to make the latter liable for the payment of rent to the lessor by virtue of privity of estate. He held, therefore, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a personal decree against the appellant.

Against that judgment the plaintiff filed an appeal in the High Court contending that the mortgagees should not have been exonerated.

The High Court (Terrell C. J. and Fazl Ali J. allowed the appeal: see Raja Shiva Prasad Singh v. Tom Smith, 1938, I. L. R. 17 Pat. 499).

The mortgagees appealed to His Majesty in Council.

J. M. Pringle, for the appellants.

C. S. Rewcastle and R. K. Handoo, for the respondents.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN. The controversy in this case has reference to 650 bighas of coal land in Mouza Jinagara in the District of Manbhum in Bihar. In these, the appellants, the Jagadamba Loan Company, Limited, are mortgagees of certain leasehold interests which were granted by the Jharia raj as zemindar to one Charles Smith upon the terms of two kabuliyats, dated April 24, 1907. By one of these instruments Charles Smith took settlement of the surface rights for 999 years at an annual rent of Rs. 650: by the other sub-soil rights were settled with him for the same period upon certain terms as to payment of royalty which need not here be set out. The rent for the surface rights was secured by a provision that "the leasehold land remains wholly hypothecated for the amount of rent and the amount of rent will be treated as the first charge. As regards the sub-soil rights the provision was "that for the amount of royalty the leasehold land and the machineries remain wholly hypothecated. If I make default in payment of the amount of royalty you will be competent to realise the same by selling the leasehold land."

The appellants' mortgage is dated February 4, 1920. It was executed by the lessee Charles Smith. It recited that several sub-leases had in the meantime been granted by him one being in favour of the Jinagara Coal Company, Limited. It provided that the appellants should from time to time make advances upon a cash credit loan account and that Charles Smith, the mortgagor, should repay the same with certain interest on February 4, 1923. Subject to a proviso for redemption it conveyed to the appellants all the estate and interest of the mortgagor including his right to rent and royalties from sub-leases. The mortgagor covenanted that during the subsistence of the security he would pay all rents, royalties, taxes, etc. and observe the covenants of the head leases. In case of the mortgagor's default in payment of the principal and interest when due the appellants were to be entitled to enter into possession of the mortgaged premises and receive the rents, issues and profits thereof, and in case of the mortgagor's default in payment of the rents, royalties or taxes due in respect of the lands the appellants were to be at liberty to enter into possession without being accountable as a mortgagee in possession.

It is agreed that the appellants eventually collected certain rents and profits from sub-lessees of Charles Smith and in this sense entered into possession; but the dates and other particulars of the appellants' action do not appear from the record submitted to the Board. It is not suggested that the appellants at any time paid rent to the Jharia raj in respect of the leasehold interests in mortgage to them.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Dhanbad on April 20, 1928. It was brought on behalf of the raj as lessor against Charles Smith (the first defendant) as lessee and certain other parties as sub-lessees. The appellants were not originally impleaded: they were added as parties on January 4, 1929, but took no steps to contest the suit until after it had resulted in a sale as hereafter mentioned. The plaint claimed large sums as due to the raj for rent and royalty in arrear in respect of the 650 bighas, prayed that an account of the raisings of coal should be had to ascertain the sums due for royalty, claimed that the arrears were a first charge on the leasehold properties, and asked for enforcement of the charge by sale. Certain accounts having been taken as directed by the trial Judge on June 14, 1929, a preliminary decree for sale was made on December 9, 1929, and a final decree on August 30, 1930. The sale took place on June 25, 1931. After setting off the sale proceeds against the amount due to the raj, a large sum remained due and unpaid, and on June 23, 1934, application was made on behalf of the raj under O. XXXIV, r. 6, of the Civil Procedure Code, for a personal decree for the deficiency against the estate of Charles Smith, the lessee, (who had died pending suit) against one of his sub-lessees, and against the appellants. The deficiency was said to amount to a lac of rupees.

This claim was resisted by the appellants who lodged an objection dated July 28, 1934, maintaining that between themselves and the raj as lessors there was neither privity of contract nor of estate.

The learned Subordinate Judge on December 6, 1934, upheld the objection and refused to make a personal decree against the appellants, but on appeal the High Court at Patna (Terrell C. J. and Fazl Ali J.) reversed his decision and passed a decree on February 18, 1938, against the appellants for the sums due to the raj for rent and royalties in respect of the six years before suit.

From this decree an appeal has now been brought to His Majesty in Council. The appellants, as a new ground of objection in addition to those previously insisted on, have relied upon the fact that the plaintiffs agreed to exclude from the sale the interest of certain sub-lessees, and say that in any case the property which was included in the decree for sale was neither "the mortgaged property nor a sufficient part thereof" within the meaning of r. 5(3) of O. XXXIV. Whether upon this new ground the appellants could resist a personal decree for the deficiency under r. 6 of that Order, is however a question which their Lordships do not find it necessary to discuss or decide.

Since the decision of the High Court in this case, the position of a mortgagee of leaseholds has been considered by the Board in Ram Kinkar Banerjee v. Satya Charan Srimani.<sup>1</sup> It was there held that in India even in the case of an English mortgage a legal interest remains in the mortgagor: hence the interest taken by the mortgagee is not an absolute interest and is not such as to render him liable for the burdens of the lease by reason of privity of estate. In that case however the mortgagees had not entered into possession of the properties mortgaged.

In the present case no question arises of novation by reason of the appellants having paid rent to the raj or otherwise. Their Lordships have however to consider whether the appellants have become liable for the rents and royalties by reason of their entry into possession of the mortgaged property. They are not of opinion that privity of estate can result from entry into possession in the case of a person who has taken a transfer from the lessee of an interest which is not the whole interest in the term.

The High Court were of opinion that the appellants were liable by reason of privity of contract, and in support of this view cited Dallas C. J. in Williams v. Bosanquet<sup>2</sup> (p. 263):—

"... and, even as to privity of contract, there is such privity also, for the contract of the lessor is with the lessee and his assigns, and the Defendants here are the assigns of the lessee: it is, therefore, a contract between the lessor and the assignee, that is, in this case, between the Plaintiff and the Defendants."

Before relying upon this dictum it would be necessary to enquire whether the principle which it expresses has been accepted in the law of England and how it consists with the doctrine, generally accepted, that the assignee's liability to the lessor can be brought to an end by his assigning the premises over to another. But in their Lordships' view the principle of the decision in Ram Kinkar Banerjee's case<sup>1</sup> is inconsistent with there being privity of contract between the lessor and the mortgagee in respect of the rent and lessee's covenants. If the lessee retains part of his original interest in the term, the mortgagee cannot be liable to the lessor for the whole of the rent and covenants: and cannot without apportionment be liable for any part thereof, whether or not he enters into possession. The transferee of a partial interest in the term cannot be taken to have promised the lessor to discharge any part of the burdens of the lessee. It would be somewhat remarkable if the lease in Ram Kinkar's case was not thought to be one in which "the contract is with the lessee and his assigns"; yet no suggestion is to be discovered to the effect that the mortgagees were liable by privity of contract. Their Lordships are of opinion that the principle of that decision is equally inconsistent with privity of contract as with privity of estate as a ground of claim against the mortgagee of leaseholds in such a case as the present.

They will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be allowed, the decree of the High Court dated February 18, 1938, set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge dated December 6, 1934, restored. The first respondent will pay the appellants' costs in the High Court and of this appeal.

RAKHALANANDA THAKUR.

Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872)—Rules of evidence—Strict application by Court—Rules not to be waived at Judge's will.

The Indian Evidence Act, 1872, being a statute which purports to contain the whole law of evidence applicable in India, is imperative. It is, therefore, not open to a Judge to exercise a dispensing power to admit evidence inadmissible by virtue of the Act because it appears to him that the irregular evidence will throw light upon an issue being determined. The principles of exclusion of evidence adopted by the Act must be applied strictly and cannot be relaxed at the discretion of the Court.

THE facts appear fully from the judgment.

The plaintiffs Rakhalananda and others were a family of Brahmin priests. They claimed that they were entitled to a charge on the estate represented by Maharaja Sris Chandra Nandy for an annual britti of Rs. 4,000. The claim was upheld by the Courts in India. The defendants appealed to His Majesty in Council.

J. M. Tucker K. C. and W. Wallach, for the appellants.

Sir Thomas Strangman K. C. and C. Bagram, for the respondents.

LORD ATKIN. This is an appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal who affirmed a decree of the Additional District Judge 24 Parganas in favour of the plaintiffs, the present respondents. The plaintiffs are a distinguished family of Brahmin priests, Thakurs of Shrikhanda : and their claim is for a declaration that they are entitled to a charge on the Kasim-bazar Raj Estate represented by the defendants for an annual britti of 4,000 rupees payable by half-yearly instalments and for a money decree for arrears amounting to Rs. 13,260. The defences to the suit are in substance that the plaintiffs never had a legal right to the britti, and that in any event it was not charged upon the estate. These issues were raised in the proceedings and have been decided in favour of the plaintiffs in both Courts. The history of the claim begins with the founder of the Raj fortunes one Krishna Kanta Nandy. He appears to have been a Hindu of comparatively humble origin who by his abilities attracted the attention of Warren Hastings, became his Diwan, and died in the year 1778 proprietor of large possessions in about twelve different districts and in Calcutta. After his death his son Loknath appears to have been given the title of Maharajah of Kasimbazar by Warren Hastings, and the property to which he and his descendants have succeeded is known as the Kasimbazar Raj Estate. The case of the plaintiffs is that Krishna Kanta Nandy established two deities, Radhagovinda and Lakshminarayan, at Shrikhanda, the plaintiffs' home, and granted the plaintiffs a britti of Rs. 4,000 for the worship of the two deities : and at the same time charged his Raj estate with the payment of the britti. The plaintiffs and their successors, it is said, became the gurus of Krishna Kanta Nandy and his family and its successors : they have conducted the worship and service of the deities ever since.

The learned Assistant District Judge found that the plaintiffs had established the whole of their case. A permanent grant of britti was made by Krishna Kanta Nandy who had established at the home of the plaintiffs the two deities and provided the britti for securing their service and worship. To secure the permanent payment he had charged it upon the estate. The learned High Court Judges were not able to find that Krishna Kanta Nandy had established the deities, but they concurred in the finding that he had made a permanent grant, and had charged it upon the Kasimbazar estate.

Their Lordships are of opinion that no evidence was given sufficient to support these findings. As they will point out later, both Courts erred in admitting as valid evidence of tradition given by and on behalf of the plaintiffs : and when the admissible evidence is considered there is none to justify the finding of a permanent grant or of a charge. The evidence establishes the following facts : that from the time of Krishna Kanta Nandy the sum of Rs. 4,000 has been paid annually to the plaintiffs and their successors as britti : that they have continuously conducted the worship and service of the two deities : and that until about the year 1897 such worship was conducted on behalf of the holder of the Raj and that the plaintiffs were the gurus of his family. The succession of the Raj family is relevant. Krishna died in 1778 and was succeeded by his son Loknath who first received the title of Maharajah. There is nothing to indicate that this is an impartible estate. Indeed what little evidence there is on the point indicates the contrary, but in fact there only appears to have been one person at a time entitled in the line of descent. Loknath was succeeded by Harinath who died in 1832, who was succeeded in turn by his son Krishnanath, who died in 1844 without issue. His widow Rani Swarnamayi succeeded to the estate and possessed it for over fifty years until her death in 1897. On her death the estate reverted to Krishnanath's mother Rani Hari Sundari. She, who must have been a very old lady at the time, in the same year transferred her interest to the next successor Manindra Chandra Nandy the sons of her daughter Gobinda. The estate thus passed out of the direct male succession. Manindra had for his gurus another family the Thakurs of Jogeswardi, and had family deities other than Radhagovinda and Lakshminarayan. In 1923 Manindra Chandra Nandy executed a trust deed in favour of the firm of Ogilvy Gillanders & Co. and certain named trustees with the object that the firm should raise a loan for the Maharajah of £675,000 and pay off certain scheduled incumbrances and unsecured liabilities. The bulk of the Raj estate was assigned to the trustees by way of mortgage or trust to keep down the necessary charges, and create certain reserve funds including a sum of three lacs which the Maharajah estimated would be sufficient for his personal household expenses. The Maharajah covenanted inter alia that the property was free from all incumbrances other than those mentioned in the 4th schedule to the deed which did not include the charge now alleged to exist. In February, 1929, on the application of the Maharajah Manindra the estate was taken under the management of the Court of Wards by whom it is now managed subject to the provisions of the deed of trust of 1923. In 1929 the Maharajah Manindra died and was succeeded by the present Maharajah Sris Chandra Nandy. On April 10, 1929, the plaintiffs presented a petition to the General Manager of the Kasimbazar Raj Ward's Estate alleging that they had been receiving for generations from the estate an annual annuity allowance of Rs. 4,000, that they had been spending the said allowance as well as their own income towards the worship of several deities and other acts of piety : and asking for the payment of one year's arrears. It may be noticed that in this letter there is no suggestion of the establishment by Krishna Kanta Nandy of the two specified deities, or of a permanent grant by him, or of the creation of any charge. This request was refused by the Manager of the Court of Wards, and on June 28, 1929, the Maharajah Manindra wrote to him having been told by the plaintiffs of the refusal.

Kasimbazar Rajbari,
June 28, 1929.

My dear Mr. Burrows,

I have read your letter No. 575ES/16-108 dated the 4th May, 1929 (a copy of which was forwarded to me) as also another letter No. 1565ES dated the 15th June, 1929 (shown to me) sent in reply to the letters of Sriji Rakhalananda Thakur of Shrikhanda.

The annual Britti payable to our spiritual guides, the Thakurs of Shrikhanda amounting to Rs. 4,000* (Four thousand) has been paid by the Raj family of Kasimbazar from generation to generation, and I have been paying it all along during my management.

During Mr. Lyall's administration as he did not like to meddle with Religious and Spiritual matters, he left the matter with me of course leaving sufficient fund in my hands.

It is not of the nature of personal charity but has always been regarded as a charge upon the Estate. I have nothing to say regarding your decision. You may hold it or alter it if there be good reason for doing so, but this Britti, in my opinion, is legally enforceable against the Kasimbazar Raj Estate.

In this connection I would like to refer you to my letter No. 1/XII-4/3-G dated the 19th April, 1929, in which I mentioned the recurring permanent grants which in addition to other commitments I am bound to make viz. 1. To spiritual guides of Shrikhanda and Jageswardihi, 2. Debkarjya and Debsheba &c. and to my letter to the Secretary Board of Revenue dated the 2nd February, 1929, with statements therewith attached, a careful perusal of which will clearly convince you that the above demand is a charge really, upon Kasimbazar Raj Estate and incidentally upon me as proprietor of the Estate and not in my personal capacity.

The following is an extract of the relevant portion of my letter to Mr. Fawcus, Secretary Board of Revenue dated the 2nd February, 1929, for your easy reference.

"I should like to state however in this connection that whereas I have these additional sources of income which are not covered by the Trust Deed I have at the same time additional demands on me for Debkarjya, Britti to spiritual guides and Brahmin Pundits and the maintenance of educational institutions which have been recognised by the family from generations past."

I shall be glad if you will consider all the facts relating to this matter and recommend to the Court for acceptance of the charge of paying Rs. 4,000 annually to the Thakurs of Shrikhanda which is in reality a charge on the Kasimbazar Raj Estate.

Yours sincerely,
Manindra Chandra Nandy.

L. B. Burrows, Esqr., B. A., Manager, Kasimbazar Raj Wards' Estate,
2/1, Russel Street,
Calcutta.

So far from regarding this letter as proof of a legal charge their Lordships are of opinion that it tends to negative such a claim. The Maharajah is obviously seeking to limit his personal liabilities : and is treating the continual payment of this britti as an instance of the "additional demands on me for debkarjya and britti for spiritual guides and Brahmin Pundits and the maintenance of educational institutions which have been recognised by the family from generations past." It seems obvious that the continuous recognition is to him another way of saying it has always been regarded as a charge upon the estate. It would not be suggested that the other "additional demands" in which this claim is included involved legal charges upon the property. It seems obvious the letter of the Maharajah, written in the circumstances set out in the letter, could not possibly outweigh the express covenant in the deed of 1923 that there were no incumbrances other than those scheduled.

In the result, therefore, there is no evidence at all of the establishment of the deities by Krishna, of any permanent grant by him of the britti, or of the creation of any charge upon any property. It is very significant that though the plaintiffs appear to have very complete records of their transactions from early times, no document is produced making or evidencing the grant or charge : and this alone is sufficient to cast doubt upon the claim. Moreover while it would not be unusual to assign particular lands as the source from which britti was to be paid and in this sense create a charge, it would seem to their Lordships very improbable that a vast estate should be charged as a whole with the payment of Rs. 4,000 a year. Their Lordships are not prepared to say that a valid charge could not be created upon what could be defined to be the whole of a man's property at the date of the charge. In the present case it should be noticed that not only is the charge claimed and decreed a charge upon the estate as it at present exists ; but it has been decreed without any condition that the families of the grantor or the plaintiffs should continue to exist, or that the plaintiffs should continue to perform the service and worship, sheva and puja, of the two named deities. This defect in the decree was admitted by counsel for the respondents who submitted an amended form of decree which would remedy the mistake. But for present purposes the point is the difficulty the plaintiffs are in in establishing any grant or charge with any sufficient certainty. Naturally if the continuous payments could not be explained without asserting some legal origin which would create the rights claimed, any Court would feel inclined to presume the necessary legal origin. But in the present case there are no facts which require a presumption of any lost grant either for the permanent gift of the britti or still less for it being constituted a charge. It appears to their Lordships the natural inference from the known facts that the original founder of the estate granted the britti in his lifetime : and that his successors from pious motives continued the grant to the plaintiffs' successors who continued to be the family spiritual guides, and served and worshipped the family gods. Without assuming any legal obligation it would in the circumstances have been strange if the britti had not been continued. The learned trial Judge working backwards, as it would seem from the fact that the payment was continued for several generations, has imputed to the founder the intention that it should continue for all those generations : and has so drawn the inference that he did in fact grant a permanent britti ; and took steps to secure its permanence by creating a charge, the uncertainty of the terms of which their Lordships have already discussed. The trial Judge it is true found that Krishna Kanta Nandy established the deities. The High Court have found that it would not be safe on the evidence to hold that the plaintiffs had established the case that the two deities were so established. Nevertheless they go on to say that they cannot express the definite opinion that the trial Judge was not right in his inference that the deities were so established. This conclusion appears to involve some confusion of thought. If it was not safe from the evidence for the appellate Court to draw a particular inference, it was not safe for the trial Judge to draw the inference. Not safe must mean that there is not evidence from which the inference can reasonably be drawn. There are cases in which evidence is so well balanced that an inference either way can reasonably be drawn. In such cases the appellate tribunal may select the inference they choose : but they can have no equal choice between an inference that is safe, and one that is unsafe.

But the conclusions of the two Indian Courts are not based solely on the evidence of which the substance has been stated above and which their Lordships have held to be insufficient. Both Courts relied on the evidence of some of the plaintiffs' witnesses speaking of a tradition in their family that Krishna Kanta Nandy had established the two deities, had granted the britti in perpetuity and had made it a charge upon the estate. Obviously this is hearsay evidence, and it is equally clear that it is not one of the claims of hearsay evidence admissible under the provisions of s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. The members of the High Court recognised this, but they made a statement as to the law of evidence which their Lordships feel bound to state is entirely erroneous. They say, "It is to be noticed in this connection that s. 2(1) of the Indian Evidence Act repeals the whole of the English common law on evidence so far as it was in force in British India before the passing of the Indian Evidence Act, and that provision of the law in effect prohibits the employment of any kind of evidence not specifically authorised by the Act itself." This is of course correct. But they continue, "It must be recognised, however, that the principle of exclusion adopted by the Indian Evidence Act should not be applied so as to exclude matters which may be essential for the ascertainment of truth." It seems to their Lordships essential in the interests of the administration of justice in India that this mode of regarding the law of evidence should emphatically be stated to be unsound. What matters should be given in evidence as essential for the ascertainment of truth it is the purpose of the law of evidence whether at common law or by statute to define. Once a statute is passed which purports to contain the whole law it is imperative. It is not open to any Judge to exercise a dispensing power, and admit evidence not admissible by the statute because to him it appears that the irregular evidence would throw light upon the issue. The rules of evidence, whether contained in a statute or not, are the result of long experience choosing no doubt to confine evidence to particular forms, and therefore eliminating others which it is conceivable might assist in arriving at truth. But that which has been eliminated has been considered to be of such doubtful value as on the whole to be more likely to disguise truth than discover it. It is, therefore, discarded for all purposes and in all circumstances. To allow a Judge to introduce it at his own discretion would be to destroy the whole object of the general rule. There is therefore no such principle as is suggested in the passage now under discussion. At the same time their Lordships wish to make it clear that apart from any rule of law the evidence in question so far from leading to the ascertainment of truth in fact for the reasons already given leads away from it. It is not remarkable that the learned Judges who gave leave to appeal in this case did not conceal some uncertainty as to the correctness of this part of the judgment. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to discuss at any length inferences drawn by both Courts from the absence of evidence by the defendants of the contents of their own books. They do not think that in the circumstances the comments are well founded. In the result therefore their Lordships are of opinion that this suit fails, and that the appeal should be allowed and the suit dismissed. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. They notice however that the late Maharajah Manindra clearly regarded the payment of the britti as being a personal obligation of his, and it would seem to follow in their opinion that the Court of Wards would be justified in making payment of the arrears up to the time of his death to the plaintiffs. This is not however a matter for decree in this suit. The respondents must pay the costs in the Indian Courts and of this appeal.

YESHWANT PANDHARINATH SHETE.*

Under the Village Panchayats Act, 1920, a village panchayat is not competent to farm out its right to collect taxes from persons occupying village sites. Such a contract, entered into by a village panchayat, is ultra vires.

But the village panchayat is entitled to recover the money due to it under such a contract under s. 65 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh<sup>4</sup> and Saundatti Municipality v. Shripadbhat<sup>5</sup>, followed.

Rudragowda v. Gangowda,<sup>6</sup> distinguished.

SUIT to recover money under a contract.

The Village Panchayat of Rahuri (plaintiff) entered into an agreement with Govind Keshav Dandavate (defendant No. 1) whereunder defendant No. 1 was to collect the ground rent tax at the Rahuri weekly market from April 1, 1933, to March 31, 1934, in accordance with the rates fixed, and to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 2,300 in four instalments of Rs. 575 each. Defendant No. 1 paid the first two instalments and a further sum of Rs. 365 out of the third instalment. He failed to pay the balance of Rs. 210 of the third instalment and Rs. 575 of the fourth instalment.

The plaintiff sued defendant No. 1 to recover the amount due with interest at five per cent. per annum from the date of default. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were joined as parties as they stood sureties for defendant No. 1.

Defendant No. 1 contended inter alia that the plaintiff had no power to sell the right to collect taxes, that the weekly market was held on a site beyond the limits of the plaintiff's jurisdiction and the plaintiff therefore had no right to sell the right to collect taxes thereat, that the contract to collect taxes was not valid and the suit was not maintainable. He also contended that the plaintiff had failed to take steps mentioned in the contract on his failure to pay the instalments in time, that the plaintiff therefore had no right to sue, and that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were discharged from their liability.

v.

NATH

The Subordinate Judge held that the agreement sued on was not void on the ground that the plaintiff had no power to farm out the right to levy the ground rent tax, but it was illegal as it contravened one of the rules made by the District Local Board requiring that sums collected should be paid in daily at the plaintiff's office. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On appeal, the Assistant Judge held that the plaintiff could legally farm out the right in question and that the agreement was not illegal because of the breach of the District Local Board Rule. He reversed the decree of the lower Court and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff making defendants Nos. 2 and 3 jointly and severally liable with defendant No. 1 for the decretal amount.

Defendants appealed to the High Court.

J. G. Rele, for the appellants.

P. V. Nisure, for the respondent.

BROOMFIELD J. The plaintiff in the suit, which has given rise to this second appeal, was the sarpanch of the village panchayat of Rahuri in the Ahmednagar district. Under the Village Panchayats Act of 1920 the panchayat has the right of levying certain taxes, and in particular, under the rules made by the District Local Board in accordance with s. 27 of the Act, it is entitled to recover ground rent in respect of sites occupied in the village market. By an agreement made on April 22, 1933, between the plaintiff representing the village panchayat on the one hand and appellant No. 1 on the other the right to collect these dues was leased to appellant No. 1 for a period of one year. The consideration for the agreement was the sum of Rs. 2,300 which was to be paid in quarterly instalments. There were two sureties who undertook to pay in case of default by appellant No. 1. Default was made in the payment of the third instalment which was only paid in part. The fourth instalment was not paid at all, and the plaintiff, suing on behalf of the village panchayat, claimed to recover from appellant No. 1 and the two sureties the sum of Rs. 974-10-2.

The trial Court dismissed the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge overruled an objection made by the defendants that the agreement sued on was void on the ground that the village panchayat had no power to farm out the right to levy the dues in question. But he thought that the agreement was illegal because it contravened one of the rules made by the District Local Board requiring that sums collected should be paid in daily at the panchayat office.

There was an appeal which was heard by the Assistant Judge. He agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the village panchayat could legally farm out the right in question, but he differed on the other point. In his view the agreement could not be regarded as illegal because of the breach of the District Local Board rule. He accordingly decreed the suit, and this second appeal has been brought by the principal debtor and one of the sureties. The other surety has not appealed.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellants that the agreement on which the suit was based is illegal and void for both of the reasons which were put forward in the lower Court. We do not think it necessary, however, to consider the point based upon the District Local Board rule, because, in our opinion, it is abundantly clear that the village panchayat was incompetent to farm out the right to collect these dues and the agreement was ultra vires. The relevant authorities on this point were not cited in either of the lower Courts. They are Municipal Council, Kumbakonam v. Abbahs Sahib,<sup>1</sup> Sholapur Municipality v. Shivram Bhagwant<sup>2</sup> and Saundatti Municipality v. Shripadbhat.<sup>3</sup> These authorities show that unless the power to enter into a contract of this kind is conferred by the Village Panchayats Act itself, which is not the case, the agreement is ultra vires. It is not necessary to discuss these cases because that position has been conceded by the learned advocate who appears for the respondent.

The position he has taken up is that granting that the agreement is ultra vires and void, the village panchayat is entitled to recover the money claimed by it in the suit under the terms of s. 65 of the Indian Contract Act which provides as follows :—

“When an agreement is discovered to be void, or when a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it, or to make compensation for it, to the person from whom he received it.”

The first case to which Mr. Nijsure referred in support of his argument is Abaji Sitaram v. Trimbak Municipality.<sup>4</sup> That was a case of a contract by a Municipality which was not under seal as required by the Bombay District Municipal Act. It was held that nevertheless the Municipality was entitled to recover under the contract. But the case is not of much assistance for our purpose, because s. 65 of the Indian Contract Act is not discussed in the judgment, nor, it appears, was the decision based upon it. The Court relied on the English rule that though a contract must ordinarily be made under seal, still, where there is that which is known as an executed consideration, an action will lie though this formality has not been observed. Then we were referred to Gulabchand v. Fulbai,<sup>5</sup> a case of a marriage brokerage agreement void as opposed to public policy. The argument was put forward in that case that s. 65 has no application to contracts which are void ab initio. That argument appears not to have been accepted by the Court, vide the observations of Mr. Justice Batchelor at pp. 416 and 417 of the report. But though it was held that an action lay to recover money paid under the agreement, it was not by reason of s. 65. The Court held that it might be regarded as a suit for money had and received, and that as no material part of the illegal purpose had been carried into effect, the money paid was recoverable.

So far as these two cases go, therefore, the argument that s. 65 applies to a case like the present is not clearly made out. But there is a decision of the Privy Council in Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh<sup>6</sup> which makes the position clear. That was a case of a contract void ab initio, namely,

s. c. 30 Bom. L. R. 715.

s. c. 5 Bom. L. R. 689.

the sale of an expectancy contrary to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Nevertheless it was held that the case was governed by s. 65 of the Indian Contract Act, which, according to the true construction of its terms, includes an agreement void, in the sense of being not enforceable by law, from its inception. Moreover, in Saundatti Municipality v. Shripadbhat,<sup>1</sup> to which I have already referred, it was held by the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Rangnekar in the case of a very similar contract, namely, an agreement by a Municipality to lease the levy of a tax, that the moneys paid under the agreement could be recovered under s. 65, although the point did not actually arise in the case because no such claim had been put forward.

In the course of the argument we were referred to Rudragouda v. Gangowda,<sup>2</sup> where it appears to have been held that s. 65 does not necessarily apply to all agreements void ab initio, and does not apply in particular where an agreement is of a fraudulent nature, known to be illegal and involving moral turpitude on the part of the plaintiff. We are not concerned in the present case with any such distinction, because there is no reason to suppose that this agreement was in any way fraudulent, or indeed that the parties were aware that it was illegal.

As against these authorities as to the applicability of s. 65, Mr. Rele for the appellants was only able to cite one case, Municipal Board, Lucknow v. S. C. Deb,<sup>3</sup> a full bench decision of the Lucknow Chief Court. That was a case of a municipal contract not under seal as required by law. It was held by the full bench that s. 65 could not be applied to such a case and that no action could be founded upon such a contract. The decision is contrary to Abaji Sitaram v. Trimbak Municipality,<sup>4</sup> which is an authority binding upon this Court, and, moreover, we are not concerned with the law as to contracts not under seal. The village panchayat has no seal, and it is not suggested that it cannot enter into contracts that are not sealed. Mr. Rele appeared to be of opinion that the judgments of the full bench in this case were opposed to the view that s. 65 can be applied to any contract which is void ab initio. It is by no means clear that this is the case, for, according to the head-note which is supported by a passage in the judgment of the learned Chief Judge, it was held that "a contract which is void from its inception and which is held to have been discovered to be so on the date on which it was reduced to writing would fall within the terms of s. 65 of the Indian Contract Act as a contract which has become void." But in any case the Privy Council decision in Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh<sup>5</sup> has not been discussed or referred to. In view of that decision and the view expressed by our own High Court in Saundatti Municipality v. Shripadbhat<sup>6</sup> we are clearly of opinion that an action lies under s. 65 in the present case.

It was urged on behalf of the appellants that the requirements of that section are not satisfied because it is not proved that they have received any advantage under the agreement. The suggestion is that they may not have recovered the dues, but that was not the case which they put forward at the trial. What they pleaded was not that they failed to recover the dues but that they had paid over what they had recovered, so that the entire sum due had, in fact, been paid to the plaintiff. Whether that was so or not was a question of fact, and it has been decided adversely to the appellants. We must hold, therefore, that they have received an advantage, namely, the sum claimed by the plaintiff, and that they are liable to restore it.

The only other point argued relates to the liability of the sureties under the agreement. In the body of the agreement, which is exhibit 40, it was provided as follows :—

“If I fail to pay instalment in time, the village panchayat may again sell by auction the rest of the period and if the Committee realizes less amount than the aforesaid total sum, the Committee may recover the deficit amount from me with costs by filing a suit against me.”

The surety bond at the end of the agreement provided as follows :—

“If Mr. Govind Keshav Dandavate (i.e. appellant No. 1) fails to pay the instalment as stated above regularly in time we both will pay the said amount to the Committee.”

Mr. Rele's argument is, firstly, that the sureties only made themselves liable to pay one instalment, and, secondly, that the village panchayat was entitled under the agreement to re-auction the right when the failure to pay the instalment first occurred, and, as this remedy was not availed of, the sureties are discharged. In our opinion, there is no force in either of these contentions. It is true that the word “instalment” ( द्वारा ) is in the singular in both cases, but nevertheless the meaning clearly is that the sureties made themselves liable to pay each and any instalment that was not paid regularly in time. We entirely agree with the Courts below on the construction of the agreement that the sureties were liable not merely for a single instalment but for the amount, whatever it was, that the principal debtor failed to pay. As regards the second point, it was clearly optional for the village panchayat whether it would have a new auction or not, and the fact that it did not see fit to avail itself of this right cannot be regarded as a discharge of the liability of the sureties.

Although, therefore, we are unable to agree with the grounds of the learned Assistant Judge's decision, we think that in effect his judgment is right and that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed.

The appeal, therefore, is dismissed with costs.

April 9.

An insolvent has no locus standi, under s. 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, to impeach a sale effected by the receiver in insolvency.

The expression "person aggrieved", as used in the section, means a man who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something or wrongfully affected his title to something.

INSOLVENCY proceedings.

Sidram (applicant) was adjudicated insolvent by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur, and the opponent N. M. Mahallya was appointed receiver of his property.

On March 13, 1940, the receiver sold some property belonging to the insolvent.

Sidram applied to the Court, on April 3, 1940, to set aside the sale.

The trial Court rejected the application, observing as follows:—

"The application is opposed by the receiver who contends that the insolvent has no locus standi to impeach the sale made by the receiver. His contention seems to be valid in view of the remarks made in Mulla's Law of Insolvency in British India, p. 562, s. 840. Vide also 1926, A. I. R. Mad. 556."

On appeal, the Assistant Judge reached the same conclusion, for the following reasons:—

"Under s. 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the insolvent is no doubt given the right to apply to the Court, but that is not an absolute right available to him in respect of any act or omission of the receiver. In order that he can avail himself of the benefit of the section, it has to be shown that he is aggrieved by the act of the receiver, which involves the further question, namely, whether he can feel aggrieved by such an act. Though, therefore, the insolvent is specifically mentioned in s. 68, unlike as in s. 8 of the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act, his remedy can arise only if he is aggrieved and not otherwise, that is to say, not merely because of his mention in the section. His rights are thus truly speaking the same as those of a person aggrieved. The expression 'person aggrieved' has been considered by James L. J. in Ex parte Sidebotham (14 Ch. D. 458, 465). Now on the making

The insolvent applied to the High Court in revision.

S. S. Kavalekar, for the applicant.

N. V. Pardeshi, for the opponents.

DIVATIA J. This application arising under the Provincial Insolvency Act has been preferred by the insolvent. After the petitioner was adjudicated insolvent, the receiver appointed by the Court took charge of his properties and sold his house. An application was preferred by the insolvent to the First Class Subordinate Judge in insolvency for setting aside the sale on the ground that it was not properly conducted, that it did not fetch an adequate price and his estate, therefore, suffered a loss thereby. The application was resisted by the receiver on the preliminary ground that the insolvent had no locus standi to impeach the sale made by him as all the property of the insolvent had vested in him, and he had, therefore, no interest in it at the date of the application.

The application was made under s. 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, which provides as follows :—

"If the insolvent or any of the creditors or any other person is aggrieved by any act or decision of the receiver, he may apply to the Court, and the Court may confirm, reverse or modify the act or decision complained of....."

The learned Judge upheld the receiver's contention on the ground that the insolvent cannot be said to have been aggrieved by the act of the receiver, as at the date of the sale the property did not belong to the insolvent but was vested in the receiver for the benefit of his creditors. For that purpose the learned Judge relied on a recent full bench decision of the Madras High Court in Hari Rao v. Official Assignee, Madras.<sup>1</sup> The insolvent appealed to the District Court against that order. The learned Assistant Judge confirmed that order on the same ground that the insolvent cannot be deemed to be a person aggrieved by the act of the receiver. This revision petition is filed against that order in appeal.

It is contended that s. 68 expressly gives the insolvent the right to apply to the Insolvency Court against any act of the receiver which might operate to his prejudice. Reliance is also placed on s. 67 of the Provincial Insolvency Act which says that "the insolvent shall be entitled to any surplus remaining after payment in full of his creditors with interest as provided by this Act", and it is urged that as the insolvent is interested in the surplus, he would be aggrieved if the property fetches an inadequate price on account of misfeasance of the receiver in conducting the sale. But the question is whether he has a present interest in the surplus at the date of his application. The decision in Hari Rao v. Official Assignee, Madras is based on the authority of Ex parte Sheffield: In re Austin.<sup>1</sup> It was held there that the bankrupt, while undischarged, had no interest in the surplus beyond a mere hope or expectation. It is also held in In re Leadbitter<sup>2</sup> that the trustee in bankruptcy does not stand in the position of a trustee for the bankrupt, but he is a trustee for the creditors. The Allahabad High Court has held in Sakhawat Ali v. Radha Mohan<sup>3</sup> that the insolvent cannot be regarded as an aggrieved person in the sale proceedings conducted by the receiver. The question there was whether the insolvent had a right to appeal under s. 35 against an order of the insolvency Judge sanctioning the sale. The position would be the same in the case of an application to the Court under s. 68, because under both these sections the application or appeal could be made by the insolvent only if he was aggrieved by the receiver's act. As observed by James L. J. in Ex parte Sidebotham: In re Sidebotham<sup>4</sup> (p. 464) "A 'person aggrieved' must be a man who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something, or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something."

The Lahore High Court has held in Kunda Singh v. Official Receiver<sup>5</sup> that an insolvent has the right to apply to the Court against an act of misfeasance by the receiver in conducting the sale, but that decision does not consider the position in law that the insolvent has no legal estate in the property vested in the receiver and that his right to the surplus is a mere hope or expectation.

In my opinion, the lower Courts have rightly followed the Madras and Allahabad decisions in rejecting the insolvent's application on this preliminary ground.

The rule is, therefore, discharged with costs.

A decree against the manager of a joint Hindu family representing the family in respect of a debt contracted for family purposes is binding on all the members of the family and may be executed against the whole coparcenary property. A decree against the manager personally, even though in respect of a family debt, cannot be executed against the whole coparcenary property but only affects the manager's own interest.

In order that a decree against the manager of a joint Hindu family should bind coparceners not parties to the litigation it is not essential that the pleadings should expressly state that he was suing or being sued as manager.

Where the manager of a joint Hindu family has contracted debts for family purposes and is sued in respect of those debts, there is a presumption that he is sued in his representative capacity, so that a decree against him will be binding on all the coparceners.

It is not necessary that the plaintiff should state in distinct terms that the defendant is being sued as manager.

Pirithpal Singh v. Rameshwar,<sup>4</sup> Madhgouda Babaji v. Halappa Ballappa<sup>5</sup> and Hori Lal v. Munman Kunwar,<sup>6</sup> referred to.

The expression "right, title and interest" is an ambiguous one; it is quite consistent with the sale of every interest which the judgment-debtor may have sold, and it is a question of fact in each case what has in fact been sold.

Where joint family property is sold at an auction sale and the price paid is not less than the valuation of the property made independently, it is good evidence that what was put to auction and sold was the entire interest of all the members of the joint family and not merely the individual interest of the manager who incurred debts in respect of which the property was sold.

A sale under the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, in enforcing the provisions of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, 1925, has the same effect as a sale by a civil Court.

When a partition suit is brought on behalf of minor coparceners by their next friend, there is no severance of status unless and until a decree is made in the suit.

Prabhappa borrowed from the plaintiff, Mulgund Co-operative Society, the following amounts—

- (1) Rs. 500 on July 31, 1926, for construction of a dam.
- (2) Rs. 400 on June 28, 1927, for household expenses.
- (3) Rs. 1,500 on March 31, 1937, for weeding and repairing a dam and a stone outlet for water in fields.
- (4) Rs. 46-8-2 on September 13, 1928, for purchasing cotton seeds.
- (5) Rs. 500 on January 20, 1928.

Prabhappa also incurred liability as a surety for one Virupaxappa who borrowed Rs. 200 from the plaintiff.

Prabhappa having failed to pay off the debts, the plaintiffs obtained, under s. 54 of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act (Bom. VII of 1925), arbitration awards on January 23, 1930, in respect of them.

Prabhappa died after a darkhast to execute the awards was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Gadag. His nephew, one Murigeppa, and his sons were brought on the record. Murigeppa became the manager of the family and his name was entered into the record of rights. The plaintiff having failed to proceed with the darkhast it was dismissed on November 20, 1933.

The plaintiff thereafter applied to the revenue authorities for execution of his awards. In execution of the award for the first two loans survey No. 739 was put up for sale and the plaintiff purchased it for Rs. 1,501. In execution of the award for the third and fourth loans, survey Nos. 831, 461|3 and 462|2 were sold by auction and the plaintiff purchased them for Rs. 2,101. In execution of the award for the fifth loan, survey No. 896 was auctioned and the plaintiff purchased it for Rs. 1,700. In execution of the award for Prabhappa's liability as surety survey Nos. 819|2 and 919 were put up for sale and the plaintiff purchased them for Rs. 800.

The plaintiff Society obtained possession of these survey numbers through Court on November 6, 1935.

The defendant, Ishwarappa, had obtained a money decree for Rs. 7,000 in suit No. 77 of 1931, in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Dharwar, against all the members of the joint family and got those survey numbers attached before judgment.

The plaintiff applied to raise the attachment but its claim was negatived, the Court holding that he had purchased the share of Prabhappa only. The defendant in execution of his decree filed a darkhast (No. 170 of 1934) to sell the survey numbers. The plaintiff Society objected to the sale but its objection was allowed only to the extent of Prabhappa's share in the lands and was overruled as regards the shares of the other members of the joint family.

The plaintiff Society, thereupon, filed this suit for a declaration that it was the absolute owner of the lands by reason of the purchases at auction sales and that the lands were not liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree passed in suit No. 77 of 1931 in favour of the defendant.

The plaintiff Society alleged that Prabhappa was the manager of the joint family, that he borrowed loans from the plaintiff Society for the purposes of the joint family, that all the members of the family were liable for the debts, that in execution of the awards obtained by the plaintiff, the survey numbers, which belonged to the joint family, were put up for sale and the plaintiff purchased them and became the absolute owner of the lands.

The defendant contended that Prabhappa was not the manager of the family, that the loans were not borrowed for family purposes, that only the interest of Prabhappa was sold at the auctions in execution of the award decrees, and that it was never mentioned that the right, title and interest of the whole joint family was to be sold and that the plaintiff had acquired no right to the lands.

The trial Court held that all the debts, except the debt of Rs. 200 which was incurred by Prabhappa as a surety, were contracted by Prabhappa as the manager of the joint family and for family purposes, but only the right, title and interest of Prabhappa were sold in execution of the award decrees. The Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The plaintiff-Society appealed to the High Court.

R. A. Jahagirdar, for the appellant.

G. P. Murdeshwar, for the respondent.

BROOMFIELD J. The appellant, who was the plaintiff in the Court below, is the Co-operative Credit Society of Mulgund in the Dharwar district. The suit was brought for a declaration that plaintiff is the absolute owner of the property in suit by right of purchase and that the property is not liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree passed in suit No. 77 of 1931, which was brought by the respondent.

The suit property consists of seven fields which belonged to the joint family of one Prabhappa. He borrowed various sums of money from the plaintiff society. In January, 1930, the society obtained awards against him under s. 54 of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, 1925, the awards being made as provided there by an arbitrator nominated by the Registrar. Under the Act these awards may be executed either through the civil Courts or through the revenue officers under the provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. It appears that the plaintiff first made an abortive application to the revenue authorities and then in June, 1932, he applied to execute the awards in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Gadag. During these proceedings Prabhappa, against whom execution was sought, died and his sons and his cousin Muri-geppa were brought on record. Muri-geppa contended that his interest could not be sold. Prior to this the minor sons of Muri-geppa by their next friend had filed a suit against Muri-geppa and Prabhappa's sons and their creditors for a declaration that the debts of Prabhappa and Muri-geppa were not binding on their shares. This was suit No. 112 of 1932. Possibly because of this litigation, although there is no evidence as to the reason, the plaintiff did not proceed with his darkhast and it was dismissed on November 20, 1933. In the suit brought by Muri-geppa's sons the present plaintiff and the present defendant both contended that Prabhappa and Muri-geppa were managers of the joint family and contracted debts for the family. The suit was dismissed in February, 1934, on the ground that as a bare declaration was sought it was barred by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. After abandoning his darkhast the plaintiff applied to the revenue authorities for execution of his awards, and in October and December, 1934, seven fields were put up to auction and purchased by the plaintiff himself. He got possession in November, 1935.

The defendant-respondent in this appeal had brought a suit No. 77 of 1931 and obtained a money decree for Rs. 7,000 against Prabhappa, Murigeppa and the other members of the family. He had attached all the suit property before judgment in October, 1931. He got his decree in October, 1932. The plaintiff having purchased the lands applied to raise the defendant's attachment, but his claim was negatived, the Court holding that he had purchased the share of Prabhappa only, and an order was made that the rest of the property, i.e. the interest in it other than Prabhappa's, should be sold. Accordingly in March, 1936, the plaintiff brought this suit.

The plaintiff alleges briefly that Prabhappa was the manager of the joint family and the suit lands were accordingly entered in his name in the Record of Rights, that he had borrowed the loans from the plaintiff society for the expenses of the family and the benefit of the family estate, that all the members of the family were liable for the debts, that after Prabhappa's death Murigeppa became the manager and that after his purchase at the auction sales plaintiff became the owner of the lands.

The defendant contended that the award decrees were not binding on members of the family other than Prabhappa. He denied that the awards were passed against Prabhappa as manager, he denied that Murigeppa was manager after Prabhappa's death, he alleged that it was never mentioned that the right, title and interest of the whole joint family was to be sold and that the plaintiff had acquired no right to the plaint lands.

There was a preliminary issue with which we are not concerned and the main issues were (a) whether the debts for which the awards were passed in plaintiff's favour were contracted by Prabhappa as manager of the family and for family purposes; (b) whether the interests of all the members of the joint family were sold in execution of the awards. The trial Judge found the first issue in the affirmative in respect of all the debts except one, a small debt of Rs. 200 which Prabhappa had incurred as a surety, but he found on the second issue in the negative and held that in execution of the awards only Prabhappa's interest had been sold.

The learned advocate who appears for the respondent in this appeal has conceded that Prabhappa was the manager of the family. He was not prepared to concede that the debts were contracted for family purposes but he has not been able to make any effective answer to the reasoning of the learned trial Judge in paragraph 6 of the judgment, and in our opinion there can be no reasonable doubt that all the debts, except the small one already mentioned, were contracted for purposes of family necessity.

I therefore come to the second issue in the appeal, whether the interest of all the members of the joint family was sold or the interest of Prabhappa only. The learned trial Judge has relied on the sale proclamations which state that the right, title and interest of Prabhappa was to be sold and he disregarded the sale certificates, according to which the lands themselves described as the property of Prabhappa were stated to have been sold. So far he appears to be right. The sale certificates must be regarded as merely a record of what

A. C. J. had been sold at the auction and what that was would depend on what was put to sale. But the learned Judge was wrong in assuming that the right, title and interest of Prabhappa necessarily meant his individual share in the lands only. As was pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rai Babu Mahabir Pershad v. Rai Markunda Nath Sahai,<sup>1</sup> the expression "right, title and interest" is an ambiguous one. It is quite consistent with the sale of every interest which the judgment-debtor might have sold and it is a question of fact in each case what has in fact been sold.

MULGUND Co-OPERATIVE SOCIETY v. SHIDLING-APPA ISHWARA PPA

Broomfield J. Certain propositions of law in this connection may be said to be beyond dispute, viz., (a) that a decree against the manager of a joint family representing the family in respect of a debt contracted for family purposes is binding on all the members and may be executed against the whole coparcenary property, and (b), that a decree against the manager personally, even though in respect of a family debt, cannot be executed against the whole coparcenary property but only affects the manager's own interest. So that one of the principal questions that has to be decided here is whether these awards were passed against Prabhappa as representing the family of which he was the manager. Unless they were passed against him in his representative capacity, no more could be sold in execution of them than his own share. Now Prabhappa was not described as the manager in the award proceedings. But it has been held that in order that a decree against the manager of a joint family should bind coparceners not parties to the litigation it is not essential that the pleadings should expressly state that he was suing or sued as manager : Madhgouda Bobaji v. Halappa Balappa<sup>2</sup> and Lalchand Thakur v. Seogobind Thakur.<sup>3</sup>

The question is not whether the manager has been described as manager but whether in fact he represented the family in the proceedings in question. The learned advocate for the appellant has had to admit that there is nothing that can be said to be evidence to show that Prabhappa was proceeded against in his capacity as manager of the family. But there is good authority for the view that when the manager has contracted debts for family purposes and is sued in respect of those debts there is a presumption that he is sued in his representative capacity, so that a decree against him will be binding on all the coparceners. In Sakharam v. Devji<sup>4</sup> it was held that where a debt is incurred by a Hindu as manager of the family for family purposes, the other members of the family, though not parties to the suit, will be bound by the decree passed against him in respect of the debt ; and if in execution of the decree any joint property is sold, the interest of the whole family in such property will pass by the sale. This is the headnote in the case, but the propositions stated there, though they do not appear in so many words in the judgment, correctly represent the effect of it. It is to be noted moreover that in that case the litigation was not expressly brought against the manager of the family in his representative capacity, that is to say there was nothing in the record of the suit to show that that was the case.

Where the circumstances of the case clearly show that the person sued was the manager of a joint family and the property involved in the suit was family property, the natural and legitimate inference to be drawn should be that the defendant had been sued in the capacity of a manager. It is not necessary that the plaintiff should state in distinct terms that he is suing as manager or that the defendant is being sued as manager. This case was cited with approval by Mr. Justice Shingne in Madhgouda Babaji v. Halappa Balappa. Reference may also be made in this connection to Hori Lal v. Munman Kunwar.<sup>1</sup> In the circumstances of this case also we think it may fairly be assumed that as these debts were contracted by Prabhappa for family purposes when he was the manager of the family, the plaintiff society took proceedings against him in his capacity as manager and the awards are therefore binding not only against his own interest in the family property but against the whole coparcenary interest.

The learned trial Judge was of opinion that Lalchand Thakur v. Seogobind Thakur and Sakharam v. Devji were not applicable in the circumstances of the present case. His reasons were partly that he thought that the suit brought by Murigeppa's minor sons had put an end to the joint family. That, however, is contrary to Ramsing v. Fakira<sup>2</sup> and Ganapathy v. Subramanyam Chetty.<sup>3</sup> The true position is that when a partition suit is brought on behalf of minor coparceners by their next friend there is no severance of status unless and until a decree is made in the suit.

The learned trial Judge also attached importance to the fact that the plaintiff abandoned his proceedings in the Sub-Judge's Court and had recourse to the procedure under the Bombay Land Revenue Code. But this the society is permitted to do under the provisions of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act and we are unable to see that this conduct of the plaintiff affects the principles laid down in the cases to which I have referred. We hold, therefore, that the awards were passed against Prabhappa as manager of the joint family.

It next remains to consider whether the whole estate or merely Prabhappa's interest in the estate was sold at the auction. Mr. Murdeshwar drew our attention to Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh<sup>4</sup> and to Baboo Hurdey Narain Saku v. Pundit Baboo Rooder Perakash Misser.<sup>5</sup> These were both cases in which decrees were obtained against a father in execution of which his right, title and interest was sold. The Privy Council held that what was sold was merely his own interest, that is to say what he would get on partition, and not the whole estate. Both of these cases were governed by the Mitakshara law as applied to Bengal which is not in all respects the same as the law applicable in Bombay. In that connection I may refer to the observations of Sir Dinshah Mulla in his Principles of Hindu Law at pp. 304 and 354. Moreover Deendyal v. Jugdeep Narain has been distinguished in Mussamut Nanomi Babuasin v. Modun Mohun,<sup>6</sup> where it was pointed out that it was a decision on the special circumstances of the case and was not intended to lay down any general proposition that a sale of the right, title and interest of the father in a joint family must be confined to his individual interest.

Mr. Murdeshwar also cited Maruti Sakharan v. Babaji,<sup>1</sup> where Sir Charles Sargent in a short judgment said that in the absence of special circumstances showing an intention to put up the entire interest of the family in the property sold in execution of a money decree against the father, only the interest of the father passes to the auction purchaser, and observed that in Nanomi Babuasin v. Mohun Mohun, Minakshi Naidu v. Immudi Kanka Ramaya Kounden<sup>2</sup> and Rai Babu Mahabir Pershad v. Rai Markunda Nath Sahai,<sup>3</sup> in which it had been held that the whole estate passed, there were special circumstances justifying that view. According to the latest pronouncement of the Privy Council on this subject, in Sripat Singh v. Tagore,<sup>4</sup> the Court in cases of this kind has simply to regard the substance of the transaction and not technicalities. Moreover, we are not satisfied that the circumstances existing in the cases just referred to were more conclusive than those in the present case.

The description of the suit property is given in the plaint. The first survey number is No. 896 and the value of that was assessed by the panch at Rs. 70 an acre. The plaintiff purchased it for Rs. 1,700 which works out at Rs. 71 an acre. The second field is No. 739. That was valued by the panch at Rs. 1,500 and plaintiff paid Rs. 1,501. Then there were three fields sold together. The panchas valued them at Rs. 70 an acre. The plaintiff purchased for Rs. 2,001 which works out at Rs. 70 an acre. The total area of the land sold was 82 acres and 6 gunthas. The price paid was Rs. 6,102, i.e., roughly Rs. 71 per acre which is slightly above the valuation of the panchas. That, we think, is fairly good evidence that what was put to auction and sold by the plaintiff was the entire land and not merely Prabhappa's half share in it. The learned trial Judge thought he saw an indication that plaintiff had purchased at an undervalue in case of one of the fields because in his execution application made in June, 1932, he valued it at Rs. 2,400 whereas he purchased it for Rs. 1,700, that being in accordance with the valuation of the panchas in August, 1934. It is quite possible, however, that the value may have fallen in the meantime, and in view of the valuation of the property as a whole and the total price paid it would, we think, be quite unreasonable to hold that the plaintiff purchased merely Prabhappa's individual interest.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent that sales of land by the revenue authorities under the provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code are not subject to the same rules and principles as sales in execution by the Court. It was said that there was no notice to other members of the family and that the proceedings in execution of the awards were all taken behind the backs of the coparceners. That, however, is not an accurate statement of the position. Notice is provided for by s. 166 of the Code and we may assume that the requirements of the Act were complied with since there is no evidence to the contrary. That being so, Murigeppa must have had ample notice, and in addition to that there were the sale proclamations.

Mr. Murdeshwar also relied upon the fact that the property brought to sale was described as the property of Prabhappa (represented) by his heir Murigeppa, and he argued that that meant that the plaintiff was not selling more than Prabhappa's own interest. That inference we think is not at all justified, and in view of the fact that plaintiff was admittedly seeking to bring the entire property to sale before the civil Court, it is most unlikely that when he went to the revenue authorities he contented himself with selling Prabhappa's half share. Under the Bombay Land Revenue Code what is sold is no doubt the right, title and interest of the defaulter: see s. 155. But when default is made in payment of assessment and the land is sold, what passes is the entire land and not merely the interest of the defaulter in it. That is because assessment is paid on behalf of all persons having an interest in the land, but when the law allows the revenue procedure to be applied in other cases, as is allowed by the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, the effect of a sale must, we think, be the same. We are not in fact impressed by the argument that a sale under the Bombay Land Revenue Code has not the same effect as a sale by a civil Court.

It may on the face of it seem to be a hardship that the whole estate should be sold in this way without any inquiry having been made into the claims of Murigeppa or other members of the family. But on the other hand all the grounds on which Prabhappa's coparceners could have objected to the sale have now been decided against them.

In the course of his argument Mr. Murdeshwar raised the question whether it is permissible for a Hindu manager to belong to a co-operative society with the result that disputes affecting the family may automatically be referred to arbitration as provided in the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act. We do not consider that this point falls to be decided in the present case. It is well settled that a manager has power to refer disputes to arbitration and prima facie we can see no reason why he should not borrow from a Co-operative Credit Society if in his discretion he thinks it for the benefit of the family to do so. But the only points we have to decide are whether the awards were passed against Prabhappa in his capacity as manager and whether in execution of the awards the entire property of the family was actually sold. We have found both these points in favour of the appellant and therefore the appeal must be allowed and the trial Court's decree set aside.

There will be a decree as prayed for in the plaint except as regards the fields Nos. 819 and 919 as to which the declaration will be that the plaintiff is the owner of Prabhappa's half share therein. As the plaintiff has substantially succeeded, we award him his costs in both Courts.

THE MUNICIPAL BOROUGH OF AHMEDABAD

v.

March 25. THE ARYODAYA GINNING AND MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.*

Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act (Bom. XVIII of 1925), Secs. 110, 111†—

Appeal before Magistrate—Whether Magistrate a persona designata or ordinary Court—Admission of additional evidence by Magistrate whether permissible—Assessment whether can be challenged on appeal—Interlocutory orders passed by Magistrate on appeal—Jurisdiction of revising Court to interfere in revision against such orders.

A Magistrate hearing an appeal under s. 110 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, is an ordinary Court and as such can allow additional evidence, oral or documentary, to be led before him.

In an appeal under s. 110 the question of the assessment itself can be challenged.

The words "decision upon any appeal" in s. 111 of the Act do not imply that the decision of the appeal referred to means the final decision. The revising Court, therefore, can interfere in revision with interlocutory orders passed by a Magistrate under s. 110 of the Act.

* Civil Revision Application No. 58 of 1941, against the order passed by D. G. Kamerkar, Extra Additional Sessions Judge at Ahmedabad, in Criminal Miscellaneous Application No. 141 of 1940, against the order passed by D. A. Patel, Special First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad.

† Sections 110 and 111 run as under:—

110. (1) Appeals against any notice of demand issued under sub-section (3) of section 104 may be made to any Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates by whom under the directions of the District Magistrate such class of cases is to be tried.

(2) No such appeal shall be heard and determined unless—

(a) the appeal is brought within fifteen days next after service of the notice of demand complained of; and

(b) an application in writing, stating the grounds on which the claim of the municipality is disputed, has been made to the standing committee as follows:—

(i) in the case of a rate on buildings or lands or both within the time fixed in the notice given under section 81 or 82 of the assessment or alteration thereof, according to which the bill is prepared,

(ii) in the case of any other claim for which a bill has been presented under sub-section (1) of section 104 within fifteen days next after the presentation of such bill; and

(c) the amount claimed from the appellant has been deposited by him in the municipal office.

111. (1) Every entry in the assessment list made under the provisions of the Act against which no objection is made as hereinbefore provided, and the amount of every sum claimed from any person under this Act on account of any tax, if no appeal therefrom is made as hereinbefore provided, and the decision of the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates upon any appeal shall, at the instance of either party, be subject to revision by the Court to which appeals against his or their decisions ordinarily lie.

(2) Effect shall be given by the Chief Officer to every decision of the said Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates on any appeal or any decision in revision on such appeal against any such entry or tax.

APPEALS under s. 110 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925.

The Aryodaya Ginning and Manufacturing Co., Ltd., (opponent), having its registered office at Ahmedabad, filed objections to the assessment list as framed by the Chief Officer of the Municipal Borough of Ahmedabad (applicant) under s. 81(1) of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925. These objections were heard by the appeal committee constituted under the Act and certain evidence was led before it. The assessment list was then duly authenticated.

The applicant Municipality thereafter issued against the opponent Mills notices of demand for levy of municipal taxes under s. 104(3) of the Act. The opponent appealed to the Special First Class Magistrate at Ahmedabad, under s. 110 of the Act, on the ground that the amounts demanded by the applicant were unduly high and unjustified, being based on an exaggerated valuation. The opponent applied to the Magistrate to be allowed to lead oral and documentary evidence regarding the values of the lands and buildings concerned in order to show that the valuation was inflated and exaggerated. The applicant contended that no such evidence could be allowed to be led at that stage as the opponent had every opportunity to produce evidence before the appeal committee. The learned Magistrate held that he was entitled to allow evidence to be led before him and observed as follows :—

“In the Municipal area of Bombay, under s. 217 of the Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1888, such appeals are heard and determined by the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court and the procedure to be followed by him is laid down in s. 508 of the said Act and so there is no difficulty. It is to be noticed that in Bombay, the first objections against rental values entered in the assessment book are, under s. 163, made to the Municipal Commissioner who investigates and disposes of them like the appeal committee under the Municipal Boroughs Act (vide s. 165). In spite of this in disposing of the appeals under s. 217, the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court has to summon witnesses and compel production of documents etc.... (vide s. 508). On the same analogy, it would not be unreasonable to expect that the Magistrate dealing with similar appeals under s. 110 of the Municipal Boroughs Act would also have to follow the same procedure and the practice of this Court as also of other similar Courts in the mofussil in this respect has been in fact the same. Evidence is allowed to be produced on both sides wherever this is considered necessary for the just and proper disposal of the appeals and no objection was taken so far by the Municipality, nor was its irregularity pointed out by any superior Court....

These appeals relate to the capital valuation of lands and building appertaining to the Mills and factories situated in Ahmedabad City. The valuations come to several lakhs of rupees in each case and the amounts of taxes involved are several thousands of rupees. The record before the Court consists of the valuation statements prepared by the Mill Valuation Officer of the respondent Municipality, the petition of objection, a statement of the appellants' engineer or secretary recorded before the appeal committee challenging the municipal valuations and in some cases giving the figures of his own valuation. There is nothing on record to show on what data the figures of valuation on either side are based. It would hardly be possible for this Court to arrive at a just and proper decision in these appeals simply by hearing the pleaders with the scanty material before it.

.... I am inclined to hold that this is a Special Court under s. 110 of the Municipal Boroughs Act analogous to the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court at Bombay and like it, has to hear such evidence as is produced before it by the parties and as is relevant to the matters at issue in the interests of justice.”

The applicant applied in revision to the Extra Additional Sessions Judge

ARYODAYA

A. C. J. at Ahmedabad under s. 111 of the Act against the order of the Magistrate.

v.

“ The decision of the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates referred to in s. 111(1) is a final decision in appeal and not a decision upon a matter of procedure merely or upon a matter that does not determine finally the rights and obligations of the parties on either side. This appears to me clear from the expression ‘ and the decision of the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates upon any appeal shall, at the instance of either party, be subject to revision by the Court to which appeals against his or their decisions ordinarily lie ’, occurring in the said s. 111(1). The Magistrate decided to proceed with the appeal, upon determining a matter of mere procedure. He did not decide the appeal itself. If there is an error in the procedure adopted by the Magistrate, the grievance can be remedied in revision under s. 111 by this Court only after a final decision of the appeal. This Court has no powers like those in s. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, which can be exercised only by the High Court.”

The applicant applied in revision to the High Court.

G. N. Thakor, with J. C. Shah, for the applicant.

M. P. Amin, with P. A. Dhruva, for the opponent.

N. J. WADIA J. This application arises out of an order made by the Special First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad, under s. 110 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act (Bom. XVIII of 1925), by which the Municipality of Ahmedabad is governed. There was a revision application filed in the Court of the Extra Additional Sessions Judge against the Magistrate's order under s. 111 of the Act by the Ahmedabad Municipality. This application was rejected and the Municipality has applied in revision to this Court.

The order passed by the Magistrate was an interlocutory one and dealt with the question of the right of the opponent to lead oral and documentary evidence before the Magistrate in the appeal pending before him. The contention of the Municipality was that a Magistrate hearing an appeal under s. 110 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act could not allow additional evidence, oral or documentary, to be led before him, but must decide the matter on the evidence already led by the parties before the standing committee of the Municipality under s. 81.

It is necessary to consider the scheme of the Act in connection with the imposition of taxes in order to understand the position taken up by the applicant Municipality. Under s. 73 of the Act the Municipality can impose certain specified taxes subject to the general or special orders made by Government. Among these taxes is a general water-rate or a special water-rate or both for water supplied by the Municipality which might be imposed on buildings and lands. Under s. 78, when a rate on buildings or lands or both is imposed, the Chief Officer has to cause an assessment list of all buildings or lands or lands and buildings in the Municipal borough to be prepared containing inter alia the valuation, based on capital or annual letting value, on which the property is assessed, and the amount of the tax assessed thereon. Under s. 80 after the assessment list has been completed the Chief Officer has to give public notice of it and of the place where the list may be inspected. Under s. 81 the Chief Officer is bound at the time of the publication of the assessment list under s. 80 to give public notice of the date before which objections to the valuation or assessment in such list shall be made. Under sub-cl. (2) of the section such objections to the valuation and assessment of any property included in the list published under s. 80 have to be made by the owner or occupier or any agent of such owner or occupier to the standing committee by an application in writing stating the grounds on which the valuation or assessment is disputed; and under sub-cl. (3) the standing committee, after allowing the applicant an opportunity of being heard in person or by agent, has to investigate and dispose of the objections, cause the result thereof to be noted in the book kept under sub-cl. (2) of the section, and cause any amendment necessary in accordance with such result to be made in the assessment list. The sub-clause provides that the powers and duties of the standing committee under this sub-section may be transferred to any other committee appointed by the Municipality, or with the permission of the Commissioner, to any officer or pensioner of the Crown. When all the objections have been disposed of and the necessary corrections made in the assessment list it has to be authenticated by the signatures of the Chairman and at least one other member of the standing committee under sub-cl. (4) to the section; and under sub-cl. (6) the list so authenticated, subject to such alterations as may be made in it under s. 82, and subject to the result of any appeal or revision made under s. 110, is to be conclusive evidence for certain purposes. Under s. 104 the Chief Officer has to present a bill for the amount due to the Municipality and if the amount of the bill is not paid within fifteen days from the presentation of the bill the Chief Officer may cause a notice of demand to be served upon the person. Under s. 110 appeals against any notice of demand issued under s. 104 may be made to any Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates by whom under the directions of the District Magistrate such class of cases is to be tried; and s. 111 provides that the decision of the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates upon any appeal is subject to revision by the Court to which appeals against his or their decisions ordinarily lie.

The opponent company appealed to the Special Magistrate, First Class, Ahmedabad, who was the Magistrate empowered to hear appeals under s. 110, on the ground that the amounts demanded by the Municipality were unduly high and unjustified, being based on an exaggerated valuation; and in order to prove its contention before the Magistrate the opponent applied to be allowed to lead evidence both oral and documentary. On behalf of the applicant Municipality it was contended that no such evidence could be allowed to be led at that stage as the opponent had had every opportunity to produce evidence before the appeal committee, to whom the functions of the standing committee under s. 81 had been delegated, and if the permission asked for were granted it would convert the Court into a Court of first instance. The learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that he was entitled to allow evidence to be led before him. There was a revision application against that order to the learned Additional Sessions Judge who held that the order of the Magistrate dealt with a mere question of procedure, and was not an order which finally decided the appeal, and that therefore he had no power to interfere in revision at that stage, his view being that the power of revision given to him by s. 111 could only be exercised when the appeal had been finally

MUNICIPAL BOROUGH OF AEMEDABAD v. ARYODAYA GINNING & MANUFACTURING COMPANY

N. J. Wadia J.

In our opinion the view taken by the learned Judge is wrong. The language of s. 111 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act is very similar to the language of s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The latter section provides that the High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to it and in which no appeal lies, and may in certain circumstances interfere in revision. Section 111 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act provides that the decision of the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates upon any appeal shall be subject to revision by the Court to which appeals against his or their decisions ordinarily lie. There was at one time a considerable difference of opinion between the different High Courts whether the words "case decided" in s. 115 of the Code included part of a case, and whether the High Court could interfere in revision with interlocutory orders. The view taken by this Court was that the High Court has power to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders, and that the High Court would in the exercise of its discretion interfere with an interlocutory order if it came to the conclusion that the order was wrong, even though the order was one which could be challenged in an appeal from the final decree : vide Secretary of State for India v. Narsibhai Dadabhai.<sup>1</sup> There is no reason why the words "decision upon any appeal" in s. 111 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act should be interpreted differently from the words "case decided" in s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is nothing in the language of the former section which necessarily implies that the decision of the appeal referred to in that section means the final decision. The learned Sessions Judge was wrong in our opinion in the view which he took that he was not entitled to interfere in revision with the order made by the learned Magistrate.

The revision application made to this Court is against the order of the Sessions Judge as well as against the order of the Magistrate which the Sessions Judge refused to interfere with and it is therefore necessary to go into the merits of the question.

Mr. Thakor who appears for the applicant Municipality has urged three contentions before us. It is argued first that a Magistrate acting under s. 110 is merely an appellate authority upon whom no powers of taking evidence have been conferred by the statute, and that therefore no evidence could be taken by him. The Act undoubtedly does not contain any provisions giving specific powers to the Magistrate acting under s. 110 to take evidence, to summon witnesses, to order the production of documents or to administer oaths. But the Magistrate acting under s. 110 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act is not a persona designata but an ordinary Court, whose decisions are subject to revision by the Court to which appeals from his decision would ordinarily lie, and, as has been recently held by this Court in Lokmanya Mills Ltd. v. Municipal Borough, Barsi,<sup>2</sup> a further revision application lies to the High Court against an order in revision passed by a Sessions Judge under s. 111 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act from an order passed by a Magistrate under s. 110 of the Act. In this respect the Magistrate acting under s. 110 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act differs from the Magistrate dealing with appeals under s. 86 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, and from the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court acting under s. 217 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. In these cases the Magistrate or the Chief Judge is a persona designata, and this explains why in the City of Bombay Municipal Act it was found necessary to confer specific powers upon the Chief Judge to summon and enforce attendance of witnesses and compel them to give evidence and to compel the production of documents. No such special provision was necessary under the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act because the appellate authority under s. 110 is a Court, and it has inherent powers to summon witnesses, to compel production of documents and to administer oaths. There is therefore no force in the contention that the Magistrate acting under s. 110 has no power to take evidence because such powers are not specifically conferred on him by the Act.

The next contention is that at any rate he is an appellate authority and cannot ordinarily take evidence, and that it would only be in special circumstances such as are dealt with in O. XLI, r. 27, of the Code of Civil Procedure, that he could allow evidence to be led in an appeal.

The position of a Magistrate acting under s. 110 is a very anomalous one. It was held in In re Dalsukhram<sup>1</sup> that a Magistrate hearing an appeal of the kind mentioned in s. 86 of the Bombay District Municipal Act was merely an appellate authority having jurisdiction given by the Act to deal with a question of civil liability, that he was not therefore an inferior criminal Court, and that a revision application against his order would not lie to the High Court on its criminal side under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In Surat Municipality v. Hamiduddin<sup>2</sup> the same view was taken by Mr. Justice Norman with regard to the provisions of ss. 110 and 111 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, and it was held that in such a case a revision application would lie to the High Court only on the civil side. The same view was taken in Lokmanya Mills Ltd. v. Municipal Borough, Barsi.<sup>3</sup> It may therefore be taken as settled that a Magistrate acting under s. 110 is an appellate authority having jurisdiction given by the Act to deal with a question of civil liability, and not a persona designata.

The question still remains whether a Magistrate acting under this section is in the position of a Court hearing a civil appeal as regards the taking of evidence, i.e. whether normally he would be bound to decide the appeal on the evidence already led before the lower tribunal, the standing committee of the Municipality, and could only allow additional evidence to be led before him in appeal under the special conditions laid down in O. XLI, r. 27, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The provisions of ss. 110 and 111 are peculiar. Although the authority upon which the appellate jurisdiction is conferred is a criminal Court, the matters which it is called upon to decide are of a purely civil nature, and it is for this reason that this Court has held that a second revision application against the Magistrate's order would lie to the High Court on the civil side, even though the revision provided by s. 111 lies to another criminal Court, namely the Sessions Court. The fact that the appellate authority under s. 110 is a Court from whose decision a revision application lies to its superior Court, the Sessions Court, and a further revision application lies to the High Court, suggests that the Legislature must have contemplated that the Magistrate acting under s. 110 would base his decisions upon evidence which the revising Courts could consider. Section 81 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act which provides for objections to the assessment list prepared by the Chief Officer being lodged before the standing committee, and which gives the standing committee power to investigate and dispose of such objections, does not give the standing committee any power to summon witnesses or to administer oaths or to compel the production of documents. All that the section provides is that the standing committee shall allow the applicant an opportunity of being heard in person or by agent. If this is the only evidence on which the standing committee can base its decision, and if the Magistrate hearing the appeal is not allowed to take any other evidence and is to be compelled to base his decision on the evidence already adduced before the standing committee, there will in most cases be very little material before the Magistrate to enable him to decide the appeal satisfactorily, and very little material on which the revising Courts can deal with applications made to them. In this connection it is significant that under the City of Bombay Municipal Act the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes, by whom as a persona designata appeals against any rateable value or tax fixed or charged under the Act can be heard and determined, is given specific powers by s. 508 of the Act to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses, to compel them to give evidence, and to compel production of documents. The Act contemplates that in hearing an appeal under s. 217 the Chief Judge may allow evidence to be led, and it seems to us that a similar interpretation must be put upon the provisions of s. 110; and this conclusion derives support from the fact to which I have already referred that a Magistrate acting under s. 110 is not a persona designata but an ordinary Court, against whose decisions revision applications are expressly provided for by the Act itself. The learned Magistrate has pointed out that the evidence before the standing committee in this case consisted of valuation statements prepared by the valuation officer of the Municipality and the opponent's objections, and a statement prepared by the opponent's engineer. There was no evidence to show on what data the figures relied on by the two sides were based, and unless the Magistrate was permitted to take evidence it would be very difficult for him to come to any satisfactory decision on the appeal. It is true that s. 110 refers to the Magistrate exercising powers under that section as an appellate authority. But, as I have already pointed out, the provisions of this section, and of similar sections in the other Acts, are of a somewhat anomalous nature, and it would be difficult to regard the Magistrate's powers under this section as being strictly limited to those of an appellate Court. The fact that the tribunals from whose decisions the appeals are provided are tribunals which could not take evidence on oath or compel evidence to be given would itself require that somewhat wider powers than those of an ordinary appellate Court should be exercisable by the Magistrate under s. 110. It may be noted that s. 110 refers to appeals of this class being "tried" by the Magistrate, a term which would ordinarily be used of original trials rather than of appeals. Taking into consideration the peculiar position of the Magistrate under s. 110 we think that he must have the power of taking evidence if he considers such evidence necessary. Since he is an authority deciding a question of civil liability his position is analogous to that of a civil Court, and the considerations which should govern him in deciding whether evidence should be allowed would be similar to those which would prevail with a civil appellate Court, though, for the reasons mentioned above, there would have to be considerably more latitude in such matters than a civil appellate Court could allow.

The third contention urged by Mr. Thakor for the applicant is that an appeal under s. 110 being not against the assessment but against the notice of demand, the question of the assessment itself could not be challenged at all in such an appeal except on some ground of illegality such as a wrong person being made liable. We are unable to put such a very restricted interpretation upon the language of s. 110. It is obvious that such an interpretation would deprive the persons taxed of all right of appeal except in an extremely limited number of cases, and it does not seem to have been the intention of the Legislature so to restrict the right of appeal.

The view taken by the learned Magistrate about his power to allow evidence to be led is in our opinion correct. He has in his order given reasons why in this particular case it was necessary to allow such evidence to be led. The rule will, therefore, be discharged with costs.

SUIT for maintenance.

The facts appear fully in his Lordship's judgment.

M. Y. Haindaday, for the plaintiff.

M. S. Vakil, for the defendant.

KANIA J. This is a suit filed by a daughter against her father for arrears of maintenance, separate maintenance, and a declaration that the father was liable to pay reasonable expenses which she may have to incur for her marriage.

The plaintiff was born at Mandvi (Surat) in 1920. Her mother was divorced by the defendant in December, 1931. On October 5, 1931, the defendant, through his attorneys, wrote to the plaintiff's mother's attorneys threatening to obtain possession of the plaintiff who was alleged to be wrongfully detained by her mother. In that letter the defendant offered to pay Rs. 15 every month, which the plaintiff's mother was asked to receive from the office of the defendant's attorneys, pending the steps which the defendant intended to take to obtain the custody of the plaintiff. No money was received by the plaintiff's mother, but she was thereafter divorced in December, 1931. On August 21, 1940, the plaintiff through her attorneys sent a letter of demand to the defendant claiming separate maintenance at Rs. 40 per month and arrears of maintenance. A reminder was sent on September 2, 1940, but the defendant sent no reply. In July, 1940, the present wife of the defendant filed a petition to adjudge the defendant a lunatic, and, as stated in the plaint, the Court-receiver was appointed the Committee on September 6, 1940. Thereafter the plaintiff sent letters of demand to the receiver. In that it was pointed out that the second wife of the defendant had omitted to mention in the petition the plaintiff as a relation and had obtained an order from the Court about the application of the income of the defendant's property without disclosing that fact. The Court-receiver informed the plaintiff that there was no order for payment to her of separate maintenance or arrears of maintenance. He, however, suggested that the plaintiff might stay with defendant's present wife and the minor son. That suggestion did not appeal to the plaintiff and the present suit was filed in November, 1940.

The first contention found in the written statement is that the plaint does not disclose any cause of action. While it is conceded that under Mahomedan law a father is under an obligation to maintain his daughter till marriage, there is no provision for separate maintenance of a daughter. It was further argued that if separate maintenance was claimed the necessary averments to justify the claim should be found in the plaint and it was contended that there were none in this case. It has been repeatedly pointed out that pleadings in India should not be very strictly construed. The plaintiff relied on two facts in support of her claim for separate maintenance : first, that her mother was divorced in 1931 and since then she has been living with her mother, and the other that the defendant had married again and was a lunatic. Under the circumstances it would be unreasonable to expect the plaintiff to stay with her step-mother. A third factor which was pointed out in Court was that the second wife of the defendant was so hostile to the plaintiff that she had even ignored the plaintiff's existence at the time of making the petition to the Court and stating who the relations of the defendant were. The facts that the plaintiff has been living with her mother since 1931, that the defendant had married again and that he was now a lunatic, and that the plaintiff's name was not mentioned in the petition to adjudge the defendant a lunatic are not disputed. As the plaintiff relies on those facts only to establish her right to separate maintenance, I think they are found in the plaint and the annexures thereto. The first issue should therefore be answered in the affirmative.

On behalf of the plaintiff it was argued that in all text books on Mahomedan law it is recognised that a father is bound to maintain his daughter till her marriage. It was pointed out that in connection with the maintenance of a wife text books on Mahomedan law discuss the obligation of the wife to stay with her husband, and if separate maintenance was claimed, she must satisfy the conditions under which alone such a claim could be advanced. From those facts it was argued that in the absence of any express provision in the Mahomedan law a father was bound to maintain his daughter till marriage and the daughter's right to separate maintenance is assumed. There is no reported decision to which my attention has been drawn in which the Court had discussed this question in a civil litigation. I am unable to accept this contention in the wide terms it is advanced. The statement that in Mahomedan law a father is bound to maintain his daughter till marriage, does not necessarily include the contention that the daughter is entitled to stay where she liked and live as she liked, but the father must provide her with maintenance. In my opinion the Mahomedan law, like other systems of law, while putting an obligation on the father to maintain his children, gives with it a right to the father to keep the children in his house, unless according to the law governing the parties some other person is the lawful guardian of the person of the child. Under Mahomedan law it is recognised that till a daughter attains puberty her mother is the natural guardian of the person of the daughter. Emperor v. Alyshabai,<sup>1</sup> which has been followed in Allah Rakhi v. Karam Ilahi,<sup>2</sup> clearly establishes this point. While therefore a Mahomedan father is under an obligation in law to maintain his daughter till her marriage, if the daughter desires to claim separate maintenance i.e. maintenance allowance while she insists on living away from her father, she has to make out the necessary grounds for that. In default, if the father offers to keep her in the house and maintain her there, the daughter has no absolute right to separate maintenance. In my opinion the expression "absolute right" found in the text books in connection with the daughter's right to maintenance should be read as indicated above and not as giving to the daughter an unrestricted right to live as and where she liked and imposing an obligation on the father to provide separate maintenance for her, even though he may be willing to keep her in the house and maintain her there. In the present case, having regard to the fact that the plaintiff's mother was divorced in December, 1931, that the plaintiff was not called to live in the defendant's house and has not in fact lived there, coupled with the fact that the defendant is now a lunatic and the plaintiff if now called upon to stay in the defendant's house will have to live with her step-mother, I think there is sufficient justification for permitting the plaintiff to stay away from the defendant's house at present, and her right under the circumstances to separate maintenance is established. The second issue must therefore be answered in the affirmative under the circumstances of the present case.

The plaintiff has claimed arrears of maintenance. On her behalf it was argued that if her right to be maintained is conceded, she is entitled to arrears of maintenance. In my opinion that argument is unsound. When the claim was made in August, 1940, the plaintiff had attained majority. Before that there had been no demand for maintenance on her behalf. The plaintiff's mother did not avail herself of the opportunity to receive Rs. 15 per month offered in the defendant's attorneys' letter of October, 1931. Since then the plaintiff has been maintained by her mother. I do not think these facts permit a claim for arrears of maintenance. If during the minority of the plaintiff someone had supplied necessities to her, not intending to do so gratuitously, that party may have a claim against the plaintiff. That however is not a claim for arrears of maintenance by the plaintiff. I do not find anything in Mahomedan law to sustain a claim for arrears of maintenance under the circumstances found in the present case. If after the plaintiff attained puberty a claim for maintenance had been made the defendant may have taken steps to obtain possession of the plaintiff as her lawful guardian. The defendant and the plaintiff's mother allowed the plaintiff to remain with the plaintiff's mother without any claim for maintenance being made by the plaintiff or by her mother, while the defendant did not take any steps to recover the custody of the plaintiff. Both sides having left the matters in that way I do not think it can be contended that there was a failure on the part of the defendant to provide maintenance. Without that assumption a decree for arrears is not justified. Under the circumstances I disallow the claim for arrears of maintenance before August, 1940. The third issue is accordingly answered in the negative for all claims prior to August, 1940.

In prayer (c) the plaintiff has asked for a declaration that the defendant is liable to pay the plaintiff reasonable expenses as she may have to incur for her marriage. It is not stated in the plaint that there is any near prospect of her marriage. The right of a daughter to obtain marriage expenses from her father rests on Mahomedan law. The right has not been denied in the correspondence. Under the circumstances a declaration, which can only be made under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, is not justified. Mr. Vakil appearing on behalf of the defendant has not contended that the plaintiff is not entitled to reasonable provision for her marriage expenses being made by the defendant or out of his property. Under the circumstances I do not think the declaration should be granted. The fourth issue is answered accordingly.

As in my opinion the plaintiff is entitled to separate maintenance under the circumstances of the case, it becomes necessary to determine at what rate the same should be allowed. The plaintiff lived with her mother since 1931 and is now about twenty years old. The estate of the defendant is in charge of the Court Receiver at present and the parties are agreed that the net average monthly rent of the properties comes to Rs. 120. There is no other substantial income producing estate belonging to the defendant. Out of this income proper maintenance has also to be provided for the defendant, who is at present a lunatic, his wife, and his minor son aged about thirteen or fourteen years. The defendant, his wife, and the minor son are living together. Having regard to the present condition of the defendant it is certain that some extra expenditure has to be incurred on him. In my opinion, under the circumstances, Rs. 20 per month is a fair rate to be allowed to the plaintiff. I therefore order that the defendant do pay to the plaintiff maintenance at the rate of Rs. 20 per month commencing from August 1, 1940, till the plaintiff's marriage, during the natural life of the defendant. I have fixed August 1, 1940, because the plaintiff sent a letter of demand to the defendant in August in which she has claimed separate maintenance. As in my opinion she is entitled to separate maintenance there has been a failure to pay the same from August, 1940.

The plaintiff's out-of-pocket expenses in connection with the suit are stated to be Rs. 300 and on that footing I award the plaintiff Rs. 600 as costs of the suit against the defendant. The Court Receiver's costs, as representing the defendant, are fixed at Rs. 500. The Court Receiver as the Committee of the lunatic defendant is authorised to withdraw from the account of the estate of the defendant sufficient amount to pay the plaintiff's claim for maintenance up to date and her costs as also his own costs.

KANIA J. The plaintiff filed this suit against the defendants to recover a sum of Rs. 2,000, alleging that he was employed as a salesman by the Continental Garage to sell their Diesel Trucks. The defendants were stated to be the owners of the said garage. The suit was filed on January 21, 1939. On behalf of defendant No. 2 a written statement and counter-claim was filed on February 15, 1939, in which the claim was disputed and it was contended that the plaintiff had wrongfully appropriated to himself the sale proceeds of a 10 H. P. new Adler Car. The counter-claim was to recover the sale proceeds of that car.

The parties thereafter made their affidavits of documents. That was the position when the war broke out in September, 1939. Defendant No. 2 being an alien enemy has been put in an internment camp since then. The plaintiff thereafter settled the suit with defendant No. 1 and the suit has now to proceed against defendant No. 2 only.

In January this year the suit came on the board of Blackwell J. when an adjournment was asked for on behalf of defendant No. 2. The attorneys had prepared no grounds for the application. The learned Judge thereupon made an order adjourning the suit till March and made the attorneys personally pay the costs of the adjournment. The matter has now come before me and an affidavit of Ramkrishna T. Pandit dated February 27, 1941, is filed in support of the application for further adjournment. That puts on record the correspondence which took place between defendant No. 2 and his attorney in respect of the prosecution of the suit. The application is on the ground that the presence of defendant No. 2 is necessary to prosecute his defence and counter-claim and in his absence it is not possible to do so. It is pointed out that instructions from defendant No. 2 are required for the plaintiff's cross-examination. The counter-claim is a part of the suit and is not a substantially different transaction.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is urged that because defendant No. 2 is an alien enemy he has absolutely no right to maintain the litigation. It is urged that under Government of India Notification, Political Department, dated April 4, 1940, rules and procedure are prescribed for the production of an internee in Courts. According to those rules, in a civil litigation, an internee cannot be removed from the internment camp for the purpose of appearing in civil Courts. Under sub-r. (3) of r. 12A in any case where the evidence of an internee is required for any proceeding in a civil Court, the provisions of s. 44 of the Prisoners Act apply. That section deals with the taking of evidence of a prisoner on commission. From this it is argued that the only procedure open to defendant No. 2 is to apply for a commission for his examination and the adjournment of the suit will defeat the plaintiff's claim. In this connection my attention has been drawn to Robinson & Co. v. Continental Insurance Company of Mannheim.<sup>1</sup> There the question arose during the last world war of 1914. In that case the claim was based on a policy of insurance. The policy was effected before the war and the loss was before the war. Pleadings were also closed before the war. On behalf of the defendant company it was argued that on the breaking out of hostilities all litigation to which an alien enemy was a party should be suspended. That wide proposition, Bailhache J. refused to accept. His judgment is in two parts. In the first part the learned Judge considered the abstract question whether on the outbreak of hostilities every litigation pending in British Courts to which an alien enemy was a party should be suspended. He held that it was not suspended. He observed that according to British jurisprudence and civilisation a foreign enemy subject could defend an action filed against him before the war and as stated in Bacon's Abridgement, Vol. I, p. 183, an alien enemy can also take steps to compel the appearance of his witnesses and may have the benefit of discovery. The argument that to allow an enemy to defend would be helping the enemy was rejected. The second part of the judgment runs as follows (p. 161) :—

"In this case I understand that the presence of the alien enemy in this country at the trial is not necessary and is not contemplated, and no difficulty arises such as might otherwise be created by the impossibility of his getting here, ... It may be that in this case the war has so hampered the defendants in the preparation of their case, in their witnesses, or in other ways, that it would be right to grant them a postponement on those grounds. If any application is made to postpone the trial on grounds of that character it will be dealt with on its merits."

These observations clearly show that on the grounds mentioned therein an application for adjournment may be entertained.

In my opinion under the circumstances of the present case defendant No. 2 is entitled to the adjournment. The notification in the Government of India Gazette prevents defendant No. 2 from being brought into Court in a civil litigation. Sub-rule (3), which permits his evidence being recorded on commission, is framed so as to enable an internee to be examined as a witness. That may be in a case where he is not himself a party. If in this case his evidence alone was required and the case could have proceeded on that evidence, there would have been no necessity for an adjournment and I should have refused the application for adjournment. If the evidence of defendant No. 2 was taken on commission, he could only deny the alleged agreement mentioned in the plaint generally. His presence in Court appears to be essential in order to give instructions to his attorneys and counsel to cross-examine the plaintiff when he gives evidence. The agreement mentioned in the plaint to appropriate the sale proceeds of the Adler Car for commission earned by the plaintiff is oral and therefore the details of the alleged agreement are only known to the parties personally. If it is conceded that an alien enemy is entitled to defend an action brought against him, as observed by Bailhache J., in a proper case, where his presence is found essential and necessary for his defence, to refuse an adjournment will be denying him the right to defend. If under any conditions his presence in Court could have been procured, it would be his duty to take steps in that direction. The Government notification, as framed, in terms, is absolute and it appears that as matters stand now it is not possible for him to come out under any conditions and give instructions for cross-examination of the plaintiff and his witnesses when they give evidence. To refuse the application of defendant No. 2, under the circumstances, would be to refuse him the right to defend, which according to the British jurisprudence and civilization has always been recognised. I therefore cannot accept the plaintiff's contention that the adjournment should be refused.

It was argued that the custodian of enemy property was disposing of defendant No. 2's property and the result of the adjournment will be that when a decree is passed in favour of the plaintiff he will be unable to recover anything. I have no evidence in respect of the alleged attitude of the custodian of enemy property. Even if it were so, I consider that it would hardly be a ground to deny defendant No. 2 a right to defend. The plaintiff may take necessary action to prevent the distribution of the assets of the alien enemy while an adjudication of his claim is pending in Court, and he is unable to prosecute it because of circumstances over which he has no control.

The suit is therefore adjourned either till defendant No. 2 is permitted according to the law of the land to appear and give instructions to his solicitors to defend the action or sine die till the termination of the hostilities. Defendant No. 2 must pay the costs of this adjournment in any event as the adjournment is not occasioned by any fault of the plaintiff. Blackwell J. fixed those costs at Rs. 60 and I consider that figure as fair costs of this application. The custodian of enemy property will under this order be authorised to pay this sum out of the assets, if any, in his hands of defendant No. 2 or of the Continental Garage which is claimed by defendant No. 2 as his property if he is satisfied that the same belonged to defendant No. 2.

The Courts should give full effect to agreements of the nature of separation deeds. Such agreements are formed, construed and dissolved and are enforced on precisely the same principles as any commercial agreement. Courts will not enforce stipulations in such agreements which are illegal either as being opposed to positive law or public policy.

Petitioner and respondent, wife and husband, who were Christians, entered into a separation deed on September 25, 1934, under which the respondent made all the payments he was required to make. A clause in the deed provided—“Neither party from this day shall have any claim against the other party in respect of any matter or account.” The petitioner filed a suit in 1941 against BEAUMONT C. J. This is a wife's petition for judicial separation and a consequential order for alimony.

The position is this. The parties, who are Christians, were married in 1932. They were married at Vienna, and soon after the marriage the husband came to India, and later in the year the wife followed him. The petition alleges that his sisters objected to his having married a European lady, and were not friendly towards her. In November, 1933, she went back to Vienna, and in April, 1934, returned to India. But the parties did not live together. They have not lived together since November 27, 1933, when the wife left India for Vienna. After her return in April, 1934, negotiations took place between the husband and the wife with regard to a separation, and the correspondence, which is annexed to the respondent's answer, shows that from August 6, 1934, until September 25, 1934, the husband and wife through their respective solicitors were negotiating with a view to the parties entering into a separation deed. It is not necessary to refer to that correspondence further than to say that it shows that the wife was being advised by independent solicitors, who were looking after her interest. This is not a case of the separation deed having been arranged entirely by the solicitors of the husband who brought in a tame solicitor to advise the wife to execute it. On September 25, 1934, the separation deed was executed. In the first clause the husband covenanted that the wife should live separate, and he agreed to make her certain payments. He was to pay her Rs. 1,500 down ; he was to pay Rs. 500 to her solicitors for costs ; he was to provide her with a passage back to Europe ; and on receiving a cable advice that she had reached Vienna a sum of Rs. 5,000 was to be placed to her credit at some bank in Vienna. Then in cl. II there is the usual covenant by the wife not to molest the husband and to allow him to live separately, and keep him indemnified against debts, and so forth, and not to institute any proceeding for restitution of conjugal rights. Then in cl. IV it is provided :

"Neither party from this day shall have any claim against the other party in respect of any matter or account."

That agreement was duly executed by the parties, the wife's solicitors attest-

ROZARIO

Beaumont C.J. It is suggested by Mr. Forbes that it is not open to a husband to pay a lump sum to his wife and get rid of his liability to maintain her; but that question does not arise in these proceedings. It may very well be that in the Christian community a husband is under a common law liability in this country, as I think he is in England, to maintain his wife and save her from destitution, and it may be that the wife, having no means of livelihood, could maintain a suit to establish her right to maintenance notwithstanding the separation deed. I can see a considerable difference in principle between a separation deed, which provides for a weekly or monthly sum to be paid to the wife by way of maintenance, and an agreement, such as I have to deal with in this case, which provides only for payment of a single lump sum. It certainly seems strange that a husband by paying down a lump sum, whether large or small, can rid himself of his obligation to maintain his wife. However, that is not the question which I have to decide in this case. This is a matrimonial suit, and my jurisdiction to allow alimony, which is another name for maintenance, only arises on my granting a decree for judicial separation, there being no claim in this case to a divorce. Until I determine that I ought to grant a decree for judicial separation, no question of allowing alimony can arise. The jurisdiction of the Court is statutory, and I can only pass such a decree on proof of facts required by the statute to be proved. The only such facts relied on in the petition are cruelty and desertion. It is faintly suggested that there was cruelty, because seven or eight years ago there was some form of moral cruelty consisting mainly of the rudeness of the husband's sisters to the wife. But that is really a fantastic claim. The suggested cruelty is nebulous and was condoned by the separation deed.

With regard to desertion it is clear that a separation deed is a conclusive answer to a claim for desertion without reasonable cause. The deed constitutes a reasonable cause. Mr. Forbes has strenuously argued that this Court is not bound by the deed, that sitting as a Judge in a matrimonial cause I can ignore it, and he has referred to two cases, Adamson v. Adamson<sup>1</sup> and Holroyd v. Holroyd,<sup>2</sup> in support of his proposition. But in both those cases the husband had deserted the wife, and she had signed without any independent advice an informal document agreeing to live apart on payment of maintenance which the husband had failed to pay. No doubt, the Judges in those cases held that the document she signed did not really amount to an agreement to live apart. But this is an entirely different case. I have to deal with a formal separation deed entered into by the parties on the advice of their respective solicitors, acted upon for years and under which the husband has made all the payments he was required to make. No attempt has been made to set the deed aside, and in my opinion it is quite impossible for me to ignore it. Lord Atkin in Hyman v. Hyman<sup>3</sup> deals with separation deeds. He points out that such deeds were not recognized by the Ecclesiastical Courts, but were enforced by the common law, though at one time not favoured by equity, but as a result of various decisions their effect had been recognized. Then Lord Atkin says (p. 625):—

“Full effect has therefore to be given in all Courts to these contracts as to all other contracts. It seems not out of place to make this obvious reflection, for a perusal of some of the cases in the matrimonial Courts seems to suggest that at times they are still looked at askance, and enforced grudgingly. But there is no caste in contracts. Agreements for separation are formed, construed and dissolved and to be enforced on precisely the same principles as any respectable commercial agreement, of whose nature indeed they sometimes partake. As in other contracts stipulations will not be enforced which are illegal either as being opposed to positive law or public policy. But this is a common attribute of all contracts, though we may recognize that the subject-matter of separation agreements may bring them more than others into relation with questions of public policy.”

In my opinion, that passage correctly states the law, and there having been no attempt in this case to get the deed of separation set aside, I can only act upon it. As long as the deed stands, it seems to me apparent that it is impossible to maintain that the husband has deserted his wife without reasonable cause. That being so, the petition must be dismissed.

I have felt some difficulty with regard to the proper order to make in this case as to costs. The wife's petition has failed, but the general rule in matrimonial suits is that the wife is entitled to receive her costs from the husband, whether she is successful or not, and whether she is petitioner or respondent. That rule was introduced into England at a time when on marriage the whole of the wife's property vested in her husband, and, therefore, unless he was bound to pay the wife's costs, a husband could never be charged with matrimonial offences, and a wife could never defend herself against unjust charges. Although there may not be the same cogent reason for the rule now, it has not been altered, and still applies with its original force in a case like the present, where the wife has no separate property. But the rule is always qualified in this sense that the solicitor of the wife must have an honest belief in his case. I do not mean to say that he must be satisfied that his case is going to succeed, but he must consider that his client has a case which ought properly to be put before the Court. To apply the rule without any qualification would be to encourage unscrupulous attorneys to file suits in the matrimonial Court, which had no real justification, and were merely a means of making costs. But although the rule is qualified in that way, it is very important that attorneys, who are asked to take up a case on behalf of a wife who has no money, should feel that they can safely do so as long as they act properly. Now, in this case there is no suggestion that the petition was filed with a view to making costs; I have no doubt that the real object of the petition was to secure maintenance for the wife, who is no doubt badly in need of it. But I feel grave doubt whether the wife's attorney really supposed that there was the slightest chance of obtaining a decree for judicial separation; and if I thought that the claim was preferred in this Court merely to bring pressure to bear on the husband taking advantage of the rule which allows the wife her costs in any event, I should decline to give her any costs. But Mr. Forbes, counsel for the petitioner, says that

City of Bombay Police Act (Bom. IV of 1902), Secs. 27(2A) and 128—Externment order—Disobeying such order—Prosecution for breach of order—Prior convictions under Bombay Children Act, 1924—Whether such conviction comes within the meaning of s. 27(2A) of City of Bombay Police Act—Separate offences in the course of same transaction—Convictions on two counts—Whether such convictions are to be treated as separate convictions within the meaning of s. 27(2A).

A conviction under the Bombay Children Act, 1924, prior to its amendment by Act VII of 1936, can be taken into account in passing an externment order under s. 27(2A) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, though such an action is contrary to the spirit of the amended Bombay Children Act.

The convictions referred to in s. 27(2A) of the City of Bombay Police Act need not be convictions arising in the course of separate transactions or convictions passed on separate dates. Thus the offence of house-breaking under s. 457 of the Indian Penal Code and the offence of theft under s. 380 committed in the course of the same transaction and punished separately amount to two convictions and not one within the meaning of s. 27(2A).

Per Beaumont C. J. The Legislature in enacting s. 27(2A) did not contemplate that the practice of some Magistrates of convicting accused persons on more than one count in respect of the same transaction would involve two convictions within the meaning of that section. The obvious intent of that section seems to be that a man is not to be externed under it unless on more than two occasions he has shown that he does not intend to live within the law.

* Criminal Appeal No. 83 of 1941, by the Government of Bombay, against the order of acquittal passed by K. J. Khambata, Presidency Magistrate, Fourth Court, Girgaum, Bombay.

APPEAL against acquittal.

On June 30, 1941, the accused Chhotalal was served with an order of externment for two years made against him by the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, under 27(2A) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902. The order was based on the following convictions against him—

- (1) On March 17, 1933, under ss. 380—109 of the Indian Penal Code.
- (2) On January 3, 1936, under s. 224 of the Indian Penal Code.
- (3) On March 23, 1939, under ss. 457 and 380, Indian Penal Code, when he was given two months' rigorous imprisonment on each count, the sentences were to run concurrently.

The accused was given a railway ticket to Thana and was seen off as far as Thana by a police constable on January 31, 1941. Two days after this the accused was found in Bombay and was arrested. He was prosecuted under s. 128 of the City of Bombay Police Act for disobeying the order in the Court of the Presidency Magistrate, Fourth Court, Bombay, and he pleaded guilty to the charge.

The Magistrate, however, refused to accept the plea of guilty, and proceeded to consider the validity of the Police Commissioner's order. He held that the first and second convictions could not be taken into account under s. 27(2A) of the City of Bombay Police Act and acquitted the accused. In the course of his judgment he observed :—

"Taking the second item first, it was admitted by the learned Police Prosecutor that that was a conviction under s. 224, Indian Penal Code, and, therefore, could not have been taken into consideration by the Police Commissioner for the purpose of making the externment order under s. 27 (2A) because this section clearly states that the accused must have been convicted more than twice of offences punishable under Chapter, XII, XVI or XVII of the Indian Penal Code; and s. 224, Indian Penal Code, does not fall within any of those Chapters.

As regards the first item in the convictions-slip, that is one of a date when the accused must have been a 'child' as now defined by the Bombay Children Act; and he was consequently ordered to be detained in the Willingdon Boys' Home. Under the present scheme of the Bombay Children Act, an offence by a child is not to be regarded as a conviction. That Act carefully avoids all use of the word 'conviction' or 'convicted', and uses the expression 'is found to have committed an offence'. Formerly, no doubt, offences by children were treated as convictions, and their finger impressions taken and a record kept. But since the amendment of the Children Act in 1936, whenever a Court finds a child to have committed an offence, that finding is not to be regarded as a 'conviction'. Mr. Dhurandhar argued that the offence first mentioned in the conviction-slip of the accused is of the year 1933, that is of a time when such offences were regarded as convictions; and, therefore, the Commissioner was justified in taking this into account. I am of opinion, however, that that item cannot be taken into consideration. When the Police Commissioner made his externment order, which was on January 3, 1941, the amended Children Act had been in force for nearly five years; and in my judgment he ought to have given weight to the present scheme of the Children Act as explained above. Referring to s. 48 of the Children Act, Mr. Dhurandhar further contended that an offence by a child was not to be treated as conviction for the purpose of enhancement of sentence, but that it might be taken into consideration by the Commissioner of Police for the purpose of s. 27(2A). I think, however, that since there is no such thing as a conviction with reference to an offence by a child, the argument of Mr. Dhurandhar is not sound. The whole object of the Legislature in making the amendment in the Children Act in 1936 was to make it clear that offences by children were not to be regarded as convictions; and it would, therefore, be violating the Children Act both in letter and in spirit if now the Commissioner of Police treats as a 'conviction' an offence of which a person had been found guilty when he was a child.

If, therefore, the first and the second items mentioned in the convictions-slip are removed, it is obvious that the externment order could not have been made in the present case, because the accused was not "convicted more than twice of offences under Chapter XII, etc."

With regard to the third item in the convictions-slip, that was a conviction under ss. 457 and 380, Indian Penal Code, that is for house-breaking and theft. Both these were committed in the course of the same transaction. There was only one incident and one trial though there were charges on two separate counts. And though for each count of the charge a separate sentence has been awarded for technical reasons, the sentences were made to run concurrently. (The trial was before myself in this very Court). Strictly speaking, therefore, the accused was convicted only once, though on two counts. Mr. Dhurandhar's argument that the accused must be regarded as having been convicted twice at that trial, is one which I cannot accept. Section 27 (2A) uses the words 'convicted more than twice of offences punishable under Chapter XII, etc.', and does not use the words 'convicted on more than two charges or counts', or 'convicted for more than two offences'. On Mr. Dhurandhar's argument, if a person were put up in a rioting case and convicted under ss. 143, 148 and (say) ss. 323, 325 and 426, then he must be regarded to have been convicted five times—which I think would be a wrong view of the situation. The expression "more than twice" in sub-s. (2A) means on at least three separate occasions. If at one trial arising out of one transaction, the accused were convicted on several counts, that does not mean that he is convicted several times separately. I, therefore, think that the third item in the convictions-slip of the present accused must be regarded as a conviction once and not twice.

The result is that even if the first item, namely, the offence committed by the accused when he was a child, were to be treated as a "conviction" for the purpose of s. 27 (2A), still in the present case, the accused has been convicted only twice and not more than twice. In my judgment, therefore, in the present case the material before the Commissioner of Police was such that he could not have based his externment order thereon. It fell short of the requirements of s. 27(2A)."

B. G. Rao, Assistant Government Pleader, for the Government of Bombay.
T. N. Walavalkar (appointed), for the accused.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an appeal by Government against the acquittal of the accused by the learned Presidency Magistrate, Fourth Court. The accused was charged under s. 128 of the City of Bombay Police Act with having disobeyed an externment order passed against him by the Commissioner of Police under s. 27(2A) of the Act. The accused admitted the making of the order, its service upon him, and his return to Bombay within the time prohibited by the order. But the learned Magistrate, quite rightly, refused to accept a plea of guilty, without considering the question whether the externment order passed by the Commissioner of Police was a valid order. He held that it was not a valid order and accordingly acquitted the accused.

Sub-section (2A) of s. 27 of the City of Bombay Police Act was added by amendment in the year 1936, and is in these terms :

"(2A). It shall be further competent to the Commissioner of Police to direct any person who, not having been born in the City of Bombay or the Bombay Suburban District, has been convicted more than twice of offences punishable under Chapter XII, XVI or XVII of the Indian Penal Code, to remove himself in like manner from the City of Bombay and not to enter the said City or the Bombay Suburban District."

Beaumont C.J.

It is obvious that that section confers upon the Commissioner of Police power to interfere very drastically with the liberty of the subject. The scheme of the sub-section is that if a person not born in Bombay comes to Bombay and abuses the hospitality extended to him by his adopted city, he may be expelled, and no one, I think, could complain that a provision of that sort is unjust. If liberty is abused, it may be taken away. The test to be applied in determining whether a person has committed a breach of the hospitality of his adopted city is that he should have been convicted more than twice of certain offences, being offences in respect of coining, offences against the person, and offences against property. That is the test; and if a man has been convicted more than twice of such offences, the Commissioner of Police has a discretion, which he is not bound to exercise, to extern him.

Now, the previous convictions on which this externment order was based were three. First, on March 17, 1933, the externee was convicted by a Magistrate under s. 380 read with s. 109 of the Indian Penal Code, and was ordered to be detained in the Willingdon Boys' Home for two years. The sentence shows that he was at that time a child or a young person. The Magistrate in convicting stated that he was at that time between fourteen and fifteen years of age. The offence was a petty one of assisting others to steal a piece of lead piping from Beach Candy. Secondly, on January 3, 1936, the accused was convicted under s. 224 of the Indian Penal Code and ordered to be detained in the Borstal School at Dharwar for three years. But as s. 224 of the Indian Penal Code does not fall within the Chapters of the Indian Penal Code referred to in s. 27(2A) of the City of Bombay Police Act, that conviction cannot be taken into account. Thirdly, on March 23, 1939, the accused was convicted under ss. 457 and 380 of the Indian Penal Code and was sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment on each count.

As to the first conviction the learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that a conviction of a child was not a conviction which could be taken into account under s. 27(2A). The position as to that is this :—

Under the Bombay Children Act of 1924 it was the practice, when a child was found to have committed an offence, to convict that child, and at that time "child" was defined as a person under fourteen years of age. But it is to be noticed that s. 48 provided that when a child was convicted of an offence, the fact that he had been so convicted should not have any effect under s. 75 of the Indian Penal Code or s. 565 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which latter section would subject him to an order to report his residence to the police after his discharge from prison. It is obvious that such an order is much less serious than an externment order, but s. 27(2A) of the City of Bombay Police Act was not in force when the Bombay Children Act was passed. In 1936 the Bombay Children Act was amended, and in every case reference to a conviction of a child is omitted and the phrase is substituted "when a child is found to have committed an offence." So that since 1936 a child cannot be convicted, but before 1936 a child could be convicted.

Beaumont C.J.

Under the amended Act a child is defined to mean anyone under the age of sixteen. It is impossible, I think, to suggest any sound reason why an externment order against an adult can be based on an offence committed by him as a child before 1936, but cannot be based on such an offence committed after 1936. Technically, however, I think that the Commissioner was right in treating this conviction of the child as a conviction within s. 27(2A), but I must say that to my mind it is shocking to find an order of externment from the city where he has lived for many years made against a man of twenty-two years of age, because at the age of fourteen he committed a petty theft. But that is what it comes to, because without the conviction of the child there was no power to make an externment order against the man. It seems to me that to make such an order is absolutely opposed to modern views on the subject of child criminality, which refuse to treat a child as a criminal, and is moreover in defiance of the spirit of the Bombay Children Act of 1936.

The other point, which arises, is this. The third conviction, as I have said, was under two sections of the Indian Penal Code, ss. 457 and 380, that is, house-breaking and theft in a dwelling house, both offences having arisen in the course of the same transaction. The learned Magistrate thinks that they only amount to one conviction within s. 27(2A) of the City of Bombay Police Act, and no doubt in ordinary parlance a conviction for two offences arising out of the same transaction would be regarded as a conviction for a single offence. But the exact point came before a bench of this Court in Emperor v. Ishwarlal Chhaganlal,<sup>1</sup> the judgment in which was not before the learned Magistrate. In that case the Court pointed out that, though it would be a harsh order on the part of the Commissioner to treat as two convictions under two sections of the Indian Penal Code in respect of matters arising out of the same transaction, still it was impossible to say that the convictions were not separate. Offences arising out of the same transaction can be tried together under s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code; but the Magistrate is not bound to try them together. He might pass separate orders in separate trials, although the offences arose out of the same transaction. If we are to uphold the learned Magistrate's view on this point, we should have to read into s. 27(2A) after the words "has been convicted more than twice of offences punishable under Ch. XII, XVI or XVII of the Indian Penal Code" some such words as "and not arising in the course of the same transaction." The Court cannot add such words to the section, and to do so might involve the Commissioner in an awkward inquiry, because it is not always easy to say when offences arise in the course of the same transaction. In my view, we are not justified in saying that the convictions referred to in s. 27(2A) must be convictions arising in the course of separate transactions, or convictions passed on separate dates, but at the same time I have no doubt whatever that the Legislature did not contemplate that the practice of some Magistrates of convicting accused persons on more than one count in respect of the same transaction would involve two convictions within the meaning of s. 27(2A). The obvious intent of that section seems to be that a man is not to be externed under it unless on more than two occasions he has shown that he does not intend to live within the law.

If this had been an isolated case, I should not have thought it necessary to make these observations, and I should have supposed that the Commissioner had some special reason for exercising his discretion in the way he has. But this is not an isolated case. The learned Magistrate has pointed out that during the last six months at least three instances have come to his notice in which the Commissioner has made an externment order on a conviction of the accused at a time when he was a child. And there are nine other Magistrates, and most externment orders do not come before the Courts. Moreover, this is the second case in this Court within a few months in which the Commissioner has based an externment order on convictions on two counts in the same transaction. In my opinion, there is a case for inquiry by the authorities as to the principles upon which the powers of the Commissioner under s. 27(2A) are being exercised, and for consideration whether those powers should be curtailed in the sense indicated above.

In the result, we think the order of externment was justified, because there had been a conviction of the accused when he was a child, and he had been convicted subsequently of two offences, although they constituted in substance only one offence. Therefore, technically he had been convicted more than twice, though substantially he had not. Having regard to the view which we take of this case, we propose to pass a nominal sentence. We allow the appeal, convict the accused under s. 128 of the City of Bombay Police Act, and sentence him to simple imprisonment until the rising of the Court.

MACKLIN J. I agree that on technical grounds we have no option but to allow the appeal, and I entirely associate myself with the remarks made by the learned Chief Justice as to the violation of the spirit of the Bombay Children Act which this case discloses.

Offences under the Defence of India Rules, 1939, r. 6, differ very much in their gravity and they should not be dealt with by any rule-of-thumb sentence. If there is any reason for supposing that a man has entered a prohibited area with a view to obtaining information which might be useful to an enemy, he would deserve a severe sentence. Similarly if a man has entered a prohibited area knowing full well that it is prohibited, having climbed over a fence or eluded a sentry or done something of that sort, he would deserve a more severe sentence; but a man who has entered a prohibited area without appreciating that it is such an area should not be dealt with so severely.

The applicant, Joseph Abdullahi, a Persian subject, was found within the prohibited area of the Alexandra Docks, Bombay, on March 7, 1941. He was arrested and charged with the offence punishable under r. 6(5) of the Defence of India Rules, 1939. His defence was that he was selling carpets on a public road outside the Alexandra Docks, that some sailors approached him to buy carpets and one of them induced him to go to the docks so that other sailors might purchase the carpets, that no one prevented him from entering into the prohibited area, that he did not know that the area was prohibited, that there was no notice prohibiting any one from entering into the dock area, and that he entered into the prohibited area only with the object of selling the carpets.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, convicted him of the offence charged and sentenced him to three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The applicant Barukh Alishah (Cr. Rev. App. No. 180 of 1941) was a Palestine British subject and also a carpet merchant. He was found within the prohibited area of the Alexandra Docks on March 7, 1941, and was arrested and charged similarly. He put in a defence similar to Joseph Abdullahi, but he was also convicted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The applicant Shelemy Banin (Cr. Rev. App. No. 174 of 1941) was found within the prohibited area of the Alexandra Docks, on May 7, 1941, and was arrested and charged with the offence punishable under r. 6(5) of the Defence of India Rules. His defence was that he wanted to ship certain goods to Aden and he went to the docks to inquire whether he could obtain shipping space in S. S. Jehangir which was in the docks, that he wanted to meet his shipping agent to make arrangement for shipping the goods, that he was not BEAUMONT C. J. These are three revision applications in which the accused were convicted under r. 6(5) of the Defence of India Rules, 1939, the charge against them being that they were found within a prohibited area. They are all Jewish merchants and they all pleaded guilty. In each case the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate merely recorded a plea of guilty, and did not record the plea in the language used by the accused as he should have done, and in each case he inflicted a sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment. A fourth case came before this Court in the course of the present week, which has not yet been decided, in which the same sentence was imposed by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate, although in that case the circumstances were quite different.

These offences under the Defence of India Rules may obviously differ very much in their gravity, and they cannot be dealt with by any rule-of-thumb sentence. If there is any reason for supposing that a man has entered a prohibited area with a view to obtaining information which might be useful to the enemy, he would deserve a severe sentence. Again, if a man has entered a prohibited area knowing full well that it is prohibited, having climbed over a fence or eluded a sentry or done something of that sort, he would deserve a more severe sentence than a man who has entered a prohibited area without appreciating that it is a prohibited area. The prohibited areas in these cases were areas in the docks, and admittedly some of the entrances into the docks were not guarded, and there was no evidence before the learned Magistrate as to whether any notice was given that these areas were prohibited areas. We are told by the learned Government Pleader on the instructions of the Police Sub-Inspector that notices were put up in English, Marathi and Hindustani, stating that the particular area was a prohibited area. The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate does not seem to have made any inquiries into the antecedents of the accused, and in Revision Application No. 174, we stood the matter over in order that the police might make inquiries, because in that case the accused said that he was a merchant from Aden and was looking for a shipping agent with a view to sending goods by sea to Aden. But he did not make that statement when he was arrested by the Deputy Inspector, nor has he mentioned the name of the agent for whom he was looking ; nor given any particulars of the goods he wished to send, nor the name of the person to whom he was proposing to send them. Therefore, we thought his statement unreliable, and we wanted to know whether there was anything known against him. If there was reason for supposing that he entered the prohibited area for a definitely unlawful purpose, he would deserve a severer sentence than three months.

 Beaumont C.J.

In the other two cases, Revision Applications Nos. 179 and 180, the accused said that they were carpet merchants, and that the police admit. Their case is that in their enthusiasm to sell carpets they had wandered into the dock area which, they say they did not know, was prohibited, and, of course, it is possible that, even if they could read the notices, they omitted to observe them. We think that their cases should have been dealt with more leniently, because we think probably they were within the prohibited area inadvertently, and even if they knew that it was a prohibited area, there is no doubt on their statement that they were merely trying to dispose of their goods. They were properly convicted, but we think that the sentence should have been only a fine. As they were given sentences of imprisonment, we propose to reduce the sentences to the period already undergone in the cases of the accused in Revision Applications Nos. 179 and 180.

We have felt more doubt in the case of the accused in Revision Application No. 174, because there is no doubt that the accused did make a statement which he could have proved, and he has not done so. At the same time, the police have nothing against him. None of these people had cameras upon them or anything which might suggest that they were seeking to obtain information to which they were not entitled, nor is it suggested that they were in places in which valuable information could be picked up. We think that three months' rigorous imprisonment was rather too severe a sentence in the case of the accused in Revision Application No. 174, though he deserved a more severe sentence than the others for giving what looks like a false excuse. As the accused has already been in jail for more than five weeks, we propose also in his case to reduce the sentence to the period already undergone.

But people must clearly understand that if they wander about prohibited areas, they will be liable to be dealt with severely. We are not laying down any rule that sentences of imprisonment shall not be imposed in such cases. At the same time it must be borne in mind that sentencing first offenders for offences of this type to a term of imprisonment is a very good way of manufacturing criminals for the future.

RAMCHANDRA TRIMBAK PATIL.*

Hindu law — Partition — Paternal grandmother, when entitled to share.

Under the Mitakshara school of Hindu law a paternal grandmother is not entitled to a share in the family estate upon a partition between her grandson and the collaterals or cousins of his deceased father; but the grandson's share on such partition is subject to her right of maintenance. The grandmother, however, is entitled to a share when partition takes place between the direct descendants inter se of her deceased husband provided that the dividing parties are not related to one another as father and son.

SUIT for partition.

A Hindu joint family consisted of one Trimbak and the sons of his uncle Ekoba, viz. Jotiram, Balaram (defendant Nos. 1 and 2) and Bajirao. Bajirao died leaving him surviving his son Pundlik (defendant No. 3). Trimbak died on August 5, 1927, leaving behind him his mother Guntabai and his wife Narmadabai (plaintiff No. 2).

On March 31, 1935, Narmadabai adopted her brother Ramchandra (plaintiff No. 1).

On September 3, 1936, plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 filed a suit to recover a half share in the family property by partition of the property.

The defendants contended inter alia that they had separated and divided the family estate between themselves in January, 1935, before the adoption took place, that according to the custom of the Tilone Kunbi caste, to which they belonged, an adopted son could be taken only from the same kul or family as that of the adoptor, that plaintiff No. 2 could not take her own brother in adoption, that Trimbak had before his death prohibited his wife plaintiff No. 2 from making an adoption, and that the suit was bad for non-joinder of Guntabai, who was a necessary party.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff's adoption was proved and valid, that plaintiff No. 2 was competent to take her own brother in adoption, that the defendants failed to prove the custom alleged by them, that Trimbak had not prohibited his wife from adopting, that the partition alleged by the defendants was not proved, that the coparcenary of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 being actually in existence at the time of the adoption, the power to adopt inherent in plaintiff No. 2 had not come to an end and plaintiff No. 1 divested the estate which had vested in the surviving coparceners, defendants Nos. 1 to 3, and that Guntabai was not a necessary party to the suit. Plaintiff No. 1 was accordingly awarded a half share in the family estate. The Subordinate Judge observed on the last point as follows :—

"Trimbak's mother is not entitled to get a share in the partition of the joint family estate between plaintiff No. 1 and defendants Nos. 1 to 3. She is entitled to get maintenance out of the half-share allotted to plaintiff No. 1. She is therefore not a necessary party to the suit."

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

G. N. Thakor, with Y. V. Dixit, for the appellants.

WASSOODEW J. This is an appeal from a decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Jalgaon in a suit by the adopted son of one Trimbak and by the latter's widow the adoptive mother against Trimbak's cousins and a nephew, the defendants, for partition of the family lands and other property. The precise relationship of Trimbak with the defendants will be apparent from the following genealogical table :—

The principal dispute relates to the legality and validity of the adoption of Ramchandra, plaintiff No. 1, said to have been made on March 31, 1935. The factum of adoption, although not disputed here, was disputed in the trial Court. The evidence on that point is sufficient and reliable and we accept the conclusion of the learned trial Judge that the plaintiff was duly adopted.

Among the numerous other defences raised to the plaintiff's claim were, first, that according to the caste custom amongst the Tilone Kunbis to which sect the parties belong, the only person, who could be legally and properly adopted is the person born in the same gotra or family of the adoptor and inasmuch as plaintiff No. 1 does not belong to the adoptor's family—his family name or gotra being Ahire whilst that of the defendants' is Borase—the adoption is illegal; secondly, that the deceased Trimbak, who succumbed to cholera after a few days' illness, had some hours before his end expressly communicated to his mother Guntabai that he intended to prohibit his wife from making any adoption to him and that in consequence the adoptive mother was incompetent to make the adoption; thirdly, that a few months prior to the alleged adoption all the defendants had separated and divided the ancestral property in their hands and had terminated the coparcenary and that consequently the plaintiff could not upon adoption become a member of any subsisting coparcenary or participate in its property; and, lastly, that the suit must fail because the plaintiff's grandmother Guntabai, who it is said would be entitled to a share on partition between the plaintiff, the adopted grandson, and the other collaterals of his father, was not impleaded as defendant. The first three objections involve pure questions of fact. The learned Subordinate Judge has disallowed them holding that the special caste custom, the alleged prohibition and the extinction of the coparcenary were not established. On the question of law involved in the last point he found that the plaintiff's grandmother was not entitled to a share on partition and was therefore not a necessary party to the suit. Accordingly the plaintiffs' suit was decreed.

In this appeal by the defendants against that decree it will be convenient to deal with the questions of fact first. [His Lordship dealt with the questions of fact and agreed with the conclusions reached by the Subordinate Judge. The point of law was then dealt with as follows] :—

Then there remains the question as to the maintainability of this action for want of necessary parties. The basis of that argument is that according to the Mitakshara law, which admittedly governs the parties, they being residents of Khandesh, the grandmother Guntabai is entitled to a share upon partition between her adopted grandson and his collaterals and that therefore the failure to implead her was fatal. The question whether Guntabai was a necessary party must depend upon the view whether the assumption underlying the argument is correct. The point that can be formulated upon the facts is as follows. Is a grandmother under the Mitakshara law entitled to a share in the family estate upon partition between her grandson on the one part and his adoptive father's collaterals or cousins on the other? That is a point of first impression so far as this Court is concerned. There is no direct authority bearing upon it of any other High Court in Western India. The question has to be determined by reference to the Mitakshara law. Mr. Thakor for the appellants has not been able to cite any direct text bearing out his contention. His argument is that inasmuch as there is no text directly opposed to it, his point should be conceded upon the general rules as to partition during the lifetime of the father and after his death. There is no specific rule which sets apart a share to a Hindu female in any circumstances other than those contained in the Mitakshara (Ch. I, s. II, pl. 8 and 9) dealing with partition among the sons during the lifetime of the father (Stokes' Translation of Hindu Law, p. 379) :—

"Two sorts of partition at the pleasure of the father have been stated; namely equal and unequal." (See Yajnavalkya 2, V. 115).

The text of Yajnavalkya contains a specific rule in the case of equal partition :—

"If he (father) makes the allotments equal, his wives (पत्न्यः), to whom no separate property has been given by the husband or the father-in-law, must be rendered partakers of like-portions."

Vijnaneswara in his exposition of that text says :—

"When the father, by his own choice, makes all his sons partakers of equal portions, his wives, (पत्न्यः), to whom peculiar property had not been given by their husband, or by their father-in-law, must be made participant of shares equal to those of sons. But, if separate property have been given to a woman, the author subsequently directs half a share to be allotted to her. 'Or if any had been given, let him assign the half'."

In the text and the commentary the only female who is declared to be entitled to a share is the wife (patni) of the father. It is not disputed that that term would not include a mother of the father and the text therefore has no application to the present case.

As to division after the father's death—here there is no father alive—the Mitakshara (Ch. I, s. VII, pl. 1) says as follows (see Stokes' Translation of Hindu Law, p. 397) :—

"When a distribution is made during the life of the father, the participation of his wives (पत्नीनाम्), equally with his sons, has been directed. ('If he make the allotments equal, his wives must be rendered partakers of like portions')..... Of heirs dividing after the death of the father, let the mother (माता) also take an equal share." (See Yajnavalkya 2, 123.)

The word used in this connection is 'mata' which according to the interpretation in a series of decisions has been deemed to include a grandmother and even a step-grandmother (see Vithal Ramkrishna v. Prahlad Ramkrishna<sup>1</sup>), for, it has been held that the word mata is illustrative of a class and not restricted to the natural mother according to its literal meaning. That rendering of the term is based upon the text of Vyasa, which is translated in Mandlik's Hindu Law at p. 44 as follows:—

"The sonless wives of the father are declared equal sharers; and so are all paternal grandmothers declared equal to the mother."

From the above it is clear that both Yajnavalkya and Vijnaneswara make a distinction between two sets of partitions, one during the lifetime of the father and the other after his demise. In the former case it is clear upon authority that the wife alone comes in for a share. She comes in as a wife of the father and not the mother of the son. In such a case the grandmother has no place because patni can never mean a grandmother. She only comes in when the partition is after the demise of the father. The raison d'être underlying the distinction is very difficult to appreciate. But the texts do, as a matter of fact, observe that distinction. Therefore the question arises whether, having regard to the fact that the father is dead and the partition is now sought after his demise, the grandmother can take a share upon partition in the circumstances of this case.

Now the text of Vyasa referred to has been interpreted as restricting the claim of the grandmother and the mother to a share upon a division after the death of the father between the sons and the grandsons inter se. The question whether a grandmother was entitled to a share on partition between a father and son arose in Jamnabai v. Vasudeo Sagarmal,<sup>2</sup> and it was held that she was not entitled, upon the text of Vyasa, to a share because it was a partition during the lifetime of the father. The law under the Bengal and Mithila school is different for she has been held entitled to a share on such a partition (see Purna Chandra Chakravanti v. Sarojini Debi<sup>3</sup>). The cases referred to in argument and which were decided under the Mitakshara law show that on a partition of the property between the sons and grandsons, that is, between a son or sons and the son or sons of a deceased son, the mother and that the case could not be brought within s. 373, because the possession, which the accused is said to have obtained over the girl in question in the present case, was not obtained from a third party. The girl, who was seventeen and a half years of age, went with the accused voluntarily. Mr. Mahale has referred to a recent decision of a bench of the Calcutta High Court in Jateendra Mohan Das v. Emperor,<sup>1</sup> in which the bench held that ss. 372 and 373 of the Indian Penal Code are correlative of each other, and that the phrase "otherwise obtains possession" in s. 373 corresponds to "otherwise disposes of" in s. 372 and is ejusdem generis with "buying" and "hiring". That point was considered by a bench of this Court in Bhagchand Jasraj v. Emperor<sup>2</sup> and the Calcutta High Court refused to follow that decision. Having reconsidered the matter in the light of the Calcutta decision, I remain of the opinion which I expressed in Bhagchand Jasraj v. Emperor. No doubt, the opening language of ss. 372 and 373 to some extent corresponds. Section 372 commences "Whoever sells, lets to hire, or otherwise disposes of any person under the age of eighteen years," and s. 373 commences "Whoever buys, hires or otherwise obtains possession of any person under the age of eighteen years." But to my mind, the fact that the language corresponds to some extent does not justify a conclusion that s. 373 is a mere counterpart of s. 372. I apprehend that, if s. 372 was repealed or amended, that would not in any way affect the construction or effect of s. 373. Section 373 in terms deals with obtaining possession, and not merely with obtaining possession from a third person, and to say that because an offence under s. 372, which is aimed at disposing of a girl, necessarily involves two parties to the transaction, therefore s. 373, which is aimed at obtaining possession, must involve two parties, is, to my mind, a fallacy. Henderson J. in Jateendra Mohan Das v. Emperor in giving the judgment of the Court gives an illustration. He says (p. 190):

"If the mother of an illegitimate girl, whom she is unable or unwilling to maintain, made her over to the keeper of a brothel with the intent that she may be used for purposes of prostitution, the mother is guilty under s. 372 and the keeper of the brothel under s. 373."

I entirely agree. But, in my opinion, if the keeper of the brothel meets the girl, and by physical force or by false representation induces her to enter the brothel, and keeps her there, he undoubtedly obtains possession of the girl, and the fact that no third party is involved as the giver of possession is irrelevant. In my judgment, the view taken by the Calcutta High Court imposes an entirely unjustifiable and most undesirable limitation upon the plain words of s. 373.

A further question arises in this case, however, whether what the accused did amounts to obtaining possession of this girl. As pointed out by this Court in Bhagchand Jasraj v. Emperor, obtaining possession involves exercising some sort of control over the person of the girl. In that case the question was whether the Judge had correctly summed the matter up to the jury. In the present case we are not concerned with a jury, and we have to see whether what the accused did amounts to obtaining possession. On the finding of the learned Magistrate, the girl went with the accused voluntarily. He

A. Cr. J. had been living in the same house as the girl, and was a relative, and they went away together by mutual consent. There is nothing whatever to show that the accused exercised any control over the girl, that he locked her in a room, or prevented her from communicating with her friends, or did anything of that sort. As far as I can see, she was perfectly free to leave the accused whenever she wanted to. That being so, I am unable to accept the view of the learned Magistrate that the accused obtained possession of this girl of seventeen and a half years of age, within the meaning of s. 373.

Therefore the conviction must be set aside, and the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Under the Mitakshara system of Hindu law coparceners who intend to remain joint and undivided do not become divided contrary to their intention because in a document for purposes of pretence they refer to their interests as represented by a fractional share.

A member of a Mitakshara family may sometimes be forgiven for speaking of his "one-third share" instead of using the more accurate but more elaborate expression "the share which if a partition were to take place to-day would be one-third." Where, however, a third party has been induced to act upon such a document, very different questions may arise by reason of estoppel or otherwise, but if the case is limited to the parties themselves then, propriety or impropriety of language matters little, since the document does not warrant any inference of a previous or independent agreement to hold in divided shares.

THE facts are fully stated in the judgment of the Board.

J. M. Parikh and R. A. Parikh, for the appellants.

Sir H. Cunliffe K. C. and P. V. Subba Rao, for the respondents.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN. Dharma Rao and Kasibabu were brothers, the former being older than the latter by about nineteen years. The appellant Merla Ramanna was a creditor of Dharma Rao in respect of a promissory note executed in 1928 for Rs. 10,000 with certain interest. Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 (herein called the respondents) are the sons of Kasibabu who died in 1910. The family is governed by the Mitakshara. Respondents Nos. 3 and 4 do not appear and need not be mentioned.

After Dharma Rao's death in 1929, the appellant sued the respondents in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Cocanada as being persons in possession of Dharma Rao's estate, and on January 27, 1931, recovered judgment in the usual form limited to assets of Dharma Rao which had come to their hands. Certain immoveables in which Dharma Rao had had an interest were attached before judgment, and on April 22, 1932, the respondents applied to the Subordinate Judge to raise the attachment contending that the properties attached were not liable to be taken in execution under the decree. Their case is that they were coparceners with their uncle in a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara and that on Dharma Rao's death they became entitled by survivorship to the whole interest in the joint family property, the appellant, though a creditor of Dharma Rao, not having taken any steps in his debtor's lifetime to recover his debt.

The appellant, on the contrary, contends that Dharma Rao and Kasibabu had ceased so far as regards the attached properties to be undivided and had become separate in estate by reason of a deed of sale (exhibit B) dated March 22, 1900, whereby Kasibabu purported to sell his one-tenth interest therein to his brother Dharma Rao. To this the first answer of the respondents is that the deed was a sham deed not intended to have any effect upon the rights of the parties and not the expression of any agreement between them. Further and in the alternative the respondents contend that even if the deed of sale was intended to be operative and was entered into animo contrahendi it did not have the effect of dividing the brothers' interest in the attached properties or of bringing to an end the right of the survivor to succeed to the whole interest. This contention is based upon the circumstance that in 1900 other branches of the family were joint with the branch represented by Dharma Rao and Kasibabu and it is said that the members of these other branches are not shown to have had notice of the deed of sale. As their Lordships do not find it necessary to examine this contention it need not be stated more particularly. The respondents also contend that if Dharma Rao had acquired Kasibabu's one-tenth interest in addition to his own, he had brought the income into the common stock so as to make the properties joint. This contention was raised by the respondents in their petition and though it does not seem to have been urged at the hearing before the Subordinate Judge, it was maintained before the High Court with success.

Apart from exhibit B, their Lordships are satisfied that there is no ground for maintaining that Dharma Rao and Kasibabu's sons had become divided in respect of the properties now in question. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the respondents had "failed to prove that exhibit B is a sham or a nominal document", but the High Court on appeal thought that "the conclusion is irresistible that exhibit B the sale-deed was a nominal conveyance." The learned Subordinate Judge found in favour of the appellant that exhibit B operated to divide the interests of the two brothers and by his order of September 10, 1934, he maintained the attachment. The High Court having found that exhibit B was not intended to be acted on held that it did not operate a division of status as between the brothers. They also held that this would not have resulted from the deed even if it had been a real and not a sham transaction; and that if a division of interest had taken place by virtue of the deed, the manner in which the income had been treated by Dharma Rao restored the properties comprised therein to the condition of joint family property. The High Court by order dated November 16, 1936, accordingly held that the appellant was not entitled to have recourse to the attached properties in execution of his decree, and this is the decision now complained of.

There is a good deal of evidence upon the question whether the deed of sale (exhibit B) was intended by the parties thereto as an agreement between them or was executed merely to bring into existence a document which might, contrary to the truth, appear to have taken away from Kasibabu his interest in the properties comprised therein. Upon a full consideration of this evidence their Lordships are of opinion that the view taken by Mockett and Lakshmana Rao JJ. in the High Court has the greater reason and should prevail. In 1900 Kasibabu had just attained the age of eighteen years and Dharma Rao was thirty-seven. Of a total alleged consideration of Rs. 12,500 only Rs. 650 is said to have been paid in cash to Kasibabu at the time, the rest being accounted for in the deed by recitals about debts of the joint family, of the parties' own branch of the family and of Kasibabu personally, and by a statement that Rs. 1,000 had been paid as earnest money. Though accounts kept by Dharma Rao over many years are in evidence, there is no satisfactory proof of the existence of the alleged debts of their father and none at all that these were in 1900 pressing or that payments were made by Dharma Rao in discharge of them. It is reasonably clear from these accounts that they draw no distinction between properties sold to Dharma Rao by exhibit B and other properties in which Kasibabu retained his original interest as a coparcener. He and his family are shown to have been provided for out of the income of the family as a whole down to 1908 when the four branches become divided in status, and thereafter out of the income of the branch. It is not easy to account for such a transaction as the deed discloses save upon the ground that Kasibabu was thought to be foolish and extravagant and given to bad habits likely to lead to his dissipating his property. There is direct evidence contradicting one of the recitals as to his having taken a loan during his minority, and there is evidence of statements made by Dharma Rao disclaiming that by the deed he had become entitled to his brother's share. In 1912 at the making of the record of rights no such effect appears to have been given to the deed. There was another deed in 1910 whereby Kasibabu purported to divest himself of other properties in favour of a nominee for Dharma Rao, and there is also to be considered the fact that Dharma Rao in 1927, made an ineffective, because unwitnessed, will purporting to leave all his properties to the respondents. In the present case the oral evidence as to which the Courts in India have differed must be judged mainly upon the probabilities arising out of the proved documents and the admitted facts. Their Lordships think it sufficient to say that the careful and detailed examination of the evidence given by Lakshmana Rao J. in his judgment appears to them to be convincing and that they agree with the High Court in regarding the deed of sale as being merely "nominal" in the sense that it was not intended to have effect upon the right of the parties inter se.

Even so, and upon the footing that exhibit B is only a sham, and not a real transaction, the appellant has contended before the Board that it would in law divide the interests of the parties thereto so as to put an end to the jus accrescendi or right of survivorship between coparceners. The learned Judges of the High Court do not appear to have contemplated that a document which was not the expression of an agreement at all and not intended to have effect upon the rights of the parties could have the important effect of changing their undivided status. The repeated references in exhibit B to the one-tenth share of each of the two brothers have been emphasised in argument for the appellant, but while they do not seek in any way to qualify what was said in Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar,<sup>1</sup> their Lordships are unable to hold that coparceners who intend to remain joint and undivided become divided contrary to their intention because for purposes of pretence they refer to their interests as represented by a fractional share. Where a third party has been induced to act upon the footing of such a document as exhibit B, very different questions may arise by reason of estoppel or otherwise, but the question in the present case is limited to the parties themselves and to the immediate effect of the deed. Even a member of a Mitakshara family may sometimes be forgiven for speaking of his "one-third share" instead of using the more accurate but more elaborate expression "the share which if a partition were to take place to-day would be one-third." But in the present case the reference to the shares as "one-tenth" shares is part of the pretence of sale. When once the conclusion is reached that exhibit B is not the expression of any intention or agreement to transfer Kasibabu's interest to Dharma Rao propriety or impropriety of language matters little since the deed does not warrant any inference of a previous or independent agreement to hold in divided shares.

Their Lordships are of opinion that it is not shown as regards the properties now in question that Dharma Rao had before his death ceased to be joint with Kasibabu's sons. They will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The appellant will pay the costs to the first and second respondents.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

SHEKH ZAFARBHAI GULJARBHAI .

v.

CHHAGANLAL ADITRAM GANDHI.*

Wakf property—Mutawalli—Lease for long term—Sanction of Court—Sanction granted after suit—Sanction by any civil Court.

A long term lease of the wakf property by its mutawalli is valid, provided permission of the Court is obtained for it. Such permission can be granted even after a suit is brought to set aside the lease, and it can be granted by any civil Court.

SUIT to recover possession of land.

The land in dispute was waste land attached to the dargah of Hasan Pir at Gomtipur in Ahmedabad. In 1925 the dargah was managed by one Sayed Hussein Sayad Alli (defendant No. 2) as mutawalli. The land was, on November 11, 1925, granted on lease for a term of fifty-one years by defendant No. 2 to defendant No. 1 (Chhaganlal). Defendant No. 1 built eight rooms and twelve privies on the land at a cost of Rs. 4,000. Defendant No. 2 took the rent in advance under the lease and built a mosque with the money.

On April 24, 1934, Shaikh Rehmanbhai, who was appointed mutawalli of the dargah, filed a suit to recover possession of the land alleging that the lease granted by defendant No. 2 to defendant No. 1 was invalid. The plaintiff having died, the suit was continued by his successor Shaikh Jafarbhai Guljarbhai.

Defendant No. 1 contended inter alia that the lease was for the necessity of the mosque, that the permission of the Court was not necessary to the granting of the lease, and that if such permission was necessary the plaintiff should be ordered to obtain it, that in any event the defendant was entitled to recover compensation.

The trial Court held that the plaintiff could dispute the validity of the lease and that he was not bound by it. The suit was accordingly decreed for the following reasons :—

"In arguments defendant No. 1 shifts his plea in the written statement that the plaintiff should be ordered to obtain the leave of the District Court to this that it is open to this Court to grant such a lease and that its grant can validate the lease. In support of this contention reliance is placed on Nimai Chand Addya v. Golam

* Second Appeal No. 96 of 1939, from the decision of P. H. Gunjal, Extra Assistant Judge at Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 218 of 1937, reversing the decree passed by H. R. Jetley, Third Joint Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 406 of Hossein (37 Cal. 179). This case lays down that the permission of the kazi requisite under the Mahomedan law can be given by a Subordinate Judge's Court if the property be under its jurisdiction. This is so far as regards the authority to grant permission in the place of the kazi. But the case is of mortgage and as stated therein the Mahomedan law permits the mortgage made by a mutawalli without sanction of the Court if it is granted for emergent necessity and that the leave can be subsequently given. The case no way, in my opinion, helps defendant No. 1 since restriction as regards sale, mortgage and leases is not the result of a general provision of law regarding alienation convening (sic) all the above three forms of alienation. There are distinct and separate restrictions as regards sales and mortgages on the one hand and the leases on the other. Therefore the analogy of mortgage cannot help the case of a lease. Thus the 37 Cal. case, based as it is on a provision of Mahomedan law, only refers to the case of mortgage has no application here. The next case relied on for defendant No. 1 is Bejnath v. Mahmud Ismail, 46 All. 677. This is not a case under the Mahomedan law but under the Religious Endowments Act and has no application here. The third case relied upon for defendant No. 1 is Gulam Mahmud v. Akroy Kumar Lal, 32 I. C. 205. This was a case of a suit to recover the amount paid in advance to a mutawalli for getting a lease. The mutawalli did not obtain the sanction of any Court and so the plaintiff's suit for refund of earnest money was decreed. Thus the actual decision of the case has no bearing on the question in issue ....

On the other hand the case of Shailundranath Palit v. Hade Kaza Mane, 59 Cal. 586, lays down that the powers of a mutawalli are more restricted as regards leasing than as regards sale or mortgage. Thus I do not think that permission can be subsequently granted in cases of improperly granted leases, whether or not their making be justified by necessity."

On appeal, the Assistant Judge was of opinion that defendant No. 2 had as mutawalli power to grant lease of wakf property for its benefit for a term exceeding one year under Mahomedan law, that defendant No. 2 had granted the lease for the benefit of the wakf property, and that the lease in suit was valid. He, therefore, dismissed the claim for possession, observing as follows :—

"The case in 37 Cal. 179 lays down that under the Mahomedan law, mortgage of wakf property by a mutawalli in case where necessity is established is valid, even if the permission of the kazi is obtained subsequent to the mortgage. No doubt it is a case of a mortgage, but I am of opinion that from an analogy of a mortgage, it can be said that the same rule is applicable to leases also, inasmuch as a lease, a mortgage and a sale are different forms of an alienation .... In the case in 44 All. 677 it is held that a mutawalli has a power to grant leases for longer period if he thought that such a grant was for the benefit of the trust estate .... It is true that in the case in 32 I. C. 205 the plaintiff prayed for a recovery of a sum of money paid to the mutawalli defendant No. 1 for granting a certain lease which he agreed to execute in favour of the plaintiff, but the mutawalli did not obtain the sanction of the Court. Therein, in the body of the judgment, it is observed that lease of the wakf property made for more than a year is impugned before a Court, it may be held valid on the doctrine of factum valet and on the principle that a Court should not disturb the agreement made in the ordinary course of management of an estate. Although these observations are in the nature of obiter dicta still they go to support the applicant's contention to some extent. In 52 Cal. 586 it is laid down that a mortgage made by a mutawalli without the previous sanction of the Court is not void, if made for a justifying necessity, and may be retrospectively confirmed by the Court. No doubt this is also a case of a mortgage but from an analogy it can be treated that the same rule is applicable to the lease also. Relying on these rulings, I hold that a mutawalli under the Mahomedan law has got power to grant a lease of the wakf property for a period of more than three years and one year for the benefit of the wakf property."

DIVATIA J. This is a second appeal in a suit by the plaintiff-appellant to recover possession of a piece of land and damages for occupation at certain rate. The plaintiff is the present mutawalli of the suit property and his case was that the suit land which was wakf property was given on a lease for fifty-one years by his predecessor, defendant No. 2, to defendant No. 1 on November 12, 1925, but that he had no power under the Mahomedan law to grant a lease for a long period. The lease being therefore void, he sued to recover the property from defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1's case was that the lease was validly passed by defendant No. 2 acting as mutawalli, that the transaction was for necessity as well as for the benefit to the wakf, that a mosque was erected with the money obtained by defendant No. 2 from him, and if permission of the Court was necessary to validate the transaction, such permission should be granted in this suit.

The main question, therefore, was whether the lease for a long period granted by the then mutawalli was valid. The trial Court was of the opinion that it was invalid because under the Mahomedan law he had no power to grant the lease of non-agricultural property for more than one year except with the previous sanction of the Court, and no such sanction had been obtained in the present case. On appeal, the Extra Assistant Judge reversed that decision and held that the mutawalli had the power to grant the lease as it was for the benefit of the wakf property and that such a lease could be validated by retrospective sanction of the District Court, and he thereby gave the sanction for the said lease.

The learned Judge held relying upon several authorities that the case of a lease for a long term was on the same footing as the case of a mortgage or a sale, that under the Mahomedan law it was competent to a mutawalli to mortgage or sell the wakf property with the sanction of the Court, and that even if such sanction was not obtained, the Court has the power to grant retrospective sanction if it was satisfied that the transaction was for the benefit of the institution. The same principle, according to the learned Judge, would apply to the case of a long term lease, and he therefore allowed the appeal. Hence this second appeal by the plaintiff.

The decisions about mortgage transactions lay down that a mortgage by a mutawalli for necessity or benefit is valid even if permission of the Court is obtained subsequent to the mortgage. The principal case on this point is Nimai Chand Addya v. Gokam Hossein<sup>1</sup>, and that case has been followed in Afzal Husain v. Chhedi Lal<sup>2</sup>. With regard to a long term lease, it has been held in In the matter of Woozatunnessa Bibee<sup>3</sup> that the Court has the power to grant permission for such lease. In that case permission was granted to a mutawalli to enter into a lease for a period of thirty years. That decision was followed in Habibar Rahaman v. Saidannessa Bibi<sup>4</sup>. It is true that both these cases were of antecedent sanction and not of retrospective

validation. The only question therefore is whether it is open to a Court to grant permission retrospectively in the case of a long term lease. I see no distinction in principle between antecedent and subsequent sanction in the case of a long term lease if a mortgage by a mutawalli can be validated by subsequent sanction as in the cases of Nimai Chand Addya v. Golam Hossein and Afzal Husain v. Chhedi Lal. The test in both cases is the same, viz., necessity or benefit to the institution.

It is, however, contended that even if the transaction could be subsequently validated by the Court, it is only the District Judge who could do it and not the Assistant Judge, because the power of a kazi who can, under the Mahomedan law, grant such permission, is being exercised now by the District Judge and not by any Judge subordinate to him in the District Court, and that in the present case the permission is given by the Assistant Judge and not by the District Judge. Reliance is placed for that proposition on the decision in Fakrunnessa Begum v. District Judge of 24-Parganas<sup>1</sup>. There no doubt it is said that the District Judge has power to grant such sanction. But on the other hand in the leading case of Nimai Chand Addya v. Golam Hossein it is observed as follows (p. 187):

".... we can see no reason why an approval by a Subordinate Judge of a transaction by which wakf property is mortgaged, provided he has jurisdiction over the wakf property, should not be quite as effectual as a sanction by a District Judge."

It has also been recently held by a special bench of the Calcutta High Court in Burhan Mirza v. Khodeja Bibi<sup>2</sup> that the civil Courts have taken the place of kazis under the Mahomedan law. I do not think there is, therefore, any substance in the contention that the District Judge alone enjoys the function of a kazi and that sanction must be granted by him.

In the present case defendant No. 1 expressly asked in his written statement for such permission if it was necessary and he repeated the same in his memorandum of appeal to the lower Court. The learned appellate Judge acceded to that prayer as he was of opinion that the transaction was beneficial to the institution, and I do not think that he has erred in doing so.

The decree of the lower Court is, therefore, confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs in favour of respondent No. 1.

KARSAN JESANG.*

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), Sec. 211—False charge—Institution of proceedings—Court—Giving of information to police does not amount to, such institution.

In order to bring a case within the second part of s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, criminal proceedings must be instituted in a Court on a false charge. The giving of information to the police of a cognizable offence does not amount to institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of the second part of the section; and if the case gets no further than a police inquiry, it falls within the first part of the section.

ON May 14, 1940, the accused, Karsan Jesang, charged Chatur Vaja and four others with an offence of dacoity punishable under s. 395 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, before the Police Sub-Inspector of Mehmedabad. The Sub-Inspector investigated the charge and found that it was false. He thereupon reported the case for B-summary, and it was granted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kaira.

On December 12, 1940, the Sub-Inspector lodged a complaint against the accused on a charge under s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, in the Court of the First Class Magistrate at Mehmedabad. The Magistrate convicted the accused of the offence charged, on February 11, 1941, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 25 under the first part of s. 211.

The District Magistrate of Kaira referred the case to the High Court for an order setting aside the conviction and sentence and directing retrial of the accused before a Court of Session, observing as follows:—

"It has been held by the Calcutta, Madras and Patna High Courts that making of a false charge to the Police of a cognizable offence is the institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211, Indian Penal Code, and if the false charge is in respect of an offence punishable with death, transportation for life or imprisonment for seven years or upwards, it falls under the second part of s. 211, Indian Penal Code. The offence charged falsely by the accused in this case is dacoity which is punishable with transportation for life, and in view of the above rulings of the High Courts, it falls under the second part of s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, which is triable by a Court of Session only. The First Class Magistrate of Mehmedabad has tried the case without jurisdiction, and his proceedings are therefore null and void under s. 530 (p), Criminal Procedure Code. Again, the sentence of fine only awarded by him to the accused is illegal."

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a reference made by the District Magistrate of Kaira asking us to set aside the conviction of the accused under s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code by the First Class Magistrate of Mehmedabad, on the ground that the case was only triable by a Court of Session.

It appears that the accused made a false charge to the police that certain persons had been guilty of dacoity. The police inquired into the matter, and came to the conclusion that the charge was false, and they, therefore, obtained "B" summary, and the present accused was then prosecuted under s. 211. Now, that section is divided into two parts : the first part provides that whoever, with the intent specified, institutes or causes to be instituted any criminal proceeding against a person, or falsely charges any person with having committed an offence, shall be punished, as therein mentioned. That part of the section, it will be noted, refers both to instituting criminal proceedings and to making a false charge. Then the second part provides that if such criminal proceeding be instituted on a false charge of an offence punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years or upwards, the offence shall be punishable more heavily. That part refers only to criminal proceedings instituted on a false charge. Now, under s. 395 of the Indian Penal Code dacoity is punishable with transportation for life, or imprisonment up to ten years. Therefore, it is said that this case falls within the second part of s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code. Under the Second Schedule to the Criminal Procedure Code, on a prosecution under s. 211, if the offence charged be punishable with transportation for life, the case is triable only by a Court of Session ; so that, if the learned District Magistrate is right in thinking that the case falls under the second part of s. 211, it is undoubtedly triable only by the Court of Session, and the First Class Magistrate had no jurisdiction. But, in my opinion, in order to bring the case within the second part of s. 211, criminal proceedings must be instituted in a Court on a false charge. No doubt the criminal law may be set in motion by giving information to the police of a cognizable offence ; but unless proceedings are instituted in a Court of law, it is not in my opinion correct to say that criminal proceedings have been instituted.

There has been a conflict of authority on this point in India. In Karim Buksh v. Queen-Empress<sup>1</sup> a full bench held that even if a false charge was made of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life, and the matter got no further than a police inquiry, nevertheless it fell within the second part of s. 211, because inducing the police to institute the inquiry was instituting criminal proceedings. On the other hand, in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshkar<sup>2</sup> it was held that where the offence committed did not go further than the making of a false charge to the police, that did not amount to the institution of criminal proceedings, and the case therefore fell within the first part of s. 211. I prefer the view of the Allahabad High Court to that of the High Court of Calcutta.

It would, I think, be very inconvenient, and not in accordance with what

A. Cr. J. one would have expected the framers of the Criminal Procedure Code to con-1941 template, that a mere charge, however serious, which gets no further than a — police inquiry, should give rise to a case triable only by a Court of Session. If EMPEROR the matter gets into Court, and a man is put on his trial on a false charge,
 v. that is a much more serious matter. In my opinion if the case gets no further KARSAN than a police inquiry, it falls within the first part of s. 211 of the Indian Penal JESANG Code, and, therefore, the First Class Magistrate of Mehmedabad had jurisdic— tion to try this case.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 58, 90 ; secs. 47, 146—Execution—Property assigned by judgment-debtor—Attachment of property in execution of decree obtained subsequent to assignment—Application by assignee under r. 58—Assignee undertaking under compromise petition to pay decretal amount by instalments—Sale of property in execution for non-payment—Application by assignee under r. 90 to set aside sale—Whether such application competent—Procedure in execution.

A, being in debt, assigned his immovables to his brother, B, in 1923, by a deed, reserving only a maintenance allowance to himself. In 1928 an execution application was made in respect of a money decree passed in 1926 in favour of C against A. B was added to the application as a "judgment-debtor" although no judgment had ever been obtained by C against him. Part of the estate having been attached in execution of C's decree, B applied for releasing the properties from attachment both under O. XXI, r. 58 and s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, on the ground that he was no party to the decree and that there was no charge on the attached properties for the decretal debt. The trial Judge held that B was a representative of A within the meaning of s. 47 of the Code, and that by virtue of s. 146 the decree could be executed against him as representing A. He eventually dismissed both the applications. However, on the day of the Judge's order a compromise petition was filed in the Court, by which B undertook to pay C the sum due by way of an immediate cash payment and the balance by fixed annual instalments. The instalments not having been paid as agreed, C applied for execution, B again being cited as judgment-debtor. Part of the estate was again attached and then sold. A month after the sale B applied under O. XXI, r. 90, of the Civil Procedure

Code, to have the sale set aside, alleging irregularities as to notice in connection with the sale. The trial Judge held that the sale was without jurisdiction because the compromise deed was unenforceable in execution against B in the absence of any decree against him. The High Court on appeal confirmed the sale and held that the trial Judge's decision in the first execution application that B was a representative of A, the judgment-debtor, concluded the case against B on the principle of res judicata. On appeal to the Privy Council :—

Held, confirming the sale, that the application of B under O. XXI, r. 90, of the Civil Procedure Code, was misconceived, since an application based on the allegation that the properties had been wrongfully sold in execution must be made under O. XXI, r. 58, of the Code, and not under O. XXI, r. 90, of the Code, which was concerned with irregularities in publishing or conducting the sale.

Quære. Whether an application under O. XXI, r. 58, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, made one month after the sale would be in time.

THE facts are fully stated in the judgment of the Board.

C. Sidney Smith, for the appellant.

No appearance for the respondents.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN. The appellant is the legal representative of one Madhusudan Singh, deceased. The appeal, which is brought in forma pauperis, arises out of proceedings to enforce a money decree dated March 23, 1926, obtained against Madhusudan's brother Shyam Lal by one Soshi Bhusan in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Jamtara in the Sontal Parganas. The execution case which has given rise to this appeal was brought in the same Court on September 15, 1930, by respondents Nos. 1 and 2 who had in 1929 purchased the rights of Soshi Bhusan in the decree. It is numbered Money Execution Case No. 14 of 1930. It was the second case brought to enforce the judgment of 1926, the first (Money Execution Case No. 12 of 1928) having been brought in the same Court by the original decree-holder Soshi Bhusan on May 22, 1928. The main question raised before the Board is as to the effect to be given in the second case to certain orders passed against Madhusudan in the first.

Shyam Lal was the owner of an impartible estate known as the Jamtara estate and, being involved in debt, he assigned his immovables to Madhusudan by deed dated January 10, 1923, reserving only a maintenance allowance to himself.

The deed recited Shyam Lal's indebtedness and that he was ill and made it clear enough that the purpose of the assignment was to enable the debts to be paid off by proper management of the estate. Shyam Lal having failed to give Madhusudan possession according to the deed, Madhusudan in 1924 sued Shyam Lal in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Asansol to enforce the deed. This suit was compromised in 1927. By the compromise decree dated March 17, 1927, Madhusudan was declared to be the owner of the estate and a receiver was appointed to manage it, Shyam Lal being declared entitled to a monthly maintenance allowance. Madhusudan got himself recorded as proprietor. A considerable fortification was thus erected against any attack by Shyam Lal's creditors upon the Jamtara properties. Though the exact position of Madhusudan in relation to his brother is not quite clear, their Lordships will not assume that he was a mere agent trustee or benamidar.

Sir George

When the first execution application was made on March 22, 1928, the names of Madhusudan and the receiver were added thereto as "judgment-debtors", though it does not appear from anything on the record submitted to the Board that Soshi Bhusan had at any time obtained judgment against Madhusudan. Certain portions of the Jamtara estate having been attached in execution, Madhusudan on September 18, 1928, applied under r. 58 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code that they be released from attachment. Not content, however, with this step he followed it up on October 8, 1928, with an application to the like effect made under s. 47 of the Code. In both proceedings his objections were that he was not a party to the decree and that there was no charge upon the Jamtara estate for the decretal debt of Shyam Lal. The learned Subordinate Judge having correctly observed that the two applications were inconsistent—the first being upon the footing that Madhusudan was a stranger to the suit in which the decree had been passed and the second on the footing that he was a "representative" of the judgment-debtor—dismissed both of them. By his order dated November 29, 1928, he held that Madhusudan was a "representative" of Shyam Lal within the meaning of s. 47 of the Code and that by virtue of s. 146 the decree could be executed against him and against the receiver as representing him. The terms of s. 146 are as follows :—

"Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him."

Whether as a result of this decision or in anticipation of it or independently of it, a compromise petition was on the same day (November 29, 1928) filed in Court with the result that on the next day (November 30) the sale which had been fixed for that day was not held. Madhusudan was a party to the compromise as one of "the judgment-debtors". The terms of compromise were that Soshi Bhusan received Rs. 3,000 in cash and agreed to take the balance in annual instalments of Rs. 1,393-12-3. There was a further provision :—

"If any third person as decree-holder executes his decree, then this decree-holder will be competent to execute his decree without waiting for payment of instalment and will be able to arrange for realisation of the entire amount due from the estate. To that the judgment-debtors will not have the right to raise any objection."

On November 30, an order on this petition was made : "Case struck out partly satisfied on the joint petition of the decree-holder and the three judgment-debtors." The attachment of the Jamtara estate properties thus came to an end.

The balance of the debt was not paid as agreed and respondents Nos. 1 and 2 having bought the decree, applied for the execution on September 15, 1930. Madhusudan and the receiver were again cited as judgment-debtors in addition to Shyam Lal. Properties of the Jamtara estate were again attached and were sold on June 6, 1931. Madhusudan took no steps in the meanwhile, but on July 6, 1931, he applied to have the sale set aside under r. 90 of O. XXI of the Code which provides that at the instance of any person whose interests are affected by the sale such an order may be made "on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting" the sale. He set out in his application eleven grounds of which the first nine alleged various irregularities as to notice and otherwise in connection with the sale. As his tenth and eleventh grounds he said that the sale was without jurisdiction and was in any view of the case liable to be set aside. After hearing a number of witnesses, the learned Subordinate Judge by his order of November 12, 1932, held that Madhusudan's case failed on the facts as regards all the irregularities alleged and this finding is not now disputed. He further held, however, that the sale should be set aside on the question of jurisdiction. He rejected the view that Madhusudan was the "representative" of Shyam Lal, and he did not consider that the compromise which had ended the previous execution case could be enforced in execution against Madhusudan without any decree against him having been obtained.

The High Court at Patna by the order of April 14, 1936, which is now under appeal, have reversed this decision. The learned Judges (Wort A. C. J., and Dhavle J.) do not appear to have proceeded upon the ground that a third party objecting to the sale of his property for the judgment debt of another person cannot disregard r. 58 of O. XXI and apply after the sale under r. 90 of that Order treating the case as one of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale. They held that in the previous case the Subordinate Judge had decided that Madhusudan was the representative of the judgment-debtor, and though one if not both of the learned Judges considered this decision to be wrong, they held that the case before them was concluded by that decision on the principle of res judicata.

Their Lordships have not had the advantage of hearing any argument on the part of the respondents to this appeal, no appearance having been made on their behalf. They are somewhat unwilling in the circumstances to go beyond what is required for the proper disposal of the appeal in discussing the technical details of procedure in execution. It appears to them, however, that Madhusudan on his own case ought in the later execution proceeding as in the earlier to have made a claim under r. 58 of O. XXI if he desired to take up the attitude of a third party whose property was being wrongfully taken for another's debt. To treat this objection to the sale as a matter of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale was not open to him, and the application under r. 90 was altogether misconceived. The only way in which any order in his favour could have been rendered competent, assuming his own case to be well founded, was by treating his application as one under r. 58. While their Lordships appreciate the force of the observation made by Dhavle J. with reference to the first execution case, that "too much importance ought not to be attached to the particular labels attached to his applications", they cannot think it right to hold that the Court should have allowed any such indulgence to Madhusudan having regard in particular to the compromise petition whereby he plainly undertook that the decretal sum should be paid and that the properties now in question should be answerable for it in his hands. It is not clear that on July 6, 1931, a month after the sale, an application under r. 58 would have been in time. Different opinions appear to have been expressed by High Courts in India upon the question. He had, moreover, called a number of witnesses as to the publication and conduct of the sale—an inquiry which was futile on the footing that the property was not liable to be sold. He does not appear to have made any application to the High Court for leave to make a case under r. 58. But whether or not by taking appropriate steps he could have succeeded in defeating the promises made by him in the compromise petition, he was not, in their Lordships' opinion, entitled to the assistance of the Court in that behalf, and the order of the High Court confirming the sale must be maintained.

Their Lordships are not to be taken as accepting the view that Madhusudan was a "representative" of the judgment-debtor, or indeed that any person bringing under r. 58 a claim to attached property as property to which he is entitled as against the judgment-debtor can be refused the benefit of the procedure laid down for investigation of claims or the right to question the summary decision by a suit. Nor do their Lordships profess to have ascertained what bearing s. 146 of the Code has upon such a case as the present or how it comes to be considered that the property of a "representative" of a living person against whom a money decree has been passed is answerable for the decretal debt. Further, assuming that Madhusudan in the first execution case was wrongly held to be his brother's "representative" within the meaning of s. 47, their Lordships see difficulty in the view that such a decision on a question of procedure gave the decree-holder a vested right to the misapplication of the Code in all future execution cases between the parties in respect of the same decree. Upon these and other matters their Lordships would have desired to hear argument for the respondents and they make every reserve as to the correctness of the views expressed in the Indian Courts upon these questions and other questions involved therewith.

They will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed.

SANCTION to prosecute.

One Sattyawa was found murdered in her house on the night of April 16, 1940. She was the wife of one Rayappa, but was the mistress of one Khushalsing. Her mother Laxmavva, when informed of the murder, went to her daughter's house, saw her dead body, and immediately went to the house of Khushalsing and told him that her daughter was murdered on his account. That very night Rayappa was found murdered on the outskirts of the village.

Khushalsing was charged with the murder of Rayappa.

During the course of investigation by the police into the case, Laxmavva and two others, Ningappa and Rajesab, were examined. Ningappa made a statement, which was thus recorded under s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Exh. 13):—

"On last Tuesday at night (16-4-1940) myself, Rajesab Hasansab and Khushalsing together slept on the upper storey of Khushalsing. At about four hours to sunrise the mother of Sattyawa came there and called out Khushalsing and told him to come as there was some work. They then went away together and immediately Khushalsing returned and told us to get up as Rayappa had murdered his wife. We got up and we three went to the house of Sattyawa and found her dead. Her left side of the head was injured with stone and it was broken. Then Laxmavva, the mother of Sattyawa, began to abuse Khushalsing saying that her daughter was killed on his account. Then Khushalsing requested to search for Rayappa. We three then went out in search of Rayappa. Khushali was ahead of us. We went out of the village site and saw a man sitting underneath a nim tree who began to run away as soon as he saw us. Khushali chased him and we too both followed him. Khushali caught hold of him under nalla and we too both caught hold of him. I caught one of his hands and Rajesab caught hold of his other hand, and we both began to drag him to the village. Khushalsing beat Rayappa four or five times on his back with a stone. We told him not to beat him and we could take him to the house of the patil, and see what could take place. He at once caught hold of his testicles and made him to fall down. Rayappa began to cry 'testicles, testicles'. We then advised Khushalsing not to press his testicles and we could take him to the house of the patil. We seeing that Rayappa was dead returned to the village. Khushalsing seeing Rayappa dead tied Rayappa's turban to his neck."

In the course of inquiry before the committing Magistrate, Ningappa was examined as a witness, when he gave a different version altogether and deposed as follows:—

"That day at night I had slept in my own house. I had heard in the village that they both were murdered. I do not know anything about their death.

A. Cr. J. "My statement has been recorded before the Magistrate under s. 164, Criminal 1941 Procedure Code. I have stated before the Magistrate that myself, Rajesab and — accused has slept on the upper storey of the accused that night. I have also stated EMPEROR that Satyawa's mother came to us and awoke us and told us that Satyawa had been & murdered. I have heard my statement recorded under s. 164, Criminal Procedure NINGAPPA Code, as stated therein. It is not true that I had held one of the hands of Rayappa RAMAPPA The statement recorded under s. 164, Criminal Procedure Code, is false. It is not — a true statement."

Khushalsing was committed to the Court of Session to take his trial. At the trial, Ningappa again resiled from his first statement and stated as follows :—

"I knew Rayappa son-in-law of Laxmi. He is dead. He was killed in the early hours of Wednesday. I was at home that night and after daybreak I heard people saying that he was killed. I did not come to know where, how and by whom. I went to see his body at two hours after sunrise . . . . That night, i.e. Tuesday night I had not met Laxmi. I was sleeping in my house that night.

"The contents of Exh. 13 are not true. Exhibit 13 was read over to me and I put my thumb mark on it as correct. I made that false statement because the Police Sub-Inspector and the patil beat me asking me to depose as contained in Exh. 13.. It is not true that the accused squeezed the scrotum of Rayappa in my presence and killed him. It is not true that Raju the accused and I together went in search of Rayappa."

Rajesab also made a similar statement under s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and similarly retracted it both before the committing Magistrate and at the trial before the Sessions Court.

Laxmavva too made at first a statement under s. 164, from which she resiled before the committing Magistrate and at the trial.

The case against Khushalsing was accordingly withdrawn on December 2, 1940.

The Public Prosecutor of Belgaum then applied to the Court that complaint be ordered to be filed against Laxmavva, Ningappa and Rajesab for perjury.

The Additional Sessions Judge took no proceedings against Laxmavva, and being of opinion that it was expedient in the interests of justice that there should be an enquiry into the perjury committed by Ningappa and Rajesab ordered "that a complaint be made to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class, Belgaum City, against them," observing as follows :—

"As regards the other two witnesses, according to their statements under s. 164, they were eye-witnesses to the murder of the son-in-law of Laxmavva committed by the accused. In the committal Court and in this Court they resiled from their statements under s. 164. They now urge that their former statements were false and that they made false statements because the police pressed them to do so. It is not my province to inquire at this stage whether the statements made under s. 164 were under pressure. It is true that the existence of s. 164 has been recently commented upon by the highest tribunal of this Province. Even then so long as the section is there and requires a witness to tell the truth, I think that if he makes a false statement even when examined under s. 164 he would be guilty of perjury though he may be treated leniently, as held in Emperor v. Sultanasha Sidisha (42 Bom. L. R. 745). The object of enacting s. 164 is to make the witnesses not to resile from the statements they make in the early stages of investigation. If Ningappa and Rajesab had not made the statement that they saw the accused killing the son-in-law of Laxmavva the accused would not have been charged with murder of Laxmavva's son-in-law, and the accused would not have been committed to the Court of Session. By making the statements complained against the two witnesses have wasted public time and money also. It is necessary that such a thing should be discouraged."

Ningappa and Rajesab applied to the High Court against the order.

H. B. Gumaste, for the appellants.

R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an appeal against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Belgaum directing under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, the prosecution of the applicants for an offence of giving false evidence punishable under s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code.

The case, to my mind, raises an important question as to the principles on which the Court should sanction a prosecution in cases of this kind. Under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Court must be satisfied that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in s. 195, which includes offences under s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code; so that we have to be satisfied that it is expedient in the interests of justice that there should be a prosecution.

The facts are that the applicants made a statement before the Magistrate under s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, alleging, in some detail, that they had witnessed the murder of a man named Rayappa. The alleged murderer was subsequently prosecuted, but at the inquiry before the committing Magistrate the applicants resiled from their statements, and said that in point of fact they had seen nothing, and that the statements which they had made under s. 164 were untrue. In the result the prosecution was abandoned in the Sessions Court.

Section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides, so far as material, that any Magistrate as therein defined may record any statement or confession made to him in the course of an investigation under the Chapter or at any time afterwards before the commencement of the inquiry or trial, and it is provided that he may record such statements on oath, and in practice such statements are recorded on oath. The section is extensively used for recording confessions, but it is also in some cases used by the police to pin down a witness to the statement which he has made in the course of the inquiry, the object being to prevent a witness from resiling from his statement. Sometimes, for example, where the witness is a near relative of the accused, there may be some advantage in adopting that course, but, it has to be observed that, although it may be desirable to prevent a witness from resiling from a statement which is true, it is very undesirable to prevent him from resiling from a statement which is untrue.

In the present case it is no doubt true to say that either the statement made before the Magistrate under s. 164, or the statement made in the committing Magistrate's Court, was false, the two statements being contradictory. A full bench of this Court in Emperor v. Purshottam Ishwar<sup>1</sup> held that in such a case the statement under s. 164 and the subsequent evidence in Court constituted a series of acts within the meaning of s. 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that consequently it was legitimate to frame a charge in the alternative, a charge of perjury committed either before the Magistrate taking a statement under s. 164 or subsequently in Court, and to record an alternative conviction. The Court in that case consisted of five Judges, one of whom, Mr. Justice Shah, dissented from that proposition. The authority of the case may be open to question, since there had been a previous decision of a full bench of this Court of four Judges in Queen-Empress v. Mugappa bin Ningappa, which had reached a different conclusion. Apparently it was considered that five Judges, by a majority of four to one, could overrule a unanimous decision of four Judges, the net result being that the opinion of four Judges prevailed over the opinion of five Judges of co-ordinate jurisdiction. There seems to be very little authority on the powers and constitution of a full bench. There can be no doubt that a full bench can overrule a division bench, and that a full bench must consist of three or more Judges; but it would seem anomalous to hold that a later full bench can overrule an earlier full bench, merely because the later bench consists of more Judges than the earlier. If that were the rule, it would mean that a bench of seven Judges, by a majority of four to three, could overrule a unanimous decision of a bench of six Judges, though all the Judges were of co-ordinate jurisdiction. In Enattullah v. Kowsher Ali Sanderson C. J., stating the practice in Calcutta, seems to have been of opinion that a decision of a full bench could only be reversed by the Privy Council or by a bench specially constituted by the Chief Justice. Even if this be the true rule, there is nothing to show that the Chief Justice acted upon it in Emperor v. Purshottam Ishwar (supra). I do not recollect myself ever to have constituted a special bench to consider the ruling of a full bench, though I have constituted many full benches to consider rulings of division benches. However, I need not pursue this subject further, since, for the purpose of the present appeal, I am prepared to assume that an alternative charge of perjury lies, and that it was a charge of that nature which the learned Additional Sessions Judge contemplated. The question then is whether it is expedient in the interests of justice that such a charge should be made.

Now, to my mind, in determining that question it is absolutely essential that the Court should make up its mind whether it was the statement before the Magistrate under s. 164, or the statement subsequently made in Court, which was false. I gather from the judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge that he is disposed to think that it was the statement made under s. 164 which was false; but there is really no evidence to enable us to determine which of the two statements was false. If the statement in Court was false, then I agree that in the interests of justice there should be a prosecution; but supposing it was the statement under s. 164 which was false, what then? No doubt, a man making a statement on oath before a Magistrate under s. 164 should speak the truth; but if he does not, the least he can do is to tell the truth when subsequently he goes into the witness-box. To prosecute a man who has resiled from a false statement made under s. 164 is to encourage him in the belief that it pays to tell a lie and stick to it. It is far better that a man should escape punishment for having made a false statement under s. 164 than that he should be induced to believe that it is to his interest, however false the statement may have been, to adhere to it, and thereby save himself from prosecution. The danger of such a course leading to the conviction of innocent persons is too great to be risked. The learned Government Pleader contends that if a prosecution is not sanctioned in a case of this kind, the practice of taking statements under s. 164 may as well be abandoned. If that result follows, I am by no means satisfied that it will be a bad thing.

Beaumont C.J.

I observe that the view I take was taken by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, when he was Chief Justice of Calcutta, in Emperor v. Tripura Shankar Sarkar<sup>1</sup>. He says (p. 622):

"This, then, is how matters stand. The Court is convinced that of the contradictory statements now under consideration those made in this Court were true, but those before the Magistrate were false; and on a careful consideration of the events leading up to the examination before the committing Magistrate, and of the conditions under which that examination was conducted, we are clearly of opinion that the sanction sought should not be given. Had Tripura repeated here the false story he told before the Magistrate, no such application as the present would have been made: is it to be granted because he had told the truth here? Certainly not."

In my opinion, that reasoning applies, not only when the Court is satisfied that it is the earlier statement, which is false, but also when the Court is not satisfied to the contrary. As I am not satisfied in this case that it was the statement made before the committing Magistrate which was false, I am of opinion that it is not expedient in the interests of justice that there should be a prosecution.

The appeal, therefore, will be allowed.

"Possession" of salt—Liability of servant removing contraband salt on behalf of master.

Section 47, sub-s. (c), of the Bombay Salt Act, 1890, deals with possession of contraband salt, and makes knowledge or belief that it is contraband salt necessary to constitute an offence. Under sub-s. (a) to the section, however, it is an offence merely to manufacture, remove or transport salt, not merely contraband salt. The words "removal" and "transportation" in the sub-section are used interchangeably. The word "removal" is not confined to salt removed from the salt-works of Government under s. 28 of the Act.

The effect of s. 3(e) of the Act, defining the terms "possession" and "removal", is to provide that where it is proved that the person in possession or removing salt is a servant or agent, then the possession or removal shall be deemed to be that of the master or principal, to the exclusion of liability of the servant or agent.

Hence, where the accused, a cart-driver, is employed by another person to convey contraband salt from a customs-station, he is not liable to be punished either under s. 38(1)(a) or s. 47(a) of the Bombay Salt Act, 1890.

TRANSPORT of contraband salt.

Laxman (accused No. 1) was a cartman. He was engaged by Mhalappa (accused No. 2) to convey in his cart five bags containing over eight maunds of contraband salt from Ankola without pass or permit on April 25, 1940. The salt was loaded in the cart in front of accused No. 2's house, but before the cart could proceed some distance, it was attached and the accused were arrested by Customs authorities.

The two accused were charged with contravening s. 38(1) of the Bombay Salt Act, 1890, by transporting salt and by possessing contraband salt knowing or having reason to believe the same to be contraband salt, the two offences being punishable under cls. (a) and (c) of s. 47 of the Act.

The trying Magistrate convicted and sentenced accused No. 2 of the offences charged, but acquitted accused No. 1, for the following reasons:—

"A cartman hired for transporting goods is no doubt an agent if not a servant. Hence, cl. (e) of s. 3 of the Bombay Salt Act, 1890, means that the possession of salt held by a cartman like accused No. 1 should be taken to be not possession by the cartman or agent on his own account but to be possession by the person (accused No. 2) on whose account the agent like a cartman had got possession. This applies to 'removal' also .... Hence under s. 3(e) it must be held that accused No. 1 was not in possession of that salt, as such a possession is simply a custody of the salt, the real person in possession of the salt being the owner or transporter, accused No. 2.

"The question to be decided under s. 47(c) is whether accused No. 1 'knew or had reason to believe' that the salt in question was contraband salt within the meaning of s. 3(m)(B) ... I hold that the prosecution has not proved beyond all reasonable doubt that accused No. 1 did possess the said knowledge or belief ... accused No. 1 therefore had neither the possession of the salt on his own account as defined

(b) excavates, collects or removes natural salt, or salt-earth; and whoever,

cuse, retains contraband salt, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be contraband salt; shall for every such offence be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with both.

in s. 3(o) nor had he the necessary knowledge nor belief required by cl. (c) of s. 47. Hence the grounds for holding that accused No. 1 is not guilty under s. 47(c) are true."

The Government of Bombay appealed against the order of acquittal.

R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the Government of the Province of Bombay.

S. R. Joshi, (appointed), for the accused.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an appeal by Government against the acquittal of accused No. 1 who was charged with offences under ss. 38 (1) and 47(a) and (c) of the Bombay Salt Act, 1890. The appeal does not relate to the acquittal under s. 47(c), but only relates to the acquittal under ss. 38(1) and 47(a).

The facts are not in dispute. Accused No. 2 hired a cart belonging to accused No. 1 to convey contraband salt from Ankola, which is a customs-station within s. 36(b) of the Bombay Salt Act of 1890, and the cart was attached by the police within ten miles of Ankola, and the two accused were prosecuted. Accused No. 2 was convicted, but we are not concerned with his case; we are only concerned with the acquittal of accused No. 1.

Section 38(1) of the Act provides that no person shall, within the limits described in s. 36, transport or possess salt exceeding one maund in weight, except in the cases mentioned. It is not disputed that the salt was here being transported within the limits described in s. 36, and that the exceptions do not apply. Then s. 47 provides:—

"Whoever, in contravention of this Act, or of any rule or order made under this Act, or of any license or permit obtained under this Act,— and then sub-s. (c) is in these terms:—

"(a) manufactures, removes or transports salt ;"

"(c) except in the exercise of some power or the discharge of some duty conferred or imposed upon him under this Act or any other enactment at the time in force, receives or is in possession of or, without lawful excuse, retains contraband salt, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be contraband salt."

So that, sub-s. (c) deals with possession of contraband salt, and makes knowledge or belief that it is contraband salt necessary to constitute an offence. But under s. 47(a) it is an offence merely to manufacture, remove or transport salt, not merely contraband salt. We have to deal here with a case of removal or transportation of salt, and it is irrelevant that it was contraband.

Section 47 uses two words "removes or transports salt", whilst s. 38(1) in the operative part uses only the word "transport", but in exception (a) it excepts salt which is being removed under a permit. I agree with the learned Magistrate that the two words "removal" and "transportation" are used interchangeably. There is no justification for the argument of Government that "removal" refers only to salt removed from the salt-works of Government under s. 28, because the word is used also in s. 11 otherwise than in connection with removal from salt-works. The importance of determining the exact sense in which the words "removal" and "transportation" are used lies in the fact that "removal" is defined in s. 3(o); and if transportation has the same meaning, the definition must extend to that word also. Section 3(o) provides:—

It is argued by the learned Government Pleader that all that that section does is to impose vicarious liability upon the master or principal without destroying, or in any way affecting, the direct liability of the servant or agent who is actually in possession of, or removes, salt. But, in my opinion, the learned Magistrate was right in holding that the section goes beyond that. The section does not provide that possession or removal by a servant or agent shall include possession or removal by a master or principal. It says that it shall be deemed to be possession or removal by the master or principal. In my opinion, the effect of that is to provide that where it is proved that the person in possession of or removing salt is a servant or agent, then the possession or removal shall be deemed to be that of the master or principal, to the exclusion of liability of the servant or agent. Here it is not disputed that accused No. 1 was a mere servant, and the charge against him of removing or transporting salt in my opinion must fail.

The decision of the learned Magistrate was right, and the appeal fails.

Defence of India Rules, r. 90 B †—Defence of India Act (XXXV of 1939), Sec. 3—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Sec. 517—"Order," meaning of—Search of traveller—Money found on his person—Disposal of such money—Conviction of traveller.

* Criminal Appeal No. 246 of 1941, from conviction and sentence recorded by Oscar H. Brown, Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

90B. Restriction on export of money and gold.—(1) In this rule "money" means any coin (other than a gold coin) or currency note which is legal tender in British India or elsewhere, and includes bills of exchange; and 'gold' in the form of coin, whether legal tender or not, or bullion or ingot, whether refined or not.

(2) No person shall, except with the permission of the Reserve Bank of India or of a person authorised in this behalf by the said Bank, take or send out of British India to a place or country outside India and Burma money or gold in excess of such amount as may be specified in this behalf by the said Bank.

(3) Any person who on any occasion is about to leave British India for a place outside India and Burma (which person is hereafter in this rule referred to as 'the traveller') shall, if on that occasion he is ordered so to do by the Officer of Customs,

(a) declare with full details the money and gold he has with him, and

(b) produce for the inspection of the officer the money and gold, and the permission, if any, granted in pur-

§ The Reserve Bank of India has specified such sum to be Rs. 1,000.

The accused, a date merchant and an inhabitant of Kuwait, a port in the Persian Gulf, sold dates in Aden, for which he got a draft on a bank in Bombay for Rs. 8,956. He came to Bombay and cashed the draft. While boarding a steamer bound for the Persian Gulf but which was to stay for a day at Karachi, the accused, who did not know English or any Indian language, was searched by a Preventive Officer and a sum of Rs. 8,900 in currency notes was found on his person. On these facts the accused was charged and convicted under r. 90B(?) of the Defence of India Rules, 1939, for contravening the provisions of r. 90B(3)(a) and the Magistrate on conviction ordered the sum of Rs. 8,900 "to be confiscated and held subject to the orders of the Government of India". On appeal:—

Held, (1) that the conviction of the accused was improper, for it was a condition precedent to liability under sub-r. (3)(a) of r. 90B, that the Officer of Customs should "order" a traveller to declare with full details the money and gold which he had with him, and there was no evidence of such a request, much less of an order;

(2) that the Customs Officer was entitled only to seize the currency notes in excess of Rs. 1,000, which amount, under the order made by the Reserve Bank of India under sub-r. (2) of r. 90B, the accused could take or send out of British India;

(3) that as by virtue of s. 3 of the Defence of India Act, 1939, r. 90B(6) prevailed over s. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, the balance of the money, viz., Rs. 7,900, was properly seized by the customs authority and under that sub-rule became subject to the orders of the Government of India; and that that sum never became subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, either of the trying Magistrate or of the High Court on appeal, to make any order as to the disposal of that sum.

THE accused, an inhabitant of Kuwait, a port in the Persian Gulf, and a dealer in dates, sold dates in Aden, for which he obtained a draft for Rs. 8,956 in pursuance of sub-rule (2).

(4) Any Officer of Customs, any person acting under the directions of such officer, may—

(a) examine or search any article which the traveller has with him, for the purpose of ascertaining whether he is conveying or has in his possession any money or gold in contravention of the provisions of this rule;

(b) if he has reasonable ground for suspecting that the traveller has about his person any money or gold which he has not produced for inspection, search the person of the traveller,

(c) seize any money or gold produced for inspection under sub-r. (3) or found upon examination or search under this sub-rule, being money which the traveller has in his possession in contravention of the provisions of this rule;

Provided that no female shall be searched in pursuance of the provisions of this sub-rule, except by a female.

(5) If, upon his being ordered to make a declaration or to produce any money or gold under the provisions of sub-r. (3) any person knowingly makes a declaration which is false or not true or fails to produce the money or gold, he shall be deemed to have contravened the provisions of this sub-rule.

(6) Any money or gold seized in pursuance of the provisions of this rule shall be disposed of in such manner as the Central Government may by general or special order direct.

(7) If any person contravenes any of the provisions of this rule, he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years or with fine or with both.

on a bank in Bombay. He came to Bombay with the draft and cashed it.

On March 3, 1941, the accused booked his passage on a steamer which was bound for the Persian Gulf but which was to stay at Karachi for a day. He was, while boarding the steamer, searched by a Preventive Officer, and a sum of Rs. 8,900 in currency notes was found on his person.

The charge framed against the accused before the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay was as follows :—

“That you on or about the third day of March 1941 at Bombay being a passenger for Kuwait, a port in the Persian Gulf, did fail to declare with full details the money you had in your possession when asked by Customs Officer under r. 90B(3)(a) of the Defence of India Rules and on being searched under r. 90B(4)(a) of the said rules you were found in possession of Rs. 8,900 in Government currency notes in contravention of the Notification issued by the Reserve Bank of India in exercise of the powers given under sub-r. (2) of r. 90B of the said rules and you thereby committed an offence punishable under r. 90B(7) of the said Defence of India Rules framed under s. 2 of the Defence of India Act XXXV of 1939....”

The Magistrate convicted the accused of the offence charged, sentenced him to undergo simple imprisonment for one day, and imposed a fine of Rs. 250. He also ordered “the sum of Rs. 8,900 to be confiscated and to be held subject to the orders of the Government of India,” for the following reasons :—

“It is true that the boat was to touch Karachi on its way to the Persian Gulf. However this does not exonerate the accused from the offence under the Defence of India Rules. He was clearly taking money out of Bombay and his reason does not appear to be a sufficient ground. A further point has been taken that the accused should have declared this money on his person when asked by the Customs Officer whether he had money on him but he did not understand English or any local vernacular. The Officer is however quite emphatic in saying that the accused understood him perfectly inasmuch as he made a gesture by rubbing the thumb and the first finger of his right hand which the accused immediately understood and took out his purse containing Rs. 13. He however failed to produce Rs. 8,900 which he had concealed.”

The accused appealed to the High Court.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an appeal by the accused against his conviction by the Chief Presidency Magistrate under r. 90B(7) of the Defence of India Rules, 1939, framed under the Defence of India Act, 1939.

The facts giving rise to the prosecution are that the accused landed in Bombay in February, 1941, from Aden, where he had sold a quantity of dates for a sum of Rs. 8,956, for which he had a draft on a Bombay bank, which in due course he cashed. On March 3 he was proposing to leave Bombay by a ship bound for the Persian Gulf, but which was to stay for a day in Karachi, and he had on him Rs. 8,900 in Government currency notes, being part of the money which he had received in respect of the bank draft. The accused's case is that he is an inhabitant of Kuwait, which is either in Persia or in Arabia, the evidence does not show which, and he says that the only language he understands is Persian. When he was going on board the ship, he was searched by the Preventive Officer, and this sum of Rs. 8,900 in currency notes was found on his person, and was seized by the Preventive Officer. He was prosecuted before the Chief Presidency Magistrate in that he failed to declare with full details his possession of the currency notes when asked by the Customs Officer under r. 90B(3) (a) of the Defence of India Rules.

Now, r. 90B(1) of the Defence of India Rules defines "money" as including currency notes which are legal tender in British India or elsewhere; and sub-r. (2) provides that no person shall, except with the permission of the Reserve Bank of India, take or send out of British India to a place or country outside India and Burma money in excess of such amount as may be specified in that behalf by the said bank. It is admitted that the bank has specified Rs. 1,000 as the amount which may be taken. Then sub-r. (3) provides :

"Any person who on any occasion is about to leave British India for a place outside India and Burma (which person is hereafter in this rule referred to as 'the traveller') shall, if on that occasion he is ordered so to do by an officer of Customs,—

"(a) declare with full details the money and gold he has with him."

That is the sub-rule under which the accused has been convicted, and the first question is whether the conviction is right. There is a further question arising under sub-r. (4), which is not really the subject of the prosecution, and with which I will deal separately.

Now, the offence under sub-r. (3) (a) of r. 90B is that a person has failed to declare with full details the money and gold he has with him, if ordered so to do by an Officer of Customs. Unfortunately the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate in framing the charge did not pay attention to the language of the rule, with the breach of which the accused was being charged. The charge is failure to declare with full details the money the accused had in his possession when asked by the Customs Officer. The rule does not say "asked," but "ordered," and "ordered" is a stronger word than "asked". It is a condition precedent to liability under sub-r. (3) (a) that the Officer of Customs should order a traveller to declare with full details the money and gold he has with him. Now, the Customs Officer, Mr. Bhide, in his evidence says that he searched the accused and found a bundle of Government currency notes worth Rs. 8,900. He admits that a person is entitled to carry Rs. 1,000 out of Bombay. Then he says in cross-examination : "I stopped the accused on the gangway. I did not ask the accused to make a declaration." In the face of that evidence I am quite unable to see how the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate was justified in convicting the accused. There is no evidence of a request, much less an order. In his judgment the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate refers to evidence which he has not recorded; but as he was imposing an appealable sentence he was bound to record all the evidence, and we cannot have regard to evidence which is not on record. But what the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate says is :

"The Officer is however quite emphatic in saying that the accused understood him perfectly inasmuch as he made a gesture by rubbing the thumb and the first finger of his right hand which the accused immediately understood and took out his purse containing Rs. 13. He however failed to produce Rs. 8,900 which he had concealed."

There is no evidence before the Court that a man understanding only the Persian language will construe a gesture of rubbing the thumb and the first finger together as constituting an order upon him to declare with full details the money he has with him, and in the absence of evidence to that effect I am certainly not prepared to assume that anyone would understand such a gesture in that sense. In my opinion, there was no evidence on which the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate could convict the accused of an offence under r. 90B(3)(a).

The conviction must, therefore, be set aside.

But, then, a further question arises under sub-r. (4), because the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate made an order that the sum of Rs. 8,900 was to be confiscated and held subject to the orders of the Government of India. In my opinion, there was no jurisdiction to make any such order. Under sub-r. (4)(a) any Officer of Customs may examine any article which a traveller has with him, for the purpose of ascertaining whether he is conveying or has in his possession any money or gold in contravention of the provisions of this rule; and, under sub-r. (4)(b), if he has reasonable ground for suspecting that the traveller has about his person any money or gold which he has not produced for inspection, he may search the person of the traveller. I think that the search of the accused, and of his wallet in which he was carrying these notes, was justified under one or the other of those two sub-rules. Then sub-r. (4)(c) provides that any Officer of Customs may seize any money or gold produced for inspection under sub-r. (3) or found upon examination or search under this sub-rule, being money or gold which the traveller has in his possession in contravention of the provisions of this rule. That refers back to sub-r. (2), which makes it an offence to take or send money out of British India. Now, if the rule stood alone, it might be said that the only illegal act in contravention of the rule was taking or sending money out of British India, which the accused was prevented from doing. But then r. 121 provides that any person who attempts to contravene, or does any act preparatory to a contravention of, any of the provisions of the rules, shall be deemed to have contravened that provision. It seems to me that it is correct to say that the accused was properly searched by the Customs Officer, and that he had in his possession money in contravention of the provisions of r. 90B(2) read with r. 121. Therefore, I think that the Customs Officer was entitled to seize the currency notes in excess of Rs. 1,000. It is admitted by the learned Government Pleader that there was no right to seize the Rs. 1,000, and that must be refunded to the accused. The balance of the money, under sub-r. (6) of r. 90B, has to be disposed of in such manner as the Central Government may by general or special order direct; and, in my opinion, money properly seized never becomes subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, and neither the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate nor this Court has jurisdiction to make any order as to the disposal of such money. Section 3 of the Defence of India Act provides that any rule made under s. 2 shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any enactment other than this Act; so that, the rule clearly prevails over s. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code, under which property produced in the course of a criminal trial may be dealt with by order of the Court. In my opinion, the Court has jurisdiction to determine whether property has been rightly seized under r. 90B(4); but if it comes to the conclusion that property was rightly seized, it has no jurisdiction to make any order as to its disposal. That is entirely a matter for the Central Government.

Therefore, we must set aside the order of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate confiscating the sum of Rs. 8,900; but we are not in a position ourselves to make any order as to how that money is to be disposed of. That is for the Central Government.

We set aside the conviction, and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

August 13.

In order to bring himself within the exception contained in s. 123 (5) of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, the burden lies upon the accused to prove that his work was not inconsistent with any provisions of the Act or by-laws. This, however, presupposes that a question has arisen as to whether he has committed a breach of any provision of the Act or by-laws. As soon as the Municipality has notice that the accused is going to rely on s. 123(5), the Municipality must allege what provisions of the Act or by-laws they say the accused has broken which disentitles him to rely on the sub-section. When such an allegation is made, the burden is upon the accused to prove that he has not committed the breach of the Act or by-law alleged. Unless, therefore, the Municipality alleges a breach of some specific provision of the Act or by-law, there is no issue on which any question of burden of proof can arise.

THE accused owned an out-house in the city of Ahmedabad, over which they wanted to build a storey and to make certain internal changes in the out-house itself. On March 2, 1940, they gave a notice to the Ahmedabad Municipality, under s. 123 (1) of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, of their intention to build and to make alterations.

The Municipality wrote to the accused to make certain changes and corrections in the plan submitted by the accused. The accused complied with the requisition on March 26, 1940.

The accused alleged that they received no further communication from the Municipality. On August 1, 1940, they intimated to the Municipality that as they heard nothing from the Municipality for a period of four months they would proceed with the construction on an assumed permission under

On August 14, 1940, the Municipality issued an order prohibiting the proposed construction. The Municipality alleged that they had sent a letter to the accused on April 4, 1940, asking the accused to set back the building on the first floor by twenty feet from the privy, under by-law 26 of the Ahmedabad Municipal By-Laws.

The accused contended that they had not received the requisition dated April 4, 1940, and proceeded with the construction proposed by them.

On September 30, 1940, the Municipality prosecuted the accused for building without permission, under s. 123(7) of the Act.

The accused were tried by the Stipendiary First Class Magistrate of Ahmedabad, who convicted them and fined each of them in a sum of Rs. 30.

One of the accused applied in revision to the Additional Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad, who summarily rejected the application, observing as follows :—

“The petitioner relies on s. 123(5) of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act and contends that because of this provision he is not guilty of any offence, but for this provision admittedly the conviction would be right. But, as has been held by our High Court in Emperor v. Dahyabhai Sauchand (43 Bom. L. R. 519), a person who relies on s. 123(5) must affirmatively establish that the construction he has made is not inconsistent with any other provision of the Municipal Boroughs Act; and it is not for the Municipality to show that there is any such breach. It is admitted on behalf of the petitioner that no evidence has been led to show that the construction he has made is not in conflict with any other provision of the Act nor is any finding given on that point by the learned Magistrate. It is urged that because the Municipality did not charge the petitioner with the breach of any other provision of the Act it must be assumed that there was no such other breach. But in view of the ruling of our High Court that the burden of establishing such a fact lies on the petitioner, this argument cannot stand.”

The accused applied to the High Court in revision.

P. A. Dhruva, for the accused.

No appearance for the complainant.

R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

BEAUMONT C. J. These are two revision applications in which the same point arises. The accused were convicted under s. 123 (7) of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, for having constructed a building without permission.

The facts are that on March 2, 1940, the accused gave a notice under s. 123(1) of the Act as to the work they were proposing to do, and under sub-s. (2) the Chief Officer required them to make certain alterations in their plans, which were duly made, and, according to the accused, they received no further communication from the Chief Officer. Accordingly on August 1 they gave notice that, having received no further communication from the Chief Officer for a period of four months, they were proposing to start work, and they did start work on August 10. On August 14, the Municipality wrote saying that on April 4 they had required the accused to set their work back twenty feet from the privy, which they would be required to do under by-law 26 of the Ahmedabad Municipality.

In revision the learned Additional Sessions Judge dismissed the applications summarily on the authority of a decision of this Court, Emperor v. Dahya- bhai Savchand<sup>1</sup>. In that case this Court held that an accused person seeking to bring himself within the provisions of s. 123(5) must prove that he came within that section, because it was an exception which excused him from the liability, which he would be otherwise under, under the rest of the section. Sub-section (5) provides that a work proposed in a notice given under sub-s. (1) may be proceeded with in the manner specified in such notice, provided such manner is not inconsistent with any provision of the Act or any by-law for the time being in force thereunder in the cases therein mentioned, one of which is that the Chief Officer has not within one month taken action as therein specified. In Emperor v. Dahyabhai Savchand this Court held that in order to bring himself within that exception, the burden lay upon the accused to prove that his work was not inconsistent with any provisions of the Act or by-laws. But that presupposes that a question has arisen as to whether he has committed a breach of any provision of the Act or by-laws. It is obvious that the accused person cannot go through every section of the Act and every by-law and prove affirmatively that he has not committed any breach of that section or that by-law. In Emperor v. Dahyabhai Savchand a question was raised as to whether a certain provision of the Act had been broken, though I am not quite sure from the report when the question was first raised in that case. But it seems to me that the true view is that, as soon as the Municipality has notice that the accused is going to rely on s. 123(5), the Municipality must allege what provisions of the Act or by-laws they say the accused has broken, which disentitles him to rely on s. 123(5). When that allegation is made, the burden is upon the accused to prove that he has not committed the breach of the Act or by-law alleged. But unless the Municipality alleges a breach of some specific provision of the Act or by-law, it seems to me that there is no issue on which any question of burden of proof can arise, and I do not think that the Court intended in Emperor v. Dahyabhai Savchand to decide more than as to the burden of proof when an issue arose. I think the learned Additional Sessions Judge was wrong in assuming that he could not go into the question of the right of the accused to rely on sub-s. (5) to s. 123, unless he had affirmative evidence that no single provision of the Act or by-laws had been broken.

The lower appellate Court did not deal with the question whether the notice alleged to have been sent to the accused on April 4, 1940, was received or not, and, therefore, I think we must send the cases back to the lower appellate Court in order that the Court may deal with that point. Assuming that the accused did not receive that notice, then I think the accused were entitled to act under s. 123(5), because they waited ten days before commencing work, and it was not until the expiration of fourteen days that the Municipality first gave notice that there might be a breach of some by-law, and I think that was too late, because by that time the accused had committed the breach with which they are charged. I think, therefore, that unless the lower appellate Court comes to the conclusion that the Jawak sent by the Municipality on April 4 was in fact received by the accused, the conviction will have to be set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Indian Limitation Act IX of 1908, arts. 181, 182(5)—Application to record part payment of decretal debt—Whether such application a step-in-aid of execution.

An application made to the Court to record an adjustment or a part payment of a decretal debt under O. XXI, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, cannot be regarded as an application within the meaning of art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and it does not, therefore, amount to a step-in-aid of execution under art. 182(5) of the Act so as to save limitation.

The plaintiff obtained a decree on July 11, 1932. On June 30, 1935, a part payment was made by the defendants of the amount due under the decree. On September 16, 1935, the plaintiff applied to the Court under O. XXI, r. 2(1), of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to certify the part payment, and the Court acceded to the application. On November 8, 1935, the plaintiff filed a darkhast against the defendants in execution of his decree. On the question whether the application of September 16, 1935, was a step-in-aid of execution under art. 182(5) of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908 :—

Held, that the application could not be regarded as an application within the meaning of art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and that, therefore, it did not amount to a step-in-aid of execution under art. 182(5) of the Act so as to save limitation.

One Atmaram (plaintiff) obtained a mortgage decree against Mallappa and others (defendants) on July 11, 1932. On June 30, 1935, some of the defendants made a part payment of the amount due under the decree. The plaintiff on September 16, 1935, applied to the Court to certify the part payment and the Court acceded to the application. On November 8, 1935, the plaintiff filed the present darkhast against the defendants. The defendants contended that the darkhast was barred by limitation as it was presented more than three years after the date of the decree. The plaintiff, however, relied upon his application of September 16, 1935, which he alleged gave him a fresh starting

"... the most crucial question that arises here is whether this certification amounts to a step-in-aid of execution of the decree so as to save limitation under article 182(5) of the Indian Limitation Act. I think not... To support his contention that certification is a step-in-aid of execution, he referred me to the authority in Jatindra Kumar v. Gagan Chandra, 46 Cal. 22. But this case is overruled by a later authority of the same High Court in Amarkrishna Choudhuri v. Jagatbandu, 59 Cal. 760, brought to my notice by the learned pleaders for the judgment-debtors. Regard being had to this case, the certification relied upon by the decree-holder is not, in my judgment, a step-in-aid of execution. That being so, it cannot save the darkhast from the bar of limitation."

On appeal the Assistant Judge confirmed the order of the lower Court and observed as follows in his judgment :—

"Reliance was placed on art. 182, cl. (5), of the Indian Limitation Act. It is urged that the application, dated September 16, 1935, was a step-in-aid of execution. For this, the learned pleader for the appellant relies upon Bacharaj v. Babaji (38 Bom. 47). The facts of the case were that on July 3, 1900, Bacharaj obtained a decree against Babaji whereby he was required to pay a sum of Rs. 600 by annual instalments of Rs. 50 and to redeem the property. In case of default of any two instalments by the plaintiff, his right to redeem the mortgage lands was to be foreclosed. Two instalments in full for 1902 and one instalment in part for the year 1903 were paid by the plaintiff to the defendant. No other instalment was paid thereafter. An application was made on July 20, 1905, to the Court for certifying those payments in satisfaction of the decree. That application was signed by the plaintiff as well as by the defendant. On December 14, 1907, an application was made by the defendant for an order of foreclosure in terms of the decree. That application was dismissed in the Court of first instance as well as in the Court of first appeal. On appeal to the High Court it was held that inasmuch as the plaintiff had signed that application it amounted to an acknowledgment, and gave a fresh starting point. From the facts of the case it is clear that inasmuch as there was an acknowledgment by the judgment-debtor, the decision is inapplicable to the facts in this case. In the present case, there has been no acknowledgment by any one of the judgment-debtors. Secondly, the learned pleader for the appellant relies upon Maung Law San v. Maung Po Thein (2 Ran. 393). The head-note is to the effect that an application to certify payment is a step-in-aid of execution. But in that case Godfrey J., who decided the case, has observed at p. 395 that an application made by a decree-holder to certify payments, made within three years of the decree, may be made at any time within three years from the date of such payment, and if so made will afford a decree-holder a fresh starting point of limitation within the meaning of art. 185(2) of the Limitation Act. It is clear from that part of the judgment that the application contemplated under O. XXI, r. 2, as giving a fresh starting point for limitation must have been presented within three years from the date of the decree. In the present the application was presented on September 16, 1935, which is obviously more than three years from the date of the suit which was made final on July 11, 1932. The decree could not then have been executed. Under these circumstances, the application, exhibit 19, cannot give a fresh starting point."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The facts shortly are that there was a decree in favour of the plaintiff dated July 11, 1932, and on June 30, 1935, a part payment was made by the defendants of the amount due under the decree, and on September 16, 1935, the plaintiff applied to the Court to certify the part payment, and the Court acceded to the application. This darkhast was issued on November 8, 1935, more than three years from the date of the decree. The question is whether the application of September 16, 1935, is a step-in-aid of execution under art. 182(5) of the Indian Limitation Act so as to save limitation.

In Bacharaj Nyaholchand v. Babaji Tukaram<sup>1</sup> this Court held that such an application as that of September 16, 1935, was a step-in-aid of execution, and the same view was taken by other High Courts : Maung Law San v. Maung Po Thein<sup>2</sup> and Jatindra Kumar Das v. Gagan Chandra Pal<sup>3</sup>. In both of those cases the application was made more than three years after the date of the decree, as it was in the present case. The Courts held that, as payment was made within three years of the decree and as the application was made within three years of the payment, the application had the effect of being a step-in-aid of execution. However, in Shri Prakash Singh v. Allahabad Bank Ltd.,<sup>4</sup> the Privy Council held that an application to record an adjustment under O. XXI, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, was not an application within art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act, on the ground that it was not strictly speaking an application at all ; it was a mere certificate, stating that a certain payment had been made, and a request to the Court to carry out the provisions of O. XXI, r. 2. The Privy Council held that it could not be regarded as an application within the meaning of art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act. If it is not an application within the meaning of art. 181, I do not see how it can be an application within art. 182(5), the relevant words of which are : "(where the application next hereinafter mentioned has been made) the date of the final order passed on an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order". So that there must be an application to take a step-in-aid of execution, and having regard to the Privy Council's decision, it seems to me that there was no application. No doubt, the Privy Council were invited to express an opinion as to the correctness of the Indian cases in which it had been held that such an application as is here in question amounted to a step-in-aid of execution under art. 182(5). But their Lordships held that as that article was not before them, it was unnecessary to express an opinion on the point. However, in my view the reasons on which the Privy Council decision was based really cover the point, and it has been so held by a full bench of the Calcutta High Court in Amar Krishna Chaudhuri v. Jagatbandhu Biswas<sup>5</sup>. Bacharaj's case must be treated as overruled, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs. There will be one set of costs.

EXECUTION proceedings.

One Meghraj obtained a decree against Damodar and others (defendants Nos. 1-8) on September 1, 1923. In 1926 Meghraj filed a darkhast against all the defendants to execute the decree and prayed for recovery of Rs. 2,000 and odd. Rs. 400 were recovered and thereafter the darkhast was disposed of on April 15, 1926, as the defendants were negotiating for a compromise.

On April 15, 1926, Meghraj assigned the decree jointly to Damodar and Maruti without any mention of their respective shares in it. On July 7, 1926, Shankar and Wasudeo (defendants Nos. 7 and 8) paid Rs. 814 to Maruti.

In 1929 Damodar alone filed darkhast No. 160 of 1929 against defendants Nos. 1 and 5 only, and prayed for execution of the remaining part of the decree after giving credit for Rs. 400 received by Meghraj and Rs. 814 received by Maruti. This darkhast was disposed of on April 15, 1929. In 1932 another darkhast No. 536 of 1932 was filed by Damodar alone against defendant No. 2 only, and it was disposed of on July 1, 1932, without any further execution.

On November 21, 1934, Damodar again alone filed the present darkhast against the heirs of the deceased defendant No. 6 and defendants Nos. 7 and 8. The defendants inter alia contended that the execution petition was not in time because the two former execution petitions made by Damodar in 1929 and 1932 were not in accordance with law as one co-assignee alone was not competent to file an execution petition.

The trial Judge held that the darkhast was in time and ordered execution of the decree to proceed. He observed as follows :—

"...The chief point, therefore, to be decided in this respect is accordingly in my opinion whether the former darkhasts at exhibits 35 and 36 were proper step-in-aid executions of the decree as against these contending judgment-debtors. On this I am inclined to think that those darkhasts were proper step-in-aid applications in execution of the decree. Because, firstly, the applications at exhibits 35 and 36 were in accordance with law and properly presented, as provided by O. XXI, rr. 10 to 14 and 15, Civil Procedure Code, and secondly they had prayed the Court to take a proper step-in-aid of execution. It does not appear to be material that those were being prosecuted against judgment-debtors other than the present persons. The decree, exhibit 3, was being passed against all the judgment-debtors under it including the present contending persons, jointly and severally. Similarly the words in the proviso (1) in O. XXI, r. 16, to the effect that the decree shall not be executed until the Court has heard their objections if any to its executions do not in my opinion lessen the character of the application presented by the transferee according to r. 11 of the same Order from its being a proper step-in-aid of execution. I am not inclined to think that the legislature intended such a meaning while framing the proviso referred to above. The marginal notes to r. 16 also are application for execution by transferee of decree. The last sentence of the same rule in para. 1, namely 'the decree may be executed... as if the application were made by such decree-holder' also supports my own view according to me. All that the proviso in para. 2 of the rule means and intends is that the Court should hear as a condition precedent objections of the transferor or judgment-debtor, if any, to the execution of the decree by the assignee. The proviso puts a condition upon the Court to ascertain if there are any objections to the decree being executed, and that condition the Court has to fulfil. It does not say or mean that the application presented by the assignee or transferee, in the proper form according to rules provided, is not a step-in-aid of execution. The observations and ruling given in 34 Bom. L. R. 189 in the case Nathubhai v. Pranjivan hold good in this respect and I rely for my view upon them too. Thus, I think that the former applications at exhibits 35 and 36 were proper step-in-aid applications for execution, and in view of those, this darkhast is by all means filed within the time prescribed by law, under art. 182 of the Limitation Act."

On appeal the Assistant Judge remanded the case for making Maruti, the co-assignee, as a party to the execution proceedings and for a decision as to what, and if so how much, right he had in the decree under execution. On the question whether one of the co-assignees alone could apply for the execution of the whole decree he observed as follows :—

"Order XXI, r. 15, of the Code of Civil Procedure, lays down that where a decree is passed in favour of more than one person any one of the decree-holders can apply on behalf of all to execute the whole decree subject to furnishing security etc. It is true that this rule does not apply to assignees of a decree. But O. XXI, r. 16, of the Code, lays down that where a decree is assigned, the assignee may be permitted to execute the decree and that his application to execute the decree shall be treated as an application by the decree-holder. It would therefore follow that though r. 15 does not apply to assignees, in so many words, the provision in r. 15 will govern an application for execution by one of the many assignees of a decree. Even if it be held that in spite of the provisions in r. 16, r. 15 does not apply to the assignees of a decree, it will have to be held that the principle in r. 15 will apply to assignees of a decree. The Code of Civil Procedure is not claimed to be exhaustive and whenever it does not provide rules of procedure to meet a particular case, it has been held that the Court has authority to exercise its inherent jurisdiction and to apply rules of justice, equity and good conscience. I therefore do not see any reason why the principle laid down in O. XXI, r. 15, of the Code, should not be applied to the assignees of a decree and should be restricted only to the original decree-holders. I therefore hold that an application for execution of a decree by one of the co-assignees of the decree is quite in accordance with law."

On remand it was found that Maruti had one-third share and Damodar had two-thirds share in the decree.

Defendants Nos. 7 and 8 appealed to the High Court.

S. Y. Abhyankar, for the appellants.

P. B. Gajendragadkar, for the respondent.

DIVATIA J. This appeal arises in execution of a decree obtained by one Meghraj against the predecessor-in-title of the present appellants. Meghraj filed a darkhast in 1926 to execute the decree against all the defendants and prayed for recovery of Rs. 2,000 and odd. Rs. 400 were recovered and thereafter the darkhast was disposed of as there were negotiations for compromise. On April 15, 1926, Meghraj assigned the decree to two persons Damodar and Maruti. On July 7, 1926, the present appellants, who are two of the judgment-debtors, paid Rs. 814 to one of the assignees, Maruti. In 1929 the other assignee Damodar alone filed darkhast No. 160 of 1929 against defendants Nos. 1 and 5 only. He prayed for execution of the remaining part of the decree after giving credit for Rs. 400 received by Meghraj and Rs. 814 received by Maruti. That darkhast was disposed of on April 15, 1929. A third darkhast was filed in 1932 by Damodar alone against defendant No. 2 only, and it was disposed of also on July 1, 1932, without any further execution. Thereafter the present darkhast was filed on November 21, 1934, by Damodar alone against the heirs of the deceased defendant No. 6 and defendants Nos. 7 and 8. The main contention raised by the judgment-debtors was that the darkhast was time-barred on the ground that the two previous darkhasts by Damodar alone in 1929 and 1932 were not maintainable in law as one co-assignee alone cannot apply for execution, and as they cannot, therefore, be regarded as steps-in-aid of execution, the present darkhast of 1934 being more than three years after the last maintainable darkhast of 1926 was beyond time. The principal question, therefore, is whether those two darkhasts were maintainable in law.

The lower appellate Court had remanded this case for making Maruti, the co-assignee, as a party to these execution proceedings and for a decision as to what, and if so how much, right he had in the decree under execution. It was found that Maruti has one-third share and the present darkhastdar Damodar has two-thirds share in the decree, although in the deed of assignment the right, title and interest of the judgment-creditor have been transferred jointly in favour of the two transferees without any mention of their shares.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the two previous darkhasts of 1929 and 1932 ought to have been filed by Damodar as well as Maruti, because both of them were transferees; and there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code which permits only one of the two assignees to execute a decree. The lower appellate Court has held that the provisions of O. XXI, r. 15, would apply by analogy to the present case, and that, therefore the two previous darkhasts filed by Damodar alone were maintainable according to law.

Order XXI, r. 16, of the Civil Procedure Code, provides :—

“Where a decree or, if a decree has been passed jointly in favour of two or more persons, the interest of any decree-holder in the decree is transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, the transferee may apply for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it. . . .”

A. C. J. Rule 15, which applies to joint decree-holders, provides :—

v.

"Where a decree has been passed jointly in favour of more persons than one, any one or more of such persons may, unless the decree imposes any condition to the contrary, apply for the execution of the whole decree for the benefit of them all...."

There is no express provision in the Civil Procedure Code which permits one of several assignees of a decree to execute the whole of the decree. The question then is whether the assignees would stand in the shoes of the decree-holder, and if so, the provisions of r. 15 could be made applicable to them. It may be noted that this is not a case where only a part of the decree is assigned to two assignees, and therefore, the decision of this Court in Narandas Sunderdas v. Tejmal Bhagchand<sup>1</sup> would not apply. It is there held that an assignee of a portion of the decretal amount is not entitled to execute the decree. It is true that the lower Courts have now found that Maruti has got one-third and Damodar has got two-thirds interest in the decree. But the deed of assignment is passed to both of them jointly, and not in separate shares, and it was for that reason that Damodar applied to execute the whole decree in the two previous darkhasts.

Mr. Abhyankar on behalf of the appellants relies upon two decisions in Md. Kazam v. Nadir Ali Shah<sup>2</sup> and Mt. Amiran v. Mt. Kaniz Aisha.<sup>3</sup> In the first of these cases it is held that O. XXI, r. 15, Civil Procedure Code, did not confer an unconditional right on one of the decree-holders to execute the decree, that all the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder constituted one legal representative and that one of them could not execute the decree nor could give a valid discharge. The Patna case decides that O. XXI, r. 15, refers to a decree which has been passed jointly in favour of more than one plaintiff, and that a transfer by operation of law is not an assignment. In that case the decree was passed in favour of one person only and it was held that O. XXI, r. 15, referred to a decree which had been passed jointly in favour of more than one plaintiff, and it did not apply to the execution of a decree passed in favour of one person though such execution is sought by only one of the legal representatives of the deceased.

On the other hand, we have a decision of our High Court in Madhav Prabhakar v. Balaji Govind.<sup>4</sup> It was there held that the presentation of an application for execution of a decree by one of the surviving coparceners of the deceased decree-holder is not invalid in view of the provisions of s. 146 and O. XXI, r. 15, of the Civil Procedure Code. It was held that the darkhast was properly presented although it may be defective and that the executing Court may not proceed with execution on the application of one of the coparceners under the circumstances but at the same time the presentation by one of the surviving coparceners could not be said to be illegal so as to render the proceedings invalid. This decision is based upon the application of the provisions of O. XXI, r. 15, by analogy to the case of more than one person succeeding to the right, title and interest of a deceased judgment-creditor. It is true that the surviving coparceners are not considered to be persons falling under O. XXI, r. 16, of the Civil Procedure Code. But the reasoning on which the decision is based is clearly to the effect that where the right, title and interest of a judgment-creditor has devolved upon more than one person jointly and severally, any one of such persons can validly present an application for execution. Mr. Abhyankar says that the Court there wrongly applied the provisions of s. 146 because that section contemplates the application being made by any person claiming under the deceased decree-holder. His contention is that the surviving coparceners cannot be said to be persons claiming under the deceased decree-holder. But I am not concerned with that aspect of the decision. The point so far as is material to the present case is that this Court applied the provisions of O. XXI, r. 15, to a case where the right, title and interest of a judgment-creditor devolved upon more than one person, and I think the reasoning in this case could be applied by way of analogy to the facts of the present case. I do not see any distinction in principle between the case of several assignees who have acquired the right, title and interest of the judgment-creditor and the case of persons on whom the interest of the judgment-creditor has devolved by operation of law, whether by way of succession or by survivorship. There is no harm to the judgment-debtor, in my opinion, if a decree is allowed to be executed by one of such persons under the proper safeguards which are mentioned in r. 15. We are not concerned as to whether any relief could be necessarily given to the darkhastdar in such a darkhast. That would depend upon whether the interests of the other assignee are preserved. The only point arising here is whether the two previous darkhasts were maintainable as being in accordance with law and could therefore be regarded as steps-in-aid of execution. I am of opinion that those darkhasts were maintainable and therefore must be regarded as in accordance with law. The present darkhast, therefore, which is filed within three years from the previous darkhast, must be held to be in time.

Another point was raised on behalf of the appellants to the effect that notice under r. 16 was not given in any of the two former darkhasts, but, as I said just now, we are not concerned whether the darkhast could be proceeded with or not on account of the non-compliance of the provisions of r. 16. The question is whether the darkhast was bad in law as a step-in-aid of execution.

The findings returned by the lower Courts now are that the present darkhastdar Damodar has got two-thirds share in the decree and Maruti has got one-third share. I am told that the decree as between Maruti and the judgment-debtor has been satisfied, and under these circumstances the present darkhastdar would be entitled to execute the decree only to the extent of two-thirds of the amount which may be due under the decree at the time when the darkhast was filed. To that extent the order of the lower Court should be varied and with this variation the appeal is dismissed with costs.

A partner in a firm has no implied authority from his co-partners to assign a money-decree obtained by the firm to a third person for a sum less than the decretal amount.

PROCEEDINGS in execution.

The firm of Krishnaji Bharmalji & Co was registered as a firm under the Indian Partnership Act, 1932, on March 19, 1934. It consisted of four partners : (1) Krishnaji Bharmalji, (2) Lalchand Bharmalji, (3) Mithalal Krishnaji and (4) Seremal Krishnaji.

On January 24, 1936, the firm of Krishnaji Bharmalji & Co. obtained a money decree for Rs. 4,519-9-0 against one Abdul Razak Ahmedbhoy and Hussan I. A. Lalljee.

On May 7, 1941, one of the partners, Seremal Krishnaji, assigned the decree to one Yacub Husseniibhoy Lalljee for a sum of Rs. 2,000.

On June 16, 1941, the assignee Yacub Husseniibhoy Lalljee applied for a notice under O. XXI, r. 16, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to execute the decree.

The notice was heard.

M. C. Setalvad, Advocate General, for the assignee.

N. P. Engineer, for defendant No. 1.

M. C. Chagla, for defendant No. 2.

KANIA J. This is an application by the assignee of a decree under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The suit was filed by the plaintiffs who were moneylenders against the defendants. They obtained a decree for Rs. 4,519-9-0, interest and costs, on January 24, 1936. It is alleged that the plaintiff firm has assigned this decree by a writing dated May 7, 1941. The consideration therein recited is Rs. 2,000. The defendants' objections are two : (1) that the assignment is executed only by Seremal Krishnaji and under s. 19, sub-s. (2), cl. (c), of the Indian Partnership Act, 1932, one partner in the plaintiff firm had no authority to do so ; and (2) that there was an agreement between the plaintiff firm and the defendants which prevented the enforcement of the claim against defendant No. 1. This second contention need not be gone into at this stage as the application is only under O. XXI, r. 16.

The assignee contends that a partner in a firm has implied authority to transfer a debt due to the firm and the present transaction amounts to nothing more than that. In his affidavit Seremal contends that he had express authority to enter into this transaction. That is based on two grounds: (1) that Marwadi moneylenders' firms have such authority; and (2) in this particular case his partners had expressly authorised him. As regards this last contention I must hold against the assignee. With regard to the implied authority of a partner in Marwadi moneylending firms the contention raises a question of custom. There is no affidavit, except the statement of Seremal, in support of it, and a custom of this far-reaching effect cannot be established by the bare word of an interested party only. In his affidavit Seremal has made two statements on oath. The first is that he himself had signed the plaint, and, secondly, that he himself had made the application for execution. He has contended that this was done because each partner in his firm had authority to do all acts. On looking at the two documents it is clear that these statements are untrue. In view of these statements of Seremal I am unable to accept his statement about the existence of a custom either in his firm or the Marwari moneylending firms. I am unable to rely on his statement about his other partners giving him express authority. It may be noted that although this matter has been pending for many days, none of the other partners, whose names are mentioned in the affidavit, has stated that Seremal had express authority to execute the assignment in question. There is no document to show such express authority.

This leaves the question of implied authority. It cannot be disputed that a partner in a trading firm has a right to assign a debt. This is an ordinary function of a partner and a transaction in the ordinary course of business of a partnership firm. But as a matter of policy the legislature has enacted that a partner has no implied authority to compromise or relinquish any claim or a portion of a claim by the firm. The effect of the assignment of May 7, 1941, is that the claim of the plaintiffs against the defendants for Rs. 4,519-9-0 is assigned to the applicant for Rs. 2,000. It is true that the defendants continue to be liable for the full amount of the decree to the assignee under the assignment. The fact, however, remains that a portion of the claim of the plaintiff firm against the defendants, viz. the difference between Rs. 4,519-9-0 with interest and costs and Rs. 2,000, is relinquished by the plaintiff firm. To that extent the plaintiff firm has suffered a loss and it appears to me clear that having regard to the words used in s. 19(2) (c) a partner has no implied authority to do so. Nagappa v. Bhagawanji Rasaji Firm<sup>1</sup> deals with this question amongst others. It is there pointed out that an assignment of this nature, which involves the inclusion of a third party, does not alter the nature of the transaction, and it still continues to be a compromise or relinquishment of a portion of the claim by the assignor firm against the debtor.

In my opinion this notice therefore fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel certified. Two sets of costs allowed.

July 15.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), Sec. 69—Deed of mortgage—Power of sale—Effect and construction of clause containing such power—Provision to buy in property by mortgagee at auction sale—Suit by mortgagor to restrain mortgagee from exercising power of sale—Expiry of mortgage—Mortgagor bound to redeem—Injunction.

The expression "power of sale" is a well-known expression in conveyancing. The words "power of sale," as used in s. 69(c) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, refer to a clause to be expressly included in a deed of mortgage. They must therefore be understood to mean what is ordinarily known and understood in conveyancing by that expression.

A power of sale includes all steps which are necessary to be taken in that connection. In order to make the power bad words must be pointed out in s. 69 which render the whole power invalid according to law.

Where a party contends that a clause conferring a power of sale on the mortgagee restricts in any way the liberty of the parties to enter into a contract, the burden is on him to show that the words of the section prevent an agreement between the parties as embodied in the document.

A power to sell necessarily includes a power to postpone the sale. It is a power to sell either now or at a later date.

A power to buy in, or rescind or vary any contract of sale, is not bad as against the provisions of s. 69. The expression "buy in" contained in a power of sale is never intended to give the mortgagee that right. The power is used so that in effect the party at whose instance the auction is held takes the property out of the auction, should the highest bid be inadequate in price.

After a mortgage debt has become due, it is not competent to the mortgagor to file a suit to restrain the mortgagee from exercising the power of sale contained in the mortgage deed, without first offering to redeem and tendering the amount in Court.

The relief by way of injunction is always discretionary. The Court will always be slow to grant such a relief to a party who admits that he has committed a breach of the contract and at the same time wants to prevent the opposite party from enforcing his rights under the contract. The more so, in a case where the contract between the parties gives rise to a claim for damages in case the power of sale under the contract is exercised improperly or irregularly.

On November 9, 1939, the plaintiff Mulraj Virji effected an equitable mortgage on his property for Rs. 1,25,000 in favour of one Ahmed and Shirinbai. On January 13, 1940, he effected a legal mortgage over the same property in favour of Krishnaji Bharmal and others.

On April 18, 1940, the plaintiff executed a second mortgage on the same property in favour of Nainmal Pratapmal and others (defendants). The due date of the mortgage was July 18, 1940. The deed of mortgage contained a clause giving the mortgagees a power of sale. [The clause is set out in the judgment.]

The plaintiff failed to pay interest as also the principal amount secured by the mortgage. He failed to redeem the mortgage on the due date.

The defendants elected to exercise the power of sale given to them by the clause in the deed of mortgage, and advertised to sell the property on May 8, 1941.

On May 8, 1941, the plaintiff filed a suit for a declaration that the power of sale in favour of the defendants without the intervention of the Court was invalid and inoperative, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from exercising the power of sale.

The defendants in their written statement denied that the power of sale was invalid and inoperative or that they were not entitled to effect a sale under the power of sale contained in the deed of mortgage.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, with M. L. Maneksha, for the defendants.

KANIA J. This is a suit by a mortgagor against his mortgagees to prevent them from exercising their power of sale. Although in the plaint several averments are made in respect of the sale intended to be held on May 8, 1941, the relief asked for is not in respect of that particular sale. The plaintiff contends that the power of sale contained in the mortgage deed is invalid and inoperative and it should be declared that the defendants are not entitled to exercise the same. These two prayers are followed by a prayer for injunction. No other relief is sought in the suit.

The mortgage was executed by the plaintiff on April 18, 1940, and the due date was July 18, 1940. From the pleadings it is clear that the due date has expired and the mortgagor (plaintiff) has failed to pay the mortgage debt. There has been no offer to redeem the mortgage.

The first contention raised on behalf of the defendants is that the suit as framed is not maintainable. It was argued that a mortgagor must file a suit for redemption and offer to pay the mortgage debt after the due date has expired if he wants any relief against the mortgagees who are acting under the mortgage deed. The plaintiff relied on three cases, Jagjivan Nanabhai v. Shridhar Balkrishna Nagarkar,<sup>1</sup> Jerup Teja & Co. v. Peerbhoy<sup>2</sup> and Mohidin Shakkar v. Jehangir Dinsshaw.<sup>3</sup> The Advocate General for the plaintiff strongly relied on the last case where it was observed that a mortgagor can ask for an injunction in the event of the mortgagee attempting to exercise his power of sale improperly or irregularly. In the first case the suit was filed for redemption and the Court held that even after such a suit was filed the mortgagee could exercise the power of sale contained in the mortgage deed and cannot be restrained from exercising his power of sale merely because of the redemption suit. "The mortgagor is entitled to have the sale of the property suspended only if he can shew either that he has paid off the mortgage lien, or that he has made a legal tender of the amount due which has been refused."

In Jerup Teja & Co. v. Peerbhoy the due date had not arrived and the mortgagee had threatened to sell the property although the mortgage debt had not become due. That is clearly a different set of facts from what is found here. In Mahidin Shakkar v. Jehangir Dinshaw B. J. Wadia J. in the course of his judgment expressly stated (p. 557) :

"No case was cited before me to show that if the right to redeem had not accrued to the mortgagor he could not bring in a suit for an injunction restraining a wrongful sale, but that his only remedy was either to pay or tender the moneys and allow the property to be sold, and then pursue his remedy in damages if any."

The facts there clearly show that the mortgage debt was alleged by the mortgagee to be due, while it was contended by the mortgagor that the event on which the due date was accelerated either had not happened or that the mortgagee had not exercised his option to call in his mortgage amount on the happening of such an event. It was therefore contended by the mortgagor that the mortgage debt had not become due.

The observations in each individual judgment have to be read in the light of facts found in the case, and under the circumstances it does not appear to me that any of the three cases relied upon by the plaintiff sustains the contention that after the mortgage debt has become due the mortgagor is entitled to file a suit to restrain the mortgagee from exercising the power of sale, without offering to redeem and tendering the amount. I have already pointed out that in this case the plaintiff does not suggest that the mortgage debt has not fallen due. The plaint admits that it has fallen due.

The contract between the parties is found in the indenture of mortgage. By that document the plaintiff had stipulated that he would pay the mortgage amount on July 18, 1940, to the mortgagees. The present demand on the part of the plaintiff is to enforce his right under that contract although he has committed a breach of one of the most important terms of the same. The argument of the defendants is that as the plaintiff has committed a breach of the contract he has no right to come to Court and seek to enforce it against the defendants. It is argued that relief by way of injunction is granted on the same principles on which the Court will order specific performance, and in this case if the plaintiff had asked for specific performance of this contract the Court would have refused it because the plaintiff himself had committed a breach thereof. The Court should similarly refuse the relief by way of injunction. In my opinion there is considerable force in this contention. The relief by way of injunction is always discretionary and the Court will be slow to grant such a relief to a party who admits that he has committed a breach of the contract and at the same time wants to prevent the opposite party from enforcing his rights under the contract. Moreover the relief by way of injunction should in this case be very well and properly accompanied by a prayer for redemption. If the plaintiff chooses to refrain from carrying out his obligations and prays only for an injunction, it is difficult for the Court to exercise a discretion in his favour. To permit the plaintiff to do so would mean that the plaintiff can persist in his breach and prevent the defendants from enforcing their rights under the contract. Moreover in this case the express terms of the contract contained in the mortgage deed show that if the power of sale was exercised improperly or irregularly or that the same was unnecessary, the remedy of the plaintiff in respect of any breach of the proviso was to be in damages only. That is the usual clause in a mortgage deed and is inserted for the benefit of the mortgagor as well as the mortgagees. Without such a clause if an objection is taken to the sale at the time of the auction, the purchaser may be scared away and may not offer a proper price. In order, therefore, that the purchaser may give a proper value this clause is found in mortgage deeds. By that clause it is clear that the parties had stipulated that in the event of an improper, irregular or unnecessary exercise of the power of sale the remedy of the aggrieved party was to be only in damages. Having regard to this clause the Court will be most reluctant to give an injunction to the mortgagor. In my opinion, the suit as framed is not maintainable and the mortgagor should pray for redemption before asking the Court to intervene and grant an injunction restraining the defendants from exercising their power of sale. This leaves the question whether the power of sale is wholly illegal.

On the merits an interesting argument was advanced on behalf of the plaintiff. It was contended that by s. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act the legislature had provided that in certain cases only a mortgage deed might contain a power of sale. Relying on the words of s. 69 it was argued that the power of sale should be without any additions, limitations or ancillary rights. The power of sale in this case is in the following terms :—

"...And it is hereby agreed and declared that notwithstanding anything contained in the Trustees and Mortgagees Powers Act, 1886, it shall be lawful for the mortgagees or any person acting on their behalf at any time or times hereafter as well before as after the due date without any further consent on the part of the mortgagor to sell or to concur in the sale of the mortgaged premises hereby mortgaged and granted or expressed so to be or any part or parts thereof without the intervention of the Court and either together or in parcels or lots and either by public auction or private contract and either with or without any special conditions or stipulations relative to title or evidence of commencement of title or otherwise which may be deemed proper by the mortgagees with power to postpone such sale from time to time and to buy in the said hereditaments and premises or any part thereof at any sale by public auction or to rescind or vary any contract for the sale thereof and to resell the same from time to time being not answerable or responsible for any loss or diminution occasioned thereby and for the purposes aforesaid or any of them to make agreements execute assurances give effectual receipts or discharges for the purchase money and do all other acts and things for completing the sale which the person or persons exercising the power of sale shall think proper AND the aforesaid power shall be deemed to be a power to sell or in selling without intervention of the Court within the meaning of section 69 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882."

It was contended that this was not authorised by s. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act and therefore the power was invalid. It was argued that this power was one and indivisible and as it was bad the mortgagees had no right to sell the property without the intervention of Court. In this connection it was pointed out that the draftsman of the indenture of mortgage had committed the error of borrowing the form from English forms and precedents.

Kania J.

It was argued that the law in England was different and therefore this form could not be properly adopted for mortgages in India having regard to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.

In my opinion this contention of the plaintiff is unsound. The first statute enacted in England incorporating the rights of the mortgagees was 23 & 24 Vic. c. 145 (Lord Cranworth's Act) of 1860. Even before that in Davidson's Conveyancing Precedents of 1858 (Vol. II, p. 760) a form of mortgage with a power of sale worded exactly as in this case is shown to be the usual form. The Act of 1860 recognised that this power was commonly inserted in mortgages. This is made clear by the preamble to that Act. By the Act it was presumed to exist. Next came the Conveyancing Act of 1881 (44 & 45 Vic. c. 41): Section 19 of that Act recognised this as an implied power of sale in the mortgagee. At present the Law of Property Act of 1925 (15 Geo. V, c. 20), s. 101, governs the rights of the parties in England. By s. 101(1)(i) it is provided that such a power of sale is implied in favour of a mortgagee. The expression "power of sale" thus appears to be a well-known expression in conveyancing. In Davidson's Precedents printed in 1858 the marginal note against a clause worded as here is "power of sale." In India the same expression is known and has been understood in the same way so far back as 1875 in Pitambar Narayandas v. Vannmali Shamji<sup>1</sup>.

On behalf of the plaintiff it was argued that this is an incorrect way of approaching the case. The English law should not be looked at and a reference to the precedents there is not relevant. The Court has to consider only s. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act. I concede that in interpreting s. 69 English statutes cannot govern the plain meaning of the words used in it. But I am unable to find anything in s. 69 which in any way is in conflict with or different from the English Act. The words "power of sale" are not defined anywhere in the Act. If it is a technical expression it would not be improper for the Court to find out its meaning as judicially interpreted. Pitamber v. Vannmali was decided before the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 was enacted and can therefore be safely relied upon to construe the words "power of sale" in connection with a mortgage. The words used in s. 69 are "...a mortgagee...shall, subject to the provisions of this section, have power to sell" &c. and the insertion of a clause giving such a power when the property is situate in one of the Presidency towns or the towns mentioned in sub-s. (c) is valid. It may be noted that in sub-s. (c) the words used are "Where a 'power of sale' without the intervention of the Court is expressly conferred on the mortgagee..." The words "power of sale." used in sub-s. (c) refer to a clause to be expressly included in the mortgage. They must be understood therefore to mean what is ordinarily known and understood in conveyancing by that expression.

The argument of the plaintiff based on the construction of the words used in this case is also unsound. A power of sale must include all steps which are necessary to be taken in that connection. In order to make the power bad words must be pointed out in the section which render the whole power invalid according to law. It should be remembered that as between adults the law permits the greatest freedom of contract unless it is expressly taken away. Therefore if the plaintiff contends that this particular clause restricts in any way the power of the parties to enter into a contract, the burden is on him to show that the words of the section prevent an agreement between the parties as embodied in the document. I am unable to find any words in s. 69 which prevent the parties from entering into the contract found in this mortgage deed. It was argued that under s. 69 a mortgagee had no power to postpone the sale. I am unable to accept that contention. A power to sell must necessarily include a power to postpone the sale. It is a power to sell either now or at a later date. I do not think that expression is against the words used in s. 69. It was contended that the power to buy in, or rescind or vary any contract for sale was bad and against the words of s. 69. This argument is based on a misapprehension. The words used are not "buy out" but "buy in." No mortgagee has a right to buy the mortgage premises without an express authority from the Court. If he attempted to buy directly or indirectly, on proof that the transaction was of that nature, the Courts have always held that the mortgage subsisted and the transaction of sale was a nullity. I do not think the expression "buy in" has ever been intended to give the mortgagee that right. It should be realised that if at an auction sale there are several intending purchasers and the highest bid is very inadequate, a way has to be found by which the property is not sold to the highest bidder and cause a tremendous loss both to the mortgagor and the mortgagee. The expression "buy in" is therefore used so that in effect the party at whose instance the auction is held takes the property out of the auction. The only way in which the auction can be closed is by such an offer being given and the property not being knocked down to an outsider. The expressions used after the words "buy in" make this position very clear. The mortgagee is given a right to buy in or to rescind i.e. to set aside the contract of buying or vary any contract for sale and to resell the same. Therefore when an auction sale is found not to result in realising the proper value, the mortgagee may either postpone the sale, or if he finds that he is unable to do so because the auction sale had started, he has to resort to the second way to prevent the property being knocked down at an undervalue and to resell the same. I do not think, on a true interpretation, the clause relating to the power of sale gives the mortgagees a right to buy the property for themselves. Unless that construction is put on this clause there is nothing to violate the words "power to sell" used in s. 69. In my opinion, therefore, this clause does not violate s. 69 in any manner and the power is valid.

It was argued that if a portion of the power is bad the whole power is bad because it is one and indivisible. Having regard to the view which I have taken, I do not think it necessary to discuss this aspect of the case.

My findings on the issues are: No. 1 in the negative; No. 2: The power is valid; No. 3 in the affirmative and No. 4 in the negative. The suit is, therefore, dismissed with costs. The interim injunction granted on May 8, 1941, is dissolved. Costs to include costs reserved. The mortgage deed provides that if the mortgagees' rights have to be defended in any manner the mortgagees will be entitled to claim their costs when taxed as between attorney and client. Ordinarily I am reluctant to award costs taxed otherwise than between party and party, but in the present case the mortgagor himself has

v.

GEOFFREY WILLIAM McELHINNY.*

Licence—Bombay Abkari Act (Bom. V of 1878), Secs. 4, 14, 35, 35A—Bombay Toddy Tapping Rules, 1928, rr. 2, 9-13—Power to grant licence to tap toddy-producing trees—Power controlled by rules which have the force of law and not by s. 4—Statutory duty to grant licence if rules complied with—"May", meaning of, in r. 2—"Shall", meaning of, in rr. 9 to 13—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), Sec. 45—High Court—Public servant—Order for enforcement of public duties—Licence for tapping toddy trees—Order to issue licence.

Section 4 of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, relates only to control in reference to establishment, and not to the power to grant licences to tap trees producing toddy.

Section 14 of the Bombay Abkari Act read in conjunction with the Bombay Toddy Tapping Rules, 1928, made under the Act, contemplates that such licences shall be granted in accordance with the rules to enable the duties imposed to be levied.

The implied power conferred upon the Collector by s. 14(I) of the Bombay Abkari Act to grant or refuse a licence is limited by the rules. If the requirements of the rules are complied with, there is a statutory duty imposed upon the Collector to grant a licence, and this duty is not affected by anything contained in s. 4.

Sections 35 and 35A of the Bombay Abkari Act contemplate that the powers of the Abkari officers to issue licences are controlled only by rules having the force of law made under these sections, and not by orders issued by Government under s. 4. Such orders do not override the rules.

The word "may" in r. 2 of the Bombay Toddy Tapping Rules, 1928, is used merely with the object of enumerating the purposes for which tapping licences are issued, namely, for supplying toddy to shops, tree-foot booths, hawkers or for domestic consumption, and to indicate that they may not be issued for any other purpose. The word "may" does not mean that the Collector has a discretion to grant or refuse a licence if applied for in respect of one of the designated purposes.

The use of the word "shall" in rr. 9 to 13 indicates that no question of the exercise of any discretion by the Collector in the granting of a licence arises, provided that the requirements of the rules are complied with, but that a statutory duty to issue a licence is imposed by s. 14(1) of the Act.

* O. C. J. (Mis.) Appln. No. 14 of 1941.

Fakir Mahomed v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay<sup>1</sup> and Haji Ismail v. The Municipal Commissioner of Bombay : Ahmed Moosa v. The Municipal Commissioner of Bombay<sup>2</sup>, distinguished.

The petitioner owned lands upon which trees producing toddy were grown. Up to July 31, 1939, licences were granted to the petitioner for tapping the trees and supplying toddy to shops for sale. Thereafter owing to the introduction of prohibition no such licences were granted. On November 18, 1940, the petitioner applied, under the provisions of the Bombay Toddy Tapping Rules, 1928, to the Collector of Bombay (respondent No. 1), for the issue of a licence to him to tap and draw toddy from his trees for domestic consumption only. On November 29, 1940, respondent No. 1 replied regretting his inability to grant such a licence. The petitioner thereupon appealed under the said provisions to the Commissioner of Excise (respondent No. 2), but the latter informed him on December 7, 1940, that respondent No. 1 was not bound to issue the licence asked for and that there was no reason to interfere with respondent No. 1's order. The petitioner, thereupon, presented a petition to the High Court, under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, against the respondents praying that they or either of them might be ordered to grant and issue the licence applied for. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that they had acted in the matter under the directions of the Provincial Government, as s. 4 of the Bombay Abkari Act made the Provincial Government the supreme authority in relation to the granting of such licences, and that by virtue of this section respondent No. 1 was bound to obey the orders issued by the Provincial Government with reference to granting of such licences :—

that respondents, who were charged with the power to issue licences, were controlled by the Bombay Toddy Tapping Rules, 1928, which were made under the Act, and which had the force of law, and that the respondents were bound to consider the petitioner's application for licence in the light of those rules ;

that, even if s. 4 of the Act applied, as there was not in existence at the date of the petitioner's application any notification, rule, or order of the Provincial Government prohibiting the possession of toddy or the tapping or drawing of toddy from toddy trees, respondent No. 1 was not entitled to refuse the petitioner's application and respondent No. 2 to refuse his appeal ;

that as the respondents acted under the mistaken belief that the prohibition policy of the Provincial Government amounted to an order justifying them in the action which they took, the Court could interfere and order them to act as they ought to have acted ; and that respondent No. 1 should forthwith grant a licence to the petitioner on payment of such fees, if any, and subject to such restrictions and on such conditions and in such form as was contemplated by s. 30 of the Act.

O. C. J.      The petitioner, Ratanshaw Todiwalla, was a landed proprietor owning 1941      several large pieces of land in Bombay upon which there were toddy-producing —      trees. Prior to July 31, 1939, he was in the toddy trade, and he held a licence RATANSHAW      for the retail sale of toddy as well as a licence to tap and draw toddy from NUSSEER-      trees for supplying to licensed shopkeepers. Those licences were issued by WANJI      the Collector of Bombay (respondent No. 1) continuously from the year 1916
v.      down to July 31, 1939. On August 1, 1939, the licences were cancelled by McELHINNY      respondent No. 1 under the policy of prohibition initiated by the Government —      of Bombay.

On November 18, 1940, the petitioner applied to respondent No. 1 for a grant to him of the necessary permit or licence to tap or draw toddy from his trees for the purpose of private or domestic consumption only. On November 29, 1940, respondent No. 1 passed an order refusing to grant the tapping licence applied for.

On December 3, 1940, the petitioner appealed against the said order to the Commissioner of Excise (respondent No. 2). Respondent No. 2 replied, on December 7, 1940, that respondent No. 1 was not bound to issue a tapping licence and that he saw no reason to interfere with his order.

On February 5, 1941, the petitioner filed a petition in the High Court, under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, to obtain an order ordering the respondents or either of them "to grant and issue to the petitioner a licence or permit on payment of fees if any and on terms and conditions usual and proper and which the respondents or any of them may lawfully impose or insert in such license ... to enable the petitioner to tap and draw toddy from toddy-producing trees belonging to the petitioner and standing on his land ... for the purpose of private or domestic consumption only, that is of himself and members of his family and for friends and guests."

The petitioner alleged that the respondents were bound, under s. 30 of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, to grant a licence, permit or pass, on payment of such fees, if any, and subject to such conditions as might be imposed; that the toddy was required only as a fresh drink free from intoxication by the members of his family and friends and guests; that if he did not tap or draw toddy from his trees in the present season the trees would deteriorate and in course of time cease to be toddy-producing trees, with the result that his valuable lands and properties would be converted into waste and useless land causing him considerable loss and damage; and that the respondents were bound in law to consider each application on its merits and were not entitled to generally refuse to grant any licence in the manner they were doing.

On February 5, 1941, the Court (Blackwell J.) granted a rule nisi calling upon the respondents to show cause why the order sought by the petitioner should not be made.

Respondent No. 1 in his affidavit contended inter alia that the petitioner had never held a domestic consumption licence; that neither of the respondents was bound, under s. 30 of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, to grant a licence, permit or pass; that respondent No. 1 had a discretion to refuse to grant such a licence; that it was not true that if toddy was not drawn during the season the trees would deteriorate and in course of time they would cease to be toddy-producing trees; that the petitioner's trees were cocoanut-trees and as such yielded cocoanut-fruits in course of time ; and that respondent No. 1 refused to grant the licence applied for in the exercise of the discretion vested in him in that behalf.

The rule was heard.

BLACKWELL J. The petitioner is the owner of land in various districts upon which grow toddy-producing trees. Up to July 31, 1939, licences were granted to his agents or managers for tapping the trees and supplying toddy to shops. Thereafter owing to the introduction of prohibition no such licences were granted. By a letter dated November 18, 1940, from his solicitors to the Collector of Bombay, the petitioner applied for the issue of a licence to tap and draw toddy from the trees on his land at Lady Jamsetji Road, Upper Mahim, for private consumption, and not for sale. This application is not in the form prescribed by r. 4 of the rules for the tapping of toddy-producing trees to which I shall presently refer, but the Advocate General informed me that he desired the matter to be argued as if the application were in the form prescribed by the rules. In a letter in reply dated November 29, 1940, the Collector regretted his inability to grant a licence. The petitioner then appealed, as he was entitled to do, to the Commissioner of Excise, Bombay, by a petition dated December 3, 1940. By his letter dated December 7, 1940, the Commissioner informed the petitioner that the Collector was not bound to issue a tapping licence to the petitioner, and that he saw no reason for interfering with the order of the Collector. The petitioner then presented a petition under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, against both the Collector and the Commissioner asking that they and/or either of them might be ordered to grant and issue a licence. Copies of the application made to the Collector and the other documents above referred to are exhibited to the petition. A rule nisi was granted upon this petition. Before it came on for argument respondent No. 2 went on leave. Mr. M. D. Bhansali, who has been appointed to officiate as Commissioner of Excise, has agreed to abide by any order made by the Court.

I propose in the first instance to consider the law as to the application for and the granting of licences for the tapping and drawing of toddy from toddy-producing trees before the introduction of prohibition into certain areas in the Province of Bombay, and thereafter to consider what effect prohibition had upon the law as it previously stood. The law is to be found in the Bombay Abkari Act of 1878 and in the rules made thereunder. As was pointed out by the Court in Emperor v. Waman Dhanraj<sup>1</sup>, the Abkari Act is a Licencing Statute, and in Emperor v. Chinubhai Lalbhai<sup>2</sup> the Court expressed the opinion that the object of the Act was primarily to secure Abkari revenue, though some of the sections, for example s. 17A and s. 35(2)(g) and (h), showed that the Legislature intended also to confer power to control the trade in drink and drugs, and to obviate abuses which might arise from such trades. I proceed to review the relevant sections of the Act and the rules.

Section 3 is the interpretation clause. By sub-s. (3) "Commissioner" in-

(4) "Collector" includes any person appointed under s. 5 to exercise the powers and perform the duties of a Collector under the Act. By sub-s. (6) "toddy" means juice drawn from a cocoanut, brab, date or any kind of palm-tree, whether in its fermented or unfermented state. By sub-s. (7) "liquor" includes, among other things, toddy and all liquid consisting or containing alcohol. By sub-s. (8) "country-liquor" includes all liquor produced or manufactured in India, and "foreign liquor" includes all liquor imported into India by sea or land, and there is a proviso that the Provincial Government may by notification in the Official Gazette declare that any specified description of country liquor shall for the purposes of this Act be deemed to be foreign liquor. Sub-section (10) defines the meaning of "to import" and "to export", and says that "to transport" means to move to one place from another place within the Province. By sub-s. (15) "excisable article" means, among other things, any alcoholic liquor for human consumption. By sub-s. 15(a) "intoxicant" means any liquor or intoxicating drug. By sub-s. (17) "to tap" means to prepare any part of a tree, or to use any means, for the purpose of causing juice to exude from the tree.

Sections 4 to 8 are preceded by the heading "Establishment and Control." Section 4 is as follows :—

"Subject to the control and direction of the Commissioner and the orders of the Provincial Government, the Collectors are charged with the collection of the Abkari-revenue, and with the carrying out of the provisions of this Act.

For the purposes of this Act, the Collector of Bombay shall be subordinate to such Commissioner as the Provincial Government directs."

The Advocate General contended that this section makes the Provincial Government the supreme authority in relation to the granting of licences for tapping and drawing toddy from toddy-producing trees, and that by virtue of this section the Collector is bound to obey the orders of the Provincial Government with reference to the granting of such licences. Sir Jamshedji Kanga, on the other hand, contended that this section relates only to control in reference to establishment, and not to the power to grant such licences which he submitted is controlled only by the rules made under the Act. He pointed out that under s. 60 there is an appeal to the Commissioner from an order of the Collector, and submitted that in view of this it cannot have been intended by s. 4 that the Collector in exercising his power to grant such licences should be subject to the directions of the Commissioner, inasmuch as in that event the right of appeal would be a farce. He referred to sub-s. (4) of s. 3 under which "Collector" includes any person appointed under s. 5 to exercise the powers and perform the duties of a Collector under the Act, and submitted that the meaning of s. 4 is that the Collectors are not to be regarded as the only persons charged with the collection of Abkari revenue and with the carrying out of the provisions of the Act. As another illustration he referred to a Notification dated February 21, 1939, issued in exercise of the powers conferred by s. 6 of the Act investing the Superintendent of Excise, Bombay, within his jurisdiction with the powers under s. 14(1) (c) and (d) of the Act. I have come to the conclusion that s. 4 relates only to control in reference to establishment, and not to the power to grant such licences, and that such power is controlled only by the rules made under the Act. I shall give my reasons for this conclusion as I proceed.

Section 5 is as follows :—

“The Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint any person other than the Collector of Land-revenue to exercise, in any district or place, all the powers and perform all the duties conferred and imposed by this Act on a Collector, subject to such control, if any, in addition to that of the Commissioner and of the Provincial Government as the Provincial Government may from time to time direct”.

This section in my opinion also relates to control of establishment, and not to the power to grant such licences.

Section 6 is as follows :—

“To aid the Collectors in carrying out the provisions of this Act, the Provincial Government may appoint such subordinate officers, with such designations, and assign to them respectively such powers and duties under this Act, as it deems fit.

The Provincial Government, or, subject to such orders as aforesaid, the Commissioners may invest any servant of the Crown in any department either personally or in right of his office, or any other person, with such powers, and impose upon him such duties, under this Act as they deem fit, and any such officer shall thereupon exercise the said powers and discharge the said duties in addition to the powers and duties incident to his principal office :

Provided that powers under sections 36 and 40, clause (b) shall in no case be conferred on any officer of any department who is not superior in rank to a peon, or constable, and that any assignment of, or investment with, powers or duties made under this section may at any time be cancelled or varied by the authority, which made it.”

This section in my opinion makes it plain that s. 4 relates only to control of establishment. The words “subject to such orders as aforesaid” refer to the word “orders” in s. 4. Section 8 empowers Commissioners to delegate the powers conferred upon them by s. 6. In my opinion ss. 4 to 8 relate only to the appointment of officers and to control in reference to establishment and to nothing else.

Sections 9 to 13 relate to import, export and transport. These sections no doubt show that the Provincial Government is the ultimate authority in regard to such matters, but this is so by virtue of the provisions contained in these sections themselves, and not by virtue of s. 4.

Sections 14 to 15A were before the introduction of the amending Act to which I shall refer later preceded by the words “Cultivation and Manufacture.” Section 14(1) is as follows :—

“Save as hereinafter otherwise provided,

- (a) no intoxicant shall be manufactured ;
- (b) no hemp shall be cultivated or collected ;
- (c) no toddy-producing tree shall be tapped ;
- (d) no toddy shall be drawn from any tree ;
- (e) no foreign liquor shall be bottled ; and
- (f) no person shall use, keep or have in his possession any materials, still, utensil, implement or apparatus whatsoever for the purpose of manufacturing any intoxicant other than toddy, except under the authority and subject to the conditions of a licence granted in that behalf by the Collector.”

By virtue of this section there is an implied power conferred upon the Collector to grant licences. I shall consider the effect of this sub-section later.

Section 14B, before it was amended by Bombay Act VI of 1940, later referred to, was as follows :—

(1) No person not being a licensed manufacturer or vendor of any intoxicant or hemp and no licensed vendor except as authorised by his licence shall have in his possession any quantity of any intoxicant or hemp in excess of such limit as the Provincial Government under section 17 may declare to be the limit of retail sale, except under a permit from the Collector :

provided that nothing in sub-section (1) shall extend to any foreign liquor, other than denatured spirit, in the possession of any common carrier or warehouseman as such, or purchased by any person for his bona fide private consumption and not for sale ;

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) the Provincial Government may by notification in the Official Gazette prohibit the possession by any person or class of persons, either throughout the whole Presidency or in any local area, of any intoxicant, either absolutely or subject to such conditions as it may prescribe."

This section among other things gave the Provincial Government the right by notification in the Official Gazette to prohibit the possession by any person or class of persons of any intoxicant. If this power had been exercised, it might, to the extent to which it had been exercised, have affected the Collector's power to grant such licences. Apart from this the section has no bearing upon the power to grant such licences. I shall refer to this section again later.

At the end of s. 19A, which falls under the heading "Duties", there is a proviso that in the cases therein mentioned "such duty may be levied in consideration of the joint privileges granted as the Collector, acting under the general or special orders of the Provincial Government, deems fit." If s. 4 had the meaning and scope for which the Advocate General contended, it would have been quite unnecessary to insert in this proviso the words "acting under the general or special orders of Government," and it would have been enough to say merely "as the Collector deems fit," seeing that, if the Advocate General is right, he would have been subject to the orders of Government under s. 4. The fact that such words are used in this proviso and in other sections of the Act assists me in my conclusion that s. 4 is intended to deal only with control in reference to establishment.

Section 20 deals with the duty to be levied on the tapping of toddy trees, and says that "every licence for drawing toddy granted under s. 14 shall specify, in addition to any other particulars prescribed by the Provincial Government under s. 30," the particulars therein mentioned. This section indicates that such licences are to be granted under s. 14 of the Act. There is a similar reference to s. 14 in s. 19 (c) in connection with duties imposed on any excisable article manufactured under a licence granted in accordance with the provisions of s. 14. These references to the granting of such licences in sections falling under the heading "Duties" indicate in my opinion that the object of the Act in insisting upon the application for a licence was to ensure the payment of duties, and was not for any other purpose. This object, I think, becomes still more plain when the rules applicable to such licences are considered. Section 14 of the Act read in conjunction with the rules contemplates in my opinion that such licences shall be granted in accordance with the rules to enable the duties imposed to be levied.

Section 25 deals with the privilege of drawing toddy from trees the right to which vests in the Provincial Government, and provides that such privilege may be disposed of annually by auction or otherwise on such terms as the Collector, acting under the general orders of the Provincial Government, deems fit. There would have been no need to insert the words "acting under the general orders of the Provincial Government" if s. 4 was an all embracing section.

"Every licence, permit or pass granted under this Act shall be granted on payment of such fees, if any, and subject to such restrictions, and on such conditions, and shall be in such form and contain such particulars, and may, in case any fee or duty payable by the holder be not duly paid, impose liability for interest thereon at such rate, as the Provincial Government in the case of licenses and the Commissioner in the case of permits and passes, may direct in rules or orders made either generally or in any particular instance in this behalf, such rules or orders being not inconsistent with this Act."

This is not the section under which licences to tap and draw toddy are granted. They are granted under s. 14. The meaning of § 30, in my opinion, is that such licences, if granted, shall be granted on payment of such fees, and subject to such restrictions and conditions and shall be in such form as the Provincial Government may direct in rules and orders which are not to be inconsistent with the Act.

Section 32 authorises the cancellation or suspension of licences, permits or passes in any of the events therein mentioned. The section begins with the words "Subject to such restrictions as the Provincial Government may prescribe, the authority granting any licence, permit or pass under this Act may cancel or suspend it." If s. 4 were an all embracing section there would have been no need to insert the words "Subject to such restrictions as the Provincial Government may prescribe."

Section 35 deals with the power of the Provincial Government to frame rules. This section is preceded by the heading "Powers of Abkari-Officers." The opening words of the section are as follows :—

"The Provincial Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act or any other law for the time being in force relating to Abkari-revenue."

Sub-section (2) says :—"In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, the Provincial Government may make rules", and the purposes for which rules may be made are set out. One of the purposes is mentioned in (b) as "prescribing the powers and duties of officers of the Abkari Department." Sub-section (3) enacts that "the power to make rules under this section shall be subject to the condition of previous publication," and there is a proviso that any such rules may be made without previous publication if the Provincial Government consider that they should be brought into force at once. I think it is plain from ss. 35 and 35A, to which I shall presently refer, that the powers of Abkari Officers can be controlled only by rules made under these sections, and not by orders issued under s. 4. Rules under s. 35 are, subject to the power given by the proviso, subject to previous publication, and even in the case of the proviso rules must be made, and not merely orders issued. It is significant that the opening words of the section refer to rules made for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Act. If s. 4 were the controlling section there would be no need for rules, and administrative orders would suffice. I think it is clear that orders cannot be issued under s. 4 overriding the rules. If they could, many sections of the Act would be nullified. The material provisions of s. 35A are as follows :—

“The Commissioner may make rules—

(a) regulating the manufacture, supply or storage of any intoxicant or hemp including ;

(iii) the tapping of toddy-producing trees and the drawing of toddy from such trees ;

(c) prescribing in the case of any intoxicant the way in which the duty on such article shall be levied ;

(d) prescribing the scale of fees or the manner of fixing the fees payable in respect of any privilege, licence, permit or pass or of the storing of any intoxicant or hemp ;

(e) regulating the time, place and manner of payment of any duty or fee ;

(f) prescribing the restrictions under and the conditions on which any licence, permit or pass may be granted,....”

The Tapping Rules, to which I shall presently draw attention, were made in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-cl. (iii) of clause (d) and cl. (e) of this section, and under s. 64 they are to have the force of law. In my opinion the Legislature intended that the officers charged with the power to issue licences should be controlled by rules which were to have the force of law, and did not intend that the provisions of s. 4 were to override the elaborate provisions of the Act made in this behalf.

Section 43 deals with penalties. The material provisions are as follows :—

“Whoever in contravention of this Act or of any rule or order made under this Act or of any license, permit or pass obtained under this Act—

(d) taps any toddy-producing tree, or shall, on conviction, be punished” as therein mentioned.

(e) draws toddy from any tree,....

Section 60 relates to appeals. The material part is as follows :—

“All orders passed by a Collector or Commissioner shall be appealable to the Commissioner or to the Provincial Government, respectively, at any time within ninety days from the date of the order complained of ;

Provided that no appeal shall lie against an order passed by a Commissioner on appeal.”

The Advocate General contended that by virtue of this section the Commissioner has an absolute unfettered discretion to grant or refuse a licence. I do not take this view of the section. In my opinion the Commissioner in the case of an appeal is substituted for the Collector, and the Commissioner is then charged with the duty of considering the application for the licence in the light of the Act and the rules made thereunder in exactly the same way as the Collector is so charged. To hold otherwise would, in my opinion, involve giving the go-by to the Act and the rules.

The Advocate General drew attention to the use of the word "shall" in s. 62, which excepts certain medicated articles from the provisions of the Act, but empowers the Provincial Government by notification in the Official Gazette to prohibit the sale of any such article within any defined local area or place generally "except under licence from the Collector, which shall be granted on payment of such fees and subject to such conditions as the Provincial Government may deem fit to prescribe." The Advocate General contrasted the wording of this section with that of s. 14, which in his submission gives the Collector an absolute discretion to grant or refuse a licence. I shall return to this argument when I consider the effect of s. 14 and the rules made thereunder.

Section 64 is as follows :—

"All rules made under any power conferred by this Act shall be published in the Official Gazette and on such publication shall have effect as if enacted in this Act."

The rules when made and published thus form part of the Act.

Rules for the tapping of toddy-producing trees and drawing of toddy therefrom were made and published in the Bombay Government Gazette, Part I, dated August 16, 1928, p. 1693, and subject to some immaterial amendments are in force to-day.

The material parts of these rules are as follows :—

"In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-clause (iii) of clause (a) and clause (e) of section 35A of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878 (Bom. V of 1878), and in supersession of this Office Notification No. 81-16/24 of December 9, 1924, the Commissioner of Excise, Bombay, is pleased to make the following rules for the tapping of toddy-producing trees and the drawing of toddy therefrom and for regulating the time, place and manner of payment of the tree-tax thereon, namely :—

1. Short title, extent and definition.—

- (1) These rules may be called the Bombay Toddy Tapping Rules, 1928.
- (2) They extend to the whole of the Presidency of Bombay, excluding Sind and Aden.
- (3) In these rules (a) "Act" means the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, (b) "Commissioner" means the Commissioner of Excise, Bombay, and (c) "Excise Inspector" and "Inspector" include a Sub-Inspector or Assistant Inspector in charge of a taluka or peta.

2. Tapping licence for what purposes may be issued. Licences for the tapping of toddy-producing trees may be issued for supplying toddy to shops, tree-foot booths, hawkers or for domestic consumption.

3. Period of tapping licences. Tapping licences shall be current for the period of one year from the 1st April to 31st March of each year in the Ratnagiri District and from the 1st August to the 31st July in each year in the rest of the Presidency proper.

4. Application for a tapping licence. Any person desirous of obtaining a licence to tap trees in Bombay and any person in the mofussil who has secured a licence for sale of toddy at a shop or booth or for the use of toddy for domestic consumption, shall present, at least 15 days previous to the date on which he intends to tap them, an application in triplicate, in Form A hereto "appended, or in such other form as the Commissioner may from time to time prescribe, to the Excise Inspector of the range in Bombay and to the Mamlatdar or Mahalkari of the taluka or mahal in the mofussil where the trees to be tapped are situated. Trees in different talukas or ranges or required for different shops or booths must not be included in the same application except in the case of Bombay where trees intended to be tapped for supply of toddy to different shops may be included in one application."

"9. Verification of particulars of application by Excise Inspector :—The Excise Inspector to whom the application is presented shall verify the particulars contained in it, correcting them where necessary, and when they are ascertained to be correct, shall hand over one copy of the application to the applicant duly signed by himself and retain the other copy on his own records.

10. Particulars of application and challan to be checked by Chief Account Officer :—The applicant shall then present the copy of the application with a challan in triplicate for the amount of tree-tax payable by him in respect of the trees mentioned in the application and tender the amount to the Chief Account Officer of Customs, Salt and Opium, Bombay. The latter shall check the amount of the tree-tax and on receipt of the money sign all three copies of the challan and hand over two of them, together with the application, to the applicant retaining the third copy of the challan on his records.

11. Entries in the toddy register.—The applicant shall then produce the two copies of the receipted challan to the Superintendent of Excise, Bombay, who shall enter full particulars of the application "in the register of toddy trees in Form B hereto. He shall enter in the said register in the column provided for the purpose the amount of the first instalment of the tree-tax paid and the date on which it was paid the serial number of the licence as shown in the register being at the same time entered in the application and on the two copies of the challan. One copy of the challan shall then be kept on his records and the other returned to the applicant.

In the case of trees belonging to Government the Superintendent of Excise shall see that the applicant has attached a certificate from the Government Department concerned, to the effect that he has permission to tap the trees. In such cases the column "Proprietor's signature" in the application form need not be filled in. The certificate of the Government Department authorising tapping of trees shall be retained by the Superintendent of Excise.

12. Numbering toddy trees and issue of licences.—The Superintendent of Excise, Bombay, shall then forward the application to the Divisional Inspector concerned who shall direct the applicant to proceed at once with the work of marking the trees with numbers in accordance with the provisions of rule 13 and to commence tapping. The Superintendent of Excise, Bombay, shall then prepare and forward to the Divisional Inspector, duly signed by him for delivery to the licensee, the tapping licence for the number of trees licensed to be tapped by him."

25. Renewal or transfer of licence at Collector's discretion.—It is entirely within the discretion of the Collector to renew a licence at the expiration of the term for which it was granted or permit the assignee of the holder of the licence in case of sale or transfer, or the heir or legal representative of the holder of the licence in case of death, to have the benefit of the licence for the unexpired portion of the term for which it was granted."

The Advocate General laid stress upon the use of the word "may" in r. 2, and contended that the use of this word gave to the Collector an absolute discretion to grant or refuse a licence. Sir Jamshedji Kanga on the other hand relied upon r. 25, which in terms authorises the Collector to renew or sanction the transfer of a licence at his discretion, and stressed the use of the word "shall" in many of the rules and in particular in r. 12. The Advocate General contended that these rules were mere machinery, and submitted that they could not over-ride the provisions of s. 4 of the Act. Sir Jamshedji Kanga argued with force that it would be useless to frame elaborate rules under the Act which are to have the force of law, if they were liable to be defeated by orders issued under s. 4. I think that the argument of Sir Jamshedji Kanga is right. In my opinion the word "may" in r. 2 is used merely with the object of enumerating the purposes for which tapping licences can be issued, namely, for supplying toddy to shops, tree-foot booths, hawkers or for domestic consumption, and to indicate that they may not be issued for any other purposes. I do not think that the word "may" in this connection means that the Collector has a discretion to grant or refuse a licence if applied for in respect of one of the designated purposes. Rule 4 prescribes the form in which an application for a licence is to be made. The use of the word "shall" in r. 9 makes it incumbent upon the Excise Inspector to verify the particulars contained in the application, and to do the other things therein mentioned. The word "shall" is similarly used in rr. 10 and 11. Then comes r. 12, which is imperative in its terms. After the requirements of the earlier rules have been complied with, "The Superintendent of Excise, Bombay, shall then forward the application to the Divisional Inspector concerned, who shall direct the applicant to proceed at once with the work of marking the trees with numbers in accordance with the provisions of r. 13 and to commence tapping. The Superintendent of Excise, Bombay, shall then prepare and forward to the Divisional Inspector, duly signed by him for delivery to the licensee, the tapping licence for the number of trees licensed to be tapped by him." Having regard to the use of the word "shall" in these rules, which are to have the same force as if enacted in the Act, I am of opinion that no question of the exercise of any discretion by the Collector in the granting of a licence arises, provided that the requirements of the rules are complied with, but that a statutory duty to issue a licence is imposed by s. 14(1) of the Act, which I shall proceed to consider, read in conjunction with the rules.

The words "except under the authority and subject to the conditions of a licence granted in that behalf by the Collector" in s. 14(1) are very similar to the words used in s. 411 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, namely, "No person shall without... a licence granted by the Commissioner" do various things. In Fakir Mahomed v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay,<sup>1</sup> Kania J. considered s. 411 of that Act. He pointed out that in that Act there was no express provision giving power to the Commissioner to grant a licence, but he held that the power was impliedly vested in the Commissioner, and that the power to refuse a licence must also be vested in him because a power to grant necessarily implies a right to refuse. So also in Haji Ismail Haji Essac v. The Municipal Commissioner of Bombay<sup>2</sup> in considering s. 394 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, (which is very similar to s. 14 of the Bombay Abkari Act, s. 479 of the Municipal Act being also very similar to s. 30 of the Bombay Abkari Act), the Court held that the power of the Municipal Commissioner to grant a licence includes the power to refuse it. The Advocate General relied upon these decisions, and submitted that under s. 14(1) the Collector has an absolute discretion to grant or refuse a licence, and that so long as the exercise of his discretion was, in the words of Lord Halsbury L. C. in Sharp v. Wakefield,<sup>3</sup> not "arbitrary, vague and fanciful, but legal and regular," it would not be called in question.

In Rex v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner, Holloway, Ex parte,<sup>1</sup> the Court had to consider the effect of ss. 6 and 11 of the Metropolitan Carriage Act, 1869, and of a regulation made by the Secretary of State. Section 6 empowered the Secretary of State to grant licences for hackney and stage carriages. He had an absolute discretion under this section. Section 11 empowered the Commissioner of Police to grant a licence "if the said Secretary of State so directs." A regulation made by the Secretary of State provided that "a licence... may be granted to any person by the Commissioner of Police, subject to the following exceptions," which were set out as (a) and (b). The Court held that the discretion of the Commissioner of Police was not a general discretion to grant or refuse all applications, but was limited to the exceptions contained in cls. (a) and (b) of the regulation. Towards the end of his judgment Cozens-Hardy M. R. said (p. 1138) :—

"But then it has been said that the word used in the Order is not 'shall,' but 'may.' We have had our attention called, and not for the first time, to Julius v. Lord Bishop of Oxford,<sup>2</sup> and it seems to me it is impossible to read this Act of Parliament, dealing with an existing well-known numerous class of traders in the city of London, and to say that this is not a case in which there is a duty imposed to grant the licence subject to the express conditions imposed by the Secretary of State in the mandate which has been conferred upon the Commissioner of Police."

I have derived much assistance from the judgments in that case. The Advocate General conceded that if the rules made under the Abkari Act limit the discretion of the Collector and s. 4 is not an over-riding section, this case puts him out of Court. Sir Jamshedji Kanga referred to Gell v. Taja Noora,<sup>3</sup> a case in which the discretion of the Commissioner of Police to grant licences for public conveyances under s. 6 of Bombay Act VI of 1863 was limited by a proviso, and the Court held that his discretion was not absolute, and that he was bound to consider each case in the light of the proviso. Sir Jamshedji submitted that in the present case both the Collector and the Commissioner were bound to consider the application in the light of the rules. I think that the implied power conferred upon the Collector by s. 14(1) to grant or refuse a licence is limited by the rules. He would, e.g., have power to refuse a licence if the application were not in the form required by r. 4. But, if the requirements of the rules are complied with, there is, in my opinion, a statutory duty imposed upon the Collector to grant a licence, and this statutory duty is not affected by anything contained in s. 4.

Having considered the meaning of the Act before the introduction of prohibition, I now proceed to consider what effect prohibition had upon the law as it previously stood. On July 14, 1939, the Government of Bombay issued a notification<sup>4</sup> that in pursuance of its policy of prohibition it had passed the orders therein mentioned. Order 1 was as follows :—

1. Unauthorised possession of intoxicants.—"On and after 1st August 1939 no and by sub-s. (d) of Order 32 the Commissioner was directed to submit at a very early date the requisite draft notifications, rules, permits, forms, et cetera, for giving effect to the above mentioned orders. On July 17, 1939, the Government of Bombay issued a notification No. 374/39 (c),<sup>1</sup> which is in the following terms :—

ment of Bombay is pleased to prohibit, with effect from 1st August 1939, the possession by any person in the area specified in the margin * called the Bombay Prohibition Area without a permit or a licence issued by an Abkari Officer duly authorised in that behalf—

(a) of any intoxicant specified in the schedule hereto in excess of the quantity specified against the said intoxicant.

(b) of any quantity of any other intoxicants except—

- (i) spirituous toilet preparation,
- (ii) essences,
- (iii) perfumed spirits,
- (iv) toddy possessed for making gul permitted under a special licence granted by the Collector in this behalf.
- (v) intoxicants containing alcohol not exceeding 2 per cent. by volume."

Section 14B of the Act under which this notification was issued was as follows :—

"(1) No person not being a licensed manufacturer or vendor of any intoxicant or hemp and no licensed vendor except as authorised by his license shall have in his possession any quantity of any intoxicant or hemp in excess of such limit as the Provincial Government under section 17 may declare to be the limit of retail sale, except under a permit from the Collector :

provided that nothing in sub-section (1) shall extend to any foreign liquor, other than denatured spirit, in the possession of any common carrier or warehouseman as such, or purchased by any person for his bona fide private consumption and not for sale ;

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) the Provincial Government may by notification in the Official Gazette prohibit the possession by any person or class of persons, either throughout the whole Presidency or in any local area, of any intoxicant, either absolutely or subject to such conditions as it may prescribe".

On April 11, 1940, the question of the validity of this notification came before a full bench in Emperor v. Chinubhai Lalbhai.<sup>2</sup> It was held that the power under sub-s. (2) of s. 14B to prohibit the possession by any person or class of persons either throughout the whole Presidency or any local area of any intoxicant does not justify Government in prohibiting possession by the public generally, and the notification was ultra vires and of no effect.

On the same day, after this decision had been given, Bombay Act VI of 1940 was passed amending the Abkari Act. The object of the Act as set out in the preamble was to remove doubts as to the validity of certain rules, Section 3 provides that in the preamble of the Abkari Act of 1878, after the word "Bombay" the words "and whereas in order to promote, enforce and carry into effect the policy of Prohibition, it is necessary to prohibit the import, export, transport, manufacture, sale and possession of liquor and of intoxicating drugs in the Province of Bombay or in specified areas thereof" shall be inserted. For the heading to Chapter IV of the Act, which immediately precedes s. 14, "Cultivation and Manufacture" s. 5 substitutes the heading "Cultivation, Manufacture and Possession". Section 6 is as follows :—

"In section 14B of the said Act,—

(a) the proviso to sub-section (1) shall be deleted; and

(b) in sub-section (2), for the words 'any person or class of persons' the words "any individual or a class or body of individuals or the public generally" shall be substituted."

Section 7 is as follows :—

"The amendments made by this Act in the preamble and the provisions of the said Act shall have effect from the date on which the said preamble and the said provisions were respectively enacted and any rule, order or notification made or issued under the said Act before the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to have been made or issued under the said Act as amended by this Act and no prosecution, suit or other proceeding shall lie against any person for anything in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of any such rule, order or notification, as the case may be."

It will be observed that by s. 6, sub-s. (2) of s. 14B was amended by enabling the prohibition to extend to "any individual or a class or body of individuals or the public generally", the effect of which would be, as regards notifications issued under the amending Act, to remove the ground upon which the Notification of July 17, 1939, had been held to be invalid.

In Emperor v. Dantes,<sup>1</sup> the accused was alleged to have infringed the provisions of the said notification of July 17, 1939, and the question whether in view of the amending Act that notification was valid and in force came before a full bench. It was held that the only notifications which fell within s. 7 of the amending Act were the notifications effective at the date of the passing of the amending Act, and that the section did not affect the construction of notifications already rescinded, still less of the notification which had been declared invalid, and therefore had never had any effect and was a mere nullity, that s. 7 did not apply to the notification of July, 1939, which was declared to be ultra vires, and that even if it did apply, it had not the effect of reviving the notification. The Court was asked to express its views upon the validity of the notification, upon the assumption that it had been revived and was to be treated as passed under the original Act as amended by the amending Act. The Court accordingly expressed its views, stating that these views were not intended to form part of the decision, but were obiter only. The Court expressed the view that the notification, upon the assumption just referred to, was invalid and went beyond the powers of the Provincial Legislature. A right to legislate as to possession of intoxicating liquors, given by item No. 31 in list II of the Seventh Schedule of the Government of India Act, 1935, necessarily involves a right to prohibit possession. The Court thought, therefore, that the Provincial Legislature has power so to limit possession, provided that in doing so it does not encroach upon the powers of the Central Legislature (item 10 in List 1); accordingly the Provincial Legislature has no power to legislate in respect of possession of intoxicants in such a way as to encroach upon the right to import and export across the customs frontier, and the power was a qualified power, subject to the rights of the Central Government.

That decision having been given, and those views expressed, on July 1, 1940, the Government of Bombay on July 14, 1940, authorised the issue of a Press Note through the Director of Information. It is a remarkable document. In it the Government of Bombay frankly recognized the difficulties involved in attempting to introduce prohibition by mere amendments to what is essentially a licensing and revenue Act. In particular it stated that the Government did not intend, so long as the legal position remained unmodified, to re-issue a notification under s. 14B(2) of the Bombay Abkari Act. How in the face of that Press Note either the Collector or the Commissioner could have thought that there were in existence orders of Government under which they were bound to refuse a licence, I find it difficult to understand. I think that the explanation probably is that they were aware of certain applications later referred to which were refused before the first full bench decision, and thought that they were bound by those refusals to refuse the present application. I think it desirable to set out the material portions of that Press Note. They are as follows :—

"The Government of Bombay considers it desirable to explain, for the information of the public, the present position regarding the prohibition of the possession of intoxicants in Bombay and other "Prohibition" areas in the light of recent legal decisions."

In Criminal Reference No. 75 of 1940 (that is to say, the judgment delivered on July 1), the Bombay High Court held that the notification issued on July 17, 1939, under section 14B(2) of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, prohibiting the possession of intoxicants in Bombay City, was not validated by Bombay Act VI of 1940 (the Governor's Act) and was ineffective. The High Court also stated that it was beyond the powers of the Provincial Legislature to enact any law prohibiting possession of intoxicants in such a way as to encroach upon the right to import and export across the Customs frontiers.

Previous to this legal decision the Government of Bombay had in view making certain changes in the policy of prohibition, as the result of the experience gained since it has been in force. These changes were intended to maintain prohibition for country liquor and toddy, but would have altered the regulations in respect of foreign liquor with the object of making them more acceptable to those who had been accustomed to foreign liquor. These contemplated changes have now to be reviewed and made to conform to what is legally possible as the result of the High Court decision.

The Government of Bombay proposes to apply for a certificate to appeal to the Federal Court against the judgment of the High Court. But so long as the view taken by the High Court is not reversed or modified by a higher tribunal, it has to be followed and any notification issued under section 14B(2) of the Bombay Abkari Act prohibiting possession of intoxicants would have to exclude from its purview the possession of any intoxicant following upon, or incidental to, the import of such intoxicant across a Customs frontier, or preceding or incidental to the export thereof across such frontier.

"Under such a notification any person who wished to import liquor from any place outside British India through any Customs port or land customs station could do so without the Bombay authorities being able to take any action to prevent the import. The importer could consume it, though he might by the exercise of other powers be prevented from selling it. It would thus be open to anybody who so wished to order his supplies from outside British India.

The questions incidental to export are even more difficult. Any person, notwithstanding the notification, would be able to bring into a prohibited area liquor, unlimited in quantity, on the plea that he was intending to export it later across a Customs frontier, and it would not be possible to prevent his possession of it. It would be impossible, in practice, to prevent effectively much of the liquor thus illicitly transported being consumed in a prohibited area.

Any system of prohibition, which would have to allow in a prohibited area the presence of a privileged class of liquor unlimited in extent would clearly be administratively impracticable, and for this reason Government does not intend, so long as the legal position remained unmodified, to re-issue a notification under section 14B(2) of the Bombay Abkari Act, or to enact a Prohibition Act which would have to be subject to the same disabilities.

It must be added that it is clear, from the experience of the past and from the advice tendered by the law officers, that attempts to adapt the provisions of the Abkari Act to a policy of prohibition are liable to be challenged in the Courts, and with each successful challenge the effective basis of prohibition is shaken and the administrative difficulties of enforcement greatly increased. It is Government's considered view that even if the present legal position came to be modified by a higher tribunal, effective prohibition of intoxicants could only be satisfactorily secured by the passing of a specific and comprehensive Prohibition Act to replace the Abkari Act. Such an Act would need to be elaborate and would be controversial, and would not be likely to secure that general acceptance which is necessary for its success unless it were fashioned by a Legislature. The Government considers that a measure of this character should be left to be enacted by a Legislature.

Meanwhile the immediate problem before the Government is to adapt its procedure both to what is possible under the Abkari Act and to what conforms to recent legal decisions. Under these limitations the Government proposes to do what is possible to reduce to a minimum the consumption of country liquor and toddy in the prohibited areas, while relaxing to a considerable extent the conditions relating to foreign liquor.

The following is the procedure which will now be adopted in the prohibited areas :—

(1) No sale of country liquor or toddy will be permitted in any prohibited area, except, as at present, for authorised sacramental purposes.

(2) Though it will not be possible effectively to prohibit entirely the entry of country liquor or toddy in a prohibited area, its entry will be discouraged, by the imposition of a high excise duty on any transport into a prohibited area etc., from any area outside it, and no country liquor or toddy will be allowed to enter the area unless a receipt for such duty having been paid is produced.

The duty will, if possible, be so fixed as to raise the price of country liquor approximately to that of foreign spirit of similar alcoholic content within the area, and of toddy to that of fermented foreign liquor.

This will necessitate, of course, the retention of a "prohibition" staff on the roads and railways, but if the co-operation of the public in detecting illicit transport and manufacture be obtained, it should be possible to restrict consumption of country liquor to those who can afford to pay really high prices....

"Broadly, the effect of these regulations in Bombay will be that in Bombay, and its suburbs no country liquor or toddy will be on sale anywhere (except for sacramental liquor sold at the four Government Depots) and sale by any private person will be punishable.

A person may bring into Bombay and Salsette country liquor or toddy only provided that he has previously paid a special excise duty and obtained a receipt from an Excise Officer for the amount paid. If a person is found bringing in country liquor or toddy without a pass for it he will be liable to prosecution. If he has paid the excise duty, he may possess the duty paid liquor for his own private use. But its sale will be punishable.

The rates of duty will be notified shortly; that for Bombay will probably be Rs. 6 a quart bottle for country liquor of 40° U. P. and Re. 1 for toddy.

There will be no restrictions on the purchase, or possession of foreign liquor by any private individual, but its sale except by licensed vendors will be punishable.

It will be observed from this Press Note that Government stated that there was no intention, so long as the legal position remained unmodified, to re-issue a notification under s. 14B(2) of the Bombay Abkari Act, and none has in fact been issued. Accordingly the power to issue licences under s. 14(1) of the Act and the rules for tapping toddy-producing trees and drawing toddy therefrom at the date of the application made by the petitioner was in my opinion exactly the same as it was before the issue of the notification of July 17, 1939, and the amendments of the Act by Act VI of 1940, no fresh notification having been issued. There is no notification in existence prohibiting the possession of toddy. It is also to be observed that the Press Note states that any person is entitled to possess toddy in a prohibited area provided that he is prepared to pay the excise duty payable on its transport into a prohibited area from any area outside.

A number of applications were made between August 1 and December 14, 1939, by various persons named Boyce, Pardiwalla, Toddiwalla (the present petitioner), Bhandari, Creado, and Kiledar, for permission to tap and draw toddy from their own trees for private consumption, and the papers relating to these applications and the orders passed were referred to. They were all refused before the first full bench decision, above referred to, was given. The orders passed were known to the Commissioner of Excise, and to respondent No. 1.

When the present application dated November 18, 1940, was received by respondent No. 1 he forwarded it with a memorandum dated November 20, 1940, to the Commissioner of Excise, Bombay, "for favour of early orders". The Advocate General submitted that respondent No. 1 was entitled to ask for the orders of the Commissioner and was bound to act on those orders under s. 4 of the Act. I have already given reasons for my opinion that s. 4 has no application to the grant of licences for tapping toddy-producing trees and the drawing of toddy therefrom, and that as there was a right of appeal from the decision of the Collector to the Commissioner, the Collector ought not to have asked the Commissioner for orders, but ought to have dealt with the application himself without consulting the Commissioner. The Commissioner, respondent No. 2, replied by a letter dated November 27, 1940, in these terms:—

"It is entirely at the discretion of the Collector whether to grant or not to grant a tapping license. It is the policy of Government not to grant any tapping licences in the Bombay Prohibition Area. The solicitors may, therefore, be informed that the Collector regrets his inability to grant the applicant a tapping

Respondent No. 1 admitted in his affidavit that there is no notification, rule or order under the Bombay Abkari Act containing a general prohibition as regards tapping or drawing toddy from toddy-producing trees. He alleged that it was within the discretion of the Collector of Bombay to issue a licence for tapping toddy trees, and that he had refused to grant a licence to the petitioner in the exercise of his discretion. He was cross-examined upon his affidavit and stated that his refusal was pursuant to instructions received from Government and for no other reason. As respondent No. 2 had made no affidavit, the Advocate General, in the course of the cross-examination of respondent No. 1, made the following statement :—

"Eight applications in all, viz., five for domestic consumption and three for the sale of toddy, were received and were refused by the Commissioner of Excise since August 1, 1939, pursuant to instructions received from Government given on considerations based on their policy of Prohibition, the refusal by the Commissioner being due to no other reason than the instructions received by him from Government.

The application in the present case is not included in the five applications just referred to, but I make the same statement in regard to the refusal of the appeal by the Commissioner from the Collector in respect of the present application."

The refusal of the appeal by respondent No. 2 was again sought to be justified by the Advocate General by relying upon s. 4. Even if, contrary to my opinion, s. 4 applied, there would still have had to be in existence an order of the Provincial Government under which the Collector was entitled to refuse the application, and the Commissioner to refuse the appeal. Sir Jamshedji Kanga called for the production of any orders, or resolutions, or notifications, pursuant to which the instructions were given upon which the Collector and Commissioner acted. None were forthcoming. In fact there was not in existence any valid notification prohibiting the possession of toddy, and in my opinion there was no order of the Provincial Government in existence entitling either the Collector to refuse the application or the Commissioner to refuse the appeal. I think that they both acted under the mistaken belief that the prohibition policy of Government amounted to an order justifying them in the action which they took. If they have done this, the Court will interfere and will order them to act as they ought to have acted : see Alimahomed v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay<sup>1</sup>, where the Commissioner refused a licence in the mistaken belief that he was bound to refuse it by a decision of the Appeal Court, and The Queen v Boteler<sup>2</sup>, where Justices refused to issue a warrant, taking into account something which they were not entitled to do, and they were ordered by the Court to issue their warrant.

The Advocate General submitted that if I should be of opinion that the Collector and the Commissioner had taken into account matters which they were not entitled to do, I ought to order them to entertain and deal with the application. He relied upon several cases in which such orders were made, of which Rex v. London County Council : Corrie, Ex parte<sup>3</sup> may be taken as typical. But these were cases where there had been no hearing at all. In the present case both the Collector and the Commissioner have dealt with the application, the refusal thereof by both of them being for no other reason than the instructions received by them from Government. In this connection the observations of Blackburn J., in The Queen v. Boteler<sup>1</sup>, are very pertinent. That learned Judge after pointing out the different circumstances in which the proper order is to order the doing of the act or to order the party to hear and determine said (p. 965):—

"But I think the affidavits shew that, having entered into the inquiry, they determined that it was fit on every legal ground that their warrant should be issued but that they would not issue it because they disliked the Act of Parliament: they have decided all that was in their power to decide, and for a reason which is no reason in law they declined to issue their warrant".

In that case the rule being a rule calling upon the Justices to show cause why they should not issue their warrant, the Court made it absolute with costs. Such an order was made in Rustom J. Irani v. H. Kennedy.<sup>2</sup> I think that the present case is one in which I should make a similar order.

The conditions set forth in s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act are, as was held by Russell J. and by the Appeal Court in Rustom J. Irani v. H. Kennedy, cumulative. In my opinion all these conditions are satisfied in the present case.

The Advocate General argued that the making of an order which I propose to make would be futile, inasmuch as under s. 32A of the Bombay Abkari Act the authority granting a licence has power to cancel it, and he relied upon a number of authorities such as Rex v. Mayor of Axbridge<sup>3</sup> and Rex v. Army Council : Revenscroft, Ex parte.<sup>4</sup> But I am entitled to assume that the Collector, if ordered to grant a licence, will not cancel it except for good cause. This appears to me to be a futile argument.

The Advocate General submitted that this petition was not justified as against respondent No. 2. I do not agree with him. Respondent No. 2 entertained the appeal as he was bound to do under s. 60 of the Act, and I think that it was necessary that he as well as the Collector should be bound by any order which the Court might make.

I make the rule absolute with costs. I direct respondent No. 1 forthwith to grant a licence to the petitioner on payment of such fees, if any, and subject to such restrictions, and on such conditions and in such form as is contemplated by s. 30 of the Act.

As respondent No. 2 no longer holds the office of Commissioner of Excise, Bombay, and as I have been today informed by the Advocate General that Mr. M. D. Bhansali no longer holds that office, but that respondent No. 1 holds charge of the office of Commissioner of Excise in addition to performing the duties of Collector, it will no longer be necessary to make any order upon Mr. Bhansali although at the time of the hearing he had agreed to abide by any order of the Court.

I order the costs in this case to be taxed.

THE CANARA INDUSTRIAL AND BANKING SYNDICATE CO. LTD.

v.

July 17.

NARAYAN VENKATESH SHENOY.*

Letters Patent, cl. 12—Bill of exchange—Drawn in Bombay—Acceptance of bill by drawee outside Bombay—Bill dishonoured—Suit in High Court by payee with leave obtained under cl. 12 of Letters Patent—Whether part of cause of action arose in Bombay—Jurisdiction.

Defendant No. 1 drew in Bombay on defendant No. 2, who was residing at Calicut, five bills of exchange in favour of the Bombay branch of the plaintiff-bank. The bills were endorsed by the plaintiffs in favour of a bank at Calicut for collection. They were presented to defendant No. 2 who accepted them, but on the due date dishonoured them. The plaintiffs filed a suit in the High Court of Bombay with leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent to recover the amount due under the bills from both the defendants. Defendant No. 1 did not enter an appearance, but defendant No. 2 defended the suit and contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit as his liability having arisen only on acceptance of the bills at Calicut, no part of the cause of action arose in Bombay :—

Held, that, in order to give rise to the liability of defendant No. 2 as drawee, the plaintiffs had to establish that the bills of exchange were drawn by defendant No. 1 on defendant No. 2 in favour of the plaintiffs, who were the payees in Bombay; and that, as that material fact took place in Bombay, part of the cause of action arose in Bombay, and with leave obtained under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, the Court has jurisdiction to try the suit.

SUIT on bills of exchange.

The plaintiffs, Canara Industrial and Banking Syndicate, was a joint stock banking company incorporated and registered in British India under the Indian Companies Act and having their head office at Udipi in South Canara and a branch office at Bombay.

Defendant No. 1, Narayan, who was residing in Bombay, drew five bills of exchange on defendant No. 2, Govind, who was residing at Calicut, in favour of the plaintiffs. Four of the bills were for Rs. 1,000 each and one was for Rs. 600.

The plaintiffs endorsed the bills in favour of Nadungadi Bank Ltd. of Calicut for collection. The bank presented the bills to defendant No. 2 who duly accepted them. On the due dates the bills were presented to defendant No. 2 but he dishonoured them by non-payment.

The plaintiffs alleged that after certain negotiations between them and the defendants it was agreed that defendant No. 1 should draw eight fresh bills of exchange on defendant No. 2 for the aggregate sum of Rs. 4,875—being the amount due under the first five bills of exchange and interest and other charges up to August 17, 1939—in their favour, and that if the eight bills were accepted by defendant No. 2 the five dishonoured bills should be returned to defendant No. 1.

Defendant No. 1 drew eight fresh bills of exchange on defendant No. 2 in favour of the plaintiffs who forwarded them to the Nadungadi Bank for collection. They were presented to defendant No. 2 who accepted three bills for Rs. 750, Rs. 250, and Rs. 250, and did not accept the remaining five bills. Out of the three bills accepted by him, he retired only one for Rs. 250 and dishonoured the remaining two.

After giving credit to defendant No. 2 for Rs. 250, the plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 4,625 from defendant No. 2. As defendant No. 2 was residing outside the jurisdiction of the High Court, the plaintiffs asked for leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent; and submitted that with such leave granted the Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. The leave was granted.

Defendant No. 1 did not put in an appearance.

Defendant No. 2 contended inter alia that the bills of exchange were not payable in Bombay, that the drawing of the bills was no part of the cause of action against him, that the bills were accepted by him at Calicut as payable to the Nidungadi Bank, and that the Court therefore had no jurisdiction to try the suit. He further contended that the leave granted to the plaintiffs under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent had been granted on the faith of the false allegation made by the plaintiffs that the bills were payable in Bombay, that no material part of the cause of action had arisen in Bombay and therefore the leave granted to the plaintiffs should be revoked, that the plaintiffs treated the bills as satisfied after the eight fresh bills were drawn, that the fresh bills were for Rs. 4,600 and not for Rs. 4,875, that they were not drawn as alleged by the plaintiffs in accordance with an agreement arrived at between the parties, that he did not accept the five fresh bills and did not pay for the two fresh bills accepted by him because the bills were in breach of the agreement arrived at between the parties.

KANIA J. Plaintiffs have filed this suit to recover from the defendants Rs. 4,625 and interest. Between December 14, 1938, and February 16, 1939, defendant No. 1 drew on defendant No. 2 five bills of exchange, in all for Rs. 4,600, in favour of the plaintiffs. The said bills were endorsed over by the plaintiffs in favour of Nudengadi Bank of Calicut for collection and when presented to defendant No. 2 were accepted by him. On the due date, however, he dishonoured the same by non-payment. Thereafter there were certain discussions about the payment which are found in the letters exchanged between the parties. As a result of that correspondence defendant No. 1 drew eight bills of exchange on defendant No. 2 in favour of the plaintiffs. Three of them when presented to defendant No. 2 were accepted by him. He honoured one only by payment but dishonoured the other two. The remaining five bills were dishonoured by non-acceptance. These eight bills were for Rs. 4,875. Defendant No. 2 had honoured by acceptance one bill for Rs. 250 and the suit is filed for the remaining Rs. 4,625.

The suit was filed as a summary suit. Defendant No. 1 did not enter an appearance and has not taken any steps to defend. Defendant No. 2 obtained leave to defend. His written statement raises several contentions which are embodied in the issues raised for him. I shall deal with them in the order in which they are found in the issues.

The first contention, found in issues Nos. 1 and 2, is that this Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit. It was contended on behalf of defendant No. 2 that because he had accepted the bills at Calicut no part of the cause of action arose in Bombay and the leave obtained under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent was irregular. It is contended that his liability arose only on acceptance, and therefore, the whole contract in respect of his liability arose at Calicut. In my opinion this argument is unsound. The acceptance of a bill of exchange is made by an acceptor putting his signature on the bill. By reason of the signature the law raises certain implied obligations. In an ordinary case, if a party enters into a contract he has got to set out the terms of the obligations of the parties. The liability of an acceptor is governed by the Negotiable Instruments Act. In order to give rise to that liability the plaintiffs must prove that a negotiable instrument drawn on the drawee in favour of the payee was presented to the drawee and accepted by him as indicated by his signature on the bill. Each one of these steps has to be established by the plaintiffs. They have, therefore, to establish that the bills of exchange sued upon were drawn by the drawer on defendant No. 2, who is named as the drawee, in favour of the plaintiffs, who are the payees. This is necessary because only a drawee can accept a bill of exchange. Therefore the fact that the bills of exchange were drawn on defendant No. 2 is a material fact which has to be proved by the plaintiffs to establish their claim. As that fact took place in Bombay, with leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent this Court has jurisdiction.

It is contended on behalf of defendant No. 2 that it is on acceptance only that his liability arose. This contention overlooks the fact that the starting point for the liability is the drawing of the bills of exchange on him and the concluding point is when he accepts the liability by putting his signature on the bills as acceptor. The acceptance is, therefore, the culminating point fixing the liability on him and not the starting point as contended by defendant No. 2.

It was argued that this should be treated as a proposal to make him liable which was conveyed to him at Calicut and accepted by him at Calicut and therefore the whole of the contract of his liability arose at Calicut. In my opinion this argument overlooks the fact that this is not a simple contract governed by the Indian Contract Act, but the rights of the parties are governed by the Negotiable Instruments Act. The form of this proposal, the exact words thereof and the fact that it was drawn on defendant No. 2 are all essential things to be proved. The contents of the proposal are necessary to be proved and as that document was made in Bombay, I am unable to hold that no part of the cause of action arose in Bombay. No direct authority in respect of the jurisdiction of the Court as regards an acceptor has been cited before me. Sewaram Gokaldas v. Bajrangdat Hardwar<sup>1</sup>, which was relied upon by defendant No. 2, does not help him. There the disputes were between the drawer and the payee. The question was whether the Court had jurisdiction when it was admitted that the hundi was drawn, delivered and was payable outside Bombay. On the other hand the decision in Roghoonath Misser v. Gobindharain<sup>1</sup> shows that any step which the plaintiff has to prove in order to establish his title to sue on a negotiable instrument is a material fact, and if any such event took place within the jurisdiction of the Court, with leave granted under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, the Court would have jurisdiction to try the suit. Issue No. 1 is, therefore, answered in the affirmative and No. 2 in the negative.

Defendant No. 2 next contended that as he had given eight bills of exchange, whether they were accepted and honoured or not, defendant No. 2's liability under the original five bills came to an end. Section 62 of the Indian Contract Act was relied upon in this connection. The question whether the liability under the original five bills was extinguished is a question of fact. In this case the only evidence about the arrangement under which the eight bills were subsequently drawn is found in the correspondence (exhibit B). In that correspondence the plaintiffs expressly stated that on acceptance and payment of the latter eight bills defendant No. 2's liability would come to an end. On reading the whole correspondence I am unable to find anything to justify a conclusion that the plaintiffs had agreed to extinguish the liability of defendant No. 2 arising by reason of the acceptance of the five bills immediately on defendant No. 1 drawing the subsequent eight bills on defendant No. 2, or when defendant No. 1 agreed to draw those bills. Vague statements or inferences cannot be relied upon to extinguish a right which had accrued under a negotiable instrument, and there is nothing in the whole correspondence to support defendant No. 2's argument. The words actually used in the letters do not show that the plaintiffs had agreed to give up their claim under the acceptance endorsed on the old bills, until they were paid the amounts of the bills. The burden of proof on this question is on defendant No. 2 as he alleges that the obligation under the acceptance signed by him had been extinguished. In my opinion he has entirely failed to discharge that burden. The fact that those bills remained with the plaintiffs, with the acceptance of defendant No. 2 unobliterated, further supports the plaintiffs' contention that the liability was never intended to be or in fact extinguished. The third issue is therefore answered in the negative.

Issues Nos. 4 and 5 are not necessary to be decided. The contention urged is that under the new arrangement defendant No. 1 was to draw bills of exchange for Rs. 4,600 and not for Rs. 4,875. Although the plaintiffs' suit is to recover the difference between Rs. 4,875 and Rs. 250 (i.e. the amount of the bill honoured and paid) the learned counsel for the plaintiffs has intimated to the Court that in this suit he claims only the amount of the original bills, viz., Rs. 4,600, less Rs. 250, with interest from the respective due dates. He does not claim the sum of Rs. 4,625 as formulated in the plaint. It is, therefore, not necessary to decide issues Nos. 4 and 5. Under the Negotiable Instruments Act the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the amount of the bills with interest at six per cent. from their respective due dates.

O. C. J. Out of the eight new bills drawn by defendant No. 1 on defendant No. 2 one has been honoured and paid and two were accepted but not paid. Having regard to the decree which is being passed on the old bills in this suit, defendant No. 2 does not any more remain liable on his acceptance of the two bills of Rs. 750 and Rs. 250 accepted on August 22, 1939, and dated August 18, 1939, although the bills are at present with the plaintiffs. Defendant No. 2's liability on all those bills is deemed to be unenforceable now.

On the footing of this judgment the parties are agreed that there will be a decree for the plaintiffs against the defendants (in invitum against defendant No. 1) for Rs. 4,350 with interest on Rs. 3,750 at six per cent. per annum from March 1, 1939, up to April 15, 1939, and on Rs. 4,350 from April 15, 1939, till judgment. Defendant No. 1 will pay Rs. 200 for costs of the suit. Defendant No. 2 should pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 800 as costs of the suit and Rs. 135 as costs of the summons for judgment. Interest on judgment against both the defendants at six per cent.

Hindu law—Adoption—Unchaste widow—Widow of a regenerate class unchaste at time of adoption—Adopted son of same gotra as adoptive father—Delegation by widow of ceremonies of adoption—Validity of adoption.

A Hindu widow of a regenerate class made an adoption while she was living in unchastity. The adopted son was of the same gotra as his adoptive father. The performance of the ceremonies of adoption was delegated by the widow to others who performed the ceremonies including the ceremony of datta homam. SUIT to recover possession of property.

RAMU BALA
SANKPAL
v.
JANA DALA

One Bala, a Kshatriya by caste, who owned the suit property, died on October 14, 1904, leaving him surviving his widow Chandra and a son Maruti. Maruti died within two years of his father's death. On February 29, 1908, a child was born to Chandra as a result of unchaste life led by her after her husband's death. This illegitimate child died on March 4, 1908. On September 24, 1909, Chandra sold the suit property to one Bala Vithu Patil (defendant).

On March 26, 1934, Chandra took Ramu (plaintiff) in adoption, who filed the present suit against the defendant to recover the suit property alleging that the sale-deed passed by Chandra was without legal necessity and hence not binding on him. The defendant contended that there was in fact legal necessity and that the adoption of the plaintiff, if proved, was invalid, as his adoptive mother was unchaste and therefore incompetent to adopt according to Hindu law.

The trial Court held the plaintiff's adoption proved and valid in law. It further held that the alienations by Chandra were not for legal necessity and decreed the plaintiff's suit. In his judgment the trial Judge observed as follows :—

"From what has been stated by Mr. Mulla two things are clear : First, that the widow in Sayamala's case was pregnant in adultery at the time of adoption, and, secondly, the adoption was held invalid, as the widow on account of her pregnancy in adultery was incapable of performing the religious ceremony. Both these points are not applicable in the present case. Firstly, because inasmuch as even according to defendant Chandra is never alleged to have been pregnant after 1908. The adoption of plaintiff by Chandra is in the year 1934, that is twenty-six years after her pregnancy. She was quite an old lady in 1934 and was not unchaste or pregnant at the time of adoption. Secondly, the religious ceremony in this case is performed by the priest to whom authority was delegated by Chandra. In the case of pollution of a woman the authority can be so delegated. The ruling on this point in Laxmibai v. Ramchandra, 22 Bom. 590, is very clear. Even Mr. Mulla has made this point more clear in his commentary below para. 490(3). Thus the legality of ceremonies in Sayamala's case is not applicable to the present case as the religious ceremony was performed by priest under an authority given to him by Chandra.

Plaintiff relies on Pandu Krishna v. Dhondi Krishna Patil, 22 Bom. L. R. 1400. Sayamala's case was referred to, discussed and distinguished by Macleod C. J. in the said case. Macleod C. J. says that the reason why the adoption in that case was declared void was that the widow could not perform the necessary religious ceremonies. The parties in 22 Bom. L. R. 1400 were Shudras hence the argument was not applicable. It is as clear as daylight that what Macleod C. J. decides upon is the applicability of the argument. The parties in 22 Bom. L. R. 1400 were Shudras hence the argument was inapplicable. In this case even though the parties are held to be Kshatriyas the argument will be equally inapplicable first as the ceremonies were performed by delegation, and, secondly, the parties being sagotra the ceremonies are unnecessary.

Thus what came in the way of adoption in Sayamala's case was not the want of validity but the illegality of the ceremonies which were performed by the widow

A. C. J. herself in that case. The last para. of Macleod C. J.'s judgment in 22 Bom. L. R. 1400 explains the law in the Bombay Presidency. 'In this Presidency the widow has implied authority to adopt from the date of her husband's death unless it can be shown that her husband had either expressly or impliedly revoked such authority. Therefore any conduct of the widow after the husband's death cannot affect the authority which she acquired at the time of his death.'

RAMU BALA SANKPAL v. JANA DALA PATIL — This is the principle on which Macleod C. J. decides. The allegation of the defendant is that Chandra began to lead an unchaste life after her husband's death. Hence the implied authority to adopt which she had acquired on her husband's death cannot go away. This proposition is irrespective of the circumstances whether the parties belong to the three regenerate classes or otherwise. Chandra had acquired an implied authority to adopt at the time of her husband's death when she was not at all unchaste and she has exercised it by performing the ceremonies in the proper manner by delegation which she is entitled to do under law as discussed by me above. . . . plaintiff urges that ceremonies were performed by delegation but as the parties are sagotra no religious ceremony would be necessary. He relies on Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas Pandit, 17 Bom. L. R. 527. The relevant remarks are at p. 544. It was held therein that the performance of the ceremony of datta homam is not essential among Brahmins to the legal validity of the adoption where the adopted son belongs to the same gotra as the adoptive father. He also relies on another case in Govind Prasad Lalita Prasad Mishra v. Rindabai kom Lalita Prasad, 49 Bom. 515. It is also held in that case that the ceremony of datta homam is essential to an adoption amongst the Brahmins unless the adoptive father and son belong to the same gotra. Thus the rulings in both these cases are very clear and they are applicable in the present case. Certainly in this case plaintiff has satisfactorily proved the fact of the performance of the necessary religious ceremonies by delegation. Hence the question of necessity of performing the religious ceremonies does not arise in this case. Still, however, the parties in this case being sagotra, no datta homam ceremony was necessary."

On appeal the Assistant Judge found that the alienations by Chandra were without legal necessity and that she was living in unchastity at the time of the adoption. He held that an unchaste widow in the regenerate classes was not capable of making an adoption and therefore the adoption of the plaintiff by Chandra was not valid in law. In dismissing the suit the learned Judge observed as follows :—

"In Sayamatal Dutt v. Saudamini Dasi (5 Beng. L. R. 362) it has been held that a Hindu widow who has become unchaste is incompetent to receive a son in adoption. Sarkar in his Hindu Law, 5th edn., at p. 536, after considering the text of Parasara observes that unchastity becomes very grave if followed by conception, and that then a widow's right to a husband's estate must cease. In fact from the time of her fall, she ceases to be the lawful heir to her husband. This is applicable to twice-born castes and not to Shudras. In the light of this, the decision of the Bombay High Court in Basvant Mushappa v. Mallappa Kallappa Hubli, 22 Bom. L. R. 1400, relied upon by Mr. Apte for the respondent, is not applicable. In that case it is no doubt held that under the Hindu law in the Presidency of Bombay among Shudras a widow though unchaste can make a valid adoption. Macleod C. J. in his judgment has, at p. 1402, observed in respect of Sayamatal v. Saudamini, referred to above, as follows :—

'The defendants relied on the authority of Sayamatal Dutt v. Saudamini Dasi in which an adoption was declared void by reason of the unchastity of the giver, but the ground of that decision was that the widow could not perform the necessary religious ceremonies. The parties in this case are Shudras and, therefore, that argument does not apply.'

To my mind, as Bala Lingu and Chandra belonged to a regenerate class of Kshatriyas, the unchastity of Chandra prevented her from adopting to her husband and the decision in Sayamatal Dutt v. Saudamini Dasi, 5 Beng. L. R. 362, is applicable.

In the circumstances, I hold that the adoption of the plaintiff by Chandra is not valid in law."

G. N. Thakor, with P. B. Gajendragadkar, for the respondent.

v.

MACKLIN J. These two appeals arise out of two suits brought by an adopted son against certain alienees to have the alienations made by his adoptive mother before his adoption set aside on the ground that they were not made for legal necessity. The defence alleged that there was in fact legal necessity and that the adoption of the plaintiff, if proved, was invalid, because his mother was unchaste, and an unchaste widow according to Hindu law is not competent to adopt. Both the Courts have found want of legal necessity. The trial Court found that the unchastity of the plaintiff's adoptive mother, which admittedly resulted in the birth to her of an illegitimate son more than twenty years before the adoption and some four years after her husband's death, had in fact ceased before the adoption took place. It also found that even on the assumption that she was still unchaste at the time of the adoption, the unchastity would not have the effect of making the adoption invalid, because in the first place she had delegated the ceremonies which otherwise she would have had to perform but which owing to unchastity she was incompetent to perform, and in the second place no ceremonies were necessary apart from the ordinary giving and taking, since the adopted son and his adoptive father belonged to the same gotra. The Assistant Judge who heard the appeal found on the facts that the unchastity continued up to the time of the adoption, at which time he thought on the evidence that the widow was still living with one Naru Bhagoji, the father of the illegitimate son of many years before; and he thought that on a true view of the Hindu law and the authorities cited on the point an unchaste widow in the regenerate classes (to which the parties here belong) would not be capable of adopting. But he left untouched the argument relied upon by the lower Court as to the parties being of the same gotra and of the adoption therefore requiring no ceremonies to be performed by the widow. The order of the trial Court was therefore set aside and the suits were dismissed. In these appeals by the plaintiff we come to the conclusion that the adoption must be upheld.

It seems that on the evidence the learned Assistant Judge was right in his conclusion that the widow was living in unchastity at the time of the adoption. There is not very much by way of authority one way or the other on the question of an unchaste widow's power to adopt. On behalf of the alienees in this case it has been contended, on the general principles of Hindu law as laid down in the texts, that any implied authority to adopt which the widow might be taken to possess can no longer be implied when she behaves in this way, since it is her duty to continue to be as chaste as she was in the lifetime of her husband. But there is the recent current of decisions to the effect that a widow in the Bombay Presidency has an inherent right to adopt unless prohibited by her husband (whatever may be the origin of that right, whether implied authority or something else); and it is therefore urged that the inherent right to adopt ought not to be assumed to continue in the case of a woman who has ceased to live in the way that her husband would expect her to live. It is argued that the whole idea of an unchaste widow performing a religious act of this kind in a state of unchastity, even though it be for the benefit of her husband's soul, is repugnant to Hindu ideas; that a woman of this sort is a degraded woman within the meaning of the texts; and that though the authorities say that a woman who becomes unchaste after the death of her husband does not forfeit any property of which she may have become vested on his death, nevertheless there is no authority to be found against her forfeiting her power to adopt in similar circumstances.

It seems however that the authorities, so far as they go, are against her forfeiting her power to adopt. There is a case of 1870 which has been relied upon by the learned Assistant Judge for his view that a widow's unchastity disentitles her from adopting: Sayamalal Dutt v. Saudamini Dasi<sup>1</sup>. That was a case of a woman in the regenerate classes making an adoption while living in concubinage and in a state of pregnancy resulting from that concubinage; and the learned Judge who tried the case came to the conclusion that she was incompetent for that reason to receive a son in adoption. But we are not bound by this case; and, with due respect, its authority is perhaps doubtful. It was a decision of a single Judge, and it appears from the judgment that the learned Judge received a good deal of assistance from one of the Court translators in elucidating the Hindu law. Moreover it was a stronger case than the one with which we have to deal at present, since the widow was at that time in a state of pregnancy. But the reasoning upon which that case proceeded, assuming it to be good authority, has been interpreted by a bench of this Court as based upon the widow's incompetency to perform the necessary ceremonies while in a state of unchastity: see Basvant Mushappa v. Mallappa Kallappa<sup>2</sup>. In that case it was held that the Bengal case could be distinguished upon the ground that ceremonies which the widow was incompetent to perform were necessary in the one but not in the other, the parties being Shudras. It is argued that this case has not been correctly decided; but it is at any rate binding upon us so far as Shudras are concerned, and the reasoning upon which it proceeded is also binding upon us. It would follow that if the difficulty of the ceremonies necessary in the case of the regenerate classes can be got over, then, so far as this Court is concerned, the adoption would not be regarded as invalidated by the widow's unchastity. That the difficulties arising out of the ceremonies can be got over is clear. Sir Dinshah Mulla, at p. 546 of his 9th edn. of "Hindu Law", says that the ceremony of datta homam may be performed by the parties who give and receive a boy in adoption, or the performance of it may be delegated by them to others; and therein he accepts the authority of this Court in Lakshmibai v. Ramchandra<sup>3</sup>. It is clear from the evidence in this case that the widow did in fact delegate to others that and other ceremonies. She says in her evidence that she did nothing but sit near the priest and delegated her duties to one Dnyanu. Dnyanu in his evidence says that he supplied the necessary materials to the priest. Apart from that it is a fact that the parties here are members of the same gotra ; and for members of the same gotra no ceremony beyond giving and taking is necessary even among Brahmins : see Govindprasad v. Rindabai<sup>1</sup> and Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas Pandit<sup>2</sup>.

The learned Assistant Judge stressed a passage from Sarkar's "Hindu Law" in which it is said that unchastity becomes very grave if followed by conception and that then a widow's right to her husband's estate must cease. The learned Judge takes this to mean that from the time of her fall she ceases to be the lawful heir to her husband if she belongs to a twice born caste, and he goes on to say that in the light of this the decision of the Bombay High Court in Basvant v. Mallappa is not applicable to the present case. Whether any inference bearing on the present question can be drawn from the position of a widow as regards inheritance to her husband is, I think, doubtful. Merely because she lost the privilege of inheriting her husband's property, it would not necessarily follow that she lost the duty of adopting to him. But however that may be, the learned author cited in the Court below evidently takes a different view as regards the effect of a widow's unchastity on her power to adopt. In his Tagore Law Lectures of 1888 on the Hindu law of Adoption, 1916 edn., he says that the early cases, in particular Sayamadal Dutt v. Saudamini Dasi, were decided at a time when it was thought that unchastity in a widow divested her of the estate inherited by her from her husband, and that it is now settled by the Privy Council that subsequent unchastity is no cause for divesting her of the estate which is already vested in her : see Moniram Kolita v. Kerry Kolitany<sup>3</sup> and also Parvati v. Bhiku<sup>4</sup>. He concludes with the following sentence :—

"Considering, however, the present state of law as to the effect of a widow's unchastity, there is no cogent reason against an adoption by an unchaste widow, for it would rather be an act of self-sacrifice on her part."

And observations to much the same effect are made by Sir Ernest Trevelyan in his "Hindu Law", 2nd edn., p. 132, where he says :—

"As [however] a widow adopts, not for her own benefit, but for that of her deceased husband, it may seem hard that her want of chastity should deprive his manes of the benefits which, according to Hindu ideas, accrue from an adoption."

We think that there is no reason for holding in this case that the widow was incompetent to adopt the plaintiff. We must therefore set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court, with costs throughout in each of the appeals.

Decree set aside.

The High Court of Bombay has, under its general jurisdiction, power to make an order appointing a guardian of the undivided property of a minor who is a member of a joint Hindu family and who resides within the limits of its original jurisdiction, that is to say the town and island of Bombay. Such jurisdiction extends also to a minor in a joint Hindu family, who is a British subject and who resides within the presidency of Bombay. It is derived from the prerogative of the Crown as parens patriæ to protect subjects of the Crown who cannot protect themselves.

Where the karta of a joint Hindu family applies to the Court for an order sanctioning a sale of joint family property in which the minor coparcener has a share, the Court, before according its sanction to the sale, should make the minor respondent to the petition and he should be represented by a guardian ad litem. Such guardian ad litem should normally be an officer of the Court, who should satisfy himself as to the interest of the minor. He may require further evidence as to the alleged necessity for the sale, and he may require further evidence as to the price being a good one, and he will also have to consider how the proceeds of sale are to be dealt with. If he requires any funds to enable him to look into the matter properly, the party seeking the order must provide those funds.

THIS was an application under the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court.

The property in question was situated at Navarangpura in City Mahal in the District of Ahmedabad. It belonged to a joint family, of which the petitioner Ramaji Adaji was the karta or manager. The family consisted of two brothers, Ramaji and Ugraji and their sons. Ramaji had five daughters, all of whom were married, and four sons, Somaji, Ratanji, Shankar and Chhagan. Of these the last three were minors. Somaji, who had attained majority, had two sons, Chanaji and Manilal, who were minors. The petitioner's brother Ugraji had four daughters, one of whom was unmarried, and two sons Ishwar and Khushal, both of whom were minors.

The joint family had no cash, but owned other immoveable properties, the net income of all of which came to Rs. 250 per year. The income was insufficient to meet the expenses of the joint family and the education of minor children.

The debts incurred by the karta of the family amounted to Rs. 10,338 secured by mortgages on different items of the family property. The debts were incurred for legal necessity, viz. to meet the deficiency in the maintenance and marriage expenses of the members of the family.

Among the properties belonging to the family was survey number 201, which is the subject-matter of the present petition. On April 1, 1941, the petitioner agreed to sell the survey number to one Dr. Ratilal for the sum of Rs. 66,393. It admeasured 4 acres and 73 gunthas; and the sale price came to Rs. 3 per square yard. It fetched a net income of Rs. 150 per year. It formed a part of the Ellis Bridge Town Planning Scheme in Ahmedabad. It was alleged that the betterment charges of the plot amounted to Rs. 4,774; that it would have to pay higher assessment every year for its conversion from agricultural to non-agricultural use, and that a sum of Rs. 25,000 would be needed to erect a suitable building on the plot.

The petitioner agreed with the intending purchaser that he would obtain the necessary order of the Court sanctioning the sale and authorising him to execute the conveyance and other necessary documents to complete the sale on behalf of the minors.

Accordingly, on August 14, 1941, the petitioner made an ex parte application to the High Court in its inherent jurisdiction praying that the Court may be pleased to sanction the sale of the property, that the petitioner as manager and karta of the undivided Hindu family be appointed guardian of the right, title and interest of the minors in the property and as such guardian be authorised to sell the property for Rs. 66,393, that the petitioner be authorised to execute and register the conveyance and other necessary documents to complete the sale, and that he be authorised to pay the debts of the family.

The petition was in the first instance heard by Kania J.; but it was later placed for disposal before a special bench composed of Beaumont C. J., Kania J. and Somjee J.

The special bench heard the petition on August 22 and 25, 1941.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, with R. S. Parikh, for the petitioner. The question that arises for decision is whether the Bombay High Court has under its inherent jurisdiction power to appoint a guardian of the property of a minor who is a member of a joint Hindu family, whose property is an undivided share in the family property, and who resides outside the town and island of Bombay but within the Province of Bombay.

A minor who is a coparcener in a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law has no separate interest in the undivided family property and no guardian of that property can be appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. Under that Act a guardian could only be appointed of a minor's separate property: Mulla's Hindu Law, 8th edn., p. 567, s. 519, and Gharib-ul-lah v. Khalak Singh<sup>1</sup>.

The Ahmedabad Court within whose jurisdiction the property is situate and the minor resides has no jurisdiction in the matter, the District Courts being confined to such jurisdiction as is conferred on them by the Guardians and Wards Act : Besant v. Narayaniak<sup>1</sup>. No suit can be filed under s. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, in the District Court.

The power of the Chartered High Courts in the matter of guardianship has been saved by s. 3 of the Guardians and Wards Act, and the High Court may in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction appoint a guardian even of an undivided interest of a minor member in a joint Hindu family property : Mulla's Hindu Law, p. 575, s. 537.

The jurisdiction of the High Court in the matter of minors is that conferred by cl. 17 of the amended Letters Patent of 1865. By that clause the Bombay High Court has jurisdiction in the matter of minors over all subjects in the Presidency, the power and authority being that which was vested in the High Court under the Letters Patent of 1862. Clause 16 of the Letters Patent of 1862 which dealt with the matter of minors in turn conferred the same power as that possessed by the Supreme Court established by the Supreme Court Charter of 1823 and gave the jurisdiction over infants whether "within or without the Presidency."

The Charter of 1823 establishing the Supreme Court of Bombay by cl. 37 conferred on that Court jurisdiction over the persons and estates of infants similar to that of the Court of Chancery in England. This clause contains no territorial limits within which the jurisdiction could be exercised. By cl. 5 of the Charter of 1823 the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over all the territories "which are now or hereafter may be subject to the Government of Bombay".

Clauses 23 to 36 of the Charter of 1823 relate to jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in suits and actions and the procedure to be followed in such suits and actions. Clause 37 and the subsequent clauses relate to jurisdiction over infants and lunatics, and matters criminal, probate, admiralty, etc.

The wording of cl. 23 is not clear, but even if it be held that in suits and actions the jurisdiction of the Court was limited to the town and island of Bombay and outside the town and island it extended to British subjects only, that is no warrant to extend that limitation to the jurisdiction under cl. 37 over infants and lunatics. Clause 37 should be read with cl. 5. The Charter of 1823 was issued under powers conferred by 4 Geo. IV, c. 71. By s. 7 of that statute the Supreme Court at Bombay was to have the same powers and authority as that "now subsisting at Fort William in Bengal with full power to exercise jurisdiction both over natives and British subjects within the territories now or hereafter may be subject to the Government of Bombay".

Section 14 of 13 Geo. III, c. 63, under which the Calcutta Charter was granted, does not restrict the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Fort William in Bengal beyond the local limits of Calcutta to British subjects only.

In Bombay it is now well established that the High Court in its general jurisdiction under cl. 17 of the Letters Patent of 1865, and apart from the Guardians and Wards Act, has power to appoint a guardian of the property of a minor who is a member of a joint Hindu family even where the minor's property is an undivided share in the family property and to sanction the alienation of the property if it is satisfied that the sale is for the benefit of the minor : Re Jagannath Ramji<sup>1</sup> ; In re Manilal Hargovan<sup>2</sup> ; Narsi Tokerssey & Co. v. Sachindranath Gajanan<sup>3</sup> ; and Mahadev Krishna Rupji, In re<sup>4</sup>.

All these cases relate to minors and property within the town and island of Bombay. The question is whether cl. 17 extends to places and minors within the Province of Bombay but outside the limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court. There is nothing in cl. 17 of the Letters Patent of 1865 to limit the jurisdiction to all persons within the town and island of Bombay and to European British subjects outside the town and island but in the Province of Bombay.

In Taruchandra Ghose, In re<sup>5</sup> the Calcutta High Court acting under its Letters Patent, which is in the same terms as cl. 17 of our Letters Patent, exercised jurisdiction over minors and property outside the limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, but in In the matter of Phonindrachandra Set<sup>6</sup> the same Court denied the existence of such jurisdiction over lunatics following an earlier decision in In the matter of Srish Chunder Singh<sup>7</sup>.

The cases of Maharani of Baroda v. Kasturbhai<sup>8</sup> and In re Govindan Nair<sup>9</sup> showed that the powers of the High Court under cl. 5 of the 1823 Charter and its power to issue a writ of habeas corpus were not limited to the limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court and on the analogy of the above jurisdictions the Court had jurisdiction over all infants throughout the Province of Bombay and such jurisdiction outside the town and island of Bombay was not limited to European British subjects only.

The jurisdiction of the High Court over infants was similar to that exercised by the Chancery Court in England. The Chancery Court has exercised jurisdiction over infant British subjects residing anywhere in the world : Hope v. Hope<sup>10</sup>. If the Court has jurisdiction the difficulty of enforcing the order is no bar to making one. In In re Willoughby (an Infant)<sup>11</sup>, the Chancery Court exercised jurisdiction over and appointed guardian of a minor British subject, domiciled and resident in France, there being no property in England. In the present case the minor and the property are within the Province of Bombay, within the Court's jurisdiction. See In re the Estate of H. G. Meakin<sup>12</sup>.

The sale of property is clearly for the benefit of the minor. Orders in five similar cases have been made by this High Court. They were all made ex parte.

M. C. Setalvad, Advocate General, amicus curiæ. The Court has no power to appoint a guardian of an undivided share of a minor in joint family property. The power contained in cl. 17 of the Letters Patent of 1865 is to appoint a guardian of the "estate of a minor". This will not entitle the Court to appoint a guardian of the undivided interest of a minor in a coparcenary : Gharib-ul-lah v. Khalak Singh<sup>1</sup> and Bindaji v. Mathurabai<sup>2</sup>. In the latter case In re Manilal Hargovan,<sup>3</sup> which held that such a guardian could be appointed, was not referred to.

The cases referred to and the case of In re Bijaykumar Singh Buder<sup>4</sup> were cases where the minor and the property were within the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court. On the true construction of cl. 17 of the Letters Patent, the High Court has no jurisdiction if the minor is not within the town and island of Bombay. The power over infants is the same as that vested in the Supreme Court under the Charter of 1823. The jurisdiction of the Court under cl. 23 of that Charter, which closely followed the words of 13 Geo. III, c. 63, s. 14, was limited to British subjects which meant European British subjects and to those in the service of the Crown. The jurisdiction under cl. 24 in respect of "inhabitants of Bombay", i.e. all persons, was confined to suits.

Clause 37 dealing with minors provides for the nature of the jurisdiction and not the persons over whom it could be exercised. To determine who can be governed by cl. 37 one has to go back to cl. 23, which alone defines the general jurisdiction of the Court and the persons amenable to it. It is limited to British subjects as then understood and servants of the Crown.

The use of the words "whether within or without Bombay" in cl. 16 of the Charter of 1862 indicates that the operation of cl. 37 of the 1823 Charter was limited to the island of Bombay.

Clause 37 does not impose a territorial limit or a limit as to the persons subject to the jurisdiction but the earlier clauses do contain such a limitation. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is general in the island of Bombay ; outside the island it is a special jurisdiction only over British subjects.

There is no reported decision in Bombay appointing a guardian of a minor living outside the ordinary original civil jurisdiction except the case of In re the Estate of H. G. Meakin<sup>5</sup>. That was a case of a European British subject ; and letters of administration were obtained in Bombay and the property was with the Administrator General of Bombay. In Calcutta in the case of In the matter of Sirish Chunder Singh,<sup>6</sup> Sale J. disapproved of the exercise of this jurisdiction ; Lord-Williams J. in Taruchandra Ghosh, In re disapproved the above case. There was there no question of joint family property. In In the matter of Phanindrachandra Set,<sup>7</sup> Taruchandra Ghose, In re was not followed. The only case from Allahabad is that of In the matter of Govind Prasad<sup>8</sup>. The Court held it had jurisdiction but refused to exercise it. The report does not show where the property was situate.

There is no decision from Madras dealing with the point in issue. The decision in Raja of Vizianagráam v. Secretary of State for India<sup>2</sup> deals with the meaning of the words "British subject" in the early Acts and Charters and also with the question of jurisdiction of High Courts in the matter of guardianship of the person of minors outside the original jurisdiction of the High Court. The Court held it had jurisdiction. That case is against the view I am submitting and is inconsistent with In the matter of Phanindrachandra Set. It is not permissible to enlarge the scope of the operation of the Charter of 1823 by reference to the extended meaning acquired later by the words "British subject". The jurisdiction must be limited to that exercised in 1823.

Reference was also made to In re the Justices of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay<sup>3</sup> to show that the Supreme Court had no power to issue a writ of habeas corpus except within its local limits and outside its local limits in reference to European British subjects or servants of the Company. The same reasoning would apply to the present case.

In the matter of Ameer Khan<sup>4</sup> it was unsuccessfully contended that the writ of habeas corpus could not be directed even to a British subject outside the jurisdiction.

In In re Manilal Hargovan<sup>5</sup> the jurisdiction was assumed with great hesitation. The main consideration for that decision was a desire not to "imperial title" to property. No such considerations apply here. The local Courts not having jurisdiction in the matter, the remedy is by way of legislation and not by way of the High Court assuming jurisdiction.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, in reply. The case of In re the Justices of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay<sup>6</sup> has been regarded as a decision as to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over the Company's Courts in the mofussil and over the officers of the Company's Courts. [The case of In re Nataraj Iyer<sup>7</sup> referred to.]

The ratio in In re Manilal Hargovan is that one coparcener has a right to sell his share, and that the Court should see that the minor's share is secured for him.

The cases of Gharib-ul-lah v. Khalak Singh<sup>8</sup> and Bindaji v. Mathurabai<sup>9</sup> were from the districts under the Guardians and Wards Act and therefore they do not affect the power of the High Court under cl. 17 of the 1865 Charter.

The case of Balaji v. Sadashiv<sup>10</sup> shows that once the Court sanctions the sale, the minor cannot afterwards challenge it.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a petition intituled In the matter of immoveable property situate at Navrangpura and In the matter of Ratanji Ramaji and others, all minors. It sets out that the petitioner is the karta of a Hindu joint family, and that the coparcenary property is vested in him, his minor sons and grandsons and his brother and minor sons of his brother, all the minor coparceners being mentioned in the title of the petition. Then the petition sets out the property of the family, and alleges that certain debts have been incurred by the petitioner as karta on behalf of the joint family, the debts amounting approximately to Rs. 10,000. Then it is alleged that an offer has been obtained for the purchase of one item of the coparcenary property, being that mentioned in the title, for a sum of Rs. 66,000 odd, which is alleged to be a very good price, and that the purchaser in the contract has stipulated that the petitioner as guardian of the minors should obtain the necessary sanction of the Court for sale of the above land. Accordingly this petition was presented to the Court asking for the sanction of the Court to the sale of the property under the contract, and that the petitioner as manager and karta of the joint Hindu family be appointed guardian of the right, title and interest of the minors in the property, the subject-matter of the contract.

The petition was presented ex parte and it has been referred to a special bench, because it raises a question as to the jurisdiction of the Court, and we are much indebted to Sir Jamshedji Kanga, who has appeared for the petitioner, and to the Advocate General, who has been good enough to appear as amicus curiæ and argue against the petition, for the assistance they have rendered to the Court.

Substantially three questions arise. First, has the Court under its original jurisdiction power to make an order, such as is asked for, in the case of a minor residing within the limits of the original jurisdiction of this Court, that is to say, the Town and Island of Bombay? Secondly, if it has, does the jurisdiction extend to a minor resident in the Bombay Presidency, outside the Town and Island of Bombay? And, thirdly, if the Court has jurisdiction, ought it to exercise the jurisdiction in the present case? The second question is confined to minors resident in the Bombay Presidency, because that is the position of the minors in the present case, but I must not be taken as indicating any opinion as to what would be the position if the minors were resident outside the Presidency of Bombay.

With regard to the first point, there can be no question that jurisdiction has been exercised in the past by this Court to appoint a guardian of a minor resident within the Town and Island of Bombay entitled to an undivided interest in coparcenary property, and to sanction the sale of such property. The leading case is In re Manilal Hargovan<sup>1</sup>, in which the Court, following earlier decisions of this Court, appointed the karta of a Hindu joint family as guardian of the interest of a minor in the joint family property, and sanctioned the sale by the karta of the joint family property. That case was followed by this Court in Mahadeo Krishna, In re<sup>2</sup>, though in that case no order on merits was made, because the lower Court had declined to exercise jurisdiction, and this Court sent back the case to the lower Court with a direction that the jurisdiction should be exercised, and for determination of the matter on merits. The learned Advocate General has argued that those cases are really inconsistent with the decision of the Privy Council in Gharib-ul-lah v. Khalak Singh.<sup>1</sup> In that case their Lordships were dealing with the appointment of a guardian of the interest of a minor in coparcenary property belonging to a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara law under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890; and, in the course of the judgment, their Lordships said (p. 170):—

“It has been well settled by a long series of decisions in India that a guardian of the property of an infant cannot properly be appointed in respect of the infant's interest in the property of an undivided Mitakshara family. And in their Lordships' opinion those decisions are clearly right, on the plain ground that the interest of a member of such a family is not individual property at all, and that therefore a guardian, if appointed, would have nothing to do with the family property.”

Their Lordships in that case were dealing with the statutory jurisdiction arising under the Guardians and Wards Act; but the learned Advocate General argues that the reason given would extend equally to an order made by the Court under its inherent jurisdiction, the reason being that the appointment of a guardian of an undivided share in the immoveable property would be infructuous. For the reasons, which I will give later, I have no doubt that the power which this Court exercises over minors is the power derived from the prerogative of the Crown as parens patriæ to protect subjects of the Crown who cannot protect themselves; and, if that be the nature of the Court's jurisdiction, it is clear that it can only be limited as to subjects within the jurisdiction of the Court by the interest of the person to be protected. No doubt, an order, which is likely to be infructuous, would normally not be for the benefit of a minor; but, if the Court thinks that it is for the benefit of the minor, I have no doubt that it has jurisdiction to make such an order. On the authorities, and on principle, I see no reason to doubt that this Court can make an order, such as is asked for in this case, in respect of minors situate within the limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of this Court.

The second question, whether this jurisdiction extends to minors, who are British subjects, residing outside the limits of such original jurisdiction, depends on the Charters which have conferred jurisdiction upon this Court. Under the Amended Letters Patent of 1865, cl. 17, it is ordained that “the High Court of Judicature at Bombay shall have the like power and authority with respect to the persons and estate of infants, idiots, and lunatics within the Bombay Presidency, as that which was vested in the said High Court immediately before the publication of these presents.” When one turns to the Letters Patent of 1862, which were in force at the time when the Amended Letters Patent were granted, one finds that cl. 16 of those Letters Patent ordained that “the High Court of Judicature at Bombay shall have the like power and authority with respect to the persons and estates of infants, idiots, and lunatics, whether within or without the Presidency of Bombay, as that which is now vested in the said Supreme Court at Bombay.” That, no doubt, throws one back to the powers of the Supreme Court, and it is argued that the powers of the Supreme Court were limited to minors resident within the ordinary original jurisdiction. If that were so, I should be of opinion that cl. 17 of the Amended Letters Patent of 1865 and cl. 16 of the Letters Patent of 1862 conferred upon the High Court a more extensive jurisdiction than that which the Supreme Court had possessed, because both those clauses refer to minors within the Presidency of Bombay, and the only way in which on that hypothesis effect could be given to those words would be by holding that the Letters Patent conferred upon the High Court powers over infants, idiots, and lunatics within the Presidency of Bombay similar to those exercised by the Supreme Court within the Town and Island of Bombay. But, in my opinion, it is not correct to say that the Supreme Court's powers over minors were limited to minors within the Town and Island of Bombay. The power in relation to minors is granted by cl. 37 of the Supreme Court Charter of 1823, which follows immediately after cl. 36 conferring equitable jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court. By cl. 37 the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay was authorized to appoint guardians and keepers for infants and their estates, according to the order and course observed in that portion of Great Britain called England. I need not refer to the rest of the clause which deals with lunatics. Now, it will be observed that that clause imposes no territorial limitation. But it is argued that we ought to refer back to cl. 23, which confers jurisdiction on the Supreme Court in relation to civil suits, and it is said that that jurisdiction does not extend beyond the Town and Island of Bombay. In my opinion, there is no justification for limiting the words of cl. 37 conferring jurisdiction in respect of minors by reference to any other clause. The reference to the jurisdiction exercised in England seems to me to show that the jurisdiction, which it was intended to confer on the Supreme Court, was jurisdiction to exercise the powers of the Crown as parens patriæ, those powers being exercised in England at first by the Lord Chancellor, afterwards by the Court of Chancery, and at the present time by the Judges of the Chancery Division. In my view, cl. 37 conferred similar powers upon the Supreme Court; and, if that is so, there was no reason for restricting the powers to part only of the Bombay Presidency, since no other Court in the Presidency possessed such powers and no question of conflicting jurisdiction could arise. The powers now existing under the Amended Letters Patent, in my opinion, extend to persons under disability wherever in the Presidency they may be found, provided they are subjects of the British Crown. On that view of the matter, it is not necessary to consider the interesting and difficult question as to what exactly was meant in cl. 23 of the Charter of 1823 by the expression "British subjects," a question which was discussed at great length and with much learning by a bench of the Madras High Court in Raja of Vizianagram v. Secretary of State for India.<sup>1</sup> In my judgment, therefore, the jurisdiction of the Court to sanction a contract for the benefit of a minor extends, at any rate, to a minor resident within the Presidency of Bombay.

I then come to the third question, whether we ought in this case to make such an order as is asked for. I must confess, speaking for myself, that I cannot see the benefit of appointing the karta of the family as guardian of the share of the minors in the property to be sold. It seems to me that an application of this sort is analogous to applications, which are very common in England, where a trustee, having power to sell property in which an infant is interested, comes to the Court to know whether he ought to exercise his power in a particular manner. The object of the application may be to save the trustee from possible actions for breach of trust in the future, or it may be to confirm the title of the purchaser. In cases of that nature it is the practice of the Judges of the Chancery Division by whom such applications are heard to consider very carefully whether the proposed sale, or whatever the transaction may be, is for the benefit of the minor, and, if so, to sanction the same. The result of sanctioning the transaction on behalf of a minor is to remove the disability of minority, and to place the parties in the same position as they would have been in if the minor was of age and approved the transaction. It seems to me that an analogous position arises when the manager of a joint Hindu family comes to the Court and asks it to sanction a sale as being for the benefit of a minor. The manager is not, of course, a trustee; but he has power to sell property, in which the minor is interested, for legal necessity or the benefit of the estate, without the consent of coparceners. Very frequently a purchaser insists on having the sanction of adult coparceners, so as to preclude them from challenging the sale in the future. A minor coparcener cannot consent because of his minority, and the object (as in the English cases) of coming to the Court and asking for its sanction on behalf of a minor is to remove the disability of minority and to protect the purchaser from attack by the minor after attaining majority, and how the position is improved by appointing the karta guardian of the minor's property, I do not follow. However, the appointment of a guardian of the share of a minor in the particular property to be sold cannot generally do any harm. As I have no doubt the Court has jurisdiction, and the contract in this case requires the appointment of the karta as guardian, I think we may make the appointment.

I am told that applications of this sort are not uncommon, and that they are normally made ex parte, as is this application. I have no doubt that learned Judges in Chambers have always taken great care in seeing that the contract is one beneficial to the minor, because this Court both in In re Manilal Hargovan (supra) and In re Mahadeo Krishna (supra) sounded a note of warning against making orders of this sort without due care. But, in my judgment, orders of this nature ought not to be made ex parte. We are, as I have said, exercising jurisdiction which is exercised in England by the Judges of the Chancery Division, and I am very certain that no Judge of the Chancery Division would make an order, dealing with property in which a minor was interested, behind the back of the minor. In my opinion, we ought to follow the practice prevailing in England, and in a case of this sort the minors should be made respondents to the petition, and should be represented by a guardian ad litem. Normally I think the guardian ad litem should be an officer of the Court, because it would be difficult in most cases to find an independent member of the family to consider the interest of the minor. The guardian ad litem must satisfy himself as to the interest of the minor. He may, of course, require further evidence as to the alleged necessity for the sale, and he may require further evidence as to the price being a good one, and he will also have to consider how the proceeds of sale are to be dealt with. If he requires any funds to enable him to look into the matter properly, the parties seeking the order must provide those funds. The object of asking for orders of this sort is to enable the joint family to get a better price for its property, and they cannot complain, if they have to pay for the privilege.

In the present case the petition should be amended by making the minors respondents, and they should appear by a guardian ad litem. We appoint Mr. Kirtikar to act as guardian ad litem. Having regard to the discussion in this Court and to the very clear evidence, that this is a beneficial sale, and having regard to the undertaking given by the karta, through Sir Jamshedji Kanga, that the minors' share in the proceeds of sale not applied in payment of debts will be sent to the Accountant General, for the account of the minors, probably the guardian ad litem will not require to go into the matter any further. But in that case he ought either to appear by counsel and express approval of the sale, or to make an affidavit to that effect. If he does not approve, his opinion will, naturally, be considered by the Court. I notice in the contract that part of the purchase money is to remain on mortgage. I see no objection to that. It is only Rs. 26,000, and, of course, the share of the minors in that amount cannot be sent to the Accountant General until it is received.

Subject to those matters we can make an order.

KANIA J. The matters involved in this petition may be considered under four heads :

(1) Whether the High Court has original jurisdiction to appoint a guardian of the property of a minor, who is resident outside its original civil jurisdiction and whose property is also outside the same but within the Bombay Presidency.

(2) Whether a guardian of a minor member of a joint and undivided Hindu family may be appointed under the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court.

(3) Whether, assuming that the High Court has jurisdiction, an alternative relief could be granted by the Court, having jurisdiction over the place where the minor resides or has property.

(4) Assuming that the Court has jurisdiction, should it exercise it and grant sanction for the sale?

In dealing with the first point, the question of jurisdiction has to be considered under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, or the general jurisdiction of the High Court founded on the Charter establishing the same. It is clear that the application being for the appointment of a guardian of a minor's interest in immoveable property, when there is a joint Hindu family, no application could be made under the Guardians and Wards Act. All argument is set at rest on that point by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Gharib-ul-lah v. Khalak Singh<sup>1</sup>. The jurisdiction of the High Court under the Charter is expressly saved by the last portion of s. 3 of the Guardians and Wards Act. In order, therefore, to determine whether the High Court has jurisdiction under the first heading, it is necessary to refer to its Charter.

The Supreme Court was first established in India at Fort William in or about 1772 in pursuance of 13 Geo. III, c. 63. It was established in Bombay in pursuance of 4 Geo. IV, c. 71, and the Charter establishing the Supreme Court was granted in 1823. It is relevant to refer to this Charter, because the later Charters refer to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court originally established. In the order of dates, the High Courts Act was passed in 1861, and ss. 8 and 9 give authority to the Sovereign to establish a High Court under the Royal Charter. In pursuance of that, the Charter of 1862 was granted. Clause 16 of that Charter relates to the jurisdiction over minors. Then came the Charter of 1865, under which the High Court is functioning at present, and cl. 17 relates to minors. It provides that the High Court shall have the like power and authority with respect to the persons and estate of infants, as that which was vested in the High Court before the publication of those presents. It is to be noticed that in this clause there is a clear reference both to "persons" and "estate." Clause 16 of the Charter of 1862 similarly refers both to "persons" and "estates" of infants, idiots and lunatics, and mentions that the High Court established shall have the like power and authority as that which was vested in the Supreme Court at Bombay. Clause 37 of the Charter of 1823, which has been quoted in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, does not specify any limitation on jurisdiction on the ground of residence or property of the infants or lunatics. By cl. 36 the High Court was invested with the powers exercised by the Court of Chancery in England. If these clauses were read by themselves, there appears no doubt that the High Court had jurisdiction which was vested in the Crown as parens patriæ that is over every person who was a minor and who owed allegiance to the Crown. In that view, wherever the minor be, or wherever his estate be, the High Court has jurisdiction over him. We are indebted to the learned Advocate General for putting before us the different aspects of the Charter. It was pointed out by him that cl. 23 contained a marginal note "The Jurisdiction of the Court defined." He pointed out that the jurisdiction of the Court was defined by cl. 23, while the subsequent clauses only stated the different natures, as contrasted with the extent of the jurisdiction of the Court. This argument overlooks the point that marginal notes do not control the interpretation of statutes and do not form part of the statutes. This was pointed out in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jagatpal Singh.<sup>2</sup> Moreover, it should be noticed that the jurisdiction of the Court defined in cl. 23 does not in any way control the general words in cl. 37. Indeed, cl. 23 relates to suits and matters of civil nature, while cl. 37 is founded on the principle that the Sovereign stands in loco parentis to all minors.

If, therefore, the question has to be considered on the construction of the High Courts Act and the different Charters, it appears that the High Court has jurisdiction over minors wherever they be, provided they owe allegiance to the Sovereign. On this point numerous authorities were cited. I shall briefly consider them.

S. B. I shall first deal with the English cases. In Hope v. Hope<sup>1</sup> it was held that the Court had jurisdiction to appoint a guardian of a British child who was born outside; and in In re Willoughby (an Infant)<sup>2</sup> it was held that the Court had jurisdiction to appoint a guardian of a child who was English by nationality, although French by domicile. So far as Indian cases are concerned, in Bombay there is no authority. In Re Jagannath Ranji<sup>3</sup> Mr. Justice Starling considered that the Court of Chancery in England had jurisdiction to appoint guardians of infants, whether such infants had property or not. In In re the Estate of H. G. Meakin<sup>4</sup> the question of the appointment of a guardian arose where the minors were at Poona, and one of them was in England. The parties were British subjects, but letters of administration to the estate of the deceased parent were granted in Bombay and the property was with the Administrator General in Bombay. It may, therefore, be considered that in that case the property of the minor was within the jurisdiction, and the larger question did not arise. Our attention is drawn to three decisions of the Calcutta High Court. In In the matter of Srish Chunder Singh<sup>5</sup> the Court refused to appoint a guardian of the person and property of an infant who was not an European British subject and who was living outside the limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Court, there being testamentary guardians in existence and there being no application to remove them. It was held that there was no precedent and there being no difficulty in administration the summary procedure cannot be availed of. The words of the Charter are not construed. The jurisdiction under the Guardians and Wards Act was considered, and it was pointed out that as there were testamentary guardians, the Court would not appoint a guardian under that jurisdiction. In Taruchandra Ghosh, In re<sup>6</sup> an ex parte order was made appointing a guardian where the minor and his property were outside the limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the Court; but it must be pointed out that the case was governed by the Dayabhaga law, and the estate of the minor was a divided share received on partition. This aspect of the case has to be borne in mind in considering the second head to be dealt with here. In In the matter of Phanindrachandra Set<sup>7</sup> the decision in Taruchandra Ghosh, In re (supra) was not followed and impliedly disapproved, although in terms it was distinguished. It was a case of a lunatic. It was considered that s. 14 of 13 Geo. III, c. 63, limited the jurisdiction to persons within the area of Fort William, and for that purpose the learned Judge quoted a portion of that particular section. It may be noticed that the whole of the section does not appear to have been fully looked at and the words of the clauses relating to minors and conferring the Chancery jurisdiction are not scrutinised. In In the matter of Govind Prasad<sup>8</sup> it was held that the Court had jurisdiction in such a case, but for reasons considered in the judgment it did not consider it expedient to exercise it. In Madras there are two interesting decisions, which discuss the clauses of the Charter in detail.

They are Raja of Vizianagram v. Secretary of State for India<sup>1</sup> and In re Govindan Nair.<sup>2</sup> In the last case the question was in respect of the power of the Court to issue writs of habeas corpus outside Presidency Towns. In the course of his judgment Schwabe C. J. relied on the jurisdiction of the King's Bench Division in England to determine the limits of the High Court's jurisdiction. He observed (p. 926) :—

"This Court has, however, succeeded under the High Courts of Judicature in India Act, 24 and 25 Vic., C. 104, and the Letters Patent issued thereunder to all the powers of the Supreme Court of Madras."

It was held that the Court had jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus outside Presidency Towns. In a later Privy Council case it has been held that this jurisdiction has been limited by s. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but that does not affect the interpretation of the clauses of the Charter. In Raja of Vizianagram's case, in a carefully considered judgment, there is an elaborate discussion about the construction of the different clauses of the Charter relating to infants. The Court held that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over infants, which the High Court inherited, was not limited to the City of Madras, and, outside the city limits, to European subjects only, but it extended to the native Indians outside the City of Madras. The Court then proceeded to further consider whether the expression "British subjects" found in the original Charter had an enlarged meaning by reason of the Crown taking over the possessions of the East India Company so as to include Indian subjects also. In the opinion of the Court the meaning of that phrase was widened to that extent. That case is therefore a direct authority in support of the applicant's contentions. In Maharani of Baroda v. Kasturbhai<sup>3</sup> the Bombay High Court had occasion to consider the power of the Court to direct its Sheriff to execute its warrant outside the jurisdiction. That is not a case dealing with cl. 37, although certain observations in that case support the conclusion that the Court had in certain matters jurisdiction under the Charter beyond the limits of its original civil jurisdiction. The Advocate General further drew our attention to In re the Justices of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay.<sup>4</sup> In that case the question was to execute a writ of habeas corpus issued by the High Court in respect of two persons, one being the gaoler at Thana and the other a resident of Poona. There is no judgment, but the arguments are set out in extenso. The order of the Privy Council tendering advice to the Crown is only printed. The conflict there was between the order of the High Court and the execution thereof by the Courts of the Company as it then existed. It does not deal with the jurisdiction of the High Court over minors beyond the limits of its original civil jurisdiction.

In this state of case-law, it appears that there is nothing in the words of cl. 37 to exclude infants, who are outside the limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Court, but who are stated in this case to be within the Bombay Presidency from its operation. The weight of judicial decisions is in favour of that view.

Coming to the second head, under which can be considered the appointment of a guardian of a minor member of a joint and undivided Hindu family, the question is somewhat intricate. It has been pointed out by the Privy Council in Gharib-ul-lah v. Khalak Singh<sup>1</sup> that as there is no separate property of a minor in a coparcenary, there is no jurisdiction of the Court to appoint a guardian of such property under the Guardians and Wards Act. That decision does not touch the question of the general jurisdiction of the High Court founded on the Charter establishing the same. The jurisdiction of the mofussil Courts is confined to what is conferred on them by the different Acts of the Legislature. Apart from the Guardians and Wards Act the Courts in the districts have no jurisdiction in respect of the minor's property or person on the civil side. Therefore, the Court at Ahmedabad in this case has no jurisdiction to appoint a guardian of the undivided interest of the minors' property.

The question of the jurisdiction of the High Court on its original side in respect of infants in Bombay came to be considered fully in In re Manilal Hargovan<sup>2</sup>. The Court appointed a guardian of the property of the minor on the ground that by long practice it was permitted and to question the jurisdiction might upset many titles to properties. It accorded its sanction to the sale of the whole property on the terms and conditions therein mentioned. In that case the Court was asked to make the appointment of a guardian of the interest of a minor when he was a member of a joint and undivided Hindu family. In the course of argument Sir Lawrence Jenkins inquired why the karta wanted to be appointed a guardian, since as manager of the family he had a right to deal with the family property. The report shows that counsel urged that the person who desired to purchase thought that he would get a better title if a guardian of the minor's share was appointed and the Court's sanction given to the sale, and that the minor could not thereafter question the sale as he might do if it were made by the manager in that capacity alone. Sir Lawrence Jenkins pointed out that that was the difficulty in the way of granting the application, as that would take away the minor's right thereafter to question the sale, if he thought proper to do so. Counsel, who appeared in support of the petition, stated (p. 355):

"That is a right that need not be considered in this case. We are willing to protect his rights in every way."

The facts further show that on behalf of the petitioner it was pointed out that in the Bombay Presidency the adult members of a joint Hindu family had a right to sell their individual shares, and the petitioner offered that in respect of the minor's share without any reduction the whole of it might be safeguarded by being deposited with the Accountant General. Sir Lawrence Jenkins in his judgment emphasized this aspect and pointed out that the result of granting the order was not in any way to prejudice the minor, because the minor could have no higher right than to have a half share in the property which was to be sold, and the result of refusing the order would be to give him less price than was realised. The whole of the debt, which was there stated to exist, was offered to be paid out of the adults' share, and it was pointed out

that by refusing the order the Court would permit the manager to retain in his hands, although perhaps a smaller amount, not only his share of the sale proceeds but also the minor's share thereof. Under those circumstances, the Court made the order keeping intact the whole amount which came to the minor's share.

That decision has been the foundation of similar applications thereafter made. I have emphasized this, because the later decisions have gone far beyond this decision in fact and in substance. That decision did not decide in terms what was the effect of the order on the interest of the minor because it was pointed out that in no view of the law, on the facts of that case, the minor's interest could be considered adversely affected by the order to be made. Later applications were mostly made because when the "Karta" wanted to sell the property, the purchaser insisted that the Court's sanction should be obtained and made that a term of the agreement of sale. The later line of applications should, therefore, be considered from that aspect. In Narsi Tokersey & Co. v. Sachindranath Gajanan<sup>1</sup> the question whether a guardian of an undivided interest of a minor in a joint Hindu family residing in Bombay should be appointed was considered and it was affirmed, following In re Manilal Hargovan, that such appointment could be made on the original side of the High Court, under its general jurisdiction. This was after the Privy Council decision in Gharib-ul-lah's case. The later decisions of this Court, including Mahadeo Krishna Rupji, In re<sup>2</sup> affirm that jurisdiction of the Court to appoint a guardian of a minor so placed. In In re Bijaykumar Singh Buder<sup>3</sup> this view of the Bombay High Court was adopted, and a guardian of a minor member of a coparcenary was appointed. Therefore, on the ground that for a long time the High Court has appointed a guardian of the undivided share of a minor member of a joint Hindu family, the Court should not now depart from the practice and refuse to appoint a guardian. Under the circumstances, I agree that in respect of the undivided share of a minor the High Court has inherent or general jurisdiction to appoint a guardian.

Coming to the third head as to whether any alternative relief is available, it has been pointed out that in the mofussil no suit to appoint a guardian is permissible under the Guardians and Wards Act. Basant v. Narayaniah<sup>4</sup> decided that. The jurisdiction of the mofussil Courts in respect of minors' property and person is limited by the Guardians and Wards Act, and, therefore, so far as the mofussil Courts are concerned, there is no alternative remedy. It was urged by the learned Advocate General that this may be a ground for bringing in fresh legislation, but is not a ground for this Court extending its jurisdiction. In my opinion we are not however extending the Court's jurisdiction. This point is considered only to meet the argument that an alternative relief exists in the mofussil Court and the applicant should be asked to apply to that Court rather than invoke the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court.

This brings me to the last head viz., whether it is expedient to exercise the jurisdiction which exists in this Court. Different arguments have been advanced at different times in support of such applications. It is contended that this is a term of the contract, which gives the joint family a better price or that the purchaser claims that he must have a good title, and, therefore, the Court should sanction the sale. It is sometimes alleged that the purchaser is entitled to see that evidence is preserved, and if he takes the property without obtaining the sanction of the Court, after twenty or thirty years when the question arises, he may find it difficult to prove his title. There is a considerable force in these contentions. But each of them may be capable of being satisfied by an order obtained under such applications and in other ways also. The purchaser's right to have a good title is undoubted. The application, which is made here, calls for a greater degree of proof to be led before the Court than what may be sufficient from the purchaser's point of view. The authorities on Hindu law show that a purchaser buying property from a manager of a joint family is not obliged to prove as a fact that there was legal necessity or benefit to the estate. It is sufficient for him to show that he had made at the time of purchase bona fide inquiries, and as a reasonable man was satisfied about the necessity or benefit. When the matter is brought before the Court, on such application it has to be recognized that the Court is called upon to make an effective order so as to bind the minor, and the Court will require a higher degree of proof than merely establishing a prima facie case which would satisfy on reasonable inquiries a bona fide purchaser. In making a contract with a term of this kind the parties have, therefore, to recognize that they are taking upon themselves a greater liability of proof before a Court. It is true that a purchaser several times is faced with the question after a number of years. But I may point out that the difficulty could be met by obtaining affidavits from the parties and preserving extracts from books of account or certified copies thereof. All these may be well preserved as documents of title. As I have pointed out, the degree of proof, which the Court will require when making an order which is binding on minors, is bound to be far higher than mere satisfaction to a bona fide purchaser on his making reasonable inquiries. These observations are meant only to caution parties before they make this a term of the contract. They may, if they are so minded, achieve the result by preserving proofs in respect of the bona fides of the purchase transaction. I may point out also that in considering applications of this kind the Court has to inquire into the debts which are stated to exist. Normally a purchaser may consider that an antecedent debt has to be paid, and if there is reasonable proof of its bona fides and necessity, the requirements of law may be satisfied. When the question comes to be considered by the Court, the Court may have to go into greater details and to find out that the debts were binding. The fact that they were antecedent debts may not be sufficient for the Court passing the order, realising that the order is binding on the interest of the minor. These points have to be considered carefully in applications which are made to Court. Under the procedure which is now suggested in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice all minor's interests have to be scrutinized very carefully, and different aspects will have to be borne in mind in disposing of these applications.

These points had not arisen in In re Manilal Hargovan, because there the whole of the minor's interest, without any deduction, was sought to be safeguarded by being deposited with the Accountant General. As I have pointed out, the applications, which are based on that, but which go much beyond the scope of that case, have to be considered from different aspects, because they involve larger questions which are not dealt with in that decision.

In the present case the transaction is shown on the affidavits to be clearly beneficial to the family. It is in the nature of a windfall. The interest of the minors is shown to be safeguarded, and in the order which will ultimately be made in Chambers on this petition the necessary safeguards will have to be retained.

Having regard to these facts, I agree that in this case, with the safeguards suggested in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, the order may be made.

SOMJEE J. I agree, and I have nothing to add.

CHAMBER matter. Probate duty.

One Dadabhai Sorabji Madon, who was a member of the Native Share and Stock Brokers' Association, died in Bombay on May 18, 1940. He left a will dated January 8, 1924, and a codicil dated September 30, 1935.

By his will he directed that his membership card should be given to his son, Framroz. In the schedule of his assets attached to the petition for probate made to the High Court by his attorneys, who were his executors, no value of the card was shewn. In reply to the requisition sent by the High Court to the attorneys why the value of the membership card was not shewn, they stated that under the rules of the Native Share and Stock Brokers' Association a member's card or right of membership vested in the Association on his death and belonged absolutely to the Association free from all rights, claims or interests of such member or any person claiming through such member and the Board was entitled to deal with or dispose of the card as it thought fit. The matter was referred to the secretary of the Native Share and Stock Brokers' Association, and he confirmed what the attorneys had stated and further replied that the heirs of the deceased recommended the deceased's son Framroz for membership and the Board had accepted his nomination. He also stated that the value of the card was about Rs. 19,000.

The Master and Assistant Prothonotary submitted to the Testamentary Judge for orders whether the membership card held by the deceased formed part of his estate and whether probate duty should be levied on its value viz. Rs. 19,000. The son of the deceased was carrying on the business of his father and had there been no card left by the deceased he would have had to purchase it for Rs. 19,000.

The solicitors to Government were asked to appear before his Lordship to argue the question whether the value of a deceased share-broker's card was exempt from probate duty.

The matter was disposed of in chambers.

KANIA J. This petition is submitted to the Court to decide whether probate duty is payable in respect of a membership card of the Native Share & Stock Brokers' Association.

The nature of the right of a member in a card came to be considered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Official Assignee, Bombay v. Shroff.<sup>1</sup> Their Lordships held that it was a personal right which did not pass to the Official Assignee on insolvency of the member. That was under the old rules of the Association.

The question of interest of the widow and children in such a card came to be considered by me in suit No. 386 of 1936. The matter went in appeal and the Appeal Court confirmed the decision in suit : Tribhowandas v. Bhikhubhai.<sup>1</sup> In that suit it was held that the widow was entitled to the sale proceeds of the card held by her deceased husband in her own right and the sale proceeds did not form part of the estate of the deceased, whether he left a will disposing of the property or not. That conclusion was arrived at on the footing that the membership card was not property which passed on death, but that on construction of the rules the widow was given certain rights by the rules themselves.

Since then the Association has further altered the rules and the position today is more emphasized. Rule 12 provides as follows :

"(a) the legal representatives of a deceased Member or the persons mentioned in Appendix C may, with the sanction of the Board, nominate one of themselves or any other person otherwise eligible ... as a candidate for admission in the place of the deceased member."

The rule goes on to provide :

"(b) In considering the application of a candidate .... the Board shall, .... be guided by the rules set out in Appendix C ..."

The wording is clearly permissive and this nomination, under r. 16, has to be considered by a ballot. The result is that it is only a recommendation and does not create any right. Rule 36 makes the right of nomination personal and non-transferable. Rule 36(h) in terms states that on the death of a member his right of membership shall cease and vest in the Association. Rule 38 deals with the question of a membership card which under any rule for the time being in force is forfeited or is vested in the Association. In that rule it is provided that after paying the debts of the members, the balance of the sale proceeds shall be paid into the funds of the Association and shall be at the disposal of the Association.

As in this matter the Crown was interested, I directed a notice to be given to Crown and the learned Advocate General has put before the Court certain portions of r. 36. The provisions are found in sub-rr. (i) and (j). Sub-rule (i) provides that when a member dies his debts and other obligations and claims of any member shall be paid and satisfied by his legal representatives before the transfer of his right of nomination. It is singular that the legal representatives are given no right of transfer except by this indirect reference in this sub-rule. Sub-rule (j) is very peculiar. It provides for a contingency of legal representatives of such a member being unable to satisfy the debts or claims of members. The rule provides that in such an event the right of membership shall be disposed of by the Board and the proceeds applied in the order mentioned in that sub-rule, viz., (1) payment of debts to members ; (2) payment of debts or claims in respect of transactions effected subject to the rules of the Association and to the extent the same are admitted by the Board ; and (3) payment of the balance, if any, to the legal representatives mentioned in Appendix C upon the execution by them of such release or indemnity as the Board may require. This is certainly difficult to be harmonised with rr. 36 (h) and 38. The only way in which it can be so done is to consider this as a provision made for a particular contingency and the last clause deals with the payment of the balance to the legal representative because the Association has taken a step on the footing that the deceased was a defaulter.

I am not concerned with any particular or peculiar aspect of the case here. I am only asked to decide whether the right of membership, unconnected with any particular circumstances, is property which passes on the death of a member to his heirs and in respect of which probate duty is payable. Having regard to the previous decisions and the clear and unambiguous words of rr. 36 (h) and 38 it seems to me that the right of membership is not property which passes on succession or can be dealt with by will as the property of the deceased. In my opinion this is a personal right which comes to an end on death of the holder and is not property on which probate duty can be levied.

Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), Sec. 138—Cross-examination of witness—Tendering witness for cross-examination—Whether eye-witnesses can be so tendered—Practice and procedure.

The practice of tendering witnesses for cross-examination in Sessions Court is inconsistent with s. 138 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. It may, however, be adopted only in cases of witnesses of secondary importance. Where the prosecution have already got sufficient evidence on a particular point and do not want to waste the time of the Court by examining-in-chief a witness who was examined in the lower Court, they may tender him for cross-examination. But before doing that the witness ought to be asked by the prosecution, with the consent of the pleader for the accused and the leave of the Judge, whether his evidence in the lower Court is true. If he gives a general answer as to the truth of his evidence* in the lower Court, he can be cross-examined on that. But he must in some way be examined-in-chief before he can be cross-examined. However, the practice of tendering a witness for cross-examination certainly should not be employed in the case of an important eye-witness.

MURDER trial.

The murdered man Annappa lived in the village of Nargankop. He was, rightly or wrongly, regarded by the villagers as a dangerous criminal and a menace to the public peace. Chapter proceedings were taken against him and he was also prosecuted for abducting one Jankibai. In September, 1940, he was acquitted in both the cases. Six of the accused were witnesses for the prosecution in those cases.

Annappa, after his acquittal, moved to the neighbouring village of Devshigihalli, which was barely half a mile distant from Nargankop. At Devshigihalli one Nagappa and his wife lived with one Chandrappa. His mistress Rudrawa shifted to a house belonging to one Shivbasapa.

On October 18, 1940, Jankibai, the woman alleged to have been abducted by Nagappa, complained to the Patil of her village that her sugarcane crop had been cut, and later implicated Annappa into the crime. On the same day accused No. 3 made a similar complaint against the same man.

On October 21, 1940, the complainant Payappa had to go to another village Gaddikop to bring some cattle and he asked Chandrappa to go with him. Annappa was also going with two Kakeri men, i.e. witnesses Bhimappa and Shambhu, to collect a debt due to them from a certain person. They all decided to go together.

When they had gone a little way past the village of Nargankop but still within its limits, they espied some persons coming towards them armed with sticks, hatchets, etc. Annappa promptly divined that they were out for his blood and said, "Let's run for it." They did so. The Kakeri witnesses ran off at once in another direction, and Payappa and Chandrappa ran along with Annappa. They were overtaken by the pursuing party and Annappa was beaten. Annappa received twenty-two injuries, as the result of which he died. No attempt was made by the assailants to injure the companions of the deceased, though they were prevented from assisting him. These companions ran at once to the nearest village Dastikop, from which Payappa told Chandrappa to go back and inform Annappa's wife of what had happened. The last they saw of Annappa was that he was being carried off with the aid of sticks in the direction of Nargankop. The body of Annappa was found thrown in the sugarcane crop of one Shivalingayya in Nargankop. Payappa next went to Kittur, where he gave his first information of what had happened to the Head Constable. The Head Constable took down Payappa's statement naming the eight accused as offenders, and recorded the substance of it in the station diary, but omitted to record the information in the first information register, as he was not sure of the nature of the offence. Meanwhile, Chandrappa saw Annappa's wife Sheshava, who had already been told of what had happened by Paresha. Sheshava sent Paresha with Rs. 4 to despatch a telegram to the District Superintendent of Police informing him of what had happened. This was done.

The accused, eight in number, were in due course tried for the offence of the murder of Annappa with an alternative charge of being members of an unlawful assembly the common object of which was to assault Annappa.

At the trial, the prosecution examined Payappa as well as Chandrappa as eye-witnesses. They also examined the two Kakeri witnesses, Bhimappa and — The accused were tried by a jury for the offences punishable under ss. 147 and 148 of the Indian Penal Code. The jurors delivered an unanimous verdict of not guilty, a verdict which the trial Judge characterised as perverse and which was not accepted by him. The jurors were then asked to give their opinion as assessors on the charge of murder. Their unanimous opinion was that all the accused were guilty of an offence punishable under s. 304 of the Code. The trial Judge agreed with the opinion and sentenced all the accused to transportation for life.

The accused appealed to the High Court against their conviction and sentence. The trial Judge made a reference to the High Court disagreeing with the verdict of the jury on charges under ss. 147 and 148 of the Indian Penal Code.

BEAUMONT C. J. These are appeals by the eight accused against their conviction by the Sessions Judge of Belgaum of the offence of murder. They were sentenced to transportation for life. There is also a reference by the learned Judge against the verdict of the jury acquitting the accused on the charge of rioting, the learned Judge considering the verdict perverse. It is obvious that there is no substance in the reference, because the charge of rioting and the charge of murder depend on the same evidence, and, therefore, the really serious question is whether the accused were guilty of murder.

The jury, as I have said, returned a verdict of not guilty on the charge of rioting, which must mean that they disbelieved the prosecution evidence. Three of the jury happened to be clerks in the District Court or the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court, and as soon as they gave their verdict the learned Judge stated that he considered the verdict perverse, and declined to accept it. Then they were asked to give their opinions as assessors on the more serious charge, and they agreed in holding accused No. 1 guilty under s. 304 of the Indian Penal Code, and the others not guilty, and they stated that they believed Payappa and Basaya but not the other witnesses. It is quite obvious that in point of fact they could not have believed Payappa, because if they had, they would have been bound to convict the accused of rioting, and further there is no justification on the evidence of Payappa for distinguishing between accused No. 1 and the other accused. Moreover, one of the other witnesses, Chandrappa, tells practically the same story as Payappa, and it would be absurd to believe Payappa and disbelieve Chandrappa. I think this opinion of the assessors, that Payappa and Basaya were to be believed, was a sop to the learned Judge, who had commented favourably on their evidence. The real question in the case is whether the evidence of Payappa and Chandrappa is to be believed.

The deceased man, Annappa, was a bad character. He was known as the dacoit, and he had recently been prosecuted for two offences, and had been acquitted, and had left the village of Margankop, where he had previously lived, and gone to Shigihalli close by. The suggestion of the prosecution is that the accused, most of whom had given evidence against Annappa in these prosecutions, being tired of Annappa, and despairing of getting him convicted according to law, took the law into their own hands, and beat him to death. There is no doubt that he was beaten to death on October 21, 1940, somewhere about eleven or twelve o'clock in the morning, somewhere in the neighbourhood of the village of Margankop. The deceased on that day was going to a place beyond Margankop to collect a debt of two Kakeri witnesses, who were with him, and that party of three joined Payappa and Chandrappa, both of whom were friends of Annappa, shortly before they reached the village of Margankop.

The evidence of Payappa and Chandrappa and the two Kakeri witnesses is that, about a furlong or a furlong and a half beyond Margankop, they saw people from the village coming towards them. Payappa and Chandrappa say that they saw the eight accused, and the Kakeri witnesses say that they saw about a hundred—that is many people. But, at any rate, they all agree that they saw a party coming out from Margankop, and that Annappa realized that they were coming to beat him, and suggested that they should run, and they started to run. The Kakeri witnesses ran by another way, but the others were rapidly caught up, and Annappa was beaten to death. Now, I see no reason to doubt that this party of five did proceed past Margankop, and that there was an assault upon the deceased; but the eye-witnesses differ on a very material question. Payappa and Chandrappa say that it was the eight accused alone who came out from Margankop, and that they were armed with sticks and axes, and that Annappa said that they had better run, so they all started to run, and the Kakeri people took a different route and escaped altogether. Then Payappa's story is that the pursuers caught up the party of Annappa, that accused Nos. 5 and 7 held Payappa, and that the other accused surrounded Annappa, who stood with an axe raised. Then Payappa says :

"Then accused No. 3 stood in front of him and asked him why he had damaged his sugarcane crop and ordered him to throw down his axe. Then Annappa threw down his axe and asked him not to beat him and promised to behave properly in future. He fell at his feet; but accused No. 3 struck him with a stick."

Then we have the class of evidence, usual in this type of cases, attributing to each of the accused specific blows on Annappa. Then Payappa says :

"Then the accused put a stick under Annappa's legs, lifted him up, Annappa looked as if he were dead and they carried him off in the direction of the village of Margankop."

Then he says that he and Chandrappa went in the direction of Dastikop, which is a mile or so away from the scene of offence, and from there Payappa sent Chandrappa to Shigihalli to tell Annappa's wife what had happened,

The first of the Kakeri witnesses, Bhimapa, (exhibit 16), agrees with Payappa up to the point where they passed Margankop, and then he says : "I saw a hundred people coming running from Margankop side." At that point the learned Judge apparently allowed him to be cross-examined, because it was suggested that in the lower Court he had said "seven people" ; but, when the Kanarese word was looked at, it was 'bahala', which, the learned Judge says, means 'many' ; so that really there is no conflict between his evidence in the Sessions Court and in the Committing Magistrate's Court. Obviously, when he says 'a hundred people' he means 'many'. Nobody suggests that he counted them. So his story is that many people came out from Margankop. Then he says :

"Before Annappa was beaten we two Kakeri men ran away."

The other Kakeri witness is Shambu, (exhibit 34), and a very irregular course was adopted with regard to him. He was tendered for cross-examination. The practice of tendering witnesses for cross-examination, which is no doubt often adopted, is inconsistent with s. 138 of the Indian Evidence Act, which says that witnesses shall be first examined-in-chief, and then, if the adverse party so desires, cross-examined, and, if the party calling him so desires, re-examined. It is obvious that if a witness is examined by the defence without having given any evidence-in-chief, he is not being cross-examined, by whatever name the process may be described. The practice of tendering for cross-examination should only be adopted in cases of witnesses of secondary importance. Where the prosecution have already got sufficient evidence on a particular point, and do not want to waste time by examining a witness who was examined in the lower Court, but at the same time do not want to deprive the accused of the right of cross-examining such witness, they tender him for cross-examination. But I think, strictly speaking, the witness ought to be asked by the prosecution, with the consent, of course, of the pleader for the accused, and the leave of the Judge, whether his evidence in the lower Court is true. If he gives a general answer as to the truth of his evidence in the lower Court, he can be cross-examined on that. But he must in some way be examined-in-chief before he can be cross-examined. However, the practice of tendering a witness for cross-examination certainly should not be employed in the case of an important eye-witness. That has recently been laid down by the Madras High Court in Vera Koravan, In re<sup>1</sup>. Here there were four eye-witnesses, two of whom had told one story, and the third a different story, and it is obvious that the evidence of the fourth eye-witness would be of extreme importance, and if such witness had not been examined by either of the parties, the learned Judge should himself have called him as a Court witness. However, from the questions asked in what is called cross-examination, it does appear that the witness agreed with his fellow-witness of Kakeri. He says :

"Your suggestion that many people came out from the village is correct. They were about 100. Seeing them we were afraid and ran away. I did not see the actual assault on Annappa." A. Cr. J. 1941

Now, it seems to me that the real question is which of those stories is to be believed. If in fact a large crowd came out from Margankop, contrary to the story of Payappa, it is very unlikely that Payappa would see exactly what happened, and who succeeded in striking Annappa; and if in fact it was a large crowd which came out, I think, we must hold that Payappa's evidence against the accused is not acceptable. The learned Judge notices that Payappa is a man of bad character, who had been convicted of dacoity, and also that he was a friend of Annappa, as was Chandrappa. But the learned Judge says that, having said so much against Payappa, he has said all that could be said against him. But I do not take that view. It seems to me that the real difficulty in accepting the story told by Payappa in the witness-box is that on the face of it the story is ridiculous. I accept the story down to the point at which the party was seen coming out from Margankop, and I have no doubt that the assault on the deceased was deliberate. It is clear, I think, that the people of Margankop had got to know that Annappa was going on this expedition, and were minded to waylay him. Even if only these eight accused came out directly after Annappa had passed, it shows that the assault was planned. But if it was planned, why did they let Annappa get a start of a furlong or so from the village? And if Annappa, a man of thirty, well nourished as the medical evidence shows, started to run for his life with a start of a couple of hundred yards, how came it that he was caught within another furlong or so? because the place, which Payappa puts as the place of assault, is not more than a furlong from the place where the party was, when they saw the people coming out from Margankop. The accused vary in age from twenty-two to fifty-five, three of them being over forty, and if they had had to run after a man of thirty, who was running for his life, and to whom they had given a liberal start, I think it very unlikely that they would have caught him. Some of the younger accused might have caught him, but it is inconceivable to my mind that they would have caught him within a couple of hundred yards. He probably would have run a long distance, and his pursuers would have become separated, and Annappa might well have been able to attack them singly. The fact that he was caught and surrounded in such a very short time suggests, to my mind, that the villagers had made their plans, and had cut off both his retreat by the way he had come, and his further progress; they had got other villagers in front of him. No doubt the Kakeri witnesses do not say this, but they managed to get away before the assault started, and did not see how Annappa was surrounded and caught.

[After commenting on the evidence adduced in the case, His Lordship concluded:] Having regard to the improbabilities, to which I have referred, in Payappa's story, and to the much greater probability in the Kakeri witnesses' story, that this was an attack by a large number of villagers, I am not disposed to accept Payappa's story. Chandrappa stands on the same footing; he was also a friend of Annappa. As to Basaya's evidence that he saw the body being removed by some eight persons, it does not follow that because one hundred or more people took part in the assault, therefore, the body

† The sections run thus :

5. (1) Save as provided by or under any other enactment for the time being in force, no shop shall on any day—

(a) be opened earlier than such hour as may be fixed by the Provincial Government by a general or special order in this behalf, and

(b) be closed later than 9 p.m. or such other earlier hour as may be fixed by the Provincial Government by a general or special order in this behalf :

Provided that any customer who was being served or was waiting to be served at such closing hour in any shop may be served in such shop during the quarter of an hour imme-

(2) An order under sub-section (1) shall be passed by the Provincial Government after making an enquiry in the prescribed manner.

6. Save as otherwise provided in this Act or by or under any other enactment, no person shall after the closing hour fixed under section 5 carry on in or adjacent to a street or a public place the sale of any goods :

Provided that nothing in this section shall apply to the sale of newspapers.

14. After the hour fixed for closing of shops under section 5, no goods of the kind sold in such shops shall be sold in any restaurant, eating house, theatre or any other place of public amusement or entertainment except for consumption on the premises.

30. (1) Any employer who contravenes the provisions of sections 5 —Rules made under Act, r. 12(10).†

Section 5 of the Bombay Shops and Establishments Act, 1939, is intended to include a one-man-shop.

Accordingly, where the owner of a one-man-shop keeps the shop open for business after 9 p.m., he renders himself liable to punishment under s. 30 read with s. 5 of the Act.

The word "employer" as used in s. 30 of the Act means a person having charge of or owning the business of a shop.

The effect of s. 6 of the Act, or one effect at any rate, is to protect an employer, who has been compelled to close his shop at 9 p.m., from competition by sales in a public place after that hour; another object may be to prevent a man who has been compelled to close his shop from reopening his business in the street or other public place.

Section 14 of the Act clearly protects the shop which has been compelled to close at 9 o'clock from competition after that hour by a place of public amusement.

The owner of a shop cannot be said to be a person occupying a position of management as contemplated by s. 4(1)(a) of the Act. One of the incidents of ownership is no doubt the right to manage; but it is difficult to say that the owner is a person occupying a position of management.

THE accused was a pan-shop-keeper. He conducted his business singly and on his own account. He did not employ any servant. He was charged with keeping his shop open after 9 p.m. contrary to the provisions of s. 5 of the Bombay Shops and Establishments Act, 1939. He was found to have sold a pan for one pice to one of his customers at 10-20 p.m. on February 15, 1941. He was therefore charged with having committed an offence punishable under s. 30 read with s. 5 of the Act. He was also charged under r. 12 (5) made under the Act for failing to exhibit in the shop an extract from the Act, and under r. 12 (10) for failure to maintain a visit book.

The trying Magistrate was of opinion that the accused was not an employer as understood by the Bombay Shops and Establishments Act, and acquitted him, observing as follows :—

"Turning to the provisions of the Act, I am referred... firstly to the definition of the word 'employer' and 'establishment to which this Act applies' in s. 2, sub-ss. (5) and (6), of the Act. The word 'employer' according to the definition means a person having charge of or owning the business of an establishment to which this Act applies and includes the manager, agent, or any other person acting in the general management or control of such shop, restaurant, theatre or establishment. 'An establishment to which this Act applies' according to the definition means a shop, commercial establishment, restaurant, eating-house, theatre, or any other place of public amusement or entertainment. Putting these two definitions together, it is urged. .... that a person owning the business of a shop is an employer, whether he employs anybody or not. Now, in a legislative enactment the meaning of a word may be enlarged so as to include by analogy something which the word does not ordinarily imply. The analogy, at times may be strained, but there should be some degree or comparison or resemblance, I should think, between the newly acquired meaning and the original sense and it is quite inconceivable to my mind how the meaning of an English word could be stretched so as to include a sense which is directly contradictory to or is a complete negation of its dictionary meaning. It would then cease to be English and so long as the language of the Act is English we have to read it as English. The word 'employer' therefore in my opinion cannot be stretched to include one who does not employ, much less could it be defined to mean one who does not employ. I think the definition of the word 'employer' as given in the Act is designed to include a wider class of persons than the employer himself so that there may be no evasion of liability in case of a breach of regulations and it does not appear to me that the definition is intended to give a fantastic meaning to the word employer. It should be noted that the words 'if any' are not there at the end of the definition of the word 'employer' and the existence of employees in the shop or other establishment mentioned therein is implicit in the definition itself. In fact a one-man establishment is a contradiction in terms. The legislature therefore could not have intended to use the word 'employer' in the sense in which the Inspector wishes me to interpret it. Secondly, a word or a term may by long usage acquire a technical sense but even the technical sense cannot be directly contradictory to its original meaning. The word 'employer' has not acquired the technical sense that it includes a person who does not employ . . .

Section 5 provides that save as otherwise provided by or under any other enactment for the time being in force, no shop shall on any day (a) be opened earlier than such hour as may be fixed by the Provincial Government by a general or special order in this behalf and (b) close later than 9 p.m., or such other earlier hour as may be fixed by the Provincial Government by a general or special order in this behalf. Now, if we come to the penal section, which is s. 30, the words used there are 'any employer who contravenes the provisions of s. 5 shall be punished.' I have already dealt with the meaning of the word 'employer' so that reading ss. 30 and 5 together it is clear that it is only those shopkeepers who employ labour are sought to be penalised. This is further clear from the language of s. 30 itself which says that any employer who contravenes the provisions of ss. 5 and 7 to 21 shall be punished. Sections 7 to 21 deal with employment conditions. And s. 5 should therefore be read ejusdem generis with ss. 7 to 21. If it were intended to penalise shopkeepers as such, there would have been a separate penal section in the Act dealing with shopkeepers in respect of the closing of the shops.

Now, the Inspector points out that s. 6 which prohibits hawking after the closing hours in any street or public place shows that the shops referred to in s. 5 are shops of all kinds. According to him s. 6 is necessary to protect the interests of shopkeepers who are compelled to close their shops under s. 5 as otherwise hawkers would outbid them by hawking their wares after the closing hours. But they could easily outbid them by plying their trade before the opening hours as there is nothing in the section to prevent them hawking before the opening hour. Take for example the case of a vegetable shopkeeper. The hawkers could easily gain an advantage at his expense by selling vegetable before he opens his shop. So the idea of preventing unfair competition does not, in my opinion, necessarily come in s. 6. The hawkers are prohibited from selling under s. 6, because, as I understand it, the shopkeepers may exploit their employees by making them sell outside when they cannot sell inside. . . .

.... Now according to the Inspector this section also shows that all shops should be closed at the closing hour and to protect their interests and to prevent restaurant keepers from plying the shopkeepers' trade, this section has been enacted. Again may I ask, of what use is that protection so long as the restaurant keepers are not precluded from selling these articles before the opening hour? To my mind, the question of prevention of unfair competition does not arise here also. The section is apparently meant to prevent the influx of intending purchasers and the consequent overcrowding of people in restaurants and places of entertainment as it would undoubtedly spoil the amusement of the people who go there mostly in the evenings. There would have been a hue and cry from the public on account of the nuisance of the hawkers at night and the overcrowding of restaurants in the evening where they go for their pleasure and entertainment and therefore the provisions of ss. 14 and 6 were probably thought necessary.

The defence counsel Mr. Pinto has drawn my attention to s. 4, sub-s. (1)(a), which runs as follows: 'Nothing in this Act shall apply (a) to persons occupying positions of management or employed in a confidential capacity.' This phrase is not defined anywhere. But in my opinion this sub-section means that in the case of superior grades of employees whose position is comparable to that of employers there is no fear of exploitation and therefore they can carry on their work, whether that work is that of supervising, managing or conducting the shop or business, free from the restrictions of this Act. The Inspector has contended that if too wide an interpretation is given to this sub-section, it might reduce the whole Act to a nullity because if persons occupying positions of management are deemed to be exempt from all provisions of the Act including those which require that workmen could be employed only for certain number of hours the whole Act would become inoperative. That contention is unsustainable because s. 4 (1)(a) refers to the work done by the persons mentioned therein themselves and not to the work they could get others to do. So far as their work or their own duties are concerned, nothing in this Act applies to them, that is to say, they can work as many hours as they like and keep their shops open as long as they like in their personal capacity. The owner of a shop could put himself in the position of management and nothing in this Act would apply to him either. That is what s. 4 (1)(a) means."

R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the Government of Bombay.

J. I. A. Pinto and H. J. Britto, for the accused.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an appeal by Government against the acquittal of the accused, who was charged with infringement of the provisions of s. 5(1)(b) of the Bombay Shops and Establishments Act of 1939 and r. 12(10), (5) of the rules made under the Act.

The accused is the keeper of a panshop, which he conducts himself and in which he employs no one. On February 15, 1941, he sold a pan worth one pice at about 10-20 p.m., and thereby he is alleged to have infringed s. 5 of the Act.

The preamble of the Act recites that it is expedient to make provision for the regulation of hours of work in shops, commercial establishments, restaurants, eating houses, theatres and other establishments and for certain other purposes thereafter specified. Then there are certain definitions, and to those which are material I will return. Then s. 5(1)(b) provides:

"Save as provided by or under any other enactment for the time being in force, no shop shall on any day be closed later than 9 p.m. or such other earlier hour as may be fixed by the Provincial Government by a general or special order in this behalf."

Now, the main contention of the accused is that this being a one-man shop, managed by the owner with no employees, the Act does not apply.

EMPEROR
v.
MAHAMED
PANWALLA

A. Cr. J. Taking s. 5 by itself, there is nothing whatever to suggest that it does not 1941 apply to a one-man shop. The prohibition includes any shop; the direc— tion being that no shop shall be closed later than 9 p.m. But when one turns EMPEROR to the penal section, which is s. 30, it provides that any employer who contra-
 v. venes the provisions of s. 5 shall be punishable. So one has to see whether MAHAMED the accused is an employer, and prima facie, since he does not employ any-PANWALLA body, he is not an employer. But it is open to the Legislature to make its — own dictionary for the purpose of any particular Act; and the term "em-Beaumont C.J. ployer" is defined in s. 2(5) of the Act as meaning a person having charge of or owning the business of "an establishment to which this Act applies", and includes the manager, agent or any other person acting in the general management or control of such shop, restaurant, theatre or establishment.
 Then the expression "establishment to which this Act applies" is defined in sub-cl. (6) as meaning, amongst other things, a shop. So that reading those two sub-clauses together, for the purposes of the present application, "employer" means a person having charge of or owning the business of a shop.

The learned Magistrate was of opinion that it is implicit in the word "employer" that somebody should be employed. But with all respect to the learned Magistrate, that is disregarding the definition contained in the Act. Undoubtedly the word "employer", according to its ordinary meaning in the English language, signifies a person who employs somebody else. But it is competent for the Legislature to enact that in a particular Act the word shall include the owner of a business, whether or no anybody is employed therein; and that seems to me the effect of the present definition. If one were to read into the definition the provision that an employer must employ somebody, then I think undoubtedly s. 5 would not apply to a one-man-shop; but I have no doubt from the terms of the whole Act, that the section was intended to include such a shop. Section 6 provides that no person shall after the closing hour fixed under s. 5 carry on in or adjacent to a street or a public place the sale of any goods. The effect of that section, or one effect at any rate, is to protect an employer, who has been compelled to close his shop at 9 p.m., from competition by sales in a public place after that hour. That may not be the only object of the section; another object may be to prevent a man who has been compelled to close his shop from reopening his business in the street or other public place. But, at any rate, protection of the shop, which is compelled to close at 9 p.m., from outside competition is one of the effects of s. 6, and the same may be said of s. 14, which provides that after the hour fixed for closing of shops under s. 5, no goods of the kind sold in such shops shall be sold in any restaurant, eating house, theatre or any other place of public amusement or entertainment except for consumption on the premises. That section clearly protects the shop which has been compelled to close at 9 o'clock from competition after that hour by a place of public amusement. If s. 5 does not apply to a one-man shop, one would certainly expect to find some provision protecting the employer who is compelled to close his shop at 9 o'clock, from competition by the one-man shop after that hour; and there is no such provision in the Act. It seems to me, therefore, that there is no justification for restricting the meaning which the Legislature has seen fit to give to the word "employer" for the purposes of this Act, although the meaning may not be the one normally attached to the word in the English language.

The learned Magistrate, I think, fell into an error not uncommon in construing Acts of the Legislature. He made up his mind, apart from the Act, what was the intention of the Legislature in passing the Act, and construed the Act so as to give effect to his preconceived idea as to the Legislature's intention. He made up his mind that the object of the Legislature was to protect employees, and nothing else, and construed the Act so as to make every part of it fit in with that object. With all respect to the learned Magistrate, that is not the way to construe the Act. One has to take the language as one finds it, although, of course, one has to look at the Act as a whole and construe it so as to give effect to what appears from the language of the whole Act to be the intention of the Legislature. The language of the preamble and of s. 5, and the definition of "employer" do not suggest that the sole intention was to benefit employees.

The only other section relied on by the accused is s. 4(1) (a), which provides that nothing in the Act shall apply to persons occupying positions of management or employed in a confidential capacity. It is suggested that that sub-section saves the accused, who was managing his shop, from liability. The sub-section is not, I think, easy to construe. Under the penal section an employer is liable for breaches of the Act, and an employer is defined expressly as including a manager, and, therefore, a manager can be prosecuted for an infringement of the Act. But then s. 4(1) (a) says that nothing in the Act shall apply to persons occupying a position of management. It may be that the sub-section was intended to mean that persons occupying positions of management or employed in a confidential capacity should not be regarded as employees under the Act. Whether or not that is the meaning, it is not necessary to decide in this case. I am clearly of opinion that the owner of a shop cannot be said to be a person occupying a position of management. He is the owner. One of the incidents of ownership is no doubt the right to manage, but one cannot say that an owner is a person occupying a position of management. I think, therefore, that the accused is liable to be convicted under s. 5.

With regard to the rules, it is, of course, clear that a good many of the sections of the Act, for example ss. 7, 8 and 9, have no application to shops in which no one is employed, and r. 12, some of the provisions of which the accused is said to have infringed, is, I think, mainly enacted for the benefit of employees. Rule 12(5) provides that every employer shall exhibit in his establishment a notice containing such extracts of the Act and these rules, in English and in the regional language of the majority of the persons employed by him, as the local authority or Government may direct. This sub-rule does not apply, in my opinion, if there are no employees. Sub-rule (10) provides that every employer shall maintain a visit book in which an Inspector visiting the establishment may record his remarks regarding any defects that may come to light at the time of his inspection and shall produce it whenever required to do so by any Inspector. The accused has, I think, committed a technical breach of this sub-rule, though the maintenance

DHULA JETHA.*

City of Bombay Police Act (Bom. IV of 1902), Secs. 9(1)(a), 33(1)—Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act (XI of 1890), Sec. 3—Agent of Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Bombay—Appointment by Commissioner of Police, Bombay, as additional Police Officer—Power of such agent to arrest.

The complainant, an agent of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Bombay, was appointed as an additional Police Officer for the purposes of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1890, by the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, under s. 9(1)(a) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, as it stood in 1934. Subsequently in 1935, the power of appointing additional Police Officers became vested in the Government of Bombay. In 1938, the Government again delegated the power to the Commissioner of Police, Bombay. In 1940, the complainant arrested the accused, a hack victoria driver, for causing unnecessary pain or suffering to his horse by overloading the carriage. It was contended that the appointment of the complainant as additional Police Officer had lapsed because at one period since his appointment the Commissioner of Police ceased to have power to appoint additional Police Officers:—

Held, overruling the contention, that the appointment of the complainant as an additional Police Officer for the purposes of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1890, was for life or until the same was revoked by competent authority, and as it had not been revoked, the complainant could arrest without warrant under s. 33(1) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902.

THE accused, a hack victoria driver, was coming out of the compound of the Central Railway Station in Bombay, on the morning of October 22, 1940. There were at the time six passengers with six beddings and six bags in the carriage which the horse was struggling to draw. The accused was arrested by the complainant for causing unnecessary pain or suffering to the horse, an offence under s. 3(a) of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1890.

* Criminal Application for Revision No. 236 of 1941, from conviction and sentence recorded by V. K.

Muranjan, Presidency Magistrate, Second Additional Court, Mazagaon, Bombay.

The complainant was an agent of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Bombay. He was, on March 9, 1934, appointed an additional Police Officer by the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, under an order which ran thus :—

“Vithoo Kanoji Rane [complainant] has been appointed by the Commissioner of Police for the City of Bombay as an additional Police for the B. S. P. C. A., Bombay, and is vested with the powers, functions and privileges of a Police Officer under the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, for the purposes of ss. 3, 4, 5 and 6 of Act XI of 1890.”

In 1934, the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, was vested with the power of appointing additional Police Officers, under s. 9(1)(a) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, which ran :—

“The Commissioner of Police may in his discretion appoint . . . additional Police Officers . . . to enforce any of the provisions of this or any other Act in respect of any particular class or classes of offences . . .”

In 1935, the power of appointment was taken away from the Commissioner of Police and vested in the Government of Bombay, by re-enactment of s. 9(1)(a), which provided :—

“The Provincial Government may appoint . . . additional Police Officers . . . to enforce any of the provisions of this or any other Act in respect of any particular class or classes of offences . . .”

On April 1, 1937, the Government of Bombay published a notification stating that in the exercise of the powers conferred by s. 241(1) of the Government of India Act, 1935, the Governor of Bombay authorised any officer subordinate to him (i.e. the Commissioner of Police, Bombay), who was authorised to make appointments by any law in force before April 1, 1937, to make appointments to the Civil Service of or Civil Posts under the affairs which are the affairs of the Province of Bombay.

On November 3, 1938, the Government of Bombay issued an order directing that the appointment to the posts of additional Police under s. 9(1) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, be made by the Commissioner of Police, Bombay.

The accused was in due course tried by the Presidency Magistrate, Second Additional Court. It was contended by the defence that the Commissioner of Police having lost the power to appoint additional Police Officers in 1935, the appointment of the complainant as an additional Police Officer came automatically to an end then, and that the arrest by the complainant was therefore not legal.

The trying Magistrate overruled the contention, found the accused guilty of an offence under s. 3(a) of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1890, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 10, observing as follows :—

“When the Commissioner of Police appointed the agent in question in 1934 he had the power of appointment vested in him under s. 9(1)(a) of Bombay Act IV of 1902. The validity of the appointment in 1934 cannot be and is not disputed by the defence. That being so the fact that in 1935 this power of appointment of additional Police was taken away from the Commissioner of Police and that thereafter it was vested in some other authority does neither invalidate the appointment already made by him when he had the power to do so, nor does the Officer so appointed cease to be an additional Police for the reason that subsequent to his appointment the authority that appointed him ceased to have, for some length of time, the power to appoint such Officers, that power being in the meanwhile vested in some other authority."

The accused applied to the High Court in revision.

I. N. Mehta, with I. C. Dalal, for the accused.

R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

BEAUMONT C. J. The accused in this case was convicted by the Presidency Magistrate, Second Additional Court, Mazagaon, under s. 3(a) of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act of 1890. He was driving a victoria, which had in it six full grown men and six beddings and six bags, and the suggestion is that he was thereby overloading his gharry and causing unnecessary pain and suffering to the horse.

Section 3 provides that if any person treats any animal so as to subject it to unnecessary pain or suffering, he shall be guilty of an offence. Section 3-A expressly makes overloading an animal an offence, but as no rules have been published, specifying the maximum weight that may be carried, there might be a difficulty in prosecuting under s. 3-A. Therefore, the case is brought under s. 3(a), and under that section it is to be shown that unnecessary pain or suffering was caused to the animal.

The principal point taken in this revision application is that the accused was not properly arrested, and, therefore, it is suggested that the conviction was bad. Whether that result would follow on improper arrest, it is unnecessary to decide, because, in my opinion, the accused was properly arrested. He was arrested by an agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and the agent in question had been appointed in the year 1934 by the Commissioner of Police to act as an Additional Police Officer for the purposes, amongst other sections, of s. 3 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act. No time for the duration of the appointment was specified, and, in my opinion, the appointment would continue during the life of the agent, or until the appointment is revoked by competent authority. Subsequently, the power of appointing Additional Police Officers became vested in the Local Government, and in 1938 the Local Government again delegated the power to the Commissioner of Police. It is suggested that the appointment of this agent, who arrested the accused, had lapsed, because, at one period since his appointment, the Commissioner of Police ceased to have power to appoint Additional Police Officers. I do not think there is any force in that contention. If the agent was an Additional Police Officer for the purposes of this Act, as I think he was, he could arrest without warrant under s. 33(1) of the City of Bombay Police Act. In my opinion, therefore, the arrest was legal.

The question whether the victoria was overloaded and caused unnecessary suffering and pain to the horse is merely a question of fact, and there is no ground on which we should interfere in revision when the fact is established that there were six grown up men with all their luggage in the victoria.

The application, therefore, fails.

September 11.

SIR HUGH GOLDING COCKE.*

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Secs. 548, 554—Copies of proceedings—Right of party to inspect whole record—Right to take copies of any part of such record—High Court Criminal Circular No. 160 A—"Papers exhibited in the proceedings," interpretation of—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), Sec. 76.

There is a common law right of a person to take inspection of a document in which that person is interested, for the protection of such interest.

Except as controlled by any rule made by the High Court under s. 554 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, a Magistrate or a Judge of a subordinate Court has a discretion to allow inspection of the record of his Court. Such discretion must be exercised judicially. In exercising his discretion the Magistrate or the Judge will be bound to have regard to the terms of s. 548, and it will generally be improper for him to refuse inspection of any document of which a party is entitled to a certified copy under the section.

The right to a certified copy pre-supposes a right of inspection, because a party cannot be expected to make up his mind whether he wants to have a copy of a document, if he is not entitled in the first place to read it, and see what it is about. Therefore, under s. 548 of the Code a party has prima facie an implied right to ask the presiding Magistrate or Judge to allow him inspection of the record referred to in the section.

Whatever meaning be assigned to the expression "papers exhibited in the proceedings", used in Criminal Circular No. 160 A issued by the High Court under s. 554 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it does not deprive the Court of the right which it previously enjoyed of granting inspection of the whole record to a party properly entitled thereto.

RIGHT of inspection of the record in a criminal case.

The applicant, P. D. Shamdasani, filed a complaint originally on December 20, 1926, against the opponents, who were the auditors of the Central Bank of India, Ltd., charging them with having wilfully made, in their report at the foot of the balance sheet dated December 31, 1925, a statement, as required by s. 145 (2)(c) of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, which was "false in material particulars knowing it to be false," an offence punishable under s. 282 of the Act and/or s. 197 read with s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860. The complaint was dismissed, on December 12, 1929, on account of the complainant's absence at a hearing of the case, and the accused were discharged.

On December 14, 1929, the complainant refiled the complaint adding one more accused and laying certain additional evidence. That complaint went from one Court to another until it was referred on October 25, 1935, to the Court presided over by I. S. Haji. The case took about three hundred hearings (including adjournments) between November 16, 1935, and April 26, 1941, and the progress made was that the complainant's examination-in-chief remained to be concluded and the evidence of the witnesses summoned for the prosecution remained to be taken. No charge was framed against the accused.

The case stood adjourned to April 26, 1941. The complainant was not present at the hearing. The trying Magistrate therefore dismissed the complaint and discharged the accused.

On June 18, 1941, the complainant appeared before the Magistrate and applied to have a search of the record of the case.

The Magistrate dismissed the application, observing as follows :—

"The complainant appears today with a written application and prays that a permission be given to him to take a search of the record of proceedings in this case. In his application the complainant states that the search is required in connection with an application to the High Court for quashing certain proceedings which he alleges are null and void. The complainant was questioned and he stated that he wanted to have a search of the record of evidence, of the exhibits and of the orders passed in this case from time to time. . . . The complainant, in my opinion, has not made out any prima facie case for the search or inspection of the record of proceedings in this case. The complaint, for the purpose of his application in revision, is time-barred in respect of the orders passed in this case sixty days prior to this application. Under s. 548, Criminal Procedure Code, the complainant is only entitled to a copy of the orders, depositions and other part of the record in this case. If the complainant wants copies of the notes of evidence and of the orders passed in this case from time to time including the order of April 26, 1941, discharging the accused, he will be furnished with the same on his depositing the necessary amount as cost for the same."

The complainant applied to the High Court in revision.

The applicant (complainant) in person.

S. G. Velinkar, with Payne & Co., for opponents Nos. 2 and 3.

B. G. Rao, Assistant Government Pleader, for the Crown.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an application in revision against an order made by the learned Presidency Magistrate, Sixth Court, refusing the applicant leave to inspect the record in certain criminal proceedings in that Court.

It appears that the applicant lodged a complaint against the auditors of the Central Bank, and after the matter had proceeded for a considerable time, the applicant was absent from Court at one hearing, and the accused were discharged. The applicant now says that he wants to inspect the orders made by the Court in those proceedings, the depositions of witnesses, and the exhibits in the case in order to make up his mind whether he should lodge a fresh complaint; and the question is whether he has a right to such inspection.

The application raises the general question of the right of inspection of the record of a criminal Court subordinate to this Court. Reference has been made to s. 76 of the Indian Evidence Act, but that section does not really assist us on the point we have to determine. All that that section does is to give to a party, who has the right to inspect a public document, as defined in s. 74, the right to demand a copy of it on certain terms. But the right conferred by that section is confined to persons who have the right to inspect a document, and the Indian Evidence Act does not specify the persons who have a right to inspect public documents. There would seem to be in England a common law right of inspection of public documents by a person interested in the document, so far as may be necessary for the protection of such interest. The rule is stated in Mutter v. Eastern and Midlands Railway Co.<sup>1</sup> in these terms (p. 106):—

v.
SIR HUGH
Beaumont C.J.

“When the right to inspect and take a copy is expressly conferred by statute, the limit of the right depends on the true construction of the statute. When the right to inspect and take a copy is not expressly conferred the extent of such right depends on the interest which the applicant has in what he wants to copy, and on what is reasonably necessary for the protection of such interest. The common law right to inspect and take copies of public documents is limited by this principle...”

That passage was cited and followed in India in Chandi Charan Dhar v. Boistab Charan Dhar.<sup>2</sup>

Under the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 548 gives to any person affected by a judgment or order passed by a criminal Court the right to have a copy of the Judge's charge to the jury or of any order or deposition or other part of the record on the terms specified in the section. Then s. 554 gives a right to Chartered High Courts to make rules for the inspection of the records of subordinate Courts. For many years after s. 548 was passed, there were no rules of this Court relating to inspection, and I understand that the practice was for a Magistrate or Judge to give inspection of the record of his Court as he thought proper. I have no doubt that, except as controlled by any rule made by the High Court, a Magistrate or Judge of a subordinate Court has a discretion to allow inspection of the record of his Court, but such discretion must be exercised judicially. In exercising his discretion a Magistrate or Judge would be bound to have regard to the terms of s. 548, and in my opinion it would be difficult, and generally improper, for him to refuse inspection of any document of which a party was entitled to a certified copy under that section. The right to a certified copy seems to me to presuppose a right of inspection, because a party cannot be expected to make up his mind whether he wants to have a copy of a document, if he is not entitled in the first place to read it, and see what it is about. To require a party to take certified copies of all documents on the record in order to determine of which documents he really requires a copy would seem to involve unnecessary expense and trouble. Therefore, I think prima facie under s. 548 a party would have an implied right to ask the presiding Magistrate or Judge to allow him inspection of the record referred to in the section.

But in 1934 this Court framed a rule under s. 554, which is Criminal Circular No. 160-A, and is in these terms :

“(i) Subject at all times to the convenience of the Court and subject to such regulations as the Presiding Officer of the Court may make in order to ensure the safety of the record, parties to a Criminal Proceeding when they are not represented and their pleaders or advocates when they are represented are entitled, on payment of the prescribed fees, to inspect the papers exhibited in the said proceeding. In no case shall the original papers be removed from the office.”

The expression "papers exhibited in the proceeding" seems to me to be an unfortunate one. It is neither a technical expression, nor a popular one. If the phrase used had been "exhibits", that would have been a technical expression, but it would have included many things which are not papers. Many articles are exhibited in criminal trials which are not papers, and it is difficult to see why a party interested should not be entitled to inspect an article exhibited. I think, probably the expression was intended to cover the whole record, but even if it be confined, as the opponents contend in this case, to papers which are exhibited in the evidence of witnesses, so as not to include copies of depositions or orders of the Court, I am of opinion that the rule is not exclusive. It does not deprive the Court of the right which it previously enjoyed of granting inspection of the whole record to a party properly entitled thereto; and in revision we are entitled to consider whether the learned Magistrate exercised his discretion on the right ground. He has not given any reason for holding that the applicant is not entitled to inspect the record in this case, and I do not myself see any ground on which the applicant can be refused such right. He is clearly entitled under s. 548, as a person affected by the order of the learned Magistrate discharging the accused, to require certified copies of the orders, depositions and other part of the record. It seems to me to be altogether unreasonable to insist that he must take certified copies of documents in order to determine whether he really wants such copies. The more rational course is to allow him to inspect the documents in order to make up his mind whether he wants to have certified copies or not.

I think, therefore, we must allow the application, and direct that the applicant may inspect, at such time and on such proper conditions as the Magistrate may direct, orders made in the proceedings by the Magistrate, depositions of witnesses and the exhibits in the case.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), Secs. 75(1), 70, 69—"Aggrieved by a decision..."—Interpretation—Prosecution of insolvent—Application by creditor—Refusal of application—Appeal from order of refusal—District Court—Jurisdiction to hear appeal.

The words "aggrieved by a decision come to in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction", as used in s. 75(1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, qualify not only "any other person", but also "the debtor, any creditor, [and] the receiver" appearing in the sub-section.

<sup>1</sup> Criminal Application for Revision No. 182 of 1941, against an order passed by G. H. Salvi, District and Sessions Judge of Satara, summarily dismissing an appeal from an order passed by B. C. Patil, First Class Subordinate Judge at Satara.

Hence, a creditor who is refused leave, by a Subordinate Judge, to prosecute the insolvent, under s. 70 of the Act, for fraudulent suppression of assets, is not entitled to appeal to the District Judge, as he cannot be said to be aggrieved by the order.

v.
TULJARAM
RAOJI

TULJARAM and others (opponents) filed an application in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Satara, for being adjudicated insolvents under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920.

The applicant Lalchand applied to the Court praying that the opponents be proceeded with under s. 69 of the Act, and alleged that they had omitted to mention the name of one of their creditors and had not disclosed all the property they owned and possessed.

The Subordinate Judge refused to file a criminal complaint as prayed for, observing as follows :—

"The evidence adduced does not disclose that the failure of the insolvents to include some of the properties (viz. a few pro-notes etc.) or the name of one of the creditors was wilful and fraudulent. I do not think that this is a fit case justifying the filing of a criminal complaint. Such a complaint is, in my opinion, sure to end unsuccessfully."

The applicant appealed against the order to the District Judge, but the appeal was summarily dismissed, under O. XLI, r. 11, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, for the following reasons :—

"Section 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, gives a right of appeal to a creditor aggrieved by a decision given or an order made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction. I do not think that the appellant can be said to have been aggrieved by the order made by the lower Court in this case. The order made does not affect him in any way. This view is supported by the rulings in Ladu Ram v. Mahabir Prasad (39 All. 171) and Iyappa Nainar v. Manicka Asari (40 Mad. 630). I hold that no appeal lies against the order made by the lower Court."

The applicant applied to the High Court in revision.

K. N. Dharap, for the applicant.

D. V. Patel, for H. F. Mudireddi and M. J. Rajpal, for the opponents.

B. G. Rao, Assistant Government Pleader, for the Crown.

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an application in revision against an order of the District and Sessions Judge of Satara holding that the appeal to him was incompetent. So the question raised is as to jurisdiction. The applicant was a creditor in the insolvency of the opponents, and he desired to prosecute the opponents under s. 69 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for fraudulent suppression of assets. He applied to the Court for leave to prosecute under s. 70 and the Insolvency Court refused leave. Against that refusal an appeal was brought in the District Court, and the question is whether an appeal lies under s. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Sub-section (1) of that section provides that—

"The debtor, any creditor, the receiver or any other person aggrieved by a decision come to or an order made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction by a Court subordinate to a District Court may appeal to the District Court, and the order of the District Court upon such appeal shall be final."

Section 46 of the previous Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 provided that—

"Any person aggrieved by an order made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction by a Court subordinate to a District Court may appeal to the District Court."

Beaumont C.J.

Under the old section it had been held by the High Courts of Allahabad and Madras that a creditor who was refused leave to prosecute was not a person aggrieved by the order within the meaning of that section, and I agree with those decisions. It seems to me that the creditor is not affected one way or the other by the refusal of the Court to prosecute the debtor. The creditor can pursue his rights in insolvency. If he thinks that assets have been wrongly suppressed, he can apply to the Insolvency Court in order that those assets may be dealt with in the insolvency, but he is not really interested in a prosecution.

However, Mr. Dharap for the applicant has contended that in the amended s. 75, sub-s. (1) the words "aggrieved by a decision come to in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction" qualify only "any other person", and that the debtor, a creditor and the receiver have an unqualified right to appeal. But it is impossible to read the section in that way, because the only reference to the subject-matter of appeal lies in the description of the decision which follows the word "aggrieved". If one reads the words "aggrieved by a decision" and so forth as qualifying only "any other person", then the debtor, a creditor, and the receiver, under the terms of the section, are granted a right to appeal to the District Court without any indication of what they may appeal against. It seems to me that one must read the words "aggrieved by a decision" and so forth as qualifying all the persons who are entitled to appeal. That construction is supported by the second proviso to sub-s. (1) which gives a right of second appeal to the High Court to any such person aggrieved by a decision of the District Court. It is impossible to suppose that the right of second appeal from the District Court was given only to persons other than the debtor, a creditor or the receiver. Moreover sub-ss. (2) and (3) confer a right of first appeal from the District Court only to "such person aggrieved". Sub-section (1) is not very artistically worded, and it is difficult to see the reason for altering the phraseology of the old section; but I have no doubt that it does confer the right of appeal only on persons aggrieved by the order of the subordinate Court. That being so, the learned District Judge was right in holding that the creditor was not entitled to appeal.

The application is, therefore, dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Secs. 516A, 202, 4(k) (1)—Order for custody of property—Commission of offence—Property produced before Court—Pendency of inquiry or trial—Ex parte orders for custody of property.

On a complaint for an offence of criminal breach of trust, the Magistrate referred it to police for investigation under s. 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, and, on an application made by the complainant, passed an ex parte order under s. 516A of the Code directing possession of the property to be handed over to the complainant on his executing a surety bond. Shortly afterwards, the accused applied to have possession of the property, but the Magistrate did not pass any order and awaited the police report. Upon receipt of the report the Magistrate ordered process to issue against the accused, and later refused to disturb the order that he had made entrusting the property to the complainant. The accused having applied in revision against the order :—

Held, setting aside the order, (1) that it was not justified under s. 516 A of the Code, inasmuch as the Magistrate having referred the complaint to the police for investigation, it could hardly be said that an offence appeared to the Magistrate to have been committed at the date of the order ;

(2) that the order went outside the scope of the section, for the power of the Magistrate to make an order was limited to property which was produced before him ;

(3) that the order was bad for the reason that at its date there was no inquiry or trial pending before the Magistrate.

Circumstances of urgency may necessitate the passing of ex parte orders under s. 516 A, but orders passed in that way can only be interim orders subject to vacation, variation or confirmation, after hearing the parties concerned.

ORDER under s. 516A of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, for custody of property pending trial.

On April 7, 1941, the complainant Deoji Kalyanji appeared before the Second Class Magistrate at Andheri and complained that the accused Ramchetsing Arjunsing had committed an offence of criminal breach of trust punishable under s. 406 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, in respect of forty buffaloes, which he alleged were entrusted by him to the accused. On the same day the Magistrate forwarded the complaint to the police for investigation, under s. 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898.

On April 16, 1941, the complainant applied to the Magistrate for an order under s. 516 A of the Criminal Procedure Code directing that the custody of the buffaloes be given to him. The Magistrate passed an ex parte order the same day directing that the custody of the buffaloes should be given to the complainant. The police executed the order and handed over the buffaloes to the complainant on April 17, 1941.

DEOJI

On April 18, 1941, the accused applied to the Magistrate for recovering custody of the buffaloes, stating :—

"The case filed by the complainant has not yet begun, no evidence has been recorded, and the documents produced before the Court clearly show that the ownership of the property is in dispute and eight buffaloes belong exclusively to the accused. It is admitted that the property was in the possession of the accused and it has come in the possession of the accused legally....The order of attachment seems to have been passed ex parte. The accused therefore prays that in order to maintain status quo the property may be handed over to the accused pending the disposal of the trial."

On April 21, 1941, the police reported the result of their investigation to the Magistrate, who issued process against the accused requiring him to attend the Court on May 15, 1941.

On April 28, 1941, the Magistrate disposed of the application made by the accused on April 18, observing :—

"It is not necessary to pass any orders on the application at this stage when orders in this respect have already been passed, pending decision of the case."

On May 9, 1941, the accused applied to the Additional District Magistrate, Bombay Suburban District, requesting him to report the case to the High Court under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revising the order passed by the Magistrate as to the custody of the buffaloes.

On June 6, 1941, the Additional District Magistrate declined to make the reference, for the following reasons :—

"The word 'inquiry' is meant to include everything done in a case by a Magistrate whether the case has been challaned or not (Bhalum Singh v. Queen Empress, P. R. No. 3 of 1897). In this case the Magistrate has passed the order dated April 16, 1941, after the complaint was duly sworn before him and after it appeared to him that the property mentioned in the complaint belonged to the complainant and in respect of which a criminal offence appeared to have been committed. The inquiry by the Police under s. 202 also shows that the accused was the servant of the complainant who entrusted the care of the buffaloes to him as a servant and not as a partner, and the accused according to the police had sold some of the buffaloes entrusted to him under the pretext of meeting the expenses. The Magistrate was, for the reasons mentioned above, quite justified, with a view to safeguard the property, in handing over the buffaloes to the complainant on his executing a bond with surety for the price of the animals."

On July 2, 1941, the accused applied to the High Court in revision.

K. P. Karnik, for the accused.

V. H. Kamat, for the complainant.

R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

BROOMFIELD J. In this criminal revision application we are concerned with the question of the legality of an order purporting to have been made under s. 516 A of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, in the following circumstances. On April 7, 1941, the opponent complained to the Second Class Magistrate, Andheri, that the applicant before us had committed criminal breach of trust in respect of certain buffaloes. The complainant's story appears to be that in December, 1940, having occasion to leave Bombay, he handed over a herd of forty buffaloes to the accused, who was his servant. He returned to Bombay in March, 1941, and when he called upon the accused to restore the animals the accused refused to do so, alleging that they belonged to him. We understand that the accused's case is that he and the complainant were doing milk business in partnership. The complainant also alleges that the accused has wrongfully disposed of some of the buffaloes. In the verification of the complaint the complainant requested that the animals should be at once restored to him. The Magistrate forwarded the complaint to the Police Sub-Inspector for inquiry and report under s. 202, and in the forwarding endorsement he directed the Police that in case they found that the property belonged to the complainant and that a criminal offence appeared to have been committed in respect of it, it should, if necessary, be handed over to the complainant on his executing a bond with a surety in a sum equal to the valuation of the property, binding himself to produce it when required.

On April 16, the complainant made an application to the Court asking that a warrant should be issued for the attachment of the buffaloes and on the same day the Magistrate made this order :

"As an offence appears to have been committed in respect of the animals aforesaid and the utensils and other articles (to be pointed out by the complainant), they should be attached and handed over during the pendency of the case in possession of the complainant on his executing a bond with a surety on a stamped paper for an amount equal to the Panch valuation of the animals etc., on condition of producing the animals when ordered by the Court so to do."

This order was sent to the police-officer for compliance and it was complied with on April 17, that is to say the property was attached from the possession of the accused and handed over to the complainant who executed the required undertaking and surety bond.

On April 18, the accused applied to the Magistrate complaining of the order of attachment on the ground that it had been passed ex parte and for various other reasons and praying that the property should be handed over to him pending the disposal of the trial. No orders were passed on this application at the time. On April 21, process was ordered to issue against the accused. That was after the receipt of the police report, which was to the effect that there was prima facie evidence that at any rate a technical offence of criminal breach of trust had been committed. It was stated in the police report that as the complainant's watchman resided in the stable and there was no possibility of the accused removing the animals, they had not been attached. That no doubt was in reference to the Magistrate's endorsement in forwarding the complaint for inquiry.

On April 28, the Magistrate made this further order disposing of the accused's application of April 18 :—

"It is not necessary to pass any orders in the application at this stage when orders in this respect have already been passed, pending decision of the case."

Section 516A is in the following terms :—

"When any property regarding which any offence appears to have been committed, or which appears to have been used for the commission of any offence is produced before any criminal Court during any inquiry or trial, the Court may make such order as it thinks fit for the proper custody of such property pending the conclusion of the inquiry or trial, and, if the property is subject to speedy or natural decay, may, after recording such evidence as it thinks necessary, order it to be sold or otherwise disposed of."

The applicant contends that the Magistrate's orders are illegal and not warranted by this section for the following reasons : (1) on April 16, when the first order was made, the Magistrate had no reason to suppose that an offence had been committed ; (2) the property in question had never been produced before the Court as required by the section ; (3) it could not be said that the order was made during any inquiry or trial, because at that time the inquiry, which means an inquiry by a Magistrate, or the trial, had not commenced. In our opinion these objections to the order are substantial.

As I have stated, the Magistrate sent the complaint to the police for investigation, and that in itself suggests that without further inquiry or investigation the Magistrate was not satisfied that there was a case justifying the issue of process, in which case it can hardly be said that an offence appeared to him to have been committed. The learned Government Pleader who appears to oppose the application has argued on the strength of an affidavit made by the complainant that the police report was already before the Magistrate on April 16. The original report is before us and it does no doubt bear the date April 16, 1941. But there is nothing to show that it reached the Magistrate on that day. On the contrary it bears the date 21-4 and certain initials which seems to indicate that it was not received by the Magistrate until April 21, the date on which process was ordered to issue. This condition, therefore, viz., that the Magistrate should have reason to suppose that an offence had been committed, does not appear to have been complied with at the date of the order.

Then as to the property not having been produced, the words of the section are perfectly clear, and the power of a criminal Court to make orders as to the temporary custody or protection of property seems to be limited by the language of the section to property which is produced before it. The learned Government Pleader argued that the Court might have ordered production of the property under s. 94 of the Code and that, as the police were directed to attach the property, that was tantamount to production before the Court. But practically what this argument amounts to is that in cases where production before the Court would be inconvenient the words in the section "produced before any criminal Court" may be ignored. No authority has been cited before us for holding that orders under this section may legally be made except in respect of property which can fairly be said to have been produced before the Court.

Then as to the third objection. The word "inquiry" is defined in s. 4(k) of the Code. "Investigation" is defined in s. 4(l). It is clear from these definitions that the investigation by the police under s. 202 is not an inquiry within the meaning of the Code, and therefore on April 16, when the Magistrate made this order, there was no inquiry or trial pending. The learned Government Pleader frankly conceded that in this respect at any rate the order was not in accordance with the provisions of s. 516A, but he argued that the order was in effect confirmed after hearing the parties by the subsequent order made on April 28. That was after the issue of process and after the Magistrate had been satisfied that an offence appeared to have been committed. His view was that under the circumstances it was not necessary for this Court to interfere. The record, however, does not suggest that the parties had been heard on April 28 and the form of the Magistrate's order is not consistent with the view that he was merely confirming his previous order after hearing the parties. He said in so many words that it was not necessary to pass any orders at all on the application made by the accused on April 18, and his view appears to have been that it was open to him to make an ex parte order, such as the order complained of on April 16, and that that order must be regarded as final pending the decision of the case. We think it necessary to point out emphatically that there is no warrant at all for any such view. It may be that circumstances of urgency may necessitate the passing of ex parte orders, but orders passed in that way can only be interim orders subject to vacation or variation or confirmation after hearing the parties concerned.

As the Magistrate's orders of April 16 and 28 do not comply with the provisions of the Code and are illegal, we must set them aside. We must also direct that the property attached from the accused should be restored to him. But as the Court is now satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out, we consider that it is necessary to prevent abuse of the process of the Court and to secure the ends of justice (vide s. 561A) that the accused should be required to give security. The order of restoration therefore is made subject to the accused giving security to the satisfaction of the Magistrate for the safe custody of the property and its production if and when required. In the event of this condition not being complied with, the Magistrate must make such other orders in respect of the property as are in accordance with law.

The plaintiff brought a suit in 1937 against A's two sons, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, A being dead, for partition of the same survey number. Defendants contended that the suit was barred by limitation, barred under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and barred as res judicata :—

Held, (1) that, as the parties were tenants-in-common and there was no evidence that the plaintiff was ousted from the property, the plaintiff's title to the survey number was not barred by limitation ;

(2) that the decree of 1924 directed that C was entitled to partition, but as the survey number paid land revenue to Government, the matter rested with the Collector to effect partition, and that whether the decree was regarded as a declaratory decree or as a final decree, there was nothing for the parties to do in execution, and, therefore, s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, did not apply :

(3) that, if the decree of 1924 was a final decree deciding the rights of the parties, there was nothing to prevent the Collector from performing his duties by partitioning the property, and if it was a declaratory decree it was not a decree finally decided within the meaning of s. 11, Civil Procedure Code, and that section was not a bar to the filing of a fresh suit.

Semble. In view of the decision in Subbaya v. Muhammad<sup>3</sup>, the doctrine enunciated in Mir Akbarali v. Abdul Aziz<sup>4</sup>, which was followed in Rakkhmbai v. Ramchandra<sup>5</sup>, is no longer good law.

SUIT for partition.

One Balkrishna Umbrani died leaving two daughters, Gaya and Durga, and a daughter-in-law Yeshoda, who was the widow of his pre-deceased son. After his death his daughters succeeded to his property. Durga died in 1914 leaving her husband Janardan and son Vishnu (plaintiff). Janardan filed suit No. 184 of 1924 in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Karad for partition and possession of his share in survey No. 22 admeasuring two acres and four gunthas and another survey No. 34 in the village of Marali. The suit was decreed as to survey No. 22, but was dismissed as to survey No. 34 as there was a charge on it for Yeshoda's maintenance. No darkhast was filed in time to execute the decree which was consequently barred by limitation. Janardhan died on March 19, 1925. His son Vishnu was then a minor, and attained majority on February 27, 1934. On February 22, 1937, Vishnu brought a fresh suit for partition of the survey number against Mahadev and Shrikrishna (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) who were the sons of Gaya and who had inherited her property on her death.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contended inter alia that the suit was barred as a result of the decree in suit No. 184 of 1924, that it was barred under s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and that as they had acquired title to the survey number by adverse possession it was barred by limitation.

Defendant No. 3, who was mortgagee of the survey number which was mortgaged by Gaya, supported defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The trial Judge found that the suit was neither barred by res judicata nor under s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, nor by limitation. He passed a decree for partition of the survey number awarding the plaintiff a half share in it.

5 (1920) 23 Bom. L. R. 301.

On appeal, the Assistant Judge held that the suit was neither barred by res judicata nor under s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, but it was barred by limitation. His reasons were as follows :—

"The only point that now remains is whether the suit is in time. There is no dispute regarding the fact that suit No. 184 of 1924 was instituted on April 1, 1924, and that it was decreed on October 16, 1924. It is equally admitted that the present suit was instituted on February 22, 1937. It is, therefore, obvious that it has been brought more than twelve years from the date of the institution as well as from the date of the decree of suit No. 184 of 1924. Mr. Joshi for the respondent urged that inasmuch as the former decree in suit No. 184 of 1924 was held to be inoperative, the parties were restored to the position in which they were at the time of the suit. The respondent and the appellants, no doubt, owned the property as tenants-in-common. In suit No. 443 of 1919, Gaya, the mother of the appellants, along with Janardhan, the father of the respondent, admitted that they were tenants-in-common in respect of both the survey numbers 22 and 34. Relying upon the admission in exhibit 70, Mr. Joshi for the respondent argued that as no further denial took place after the passing of the decree in suit No. 184 of 1924, though the appellants' right to the suit property in that suit was denied, the claim was not barred by limitation. For this he relied upon Mir Akbarali v. Abdul Aziz, 22 Bom. L. R. 916 and Rakhmabai v. Ramchandra, 23 Bom. L. R. 301. These decisions no doubt support the point of view put forward by Mr. Joshi. In Mir Akbarali v. Abdul Aziz, 22 Bom. L. R. 916, Macleod C.J., at p. 919, observes : 'But we think that it would require very strong evidence indeed on the part of a losing party to acquire a fresh title by adverse possession against the decree of the High Court or of any Court, and he would certainly have to act in such a way that the parties interested could have no doubt whatever with regard to his motives in order that they might be enabled to take proper steps to stop time from running'. Mr. Joshi argued that there was nothing on record to show that after the decree in suit No. 184 of 1924 became incapable of execution, there was no overt act by the appellants denying respondent's interest in the suit property. The respondent, exhibit 83, has admitted that the appellants recovered the income of the property and did not pay his share of the income. He has also admitted that his father had claimed three years' past mesne profits in suit No. 184 of 1924. Even after the decision of the suit the respondent has not recovered any income of the property nor has he been in joint possession with the appellants. In view of the fact that in suit No. 184 of 1924 the respondent's title to the suit property was denied, and taking into consideration that for three years before the suit and for more than twelve years after the suit the respondent was not in possession or enjoyment of the suit property, it is obvious that the respondent's claim is barred by limitation. However, in the absence of any overt act after the decree in suit No. 184 of 1924 became executable, if the law as laid down in Mir Akbarali v. Abdul Aziz, 22 Bom. L. R. 196 and Rakhmabai v. Ramchandra, 23 Bom. L. R. 301, referred to above, was still good law, I am afraid Mr. Joshi's point of view would have prevailed. But in a recent case of the Bombay High Court it has been observed that the law laid down in Mir Akbarali v. Abdul Aziz, 22 Bom. L. R. 916, and followed in Rakhmabai v. Ramchandra, 23 Bom. L. R. 301, is no longer good law. This is the view expressed by his Lordship Justice Wassoodew in Bhogilal v. Ratilal, 41 Bom. L. R. 497. His Lordship has observed that the law as laid down in Mir Akbarali v. Abdul Aziz, 22 Bom. L. R. 916, is no longer good law, at p. 505 of 41 Bom. L. R. I, therefore, hold that the present suit is barred by limitation."

Beaumont C.J. The property originally belonged to one Balkrishna Umbrani, who died, leaving as his heirs two daughters, Gaya and Durga. Durga married one Janardhan and died in 1914; and Janardhan was her heir, through whom plaintiff claims. The defendants claim under Gaya. In 1924 by suit No.
184 Janardhan as the heir of Durga sued Gaya for partition of the suit survey number and another survey number, which I need not deal with, and a decree was made on October 16, 1924, for partition of survey No. 22. That decree being more than twelve years before the filing of the present suit in February 1937, various points arise.

The first point relates to limitation, and it is suggested that on the authority of the decision of this Court in Mir Akbarali v. Abdul Aziz<sup>1</sup>, which was followed in Rakhmabai v. Ramchandra<sup>2</sup>, even though at the date of the decree in 1924, Gaya may have been wrongfully in possession of the whole property, the effect of the decree was to break her possession so far as it was adverse to the plaintiff, and that that break continued, at any rate, beyond February, 1925.
In Mir Akbarali v. Abdul Aziz Sir Norman Macleod does appear to have held that, where a purchaser is in possession of property, and a decree is passed showing that his possession is wrongful, the trespasser will be so impressed with the sanctity of the Court's order that he will cease to hold adversely to the true owner, and if he continues in possession, he will do so, presumably, as a sort of trustee for the true owner, but that after a time he may recover his courage, and his possession may again become adverse. The actual words in which this singular doctrine is propounded are (p. 919):—

"But we cannot presume since the decree was passed by the High Court on the 7th July 1896 that the plaintiffs in this suit determined at once to hold adversely to the successful party, and in effect in contempt of the decree of the High Court. It is quite possible after the decree had been passed, and after the successful party was so remiss in seeking to execute it, the plaintiffs might have gathered fresh courage, and might have, after a certain period had elapsed from the date of the decree, determined to set up again a title in themselves against the successful party in that suit."

The doctrine seems to be based rather on psychological than on legal grounds, and at once introduces into the law of limitation an element of uncertainty as to how long the trespasser will remain in a state of nerves.
That would, presumably, depend on the measure of respect which he entertains for the decree; and perhaps the period might be longer in the case of a decree of a High Court than in the case of a decree of a subordinate Court.
The doctrine finds no support in the Limitation Act, and it has recently been held by a bench of this Court in Bhogilal v. Ratilal<sup>3</sup> that the doctrine is no longer good law, having regard to the decision of the Privy Council in Subbaya v. Muhammad<sup>4</sup>, where their Lordships observe that when a trespasser is in possession, and the Court makes a declaration showing that his possession is wrongful, that does not affect the quality of his possession, but merely advertises the fact that it is adverse. I would say that I quite agree with the view expressed by this Court in Bhogilal v. Ratilal that the effect of that decision of the Privy Council is to show that the doctrine enunciated in Min Akbarali v. Abdul Aziz, followed in Rakhmabai v. Ramchandra, is no longer good law, though on any view of the facts, the question does not really arise in this case.

Now, Gaya and Janardhan as the heir of Durga were tenants-in-common, being joint heirs of the father, and in 1919 they filed a suit against a third party claiming as joint owners. It does not, I think, matter whether they were joint tenants or tenants-in-common, but the passage in Mulla's Hindu Law, 9th edn., at p. 23, s. 31, suggests that they were tenants-in-common. In the suit of 1924 Janardhan alleged that Gaya had been in sole possession of the property for the last three years, because he had been absent on Government service, and he claimed an account of the rents and profits for those three years. Whether one tenant-in-common is entitled to an account against another tenant-in-common in the absence of ouster, may be doubtful. But, at any rate, the learned Judge in that suit did pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for a half share of the income of the property during the three years before the suit and for mesne profits from the date of the suit till delivery of possession. But it is to be noticed that in that suit the plaintiff did not claim that he had been ousted, and did not ask for mesne profits prior to the suit. All that he claimed was that his co-tenant had been receiving the rents and profits and had not paid his share to him, and on that basis, rightly or wrongly, he was held entitled to a share. But in order that the possession of one tenant-in-common may be held to be adverse to his co-tenant, it must be shown that the co-tenant has been ousted. Prima facie, the possession of one tenant-in-common or joint tenant is the possession of all, and is not to be regarded as adverse to other tenants-in-common or joint tenants in the absence of evidence of ouster. And in this case it seems to me that in the suit of 1924 there was no claim, and no finding, that Janardhan had been ousted, and there is no evidence that Janardhan, and after his death the plaintiff as his son, had ever been ousted. The learned Assistant Judge says :—

"In view of the fact that in suit No. 184 of 1924 the respondent's title to the suit property was denied, and taking into consideration that for three years before the suit and for more than twelve years after the suit the respondent was not in possession or enjoyment of the suit property, it is obvious that the respondent's claim is barred by limitation."

But in view of the fact that the parties were tenants-in-common, it seems to me that it is not obvious that the respondent's claim was barred by limitation, and, in the absence of any evidence that the respondent was ousted from the property, it is not, in my opinion, right to hold that the plaintiff's title is barred by limitation.

Then it is said that the case is barred by res judicata or by s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. Both those grounds of attack against the suit depend on the nature of the decree passed in 1924. If it was a decree determining a right to partition, which could have been executed, then, no doubt, the case would fall under s. 47. But in Jagu v. Balu<sup>5</sup>, a preliminary decree directing that the plaintiff was entitled to partition was held to be a merely declaratory decree which, if not subsequently enforced, would not debar the plaintiff from filing a fresh suit, and that s. 47 would not apply to such a case. The property in this case was, I gather, property which paid revenue to Government, and, if so, as held by this Court in Jacinto v. Fernandez<sup>6</sup>, the Court had made the only order, which it was competent to make, in directing that the plaintiff was entitled to partition, and the matter then rested with the Collector to effect partition. Whether the decree of 1924 be regarded as a declaratory decree, or as the final decree of the Court, there was nothing for the parties to do in execution, and s. 47 does not apply. So far as res judicata is concerned, there is really no substance in the point, because if the decree of 1924 was a final decree deciding the rights between the parties, and if the only difficulty was that the Collector had not performed his duties, there is nothing to prevent him from performing his duties now; and if it was a declaratory decree, it was not a decree finally decided within s. 11, and that section is not a bar to the filing of a fresh suit.

I think, therefore, the learned Assistant Judge was wrong in saying that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation, but right in holding that it was not otherwise barred.

The appeal, therefore, must be allowed with costs here and in the lower Courts, and the plaintiff's suit decreed.

Defendant executed a promissory note in favour of the plaintiff on June 12, 1933. There was a reference to arbitration in 1935 without the intervention of Court and an award was made. The plaintiff made an application to the Court to file the award under para. 20 of the second schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The application was registered as a suit. Subsequently he applied for permission to withdraw his application which was granted. He filed a fresh suit on October 28, 1936, against the defendant to enforce the award or in the alternative to recover the amount due on the promissory note. The defendant contended that the application to file the award was a suit under para. 20, second schedule, of the Civil Procedure Code, and as no permission to file a fresh suit was obtained from the Court when the application was withdrawn, the suit was barred under O. XXIII, r. 1 :—

that it was not material whether the application to file the award was to be regarded as a suit within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 1, or not, because the rule was essentially a rule of procedure and was applicable under s. 141, Civil Procedure Code :

that if the word 'suit' in O. XXIII, r. 1, means an application to file an award, it must have that meaning wherever it occurs in that rule ;

that O. XXIII, r. 1, could not be construed to mean that the withdrawal of the application to file the award without liberty reserved was a bar to this institution of the suit ;

that, even if the withdrawal of the application to file the award without liberty to apply barred the suit, it would only be a suit on the same subject-matter, but the application to file the award and the suit to enforce the award were proceedings not in respect of the same subject-matter :

Muhammad Nawaz Khan v. Alam Khan<sup>2</sup>, referred to ;

SUIT to enforce an award.

On June 12, 1933, the defendant, Vithal, passed a promissory note for Rs. 1,550-8-0 in favour of the plaintiff, Ganpat.

On June 12, 1935, the matter was referred to arbitration without the intervention of Court. The arbitrators gave their award on the same day.

On June 14, 1935, the plaintiff presented an application to file the award to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Nandurbar. It was registered as suit No. 349 of 1935. Evidence was recorded, but the defendant denied the very factum of the award.

On September 18, 1936, the plaintiff applied to withdraw his application to file the award and the Subordinate Judge passed the following order.—

"Plaintiff is permitted to withdraw the suit. He should pay the defendant his costs and bear his own."

On October 20, 1936, the plaintiff filed the present suit to enforce the award given on June 12, 1935, or in the alternative to proceed with the suit on the promissory note.

The defendant contended that the application to file the award was suit under para. 20, second schedule, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and, as no permission to file a fresh suit was obtained from the Court when the application was withdrawn, the suit filed by the plaintiff was barred under O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff's suit was barred by O. XXIII, BROOMFIELD J. In this second appeal there is a question as to the construction and application of O. XXIII, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The facts are very simple. The defendant executed a promissory note in favour of the plaintiff in June, 1933. In 1935, according to the plaintiff, there was a reference to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and an award. On June 14, 1935, the plaintiff made an application to file the award under para. 20 of the second schedule to the Code, and on September 18, 1936, he applied for permission to withdraw his application. The application was in these terms :—

“Plaintiff has made an application in order to have filed an award made between plaintiff and defendant. The applicant has not to proceed with the work of the said application. The applicant has to file a separate suit in the matter of the subject of the award in the application. So he has to withdraw this application. Therefore the applicant has not to proceed with this application. Therefore permission should be given to plaintiff to withdraw the said application, each party bearing its own costs.”

The order made by the Sub-Judge on this application was—

“Plaintiff is permitted to withdraw the suit. He should pay the defendant his costs and bear his own.”

On October 28, 1936, the plaintiff filed the suit from which this appeal arises, firstly, to enforce the award, and, secondly, to recover the amount alleged to be due on the promissory note. The trial Court and the District Judge in appeal have held that the plaintiff's suit is barred altogether by O. XXIII, r. 1, because the plaintiff obtained no order from the Court giving him liberty to file a fresh suit.

Order XXIII, r. 1, is as follows :

1. (1) At any time after the institution of a suit the plaintiff may, as against all or any of the defendants, withdraw his suit or abandon part of his claim.

(2) Where the Court is satisfied—

(a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or

(b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim, it may, on such terms as it thinks fit, grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit or abandon such part of a claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such suit or such part of a claim.

(3) Where the plaintiff withdraws from a suit, or abandons part of a claim, without the permission referred to in sub-rule (2), he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award and shall be precluded from instituting any fresh suit in respect of such subject-matter or such part of the claim.

(4) Nothing in this rule shall be deemed to authorize the Court to permit one of several plaintiffs to withdraw without the consent of the others.

The learned counsel for the appellant-plaintiff has taken a preliminary point that the Court's order on the plaintiff's application to withdraw did in effect and substance allow him liberty to bring a fresh suit. The cases cited by Mr. Thakor in that connection—Golam Mahomed v. Shibendra Pada Banerjee,<sup>1</sup> Khudi Rai v. Lalo Rai<sup>2</sup> and Narayana Tantri v. Nagappa<sup>3</sup>—are not on all fours because in those cases there was a request in the applications that liberty to bring a fresh suit should be allowed. In the present case the plaintiff announced his intention of bringing a fresh suit but he did not actually ask for liberty to bring the suit. There is perhaps something to be said for the argument that in substance the plaintiff obtained the Court's permission to bring a fresh suit, but we do not propose to deal with the case on this ground. We are clearly of opinion that in any case the plaintiff's failure to obtain the leave of the Court to bring this suit is not fatal to his suit.

The other points argued by Mr. Thakor are that an application to file an award is not a suit, that even if it is a suit, an application to file an award and a suit to enforce an award do not deal with the same subject-matter, so that cl. (3) of the rule would not apply, and that in any case the rule cannot bar the plaintiff's suit so far as it is a suit on the original cause of action apart from the award.

There are authorities binding on this Court which show that an application to file an award, although it is numbered and registered as a suit, is not a suit for all purposes, e.g. it is not a suit for the purpose of applying the rule of res judicata, Rajmal Girdharlal v. Maruti Shivram,<sup>4</sup> and there are several authorities of the Allahabad High Court on the same point. Nor is such an application a suit for the purposes of s. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code : Secretary of State v. Kundan Singh.<sup>5</sup> As to whether an application to file an award is a suit within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 1, Gauri Shankar v. Maida Koer<sup>6</sup> is the only authority. It was there held that such an application is a suit within the meaning of that rule. There was no discussion of the point and authorities were not cited. But in the view we take it is not really very material whether an application to file an award is to be regarded as a suit within the meaning of this rule or not. The rule is essentially a rule of procedure, and it would seem that it would be applicable under s. 141 of the Code whether an application is to be regarded as a suit or not.

Supposing that the rule does apply, and speaking for myself, I am prepared to concede this, what is the consequence? It is an elementary rule of construction that a word must be given the same meaning wherever it occurs in the same enactment, and a fortiori in the same section of an enactment, unless the context forbids it. If "a suit" in the first sentence of cl. (3) of r. 1 of O. XXIII is to be taken to mean an application to file an award, "fresh suit" further on in that clause must mean a fresh application to file an award, and the only effect of holding the rule to be applicable would therefore be that no second application can be made after the withdrawal of a prior application unless liberty to apply again has been reserved. That I think is probably so, but it has no relevance to the facts of the present case.

In connection with this point Mr. Coyajee drew our attention to an old

A. C. J. Madras case, Subbaramien v. Ponnuswamy Chetty.<sup>1</sup> There an application had 1941 been made under s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859. Such applications — were required to be numbered and registered as suits. When the claim came on GANPAT for hearing the applicant was allowed to withdraw the proceeding with liberty KINUSHET to bring a fresh suit and he subsequently brought another suit. It was held
 v. that the former proceeding was a suit within the meaning of s. 97 of that Code, VITHAL which is in many respects similar to the present O. XXIII, r. 1, and that BHIKAN as liberty had been given to bring another suit the subsequent suit was well — brought. Mr. Coyajee cited this case no doubt with the object of showing Broomfield J. that the word "suit" in the two places in cl. (3) of the rule where it occurs — need not necessarily refer to precisely the same kind of proceeding. But it is clear on reference to s. 230 of the old Code that claim proceedings under the section which were numbered and registered as suits were in pari materia with regular suits. The section provided that the Court should proceed to investigate the matter in dispute in the same manner and with the like powers as if a suit for the property had been instituted. It is impossible however to say that an application to file an award and a suit to enforce the award are similarly in pari materia : see Muhammad Nawaz Khan v. Alam Khan.<sup>2</sup> We do not think that this case therefore is any ground for not applying what Mr.
 Coyajee concedes is the ordinary rule of construction, and we hold, that if a suit in O. XXIII, r. 1, can mean an application to file an award at all it must mean that wherever the word occurs. The rule cannot be construed to mean that the withdrawal of an application without liberty reserved is a bar to the institution of a suit. That is enough to dispose of this appeal, and as we have not had the advantage of hearing Mr. Coyajee on the other points I will say very little about them.

Even on the view, which seems to me to be impossible, that the withdrawal of an application to file an award without liberty to apply again bars a suit, it would only be a suit on the same subject-matter. There is the authority of the Privy Council in the case just referred to for holding that where an application to file an award is refused and a suit is afterwards brought to enforce the award, the two proceedings are not in respect of the same subject-matter.
 The position would seem to be even stronger where the application is withdrawn without any decision. A fortiori, it would seem, the plaintiff's claim for relief on the original cause of action apart from the award is not on the same subject-matter.

We think that the lower Courts were wrong in holding the suit to be barred.
 The decree of the trial Court and also that of the District Judge must be set aside and the suit sent back for trial on the merits. The costs in the trial Court will be costs in the cause. The appellant is entitled to get his costs here and in the Court of first appeal.

SUIT on mortgage.

The property mortgaged belonged to one Naoroji, a Parsi living in Ahmedabad, who died in the year 1925 leaving behind him his wife Tehemina, one son Jerkish (defendant No. 1), and two daughters, Khurshed and Marukh (defendants Nos. 2 and 3).

On November 17, 1927, Tehemina took out letters of administration to the estate of her deceased husband Naoroji.

On June 10, 1929, Tehemina "for self and as guardian of minor son Jerkish" mortgaged two of the houses, which formed part of the estate of her husband Naoroji, to her brother Temulji for Rs. 4,000, the consideration stated being that "we have to pay assessment of the bid lands in Dhandhuka and Ramalpur."

Sometime in 1934 Tehemina died.

On November 23, 1936, the plaintiff sued the three defendants, who were the minor children of Naoroji, to recover the mortgage amount by sale of the mortgaged property.

The trial Court held that the mortgage was not binding on the minor defendants but that it was binding on Tehemina's interest in the estate, which was one-fourth. The Court passed a decree accordingly, observing as follows :—

"The deed not having been passed by Tehemina in her capacity as administratrix it does not bind the estate, unless it is proved that the deed was passed for legal necessity... Except the bare recital in the first deed for 1929, not proved before this Court, there is no evidence oral or documentary to show that there were any arrears of assessment, to pay off which Rs. 4,000 were borrowed from Temulji. The only evidence produced by the plaintiff is to the effect that after the death of Nawroji, Tehemina continued her husband's grass business. Whether the same was for the benefit of the family or not, whether the debt—viz. non-payment of assessment—was incurred during the course of the said business, whether the said arrears are paid by her, all these questions remain unanswered and are not duly proved. In short, plaintiff has failed to prove the legal necessity, necessary to bind the interests of the defendant-minors to pay his debt. According to Parsi law Tehemina has got interest in the estate of her husband and the said interest is one-fourth. To that extent the suit property is liable."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

MACKLIN J. This appeal arises out of a suit upon a mortgage. In 1925 one Nawroji Pestonji died leaving three children and a widow, by name Tehemina. In November, 1927, Tehemina was given letters of administration to his estate, and in 1929, purporting to act for herself and as guardian of her minor son, she mortgaged certain property to her brother Temulji for Rs. 4,000. In March, 1931, she executed in favour of the plaintiff the mortgage in suit, this time purporting to act for herself and her three minor children. The purpose of the mortgage was said to be the need to pay off the mortgage to her brother, and indeed the old mortgage was endorsed as satisfied on the day of the execution of the new mortgage. In 1934 she died, and another of her brothers, by name Bejanji, became guardian of her minor children. In 1936 the plaintiff brought the present suit. He alleged in his plaint that after Tehemina had taken out letters of administration and obtained property thereunder, including the two houses mortgaged, she mortgaged the houses to her brother for paying the assessment due on certain land, in other words for legal necessity and for the benefit of the estate, and that thereafter for herself and as guardian of her minor son she executed the second mortgage in favour of the plaintiff for the purpose of paying off the old mortgage, in other words for legal necessity and for the benefit of the estate. The written statement denied that there was any assessment due upon the property mentioned, and it also denied that Rs. 4,000 was borrowed from Temulji for paying the assessment; and the plaintiff was put to the proof of these things. Legal necessity was denied, and the authority of Tehemina to create a burden on the property of the minors was denied also, whether by the mortgage to Temulji or by the mortgage to the plaintiff. The trial Court found that the mortgage in suit was proved, but that it was not binding on the defendants except in so far as Tehemina's one-fourth share in the estate had come to them. It was held that the mortgage was not executed by Tehemina in her capacity of administratrix of the estate of her husband, and that it therefore could not bind the estate unless it were proved to have been passed for legal necessity; and on that question it was held as a fact that no legal necessity was proved. The plaintiff has accordingly come in appeal.

The first point argued by his learned counsel is that the trial Court was wrong in holding that the mortgage was not passed by Tehemina in her capacity of administratrix; and it is argued that once it is held that on a true construction of the deed she did act as administratrix of the estate, then by reason of ss. 211 and 307 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, the estate would be bound by the mortgage. It is true that she was in fact an administratrix of the estate and had been given letters of administration; and the mortgage mentions that fact. But it seems to mention it only by way of explaining how possession of the property had come to the mortgagor and how from the mortgagor it went into the possession of her brother Temulji. But it is impossible on reading the mortgage by itself to read into it any indication that it was an administratrix as such who was mortgaging the property. It quite clearly says that she mortgaged for herself and as guardian of her minor children; and in the earlier mortgage (which stands on much the same footing) she said that she mortgaged the property for herself and her minor son. The mortgage contains a covenant for the repayment of the amount due by all four of them, and that is hardly consistent with a mortgage executed by an administratrix as such. It is true that the plaint does mention that she had obtained letters of administration and in consequence thereof was in possession of the property to be mortgaged; but otherwise it does not suggest in any way that the suit was brought upon the footing that the mortgage was executed by an administratrix, and no amendment to that effect was ever sought. Nor is there any suggestion in the plaint that she had a right under s. 211 of the Indian Succession Act to mortgage the property on the ground that it vested in her as legal representative of her deceased husband, and the case was not tried on those lines at all.

The appellant plaintiff next contends that even if it is to be held that the mortgage was executed by Tehemina as guardian and not as an administratrix, still she was entitled to do so for legal necessity and legal necessity in fact is proved on the evidence. There is some indication in the course of the evidence that she carried on her husband's business, which was connected with grass, and that the mortgage to her brother was in some way connected with that business. But the difficulty in the way of the plaintiff is that the written statement denied Tehemina's authority to mortgage the property at all, and it seems clear that she had no authority in law to mortgage it even for what (in Hindu law) is called legal necessity. Moreover, it seems clear on the authorities that even if she did execute the mortgages as administratrix, it would have to be proved that the mortgage was executed in the due course of administration, and if that were proved, it would still have to be shown that she was entitled to mortgage the general estate as distinct from the business for which the plaintiff alleges there was legal necessity. Even then the plaintiff's difficulty is not at an end, because it is clear that an executor (unless expressly authorised by the will) or an administrator is not entitled to continue the business of the deceased at all except for the purposes of winding it up. If he does continue it for any other purpose than winding up, it is deemed to be continued at his own risk. For these general propositions of law I may refer to Italia v. Mohammad<sup>1</sup>, Tarakeswar Das Gupta v. Ambika Charan Bhattacharjee<sup>2</sup>, where the English cases are discussed, Bank of Bombay v. Suleman Somji<sup>3</sup> and "Williams on Executors", 1931 edn., Vol. II, p. 1171.

The next contention raised on behalf of the plaintiff is that, assuming Tehemina executed the mortgage for herself and as guardian of her children and not as administratrix, she was entitled to do so for legal necessity and in fact legal necessity is proved on the evidence of the case. But the written statement denied Tehemina's authority to mortgage the property at all, and it is argued on behalf of the defendants that a Parsi guardian cannot alienate property on behalf of her wards even for legal necessity. This point was not taken at the trial, and it is contended that we should not allow it to be raised now, since it is a question which depends partly upon evidence of Parsi usage. The legal position of Parsis in the mofussil appears to be that in the absence of any statutory provision relating to them they are governed in the first place by usage, and, secondly, by the rules of equity and good conscience : see Shapurji v. Dossabhoy<sup>4</sup> and Mancharsha Ashpandiarji v. Kamrunisa Begam.<sup>5</sup> In Mithibai v. Limji Nowroji Banaji<sup>6</sup> it was stated that in the absence of evidence of any specific law or usage applicable to a particular case, the law applicable to Parsis in the mofussil of the Presidency of Bombay is that of justice, equity and good conscience alone, and it was stated that in applying this rule to the facts of any particular case the Courts would be guided by the general principles of English law applicable to a similar set of circumstances. If there were any Parsi custom or usage by which guardians were permitted to alienate the property of their wards, it is difficult to believe that some of such cases would not have come before the Courts. But it does not appear that there have been any such cases, and we therefore think ourselves entitled to assume that Parsi usage is not on those lines. In so far as Parsi law is governed by the general principles of English law, it must, I think, be held that a Parsi guardian has no authority to alienate the estate of a ward except with the permission of the Court ; and that applies to every guardian, no matter how appointed and whether de facto or de jure. In Trevelyan's "Law Relating to Minors", 5th edn., p. 167, it is so stated quite definitely with regard to guardians other than those appointed by the Court and other than Hindus and Mahomedans. In Tulsidas v. Raisingji<sup>1</sup>, in which it was decided that a de facto guardian has power under Hindu law to alienate a ward's property for legal necessity, the learned Chief Justice observed (p. 1494) : "It is of course clear that under English law a de facto guardian of an infant cannot sell the infant's property", and it has been suggested in the course of the argument in this case that the natural guardian of the minors' estate was not the mother of the minors and therefore Tehemina was no more than a de facto guardian. In Halsbury's Laws of England (2nd edn., Vol. XVII, pp. 699 and onwards) much is said as to the powers of a guardian with respect to the property of the minors, but there is no suggestion anywhere that the guardian has power to alienate the minor's property except by permission of the Court. It seems clear therefore that Tehemina had no authority to execute either of the mortgages in suit. It follows that the question of legal necessity does not arise at all, and I do not feel called upon to go into the evidence on that point. Nor do I feel called upon to discuss the correctness of the learned Judge's rejection of various applications made by the plaintiff for the admission of evidence at the close of the case, for the examination of certain witnesses, and for the amendment of the plaint so as to show the guardian of the minors as also being an administrator of the estate, the plaintiff having only recently come to know that he had taken out letters of administration. On the view we take of the nature of the mortgage (that it was not by an administratrix but by a guardian) and also in view of the fact that Tehemina had no authority in law to mortgage the property of her wards, the granting of those applications would not now serve any useful purpose, even if we thought that they ought to have been granted in the first instance.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

The sole selling agents of a mill company manufacturing cloth, under an agreement with the company, undertook to take delivery of the goods at the company's godowns. The selling agents employed a firm, of whom one N was a partner, to transport the goods from the company's godowns to their shop. On one occasion when the selling agents desired to transport some bales from the company's godowns to their shop, N's firm hired a lorry from a lorry-owner. SUIT for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923.

Keshavalal Mangaldas & Co. were the sole selling agents of the Sassoon Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd., under an agreement dated January 7, 1939. The relevant clauses of the agreement were as follows :—

"3. The salesmen shall from time to time secure and give orders to the company for the sale of their Grey Fancy or Coloured Cloth and the company shall execute such orders without prejudice to their right to refuse to carry out any particular orders as hereinafter mentioned.

6. As soon as the Grey Fancy or Coloured Cloth is manufactured the company shall store it in their godowns and from time to time give from the registered office delivery orders of such portions thereof as the salesmen shall require on payment in cash of a sum equivalent to the sale price of the quantity so required by them and the amount so paid by the salesmen shall be taken into account when the accounts between the parties are finally adjusted as hereinafter provided and at the time of such final adjustment the company shall give credit to the salesmen for interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum on the amount so credited to them, and the salesmen shall give credit to the company for interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum on the amount of the sales effected by the salesmen on behalf of the company from day to day. But the company shall give credit at the end of each year to the salesmen for an amount equivalent to interest for six days at four per cent. per annum on the amount of the sales effected by the salesmen for that year.

7. The salesmen shall sell the goods so delivered to them by the company from time to time at a shop in Bombay either wholesale or in retail on account of the company at the last rates obtainable in the market but which shall not in any event be less than the rates fixed by the company. If the company shall find subsequently that the rates stated as realised were less than those paid by the buyers the company shall be at liberty to determine this agreement without any notice to the salesmen.

8. The salesmen shall take delivery of the said goods from the company's godowns at their own expense and they the salesmen shall also bear all expenses connected with the subsequent sales thereof such as rent of shops and warehouses, wages of clerks and workmen employed by the salesmen and costs of advertisements etc.

20. All goods taken delivery of by the salesmen from the godowns of the mill premises of the company shall always remain at the risk of the salesmen including therein the risk of fire, plunder or destruction of the goods by rats or the damage thereof by water or in any other way unless it is proved that the said goods had been damaged and spoiled at the mill premises before they were taken delivery of by the salesmen."

The selling agents used to take delivery of the goods from the mill company's godowns and have them transported to their own godown near the Mangaldas Market in Bombay. For the transport of the goods the selling agents employed a firm, Savala Subbarao & Co., of which one Narayan was a partner.

On August 30, 1939, the selling agents asked Savala Subbarao & Co. to remove some bales of cloth from the mill company's godowns to their shop. Narayan hired a motor lorry belonging to one Krishna. One Bhikoo was a cleaner on this motor lorry and he was engaged by Narayan to help to remove the bales from the godown and stack them in the lorry. In the course of this work one of the bales fell on Bhikoo and he was crushed to death.

On January 8, 1940, Kokilabai (applicant), the mother of Bhikoo, applied to the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation to recover compensation from the selling agents under s. 12 of the Workmen's Compensation Act as principals.

"The learned counsel for the applicant has referred me to the provisions of articles 20 and 8 of the agreement and asked me to infer therefrom that it was ordinarily part of the trade or business of the opposite party to transport the bales from the mill godown to their own godown. In my opinion this conclusion does not follow. Article 20 has, it seems to me, no bearing on this question. Article 8 does not in terms require the selling agents themselves to transport the goods from the company's godown to any other place. It merely states that the expenses shall be paid by the salesmen. It may be that such transport may be ancillary or incidental to the principal business of the opposite party namely that of selling agents; but the words 'any work which is ordinarily part of the trade or business of the principal' in s. 12 would not, in my opinion, cover such a transaction. Thus Murphy J. observed in Rabia v. G. I. P. Railway, 31 Bom. L. R. 1929 : "Under the old English Act which has since been amended there was a saving clause in the words 'ancillary or incidental to the trade or business'... I think that the effect of the word 'ordinarily' used in s. 12(1) of the Indian Act is very similar". On the facts before me, I cannot come to the conclusion that transport of the goods from the mill godown to the godown of the opposite party was ordinarily part of the trade or business of the opposite party. That being so, the opposite party are not, whoever else is, liable for payment of compensation to the claimant."

The applicant appealed to the High Court.

The appeal was heard by a full bench consisting of Beaumont C. J., Wassoodew J. and Sen J.

KOKILABAI

v.

KESHAVLAL

F.B. S. C. Joshi, with P. S. Bakhale, for the appellant.
 1941 N. H. Bhagwati, instructed by Madhavji & Co., for the respondents.

BAI S. C. Joshi. The question arising on the appeal is whether the work on KOKILABAI which the deceased workman was employed was ordinarily part of the trade
 v. or business of the selling agents. In considering this question it is neces-KESHAVALAL sary to refer to the agreement of January 7, 1939, which was entered into by MANGALDAS the selling agents with the Sassoon Spinning & Weaving Co., Ltd. Under & Co. the agreement the selling agents became the sole selling agents. They had — a shop in the Mangaldas Market and also a godown. They had to take delivery of the bales and to transport the goods to their shop or godown.
 Thus both the functions formed part of their business or trade. It was while transporting the goods that the workman died, and our submission is that accordingly the selling agents are liable.

The question of law arises out of the agreement, and the Commissioner having misconstrued the agreement a question of law arises which this Court is entitled to consider. I rely upon cls. 5, 7, 8 and 20 of the agreement.

N. H. Bhagwati. In the present case the work is one of transporting the goods and the question is whether the selling agents are liable as principals.
 This question depends upon the construction of the agreement. The test is, did the work which the selling agents were doing form part ordinarily of their trade or business? If the work does not fall within this description, the selling agents would not be liable. I rely on s. 12, sub-ss. (1) and (4).
 Taking these provisions together, it is obvious that the work which the selling agents do or which they ordinarily do is the work which is to be taken into consideration. If the work done by them is only incidental, they would not be liable. The question, therefore, is, whether the work of transport is part of their business as selling agents. No doubt the work of transport is necessary; but the further question is whether the work of a carrier is part of their business. It may be that under the agreement they are bound to take delivery; but that does not mean that the work in question is ordinarily part of their business. Sale of goods does not include transport of goods and therefore transport does not form part of their business. The expression 'ordinarily' means regularly, usually, and normally.

BAI

v.

KESHAVLAL

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an appeal arising under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, preferred by the workman against the opposite party, whom I will refer to as the "selling agents."

The facts found are that the selling agents are the sole selling agents of the Sassoon Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd., whom I will refer to as the "mill company," under an agreement dated January 7, 1939. By cl. 3 of that agreement the selling agents have to procure orders for the sale of the mill company's cloth, and under cl. 6 it is provided that the mill company shall store their manufactured cloth in their godowns and give delivery orders of such portions as the selling agents shall require to the selling agents. Then cl. 7 provides that the selling agents shall sell the goods so delivered to them at a shop in Bombay, and cl. 8 provides that the selling agents shall take delivery of the goods from the mill company's godowns at their own expense. So that what it comes to under that agreement, so far as material, is that the mill company manufacture cloth and store it in their godowns, and the selling agents have to take delivery at the mill company's godowns and to sell the goods at a shop in Bombay, which necessarily involves that they must transport the goods from the mill company's godowns to the selling agents' shop.

On August 30, 1939, the selling agents desired to transport some bales from the mill company's godowns to the selling agents' shop, and they employed a firm, of which one Narayan was a partner, to carry out the transport, and that firm hired a lorry from a lorry owner, and the workman in question was a cleaner on that lorry. Now, it is found as a fact by the Commissioner that the workman was engaged by Narayan to help to remove bales from the godowns and to stack them in the lorry, and it was in the course of that work that he was accidentally killed. It is, I think, clear that Narayan on behalf of his firm was the employer of the workman within s. 2(e) of the Act, he having temporarily borrowed the services of the workman, and the Commissioner has found as a fact that the accident arose out of, and in the course of the employment. But the selling agents would not be liable to pay compensation, unless the case can be brought within s. 12 of the Act, which deals with work done on behalf of an employer by a contractor. Sub-section (1) of that section provides so far as material :

"Where any person (hereinafter in this section referred to as the principal) in the course of or for the purposes of his trade or business contracts with any other person (hereinafter in this section referred to as the contractor) for the execution by or under the contractor of the whole or any part of any work which is ordinarily part of the trade or business of the principal, the principal shall be liable to pay to any workman employed in the execution of the work compensation."

Sub-section (4) provides :

"This section shall not apply in any case where the accident occurred elsewhere than on, in or about the premises on which the principal has undertaken or usually undertakes, as the case may be, to execute the work or which are otherwise under his control or management."

The Commissioner held that transport of goods from the mill company's godowns to the shop of the selling agents was not ordinarily part of the trade or business of the opposite party, and in so holding, I think, he was influenced by a decision of this Court in Rabia v. The Agent, G. I. P. Railway<sup>1</sup>, to which I will refer presently.

The question, which arises under s. 12(1), is normally a pure question of fact. The essential question is whether the contractor was engaged in work which was ordinarily part of the trade or business of the principal. It will be observed that the question relates to the business of the particular principal, and not generally to businesses of the class of that carried on by the principal, so that the question can only be answered by reference to evidence as to the nature of the principal's business. In the present case the nature of the selling agents' business is defined by the selling agreement, and the answer to the question is simple, because the work, which the selling agents do, on the true construction of that agreement, must include removing goods from the mill company's godowns to the shop of the selling agents. Such work not only ordinarily forms part of the business of the selling agents, but is an essential part of it, and the selling agents cannot escape liability by employing a contractor to do such work. I cannot, therefore, agree with the finding of the learned Commissioner.

This case has been referred to a full bench, because it would seem that two cases decided by this Court are calculated to cause some confusion to the Commissioner, and it is desirable to get the questions, which arise under s. 12, straight.

The first case is the one to which the Commissioner refers, Rabia v. The Agent, G. I. P. Railway. What the Court held there was that the erection of pillars to carry an electric cable in connection with the electrification of a part of the system of the G. I. P. Railway Company formed no part of the ordinary work of such company. As the decision turned entirely on facts, it is not necessary to express any opinion as to its correctness. But the Court discussed at some length English cases on the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897, s. 4 of which dealt with sub-contracting and contained an exception in the case of any contract with any person for the execution by or under such contractor of any work which is merely ancillary or incidental to, and is no part of, or process in, the trade or business carried on by the undertakers. Sir Amberson Marten, who delivered the leading judgment, noticed that the words of s. 4 of the English Act were different from the words of s. 12 of the Indian Act, but he expressed the view that, notwithstanding that, some assistance might be derived from the English authorities. I venture to think that to construe an Indian Act in the light of cases decided under an English Act differently worded is much more likely to cause confusion than to render assistance, and I think that the English cases have caused some confusion in this case to the Commissioner, because he cites a passage from the judgment of Murphy J., in Rabia's case, in which he expressed the opinion that the words in the English Act "ancillary or incidental to the trade or business" had much the same effect as the word "ordinarily" in the Indian Act. I am quite unable to agree with that view. It seems to me that work, which is ancillary or incidental to a business, may or may not ordinarily form part of that business. The questions under the two Acts are quite distinct, and I can see no justification for incorporating into the administration of the Indian Act difficulties which arose on the construction of the English Act.

The other case is a very recent decision of this Court in Wadilal Lalluchand v. Bai Radhabai<sup>1</sup>. In that case the opponents were a piecegoods shop, and they employed a man named Kondiba to transport goods for sale in their shop from a warehouse in the docks, and an accident occurred to the workman in the course of such transport. The Commissioner held that Kondiba was employed by the opponents, and that the workman, who was employed by Kondiba, was really an employee of the opponents, so that no question under s. 12 arose in his view of the case. But this Court held that there was no evidence to justify the finding of the Commissioner, and that in fact Kondiba was a contractor, and a question, therefore, arose under s. 12 whether he was employed in connection with work ordinarily forming part of the business of the opponents. Now, seeing that the Commissioner had not directed his mind to that question, in my view, the proper order for the Court to have made was to send the case back to the Commissioner to decide the questions of fact arising under s. 12(1) and (4). Instead of adopting that course the Court proceeded to decide the questions of fact, as though they were questions of law. The Court referred to Rabia v. The Agent, G. I. P. Railway, and also to Karnani Industrial Bank, Limited v. Ranjan,<sup>2</sup> and stated that in the latter case a contract was given by a bank for the purpose of constructing a building in which the bank was to be housed, and for that purpose they had engaged a contractor, and it was held that the bank was not liable under s. 12 of the Act, in spite of the fact that there was a clause in the memorandum of association of the bank which entitled it to build houses among other things, and that the decision was that it could not be said that the building of houses was the business of the bank. As a matter of fact, the case decided nothing of the sort, as I will show in a moment. Then this Court went on to say :

"We think, therefore, that on the principle of the two decisions in Rabia v. The Agent, G. I. P. Railway and Karnani Industrial Bank, Ltd. v. Ranjan, the work of unloading the bales and bringing them to the market cannot be regarded as part of the business of the appellants."

I must confess that I feel the greatest difficulty in understanding what that proposition really means. The learned Judges cannot, I think, have been directing their minds to the question of fact which really arose under s. 12(1), since to say that, because erecting pillars for an electric cable is no part of the business of a particular railway company, and because building a house is no part of the business of a particular bank, therefore transporting piecegoods to a shop in which they are to be sold is no part of the business of the particular shop, involves a glaring non sequitur. The Court evidently considered that these two cases lay down a principle, but what that principle is I do not know. Rabia's case decided a mere question of fact. The case of Karnani Industrial Bank, Ltd. v. Ranjan really laid down the correct principle, but this Court seems to have misunderstood the case. It did not decide that the building of a house was no part of the business of the particular bank Sir George Rankin in giving the leading judgment observed in effect that from such knowledge as he possessed of banking business, he thought it unlikely that the business of the bank would include the business of building a house ; but he said expressly that he could not lay down as a proposition of law that the building of houses formed no part of the ordinary business of this particular bank, and that the matter must go back to the Commissioner for a finding on that question of fact. That was the order which the Court made.

In my opinion, the judgment in Wadilal Lallchand's case cannot be supported. In cases, which arise under s. 12, the Commissioner must find the necessary facts. In that case it was relevant to find whether it was the ordinary practice of the opponents to take delivery of goods at the docks and to arrange for their transport to the shop, or to take delivery at the shop. Without findings on these points, it could not be determined whether the transport was part of the ordinary business of the shop.

Mr. Bhagwati has referred us to the modern English Workmen's Compensation Act and to authorities under it. The Act of 1906, which is now replaced by the Act of 1925, repealed the Act of 1897, and it is relevant to note that s. 12 of the Indian Act is an exact replica of s. 6 of the English Act of 1906, except that it has substituted the very material words "which is ordinarily part of the trade or business of the principal" for the words "undertaken by the principal." So that whereas the English Act only applies to work of a contractor undertaken by the principal, the Indian Act applies to work done by a contractor which is ordinarily part of the trade or business of the principal. The variation was obviously deliberate, and the two phrases do not mean the same thing. It may be that work, which is ordinarily part of the trade or business of the principal, nevertheless was not work undertaken in the particular case, or usually undertaken by the principal. In my opinion to consider cases decided on the English Act merely leads to confusion. It may be noticed that sub-s. (4) of s. 12 of the Indian Act is a replica of sub-s. (4) of s. 6 of the English Act, and refers to work undertaken, or usually undertaken, by the principal. However, as I have said, we are not concerned in this case with any question arising under sub-s. (4), because it is perfectly plain on the agreement between the selling agents and the mill company that the selling agents did undertake to do the transport work from the mill company's godowns and it was there that the accident occurred.

As the question in this particular case turns entirely on the construction of the agreement between the selling agents and the mill company, this Court can deal with the question itself, and need not refer it back to the Commissioner to find the facts. On the construction of the agreement I have no doubt that we must hold as a fact that the work, which was being done by the contractor at the time when the accident occurred, was work ordinarily done by the selling agents.

That being so, the appeal must be allowed with costs, and the case must go back to the Commissioner to settle the compensation.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 10—Partnership suit—Death of plaintiff—Application by defendant to make him plaintiff and the heirs of plaintiff as defendants—Jurisdiction—Practice.

Where in a suit for dissolution of partnership and partnership accounts, the plaintiff dies, the Court has jurisdiction, under O. I, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, on an application by the defendant, to transpose him as plaintiff in the suit and to make the heirs of the original plaintiff as defendants.

APPLICATION for transposition of parties.

The plaintiff Devsey filed a suit on August 2, 1939, for dissolution of partnership between him and the defendant Hirji, and for partnership accounts. On December 19, 1939, the plaintiff died. When the suit came on for hearing the defendant applied to transpose him as plaintiff in the suit and to give him leave to bring the heirs of the original plaintiff as defendants to the suit.

CHAGLA J. The plaintiff filed the suit on August 2, 1939, for dissolution of partnership that subsisted between him and the defendant and for the usual partnership accounts. It was alleged in the plaint that the partnership had been dissolved on June 1, 1939. After the suit was filed, the defendant took out a notice of motion on October 2, 1939, for certain reliefs, and an order was made on October 10, 1939. The defendant made his affidavit of documents on November 17, 1939. On December 19, 1939, the plaintiff died.

On March 18, 1940, the defendant adopted rather curious proceedings. He took out a chamber summons for bringing on the record of the suit in place of the original plaintiff Bai Moorbai, the widow of the original plaintiff, Damji Devsey and Dhanpati Devsey, all three as heirs and legal representatives of the original plaintiff. The defendant also sought by the summons liberty to amend the plaint and proceedings. On this summons Mr. Justice Kania made an order on August 9, 1940, whereby he gave the defendant liberty to bring on record of this suit Bai Moorbai, Damji Devsey and Dhanpati Devsey as heirs and legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff and also gave the defendant liberty to amend the plaint and proceedings accordingly. On September 16, 1940, the defendant's attorneys wrote to Bai Moorbai drawing her attention to the order that had been made by Mr. Justice Kania and enclosing with the letter a copy of the said order and also stating that by the said order she had been directed to amend the plaint and proceedings in the suit and calling upon her to amend the plaint and proceedings within a week in default they threatened further proceedings against her.

It is clear from Mr. Justice Kania's order that it is not Bai Moorbai who was directed to amend the plaint and proceedings. Liberty was given to the defendant to do so. I am not concerned whether in law the defendant could have availed himself of the liberty given to him by the order of Mr. Justice Kania, but in fact he has not availed himself of that liberty, and today the position is that the plaint and proceedings on the record of this Court are what they were when the suit was filed by the plaintiff. When the suit was called on before me today, Mr. Taraporevala wanted me to transpose the defendant as the plaintiff and to give him leave to bring the heirs of the original plaintiff as the defendants to the suit. Now, it is clear that a partnership suit, as was pointed out by Mr. Justice West in Edulji Muncherji Wacha v. Vullebhoy Khanbhoy<sup>1</sup>, is a suit of a peculiar character, and the parties to such a suit do not stand to each other precisely in the same relation as parties to suits generally and that each of the parties to a partnership suit, however he may be formally ranked, is really in turn plaintiff and defendant and in both capacities comes before the Court for the adjudication of his rights relatively to the other partners, which the Court endeavours to determine by its decree. In that case the facts were somewhat similar to the facts in this case. There the plaintiff who had filed a partnership suit had settled with most of the defendants and wanted leave to withdraw the suit or, in the alternative, to have the suit dismissed. Ten of the defendants supported the plaintiff's application. Two of the defendants objected and applied, under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), that they might be made plaintiffs and that the plaintiff might be made defendant. Elaborate arguments were addressed to Mr. Justice West, and although Mr. Justice West felt some difficulty as no case on the point appeared to be forthcoming either in India or from English Courts, he ultimately made the order stating that he clearly had jurisdiction to do so.

Now, there is no doubt that under O. I, r. 10, the Court has the jurisdiction in proper cases to transpose defendants as plaintiffs, and I think that in this case where partnership accounts have to be taken it would work great hardship if the death of the original plaintiff, who filed a partnership suit for partnership accounts, should put an end to the suit, and therefore I am inclined to grant the application made to me by Mr. Taraporevala.

The order that I will make will be that the defendant in the suit should be transposed as the plaintiff and he as the new plaintiff should amend the plaint and proceedings in this suit. The written statement that he has filed as the original defendant he will be allowed to treat as the plaint in the proceedings which will be amended according to my order. The defendant will bring the heirs of the original plaintiff, Bai Moorbai, Damji Devsey and Dhanpati Devsey, on record as defendants to the suit. I will also give liberty to the defendant to amend his written statement in order that any reliefs which he might have asked, if he had been the plaintiff in the suit, might be incorporated in his written statement. The defendant will serve the writ of summons and a copy of the order I am making today within four weeks upon Bai Moorbai, Damji Devsey and Dhanpati Devsey. I direct that the newly added defendants should put in any further pleadings if they be so advised within two months from today and they should make their affidavit of documents within three months from today. The suit will be on board for hearing on January 5, 1942, as a part-heard suit.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 52, 54—Decree—Execution—Immoveable property—Custody of Court receiver—Mode of execution against property in custody of receiver—Practice and procedure.

Order XXI, r. 52, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is only a mode of attachment of property in the custody of the Court. It does not deal with the leave necessary to be obtained for proceeding under it. The rule is not limited so as to exclude immoveable property.

Pratapmall Rameshwar v. Chunilal Jahurji, distinguished.

The words used in r. 52 are not permissive but are imperative for the judgment-creditor. The judgment-creditor has to apply for attaching the property in the hands of the receiver. He may, while making the application, put before the Court sufficient grounds to prevent the Court from making the ordinary order prescribed by the rule or limit the operation of such order to a named property or a named period. At the time of considering the judgment-creditor's application and making an order under the rule, the Court has jurisdiction to vary the terms and directions given to its officer.

The rule does not permit the judgment-creditor to proceed under O. XXI, r. 54, merely after he obtains leave to proceed to execute the decree on the ground that the property is in possession of a Court officer.

Proceedings in execution.

On July 11, 1934, the applicant Bai Motibai obtained a decree (in suit No. 1896 of 1933) for Rs. 18,000 against Prabhakar Dabholkar and others (defendants) in the High Court. The decree made the amount payable by monthly instalments of Rs. 75 each commencing from August 1, 1934. In default of payment of any three instalments, the whole decree became payable.

On January 22, 1940, the applicant applied to execute the decree by attachment and sale of the right, title and interest of the defendants in certain immoveable property belonging to them and situated at Chowpatty in Bombay. As the decree was more than two years old, notice under O. XXI, r. 22, was issued and served. The notice was made absolute on June 28, 1940. On July 25, 1940, warrant of attachment was issued under O. XXI, r. 54.

Meanwhile, on March 4, 1934, the Central Bank of India, Limited (plaintiffs), filed a suit in the High Court against the defendants on mortgage of properties belonging to defendants inclusive of their property at Chowpatty. On February 19, 1936, a preliminary mortgage decree was passed for Rs. 3,20,582-6-8, and one H. C. Captain was appointed receiver of the properties with power to sell. The decree absolute was passed on September 29, 1938.

On August 21, 1941, the applicant took out a chamber summons for an order "that the applicant be granted leave to continue the attachment proceedings taken by her in regard to the properties at Chowpatty in execution of the decree in suit No. 1896 of 1933 and to proceed with the sale of the right title and interest of the respondents (defendants) to the said proceedings in the said properties or in the alternative that the applicant be given leave to ignore the receivership of the said Chowpatty properties."

The summons was heard.

C. K. Daphtary, for the applicant.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, for the plaintiffs.

KANIA J. The applicant, as the Committee of a lunatic, filed suit No. 1896 of 1933 and on July 11, 1934, obtained a decree for Rs. 18,000 against the defendant-mortgagors in his suit. That decree was payable by instalments. In 1940 an application was made for execution, i.e. to sell the defendants' right, title and interest, inter alia, in the property at Chowpatty. A notice under O. XXI, r. 22, was then issued and made absolute. On July 25, 1940, an application under O. XXI, r. 54, was made and on August 2, 1940, the attachment was levied. On March 24, 1941, a warrant of sale was issued under O. XXI, r. 64, and on July 18, 1941, claims were invited. Notice of that was published on July 30, 1941. It appears that this suit was filed by the bank as mortgagees against the defendants to realise their mortgage claim. On February 19, 1936, a preliminary mortgage decree was passed and Mr. Captain was appointed receiver. On September 29, 1938, the decree absolute was passed and Mr. Captain's appointment as receiver was confirmed. He was also given power to sell the property. It is alleged by the applicant that she was ignorant of all these proceedings and had taken steps to execute the decree in ignorance of the fact that Mr. Captain was appointed a receiver in the mortgage suit. This summons is taken out by the applicant to obtain from the Court leave to continue the attachment proceedings with regard to the Chowpatty property in execution of her decree and to proceed with the sale thereof, or, in the alternative, that leave may be granted to the applicant to ignore the receivership of the said property.

Mr. Daphtary first argued that leave of the Court was necessary because the property was in possession of the Court by reason of the appointment of the receiver, and the Court would object to its possession being disturbed. No express provision of law is found in that connection, but this is based on the fundamental principles of law. He argued that O. XXI, r. 52, was only a mode of attachment of property in the custody of the Court. It did not deal with the leave necessary to be obtained for proceeding under O. XXI, r. 52. That argument is correct. He further contended that O. XXI, r. 52, was applicable only when the property was not immoveable property. His contention is that when the property was immoveable the procedure prescribed by O. XXI, r. 54, may be adopted without proceeding under O. XXI, r. 52. I do not accept that contention. The words used in r. 54 are similar to the words used in rr. 46 and 47 and there appears no reason why the words in r. 52 should be limited so as to exclude immoveable property. The only argument advanced in support of that contention is that the words are followed by "interest or dividend becoming payable thereon." I do not think these words are placed to limit the general meaning of the word "property" in r. 52.

In this connection strong reliance was placed on Pratapmall Rameshwar v. Chunilal Jahuri<sup>1</sup>. There the Court was dealing with an act of insolvency of a debtor who had allowed his property to remain under attachment for over twenty-one days. The larger question, whether the word "property" in O. XXI, r. 52, included immoveable property, was not decided, but it was assumed to include it. In the course of the judgment it was pointed out that there may occur collusive suits between partners or members of a family and a suit for dissolution of partnership or partition may be filed in which a receiver would be appointed with a view to defeat the claims of creditors or delay the same indefinitely. It was discussed that in such a case the Court may give leave to execute the decree by attachment of the immoveable property as if no receiver was appointed. On considering the rules framed by the Calcutta High Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction it appears that there is a well-settled practice prevailing there on which Chapter XVII of their rules is framed. In our High Court there are no rules similar to those rules and under the circumstances that case is clearly distinguishable. Again, I am unable to read the words used in r. 52 as permissive. In my opinion they are imperative for the judgment-creditor. He has to apply for attaching the property in the hands of the receiver, and while making the application he may put before the Court sufficient grounds to prevent the Court from making the ordinary order prescribed by that rule or limit the operation of such order to a named property or a named period. The Court has jurisdiction at the time of considering the judgment-creditor's application and making an order under O. XXI, r. 52, to vary the terms and directions given to its officer; but, I am unable to hold that O. XXI, r. 52, permits the judgment-creditor to proceed under O. XXI, r. 54, merely after he obtains leave to proceed to execute the decree on the ground that the property is in possession of a Court officer. The present application is not under O. Religious endowment—Original right in property with proprietary body—Dedication of property by user to purposes of shrine—Whether burden of proof on persons asserting such dedication—Rule of practice of religious institutions—Whether practice of particular institution can be presumed from practice obtaining in majority of such institutions in a Province.

Where the original right in certain land was with a proprietary body, the burden of proving its dedication by user to the purposes of a shrine lies heavy on the persons asserting it, and it is beside the point to show that the evidence produced by the proprietary body does not exclude the theory of dedication. The case of dedication is not made out merely by evidence of neighbourly or considerate conduct towards a religious institution or by showing that small profits have not been churlishly exacted by the proprietor from persons held in general esteem.

Ascetics and religious institutions exhibit great diversity of character and Udasis in particular conform to no single type. In any case to presume that a particular Udasi shrine followed a certain practice because on a count of all religious institutions throughout the Province the practice was found to obtain in a majority of the cases is a course of reasoning unwarranted by principle or authority. The rule of practice of a religious institution should be collected from its own constitution or practice as proved in evidence.

THE facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Board.

W. Wallach, for the appellants.

J. M. Gower K. C. and J. E. Godfrey, for the respondents.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN. The dispute in this case relates to an area of twenty-eight kanals and one marla (nearly three acres) situated in the village of Kot Fateh Khan in the Attock district of the Punjab. Within this area lies the tomb (samadh) of a Hindu ascetic Baba Than Singh who is said to have died in or about 1793. This tomb has long been held in veneration and had become a Udasi shrine (dehri or deri) before the Punjab came under British rule. The tomb of his disciple Chet Ram lies near to that of Than Singh, but the religious institution is known as the Deri Baba Than Singh. It would appear to be in enjoyment of one if not two jagirs or assignments of revenue dating from Sikh times. At its head there has been a long succession of mahants, and in the area now in question have lived the sadhus connected with the institution as well as the mahant. A langar or free kitchen with certain buildings attached thereto has also been maintained there. The various compounds or closets comprised in the area are referred to in the judgments and decrees of the Courts in India as ihatas Nos. 179 to 230, these being the numbers given to them in the khassra abadi register of 1862 at the first regular settlement.

The village is said to have been founded in the 16th century by an ancestor of respondent No. 1, Lieutenant Sardar Mohammad Nawaz Khan (herein called the respondent). Its inhabitants, apart from those connected with the shrine, are Muslim cultivators and one or two kamins e.g. the blacksmith, the carpenter. At the first regular settlement in 1862 the proprietors consisted of a number of members of the respondent's family, but in or about 1882 a partition was made between three branches of the family. By this the village was divided into three portions called Abadi Kot Khas, Abadi Kot Bala and Abadi Deri Baba Than Singh. This last portion was included in the share which fell to the respondent's predecessor. It includes the land in suit which is separated from that part of the village Kot Khas in which the cultivators and kamins live by some thirty yards or more of cultivated land.

The respondent was a minor when in 1903 he succeeded to the property on the death of his father, and from 1903 to 1924 the Court of Wards was in charge of his estate. Since 1924 the respondent has had the management of his own property and has asserted rights as proprietor of the village over the area in question which are now contested by those interested in the shrine. It is not now disputed by the respondent that the sites of the two samadhs must be treated as having been dedicated to the religious institution and that the langar buildings belong to it permanently. But he contests the appellants' claim on behalf of the shrine that the whole area of twenty-eight kanals and one marla together with the various houses thereon is in the same position as the samadhs, and that he has no rights in it; as also their claim that in any event the right of occupation is vested in the shrine and continues so long as the shrine exists. He claims moreover certain rights by village custom in the malba or materials of which the houses are built, which rights are denied by the appellants.

These matters came originally before a tribunal constituted under the Sikh Gurdwaras Act (Punjab Act VIII of 1925). An application having been made to have the shrine declared to be a Sikh gurdwara, the mahant objected that it was a Udasi institution and not within the Act. The respondent by petition dated April 25, 1931, objected that the area claimed as belonging to the institution was his sole property; that he was the owner of the malba of the houses and buildings, and that their sites reverted to him if a non-proprietor occupant died childless, or abandoned the building, or alienated it without his permission. In effect his claim was to treat the mahant and the sadhus as non-proprietors occupying separate houses with permission of the proprietors and subject to the rights which the custom of the village gave to the proprietor. The mahant's objection at first succeeded, but in March, 1935, it was compromised on appeal to the High Court and the institution was declared to be a Sikh gurdwara. It thus became necessary to decide the various matters raised by the respondent's petition and the petitioner is owner of the sites of ihatas Nos. 179 to 230 but as long as the shrine exists there is no right of reversion in favour of the petitioner; it has a right of occupation of the whole area of 28 kanals 1 marla and there is no right of reversion, in favour of the petitioner, of the site or malba of any house over this area in the event of the occupant thereof dying issueless or abandoning or alienating the building without the permission of the proprietor.

Apart from the two samadhs and the langar, Hilton J., the President of the tribunal, dissented from this decision of his two colleagues save as regards the declaration of the respondent's ownership. On appeal to the High Court Coldstream and Blacker JJ. agreed with Hilton J. The High Court's decree of July 16, 1936, declared the petitioner (the present respondent) to be the owner of the sites of ihatas 179 to 230 "except the sites of the two gurdwaras Dehri Bhai Than Singh and Dehri Bhai Chet Ram"; and also to be entitled to the malba of the superstructures situated on the disputed areas in the event of the occupant thereof dying issueless or abandoning or alienating the building without the proprietor's permission. From this last declaration however they excepted the superstructures of the "gurdwaras" and of the langar and the buildings appertaining thereto.

Neither of the Courts in India has taken the view, for which the appellants contend, that the area in dispute has as a whole become dedicated to the shrine so as to make an end of the respondent's ownership therein. But the two members of the tribunal who were in the majority considered that the right of occupation, whether or not given at different times to individual sadhus, was given to the institution, which occupied the various houses through them as its members. Rai Bahadur Lala Dwarka Parshad said in his judgment that "it was a case of dedication by user"; also "It is the shrine that has the right of occupation over this whole area of twenty-eight kanals and so long as it exists there is no case of reversion to the Sardar." The other member, Sardar Man Singh, added that as the sadhus were all ascetics, whatever they acquired was for and on behalf of the dehri and not for themselves. For this he vouched as authority para. 89 of Rattigan's "Digest of Civil Law for the Punjab" :—

89. All property acquired by individual members of a religious fraternity belongs, as a general rule, to the religious institution to which they are attached.

The papers prepared in 1862 at the first regular settlement were prepared before the village had been partitioned and at a time when there were a considerable number of proprietors. The  khasra abadi  register (a list of inhabited sites) and the map of 1862 disclose some sixty "ihatas" as being houses or areas of land held therewith in the occupation of individuals who are for the most part without women or children. The great majority of them, if not indeed all, are clearly sadhus, but in two cases it is noticed that one house is a school and the other a police station. The sadhu in every case is entered in the register as "owner" of the house, but too much need not be made of this expression. In another of these settlement papers—a statement of owners' and tenants' holdings called the muntakib assamiwar khasra—the owner as distinct from the tenant is entered as “shamilat deh” (village common land). In the wajib-ul-arz prepared at this time it is stated in para. 8 relating to “income from cesses” :—

“A person who wishes to take up residence, does so with our (proprietors’) permission. If a person demands any help for the construction of a Kotha, he is helped with wood. He is entitled to reside as long as he likes. When he deserts the place, he is not entitled to sell the house. After he has left, the proprietor of the place shall be entitled to Malba. The proprietor may make Abad in the Kotha any person he likes, subject to the condition that if the former returns to the village after 2-4 years and his house is in a sound condition, then he is given on his request the same Kotha for residence.”

The only point material to the present case in which this differs from the ordinary custom (set forth in para. 236 of Rattigan’s “Digest”) concerns the right to the malba—the latter giving to the non-proprietary resident a right to sell the materials of the house on his occupation ceasing.

Sir George

In 1882, the mahant having died, a question arose as to the continuation by Government of the jagir of the village of Jassian and the revenue Court required the tahsildar of Fateh Jang to report on the condition of the dehri now in question and its langar. This official requested Sardar Fateh Khan, a predecessor of the respondent, to enquire, and his report of June 10, 1882, (exhibit O/31), is in evidence. It describes this abadi as a separate and important colony and it gives the dehri a good character, saying that its kitchen not only feeds its sadhus and faqirs but also wayfarers and that it gives each faqir one rupee per month for clothes, etc. The appellants also seek to rely on exhibit O/32 a “list of houses attached to Dehri Baba Than Singh” made out—it does not appear by whom—for the revenue Court on this occasion. This list has been treated as inadmissible by the High Court, but, if it be admitted, it shows the bulk of the houses as having a sadhu for “owner”, though a number are entered as musafirkhana making them appear as intended for use by wayfarers rather than residents—an appearance which would make a better impression upon any revenue official dealing with the continuation of the jagir : otherwise it does not substantially alter the picture presented by the settlement papers of 1862 save that it shows the pakka buildings to be sixteen and the kacha to be forty-two.

At the second regular settlement of 1882 in the khasra paimaish papers (statement of measurements) under the heading “owner” in respect of these twenty-eight kanals one marla is the entry “village abadi”. The area itself is described as unculturable inhabited land (abadi ghair mumkin). In the record of rights at the third settlement, 1905, and at the fourth, 1925, the entry “village abadi” is put in the column headed “tenant” as well as in the column headed “owner” and to the description ghair mumkin abadi is added “of Dehri Baba Man Singh”—which the respondent claims to be in recognition of the partition of 1882. In none of the settlements after the first is there any entry in a settlement paper corresponding to the entry which has been cited with reference to persons wishing to reside in the village. This the High Court has noted, but the learned Judges following a previous decision of their own Court in Dhuman Khan v. Gurmukh Singh<sup>1</sup>

P. C. have held that it does not detract from the force of the entry as after the 1941 first settlement the revenue authorities did not concern themselves with recording rights in the village abadi. This is a matter of the revenue history of the Province, and their Lordships see no reason to think that the High Court is not correctly informed.

COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT OF GURDWARA PENJA SAHIB
 v.
 MOHAMMAD NAWAZ KHAN

Sir George Rankin

Two matters which their Lordships do not find it necessary to discuss may here be mentioned and put aside. The first is an arbitration held in 1904 by an Assistant Commissioner, Mr. C. F. Usborne, in a dispute about the right to receive the rents paid for shops opened or erected in the area in suit at the time of the Baisakhi fair. The award of March 27, 1904, was that half the rent should be taken by the respondent and the other half by the sadhu in whose house the shop was put up. Both sides crave this in aid, the respondent pointing to the fact that the houses were held to belong to the individual sadhus, the appellants to the fact that the proceedings were brought by the mahant. The second matter is the claim made by the respondent in 1925 to receive huq buha or door tax from the mahant Parkasha Nand under the wajib-ul-arz of 1862. This claim succeeded before the revenue Courts which were ultimately held by the Board to have exclusive jurisdiction over the claim, but doubts had been thrown upon the right by opinions of the civil Courts and the Board did not pronounce upon the matter. (Sardar Mohammed Nawaz Khan v. Bhagata Nana<sup>1</sup>). Their Lordships are not to be understood as thinking that the results of these two disputes are irrelevant in the present case. On the contrary their view is that on balance they are not without weight in favour of the respondent, but that in view of more direct and cogent evidence a discussion of them would encumber the present case unnecessarily.

The respondent's fifty-nine witnesses may be taken to establish that since he came of age in 1924 he has exercised the rights claimed by him, and the appellants' evidence is that of late years he has done so somewhat harshly having had a number of the kacha houses demolished. On the other hand—and Mr. Wallach for the appellants has most forcefully laid stress upon this as his main point—the respondent's evidence does not include anything to show that his father before his death in 1903 or any previous proprietor had taken possession of sadhus' houses on their death or departure from the village or had otherwise exercised the customary rights now claimed. For the time (1903 to 1924) of the management of the Court of Wards while the respondent was a minor, there is some such evidence. The responsible official who was manager from 1918 to 1923 (P.W. 5) speaks to the supply of timber to a sadhu called Budh Prakash and says that the house of another sadhu called Narain Das was, on his death, about 1922, taken by the Court of Wards. The evidence of this witness (P.W. 5) as also of the assistant managers from 1914-7, 1917-23, and of several other witnesses shows that there was no musafirkhana in this part of the village; though witnesses for the appellants say that the people of Qutbal about 1917 built one which has been demolished. One sadhu Bawa Mohan Das (P. W. 24) fully supports the respondent on all points, but is much exposed to suspicion of partisanship.

Some at least of the sadhus appear to have had chelas who lived with them and in some cases at least the chela succeeded in fact to the possession of the guru's house at his death. The witnesses called for the appellants include some who say in general terms that the sadhus' houses were given to them by or belonged to the dehri, or that the sadhus were living through the mahant, or that when a sadhu went away the mahant got the key of his house and managed it, or that the mahant got the sadhus' houses repaired or that pilgrims were put up in the houses as the mahant directed. But this evidence is poor in quality and is wholly lacking in particulars. The Mahant Bhaqta Nand who succeeded Parkasha Nand in 1928 and who compromised with the appellants in 1935 over their claim that the shrine was not a Udasi institution but a Sikh gurdwara was called on their behalf and said that all the kacha houses except three or four were in his possession and were the property of the dehri, that he used some of them for his servants and some as store-houses. On the other hand he says "I took the right of residence from Garib Das and also from Sarup Das. If a sadhu lives in a certain house he cannot be ousted by the mahant unless he does something against the principles of the dehri sahib but no sadhu could alienate his right of residence to anybody except the dehri sahib."

MOHAMMAD NAWAZ

Sir George
Rankin

The general effect of the evidence for the appellants is that in 1889 and down to 1933 the houses in this abadi were some forty or fifty in number of which a dozen or so were pakka, i.e., built of masonry, while the rest were kacha, i.e., of mud and stones; and that all, or all save three or four, had been demolished recently, that is about 1934. The Court of Wards manager says that in his period of office (1918 to 1923) the pakka buildings were the langar, the mahant's bungalow, the main dehri, the second dehri and two houses one on each side of the latter. Also that there were about twelve kacha houses inhabited by sadhus most of whom lived there permanently but some of whom came and went though they had houses there. The papers of 1862 show some 68 compounds, but apparently the number of sadhu tenants holding houses is in the neighbourhood of thirty. The list, exhibit O. 32, given to the revenue Court in 1882 mentions sixteen pakka and forty-two kacha buildings. The general effect of this evidence is to show that between 1862 or 1882 and 1920 or thereabouts there was a considerable diminution in the number of the kacha houses, but their Lordships are not prepared to go all the way with Hilton J. in saying that "this fact can only be attributed to the proprietor having gained possession of them according to the custom". If the number of sadhus for any reason became less, such houses, unoccupied, would tend to fall down and might not be repaired or rebuilt by the mahant or by anyone else whether they belonged to the dehri or to the individual sadhus.

It appears unreasonable on the evidence to doubt that the original right in the land in suit was with the proprietary body. Hence the first question is whether the appellants have proved a dedication by user of the whole of the area to the purposes of the shrine. This burden lies heavy on the appellants, and it is beside the point to show that the respondent's evidence does not exclude the theory of dedication. For practical purposes the shrine would hardly be treated as other than a permanent institution, and it is not easy to envisage conduct which would show an intention to dedicate the right of occupation until such time as the shrine should cease to exist and which would yet fall short of a simple out-and-out dedication of the whole interest as in the case of the samadhs themselves. But in their Lordships' opinion the evidence falls far short of establishing that the individual houses of the sadhus were dedicated to the shrine in either sense or at all. The settlement papers of 1862 and of the later settlements make it almost hopeless to challenge, as regards this abadi of some three acres, the proprietorship of the respondent. They exclude any suggestion that in 1862 or later the mahant had become entitled to the abadi by any form of dedication and indeed there is no trace of any such claim having been brought to notice at any of the settlements or having been taken account of at the time of the partition between the members of the proprietor's family. Yet the case now made by the appellants and pleaded in their written statement of July 20, 1935, is that the respondent "has no right title or interest in the said area." That the right of occupation but not the proprietorship has been dedicated is not an impossible position as a matter of law, and it might be affirmed without contradicting the entries in the settlement papers as to the proprietorship. But it is equally inconsistent with the settlement papers to suppose that the mahant or the dehri sahib itself was the sole and quasi-permanent tenant of this area. No trace of such a claim can be discerned in the map or khasras of 1862. The individual occupiers of the different houses are set forth in detail as the persons having the right of occupation. For the purposes of the question whether the proprietors' rights in those three acres of abadi have been parted with wholly or partially by way of dedication to the shrine, the particular custom as to malba laid down in the wajib-ul-arz of 1862 is only of subsidiary importance. If it be postulated for the sake of argument that the case falls under the general custom referred to by Hilton J. and stated in Rattigan's Digest in para. 236, the case as to the dedication is not substantially altered though the claim to malba would be inconsistent with the assumption made. But their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that the special custom is proved, and in any case they think it reasonably clear that individual sadhus minded to attach themselves to the shrine were from time to time permitted by the proprietors to set up for their own habitation kacha houses in its neighbourhood, thus making it an abadi fairly enough described as a separate colony—a colony which not only enjoyed considerable reputation but also had the good will of the respondent's predecessors such as Sardar Fateh Khan. The absence of evidence that the respondent's predecessors refused to allow one sadhu to succeed another in the occupation of the houses, or took away the materials, or installed a different class of tenant, is sufficiently explained by the circumstances and by the lapse of time and in no way warrants an inference of dedication whether of the right of occupation or of the whole interest in the land. Such a conclusion requires to be supported by clear and specific evidence of individual transactions which require the hypothesis of dedication to account for them—all the more so that it is contrary to the custom recorded in 1862 and to the position recorded at four settlements. The case of dedication is not made out merely by evidence of neighbourly or considerate conduct towards a religious institution or by showing that small profits have not been churlishly exacted by the proprietor from persons held in general esteem. Nor is it to be made out by showing that the sadhus dependent on the mahant got his help for repairs, or allowed him to assign pilgrims to them at the time of mela, or sought his help in other ways. As Hilton J. has observed, "there is no evidence that the manager of the institution obtained the proprietors' permission to build houses for sadhus." There is moreover no foundation for the contention that the mahant was in management and control of the houses occupied by sadhus in such sense that the sadhus enjoyed a sort of service occupation of the property of the institution. Save as regards the samadhs themselves and the langar buildings the case of dedication by user fails.

Sir George

The appeal made to para. 89 of Rattigan's "Digest" is in these circumstances of no avail to the appellants. If it were intended as the statement of a legal presumption based upon a general custom of the Punjab, their Lordships, in view of the wide sweep of the proposition and of the importance of presumptions in India, would have desired and indeed expected ampler authority for it than they have been able to discover. Of the two cases cited as authority by the learned author their Lordships have been able to examine the first, Tota Puri v. Padam Puri,<sup>1</sup> and cannot find that it affirms any such proposition. Ascetics and religious institutions exhibit great diversity of character and Udasis in particular conform to no single type. In any case to presume that a particular Udasi shrine followed a certain practice because on a count of all religious institutions throughout the Province the practice was found to obtain in a majority of the cases is a course of reasoning unwarranted by principle or authority. Their Lordships would be very slow to apply to such an institution as this dehri a rule not collected from its own constitution or practice as proved in evidence. Of the rule now in question it may be further said that unless it be written large in the conduct and history of the "fraternity", the greatest doubt is thrown upon it. However, from the introduction to ch. VI of the "Digest" and from para. 84 it appears that the force of such considerations did not escape the learned author; who insists that there is no general law applicable to religious institutions in the Punjab and appears to recognise in the light of long-standing decisions of the Board that they are to be governed only by customs and usages which they can be shown to accept. Thus in Greedharee Doss v. Nundokissore Doss<sup>2</sup> a case about a Hindu math in Bengal, it was said by the Board "the only law as to these mahants and their office, functions and duties is to be found in custom and practice, which is to be proved by testimony." Paragraph 89 of the "Digest" is not really put forward as a statement of any legal presumption: though it uses the words "general rule", it is not the statement of a rule but of something which has been found by enquiry to be true of most fraternities.

Their Lordships are not satisfied that the sadhus living in this abadi were members of such a "fraternity" as is contemplated by the paragraph; but, whether they were or were not, it is, in their Lordships' view, established by the evidence that the houses in which the sadhus lived were treated by them and by the mahant as their own and not as belonging to the dehri.

The expression “enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court”, used in s. 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, includes both the manner of execution and the time within which execution must take place.

An award, filed in the High Court, can, by virtue of s. 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, be executed as a decree of the High Court at any time within twelve years from its date, under art. 183 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.

Gajraj Sheokarandas obtained an award for Rs. 8,383-10-0 against Nadirshaw H. Contractor in Bombay on July 27, 1929. The award was filed in the High Court on August 16, 1929, under the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899.

On January 6, 1941, the decree-holder applied to the High Court to execute the award, by issue of notice to the judgment-debtor under O. XXI, r. 22, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The notice was issued on February 5, 1941. On April 7, 1941, the Court (Somjee J.) made the notice absolute.

The judgment-debtor appealed.

H. D. Banaji, for the appellant.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, for the respondent.

BEAUMONT C.J. This is an appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Somjee given in chambers making absolute a notice under O. XXI, r. 22, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, which empowers the Court to authorise execution of a decree more than two years after the date of the decree. In this case there was no decree; there was only an award made on July 27, 1929, and filed in this Court on August 16, 1929, under the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899. The present application was made on January 6, 1941, and a notice was issued under O. XXI, r. 22, of the Civil Procedure Code

v.

GAJRAJ
SHEBOKARAN-

The question at issue is, whether the award which has been filed in this Court can be enforced within twelve years of the date of the award or whether the period of limitation is three years; i.e. whether the case falls under art. 183, or art. 181, of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. Article 183 limits the time for enforcement of a judgment, decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction to twelve years from the date when a present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of releasing the right. Under s. 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act of 1899, which is the section applicable to this case, it is provided that an award on a submission, on being filed in Court, shall be enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court. The argument for the appellant is that art. 183 taken by itself does not apply to an award, since it only embraces a judgment, decree or order of a Chartered High Court; and s. 15 does not make an award a decree of the Court, it only provides that it is to be enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court, which expression refers to the manner of execution, and does not relate to limitation. That s. 15 has not the effect of making the award a decree of the Court has been recognised by the Privy Council in Sassoon & Co. v. Ramdutt Ramkissen Das,<sup>1</sup> and by this Court in Tribhuwandas Kalliondas Gajjar v. Jivanchand,<sup>2</sup> but neither of those cases was dealing with the question of limitation. We have also been referred to cases on the English Arbitration Act, including De La Bere v. Pearson, Limited,<sup>3</sup> but the English Act provides for enforcing an award in the same manner as a decree. So also does s. 59(1)(a) of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act of 1925 which was the statute with which this Court was dealing in Raghavendra v. Industrial Bank, Guledgud.<sup>4</sup> The expression "in the same manner as" would seem to refer to the method of execution, and would not, I think, cover the time within which execution must be enforced. But s. 15 speaks of the award being enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court, and it seems to me much easier to read that expression as including both the manner of execution and the time within which execution must take place. It may be said with force that if a decree of the Court is enforceable within twelve years, but an award is only enforceable within three years, then after the expiration of three years, the award is not enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court.

The exact point with which we have to deal was decided by the Calcutta High Court in 1927 in Chaitram Sagormull v. Hardwar Mull & Co.<sup>5</sup> In that case a bench of the Calcutta High Court held that a decree filed under the

O. C. J. Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, was enforceable within twelve years, i.e. that it 1941 fell under art. 183 of the Indian Limitation Act. It is obviously undesirable — that different High Courts should give a different interpretation to an Act NADIRSHAW common to the whole of India, and we would not be justified in differing from CONTRACTOR the High Court of Calcutta on this question, unless we felt certain that
 v. that decision could not be reconciled with the plain meaning of the statute.
 GAJRAJ I am certainly not prepared to apply that criticism to the Calcutta case.
 SHROKARAN- The point is obviously susceptible of argument, and as the Calcutta High DAS Court in a judgment which discusses the practice in detail has arrived at — a particular view as to the construction of s. 15, and the decision has stood Beaumont C.J. for some years, I see no reason why we should differ from it. I think — we ought to follow it. The point is not of very much practical consequence because under s. 17 of the new Arbitration Act, awards have to be filed and a decree has to be passed in terms of the award as is the case under s. 16, schedule II, of the Civil Procedure Code, so that this decision will only apply to such cases as still come under s. 15 of the old Act. We think that the decision of the learned Judge was right, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

KANIA J. The narrow point for consideration is whether the words "enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court" in s. 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act (IX of 1899) are equivalent to enforceable in the manner of a decree of the Court. Our attention has been drawn to several cases in which the words "enforceable in the same manner as" have been construed, and it has been pointed out that by reason of the use of those words an award does not obtain the character of a decree in all respects. We are not oppressed by those decisions because the words actually used here are not "enforceable in the same manner as" a decree.

The words "enforceable as if" are, in my opinion, capable of being read as meaning "enforceable in the manner and to the same extent as a decree." I do not think by giving the words that meaning I am doing any violence to the language actually used. To put it in a still different way while the words "as if" must go with the word "enforceable", they do not reduce the qualities attachable to the award in enforcing the same as if it were a decree of the Court. One qualification or privilege of a decree of this Court on the original side is that it can be enforced for twelve years. It does not seem to strain the language of s. 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act to say that the words "as if" would include the quality of being enforceable within the time prescribed by art. 183. The construction put on those words by the Calcutta High Court does not appear to be unduly straining the language, and on the principle that as far as possible in the construction of an Act of Legislature applicable to the whole of India, one High Court should follow the considered opinion of another High Court, the decision under appeal should be upheld and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Secs. 5(2), 66(2)—Transfer of income-tax cases September 26. by Central Board of Revenue—Completed assessments not affected by transfer—Further proceedings by assessee covered by transfer—Hearing of appeal under order of transfer—Hearing valid—Power to state case to High Court.

On March 31, 1939, the assessee was assessed to income tax by the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, Bombay, who was subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan. On April 1, 1939, the Income-tax Act, 1922, was amended, one of the effects of which was that a Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) was appointed. On April 15, 1939, a demand for payment was made on the assessee. The assessee applied under s. 27 of the Act to get the assessment set aside, but his application was rejected. On April 18, 1939, the Central Board of Revenue, acting under s. 5(2) of the Act, as amended, transferred among others the case of the assessee by name to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central). On May 10, 1939, the assessee appealed against his assessment, and the appeal was disposed of by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, Ss. I to VI, A-Range, Bombay, who was appointed, under the amended Act, to hear appeals against assessments made by the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, Bombay, which appeals were pending on June 3, 1939. The assessee then applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) asking him to state a case to the High Court, under s. 66(2) of the Act, in the matter of his assessment, but the Commissioner refused to do so on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. On application to the High Court :—

Held, (1) that the order of transfer of cases, under s. 5(2) of the amended Act, did not include assessments already completed on March 31, 1939, though it did operate on any further proceedings relating to the assessee :

(2) that the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, Ss. I to VI, A-Range, Bombay, was the proper tribunal to hear the appeal filed by the assessee, whether the transfer made on April 18, 1939, embraced the assessment in question or not ;

(3) that inasmuch as the assessment made on March 31, 1939, had not been validly transferred to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central), that Officer had no jurisdiction to entertain the application and to state a case under s. 66(2) of the Act ;

(4) that that Officer could not therefore be ordered to state a case and that the application failed.

APPLICATION under s. 66(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, requesting the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) to state a case to the High Court under s. 66(2) of the Act.

The applicant Govindram Gordhandas (assessee) was assessed to income-tax for the year 1934-35 by the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, Bombay, on March 31, 1939, on an income of Rs. 5,95,000.

On April 1, 1939, the Income-tax Act came to be amended. Under s. 5(2) of the Act the Central Government was empowered to appoint a Commissioner of Income-tax for any area to discharge without reference to area the functions of a Commissioner in respect of any cases or classes of cases assigned to him by the Central Board of Revenue; and s. 5(3) empowered the Central Government to appoint for any area as many Appellate or Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers as it thought fit. Section 5(7) provided that Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers should be subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax for the area in which they performed their functions, or where they performed functions assigned to them by a Commissioner of Income-tax appointed without reference to area, to that Commissioner.

The assessing officer, viz. the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, Bombay, was, on the date of assessment, subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan.

On April 15, 1939, the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, issued a notice of demand to the assessee under s. 23(4) of the Act. On the same day the assessee applied to the officer under s. 27 to cancel the assessment. The application was summarily rejected on April 17, 1939. The rejection was communicated to the assessee on April 24, 1939.

Meanwhile, on April 18, 1939, the Central Board of Revenue assigned the assessee's case, amongst others, to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central), Bombay, who was appointed under the amended Act.

On April 27, 1939, the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) assigned the assessee's case to the Income-tax Officer, Section I (Central).

The special circle was abolished as from April 29, 1939, by a notification dated June 3, 1939.

On April 28, 1939, the Income-tax Officer, Section I, Central, intimated to the assessee that his case had been assigned to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) by the Central Board of Revenue to the exclusion of the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan under s. 5(2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, as amended by Act VII of 1939, and that the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) had allotted the assessee's case to the Income-tax Officer, Section I, Central, under s. 5(5) of the Act.

On May 10, 1939, the assessee filed two appeals, one against the assessment order of the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, dated March 31, 1939, and the other against the order under s. 27 passed on April 17, 1939.

The Appellate Assistant Commissioner, Sections I to VI, A-Range, Bombay, who was subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central), heard both the appeals and dismissed them on May 7, 1940.

On July 10, 1940, the assessee applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) to refer to the High Court under s. 66(2) of the Act the questions of law arising in his case. The application was rejected on January 31, 1941, on the ground that the Commissioner was not competent to deal with the application.

On March 6, 1941, the assessee applied to the High Court for an order under s. 66(3) of the Act requiring the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) tral) to state a case and refer it to the High Court.

The application was heard.

GOVINDRAM
GORDHANDAS

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an application asking us to direct the Commissioner of Income-tax, (Central), to state a case. The learned Commissioner has refused to state a case, not because he denies that a point of law arises, but because he considers that he has no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. That is the question which we must decide on this application.

The assessee was assessed on March 31, 1939, by the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, and on the next day the amendments to the Indian Income-tax Act came into operation. On April 15 a demand for payment was made on the assessee. He applied under s. 27 of the Act to get the assessment set aside, but his application was rejected. On April 18 the Central Board of Revenue, acting under s. 5(2) of the Act, as amended, transferred the case of the assessee by name to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central). Now, this Court held in Dayaldas Kushiram v. Commissioner of Income-Tax, Central<sup>1</sup>, that cases transferred under s. 5(2) of the Act could not include assessments already completed. That decision binds us, and it follows that the assessment, which was completed on March 31, 1939, was not included in the transfer of the assessee's case; any further proceedings relating to the assessee were validly transferred, but the completed assessment was not transferred.

On May 10 the assessee appealed against his assessment, and his appeal was admittedly disposed of by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, Sections I to VI, A-Range, Bombay. In my view, that Assistant Commissioner would have been the tribunal to hear the appeal, whether the transfer made on April 18 embraced this assessment or not, so that his entertainment of the appeal is a neutral act. The original assessment was made by the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, and by virtue of notifications 46 and 47, published in the Gazette of India of June 3 and 10, 1939, "Sections I to VI, (Central)" were in effect substituted for "Special Circle", and by Notification of February 24, 1940, the Central Board of Revenue directed that the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, "A" Range, should perform his functions in respect of assessee's who had preferred appeals against the assessments made or orders passed by the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, Bombay, and whose appeals were pending on June 3, 1939. That includes the appeal of the present assessee. If the case had been properly transferred to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central), there is no doubt that the appeal would have been heard by the Assistant Commissioner, Bombay, A-Range, dealing with Sections I to VI (Central), which included all cases transferred to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central). If it was not transferred, it seems to me that the same gentleman must have heard the appeal under the notification of February 24, 1940. The question, therefore, is, whether the Assistant Commissioner heard the appeal as an officer subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan, that is to say, the local Commissioner, or whether he heard it as an officer subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) under s. 5(7). Now, under s. 5(2) of the Act, the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) can only deal with cases which had been transferred to him, and that must mean validly transferred to him. Therefore, one comes back to the question whether the assessment of March 31, 1939, had been validly transferred to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central), and, as I have said, on the authority of the case decided by this Court, we must hold that it had not been transferred. If that is so, the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) has no jurisdiction to entertain this case. If that is so, it may follow that under s. 5(7) the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan, has jurisdiction to state a case under s. 66(2), but we are not concerned with that. All we have to determine is whether the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) has jurisdiction to state a case under s. 66(2); and, in my opinion, if this assessment of the assessee has not been validly transferred to such Commissioner, he cannot state a case, and he has no jurisdiction to entertain the matter at all. That was the view he took, and as we agree with him that he has no jurisdiction to state a case, we cannot order him to do so.

The petition, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

KANIA J. Two points arise for consideration on this application. (1) Whether, after the assessment was made on March 31, 1939, the order transferring the case to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) by the Central Board of Revenue, and thereafter by the order of the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) to the Income-tax Officer (Central) was valid in law, having regard to the fact that the assessment order was made before the amended Income-tax Act of 1939 came into operation. (2) If that transfer was invalid, whether the decision of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, as given, was in his capacity as a subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan, or as a subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central).

It may be noticed that before the amendment of 1939 the Income-tax Act provided for the appointment of a Commissioner of Income-tax, and it was within his power to distribute the work and allot functions to Assistant Commissioners and Income-tax Officers. By the amendments made in 1939 the appointment of Commissioners without any reference to areas was contemplated, and Assistant Commissioners were appointed by the Central Board of Revenue and functions were allotted to them by that Board.

As regards the first point, the question of the right of an assessee in respect of assessment orders made before April 1, 1939, for reassessment came to be considered by this Court in Dayaldas Kushiram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Central<sup>1</sup>. In the judgment of the learned Chief Justice there are observations which deal with the right of appeal against an assessment order before March 31, 1939. On the principles adopted in that case, he considered it logically to follow that such rights as had been acquired in respect of the orders of assessment, whether they were in respect of reassessment or appeal, stood on the same footing. As the point did not arise in the reference, I expressed no views on that question. In my opinion, on the facts, that question is not material here.

The appeal from the assessment order dated March 31, 1939, should be decided by the Assistant Commissioner having power to decide appeals against assessment orders made in the Special Circle. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner, 'A Range', appointed after the amendment, at first had jurisdiction to hear appeals in respect of orders made by Income-tax Officer of 'Special Circle', Sections I to VI (Central) and also specified wards. He was a named individual. Under the old as also the amended Act there is no objection to appoint one Assistant Commissioner with powers to hear appeals in all such cases. The hearing of the appeal over the order in this matter by that individual, therefore, will be when he was Assistant Commissioner having jurisdiction to hear appeals in all those matters. By reason of the amendments made in the order of his appointment, and published in the Government of India notification on June 3 and 10, 1939, the words 'Special Circle' were omitted from the original order. The result was that the Appellate Assistant Commissioner remained invested with the powers to hear appeals in respect of Sections I to VI (Central), and Wards A to AA. It appears, therefore, to be contended on behalf of the assessee that that Assistant Commissioner had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal in respect of his assessment order passed when the assessee was under the Special Circle. To remove that difficulty, an order was issued and notified in the Gazette of India on February 24, 1940. The terms of that notification are material and have been quoted in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. It is clear from that notification that the Central Board of Revenue invested the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, Bombay, "A Range," with powers to hear appeals in respect of assessment orders made by Income-tax Officers in the Special Circle. That Assistant Commissioner, whose jurisdiction was otherwise defined in the notification published on July 15, 1939, thus acquired jurisdiction in respect of all appeals against orders made by the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle. The question is, whether the appeal decided in this case by the Assistant Commissioner, 'A Range', under the powers given by the notification dated February 24, 1940, is by the Assistant Commissioner subordinate to the Income-tax Commissioner (Central), or to the Income-tax Commissioner, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan. Having regard to s. 5(7), it is clear that the function to hear this appeal was not assigned to him by the Commissioner of Income-tax without reference to area, that is, Central. He was given those powers by the Central Board of Revenue under the notification mentioned above. If so, the Assistant Commissioner was subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax for the area, that is, the Commissioner of Income-tax for Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan. Therefore, the application to be made by the assessee for stating a case under s. 66(2) should be to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan. Clearly he has not done that.

It was argued before us that the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central), who is the opponent here, kept the papers before him for over two months

O. C. J. and gave his decision after six months. It is pointed out that in the affidavit 1941 filed in reply it is not disputed that a question of law, which is referable — under s. 66(2), arises. The only contention urged is that the opponent is
In re not the person who is to make the reference, as he has no jurisdiction. An GOVINDRAM appeal was made to the Court that this was unfair, and revenue authori-GORDHANDAS ties should not act in that manner. But the remedy for that is with the — assessee. He should apply to the proper authorities, and as public officers
Kania J. there is no reason to believe that if their department has committed an error — or allowed proceedings to drift whereby the rights of the subject are prejudiced in any way, they will not put the matter right. The Court is not concerned with the moral aspects. The Court is called upon to decide on the construction of the Income-tax Act, whether the opponent should be compelled to state a case as asked for. To that the clear answer appears to be that he cannot be asked to do so.

I agree, therefore, that the application fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Indian Registration Act (XVI of 1908), Sec. 17—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), Secs. 55(4) (b)—Statutory charge—Vendor's lien—Agreement giving up claim to refund of consideration money on redemption of mortgage.

The plaintiffs, who had mortgaged their land, sold, under a registered deed, a portion of it to defendant No. 1 for Rs. 3,000, which sum was to be spent in redeeming the mortgage, and defendant No. 1 was to take possession of the land sold to him and to deliver rest of the land to plaintiffs. The mortgage deed provided that if there was any balance left out of Rs. 3,000 after redemption it was to be given to plaintiffs, and if the sum was found insufficient to pay off the mortgagee the plaintiffs were to make the shortage good. On the next day there was another agreement between the parties, which was in writing but was not registered, under which the plaintiffs gave up their claim to any balance that might be left after paying off the mortgage and defendant No. 1 undertook to redeem the mortgage whatever it cost. Defendant No. 1 next sued to redeem the mortgage, and got a decree without having to pay any money for redemption. The plaintiffs then sued to recover the amount of Rs. 3,000 less expenses incurred by defendant No. 1, contending that the second deed not having been registered was inadmissible in evidence :—

Held, negating the contention and dismissing the suit, (1) that the statutory charge under s. 55(4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, being on the property sold, i.e. the equity of redemption, could not materialise, inasmuch as there was an implied contract to the contrary, viz. that the price was to be paid on redemption and not before ;

(2) that it was extremely doubtful whether the statutory provision would operate to give the plaintiffs a charge on the land after redemption ;

(3) that even assuming that it could, the charge would only arise when the ownership of the land passed to defendant No. 1, i.e. on redemption of the mortgage, but before that time there was a contract to the contrary, viz. the second agreement, by reason of which no charge for the balance of the price could arise, since the claim to that balance had been abandoned ;

(4) that the second agreement did not therefore require registration, because it did not operate to extinguish any right or interest to or in the land, plaintiffs at that time having no such right or interest.

SUIT to recover money.

In 1868 Shankar and others (plaintiffs) mortgaged with possession their land inclusive of survey No. 493.

On August 29, 1916, plaintiffs sold, by a registered deed, survey No. 493 to Pandurang (defendant No. 1) for a sum of Rs. 3,000, on condition that defendant No. 1 was to apply that sum in paying off the mortgage, and take survey No. 493 into his possession and to deliver possession of the rest of the land to plaintiffs, that if there was any balance left out of Rs. 3,000 after redemption it was to be handed over to plaintiffs, and that if defendant No. 1 spent any sum in excess of the amount in redemption, the excess was to be made good by plaintiffs.

On August 30, 1916, the parties entered into another agreement (exhibit A), which was in writing but was not registered, whereby plaintiffs gave up their claim to the balance, if any, left on redemption of the mortgage, and defendant No. 1 undertook to redeem the mortgage whatever the cost on his own account.

In 1917 defendant No. 1 sued to redeem the mortgage, and obtained a decree, on September 11, 1920, for redemption of the mortgage without having to pay any money, as it was found that the mortgage was already paid off. The decree was affirmed on appeal on September 27, 1921.

On July 4, 1932, plaintiff filed a suit to recover from defendant No. 1 the unspent balance of Rs. 3,000 together with interest.

The trial Court decreed the suit, holding that exhibit A could not be given in evidence for want of registration, for the following reasons :—

“The agreement clearly contradicts the terms of the sale deed, exhibit 26, which is a registered document. The term varied is about the price of the land. The agreement therefore obviously offends the provisions of s. 92 of the Evidence Act. The proviso 4 to s. 92 is not applicable to the present case, as the disposition of

A. C. J. the property in question is effected by a registered sale deed. An unregistered agreement cannot alter the terms of a registered document. The agreement 'A' deprives the vendors of their right to recover the balance of the purchase money after defraying the costs of the litigation and payment of the amount found due under the mortgage, which was given to them by the sale-deed. The agreement therefore purports to limit an interest in the immoveable property. Hence I conclude that it requires registration, and in the absence of the same, it is not admissible in evidence, as such agreement must be deemed to be void, as it offends the provisions of statutory law. In support of my view I rely on the authorities mentioned below :—

This decree was, on appeal, affirmed by the Assistant Judge, on the following grounds :—

"Without doubt the sale-deed, exhibit 26, had created an interest in immoveable property of the value of more than Rs. 100* in favour of defendant No. 1; and, correspondingly, it had created a right to the vendors to receive benefit to the extent of Rs. 3,000 on account of purchase money in the form stated in the sale-deed. That right had not been merely a right to moveable property. It had, as a necessary concomitant of it, an interest in immoveable property in the form of a statutory charge on the property sold, for the amount of price. If a charge were to be created on immoveable property of Rs. 100 and upwards, the same would require a registered document. This has been well-established law. See, for instance, The Bengal Banking Corporation v. Mackertisch (10 Cal. 315), Bai Narmada v. Bhagwanrao (12 Bom. 505). There can be no distinction on principle between a charge created by act of parties and a charge created by operation of law, in this respect. See Tirthadas v. Sadusing, 25 Bom. L. R. 313, 314. Since the charge in favour of the vendors had been created and did require for its creation a registered instrument, it follows that it could be superseded, limited or extinguished only by another registered instrument. It could not be superseded, limited or extinguished by an unregistered instrument; and proviso 4 to s. 92 of the Evidence Act could not prevail. This is not necessarily so by reason only of cl. (b) to sub-s. (1) of s. 17 of the Registration Act. But it is the more so on account of the general principle underlying the registration law and the salutary principle embodied in s. 92 of the Evidence Act. The decided authorities also are to the same effect. See Sadaruddin Ahmed v. Chajju (31 All. 13, F.B.), which was a case of a compromise entered into between parties to a registered deed, subsequent to the deed and varying the terms and conditions of the deed as the period to redeem: Tikaram v. The Deputy Commissioner of Barabanki (26 Cal. 707, at p. 710); and Pranal Anni v. Laxmi Anni (22 Mad. 508). Compare also Harkisandas v. Bai Dhanu (50 Bom. 566), wherein a full bench of the Bombay High Court have held that a simultaneous agreement in writing purporting to affect the terms of a sale-deed so as to modify and convert it into a mortgage does require registration and is inadmissible in evidence. The agreement in this case purported not merely to remit the payment of price, but to extinguish the right of the vendors to any balance of purchase money. Moreover, it purported to modify even the liability of the vendee defendant No. 1 in respect of the amount he was to pay to the Nhalve Kasars. Whereas under the sale-deed, exhibit 26, his liability had been limited to Rs. 3,000 only, under the subsequent agreement his liability had been enhanced indefinitely. He was to bear all that indefinite liability; and, correspondingly, he was to retain all the benefit. I have no hesitation, therefore, to hold that the subsequent agreement document did require registration; and that for want of it, it had been inadmissible into evidence."

The appeal was heard by Kania J., who allowed it on March 8, 1940.

KANIA J. This is a second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge at Poona, who confirmed the decree of the trial Court.

The plaintiffs brought this suit to recover a sum of Rs. 4,999 (after remitting Rs. 521) on the ground that under an agreement dated August 29, 1916, the defendants had agreed to pay the balance to them, after satisfying the claim of the mortgagees. After that agreement it was ascertained that no money was payable to the mortgagees. It was therefore contended that the whole sum of Rs. 3,000 was payable to them with interest. The defence was that on August 30, 1916, under a written agreement between the parties it was agreed that any balance, which may remain after the mortgage claims were satisfied, was to be retained by the defendants. The lower Courts have excluded this subsequent agreement on the ground that it was not registered. They proceeded to deal with the plaintiffs' rights after excluding that agreement and held that as no money was paid to satisfy the mortgage claims, the whole balance should be awarded to the plaintiffs.

In order to appreciate the rival contentions it is necessary to bear in mind the terms and scheme of the two documents. The first document of August 29, 1916, is a sale deed for Rs. 3,000 of the land particularly described in that conveyance. After reciting that the property was sold the document proceeds as follows :—

"You should take the remaining mortgaged lands from the possession of the creditors as indicated above and give them into our possession. If the sum that is found due to the creditors after taking accounts is less than the purchase amount you should pay the balance to us. You have no right over that sum. If perhaps the sum found due to the creditors after taking accounts is more we shall repay that out of the other mortgaged properties. You are not to be burdened with that. If it becomes necessary to file a suit in Court for the redemption of the lands from the said creditors. . . . You should incur the costs of the suit and should deduct the same from the sale price to be paid to us. The consideration is as under :

After deducting the sum that will have to be paid to the creditors after taking accounts and the costs of the suit, if a suit is required to be filed for the purpose of redeeming the lands, from the sum of Rs. 3,000 you should pay the balance found due to us and should hand over the remaining mortgaged lands to us. . . . We have sold you absolutely the land as described above, for the consideration of Rs. 3,000."

The second document executed the next day, after reciting the document of August 29, 1916, provided as follows :

"In that there is a term in the deed that after paying whatever is found due to the creditor after taking accounts the balance is to be paid to us. But you are not to pay us at all the balance that will be left over. Only that you are to keep with yourself permanently the land that has been sold to you and you are to give us the remaining mortgaged lands that will be freed from the mortgage. You are only to pay off the encumbrance in favour of the creditor and the land is to remain with you as sold absolutely for that and for your labour."

On behalf of the respondents it was argued before me that in respect of the balance of the purchase price there was a statutory charge in favour of the vendors under s. 55(4) of the Transfer of Property Act. The effect of the second document was to extinguish that charge and therefore the document required registration. In the alternative it was contended that the second document purported to alter the consideration for the first. That is altering a term of the contract and therefore required registration. It was lastly contended that if it was found that nothing was payable to the mortgagees, there was no provision in the deed as to what should be done to the balance, and therefore the judgments of the lower Courts are correct.

In my opinion the first contention is unsound. There is nothing in the document itself to show that there arose a charge in favour of the vendors. It does not appear on the face of the document what amount if any would be payable to the vendors for the balance. Indeed the document contemplates the contingency of the sum of Rs. 3,000 not being sufficient to satisfy the claims of the mortgagees and the costs to be incurred in litigation. It was therefore provided that if any amount in excess was to be spent the vendors would pay the same. Under these circumstances, I am unable to consider that the property was under a statutory charge of over Rs. 100. In respect of that balance therefore no interest in any immovable property was created.

Even assuming it to be otherwise, the effect of the second document, in my opinion, was not to extinguish any charge. What was stipulated was that the balance if any was not to be paid to the vendors. The fact, that after four years it was ascertained that no money was payable to the mortgagees who were in possession, cannot govern the question whether the document when executed required registration. The simple term in that document was that the stipulation about the payment of the balance was given up. In my opinion that stipulation did not affect immovable property, and the document was being tendered for a collateral purpose that did not create, affect or extinguish any interest in immovable property. Under the circumstances the first contention must be rejected.

The contention that the second document altered the consideration is also unsound. I am concerned in this litigation only with this particular stipulation and nothing else. A promisee has a right at any time to give up the performance of any part of the promise. That does not require any consideration under the Indian Contract Act. In the present case the giving up of the right to receive the balance does not amount to an alteration of the term about consideration but is merely giving up of a right to the performance of a part of the contract between the parties.

The last contention is clearly unsound. A day after the first agreement the contracting parties agreed that the only obligation of the purchaser was to satisfy the claims of the mortgagees, and to see that the lands which were covered by the mortgage were delivered free to the vendors. Both expressly and impliedly therefore the obligation of the purchaser to pay any money was cancelled and it is therefore improper to contend that the document does not provide for the contingency of nothing being found payable to the mortgagees. Towards the close of the document it is expressly provided that the only obligation which remained on the purchaser was to see that the lands mortgaged were delivered free from encumbrances to the vendors.

I therefore think that the lower Courts were in error in rejecting the agreement of August 30, 1916. It should have been admitted in evidence. Giving effect to the terms of that document it is clear that the plaintiffs have no right to sue for the balance alleged to be due under the arrangement contained in the document of August 29, 1916. The basis of the suit having gone, the suit does not lie.

The appeal is therefore allowed, the decision of the lower Courts is set aside and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

Kania J.

BROOMFIELD J. This is a Letters Patent appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Kania who, disagreeing with both the lower Courts, dismissed a suit brought by the appellants to recover the price of land sold by them to defendant No. 1 by sale of the land.

The appellants were the owners of a field survey No. 493 and some other lands which were in the possession of mortgagees under a mortgage of 1868. On August 29, 1916, they executed a sale deed, exhibit 26, in favour of defendant No. 1. The material terms of this document, which was registered, are as follows :—

"Land thus bounded, along with the trees, shrubs etc., thereon and along with all their component parts, has been sold for the said sum of Rs. 3,000. You should therefore take into your possession all the mortgaged lands from the creditors, either by mutual consent, or through Court and out of them you should keep in your possession the land sold and described above and pay assessment and should make a vahiwat permanently and without any trouble, from generation to generation including sons and grandsons. No right, title or interest has been left therein in us or in our heirs and executors, etc. You should take the remaining mortgaged lands from the possession of the creditors as indicated above and give them into our possession. If the sum that is found due to the creditors after taking accounts is less than the purchase amount, you should pay the balance to us. You have no right over that sum. If perhaps the sum found due to the creditors after taking accounts is more, we shall re-pay that out of the other mortgaged properties. You are not to be burdened with that. If it becomes necessary to file a suit in Court for the redemption of the lands from the said creditors we shall render every possible assistance in that matter and will join in the suit. You should incur the costs of the suit and should deduct the same from the sale price to be paid to us. The consideration is as under :—

After deducting the sum that will have to be paid to the creditors after taking accounts and the costs of the suit if a suit is required to be filed for the purpose of redeeming the lands, from the sum of Rs. 3,000, you should pay the balance found due to us and should hand over the remaining mortgaged lands to us. If the costs exceed the amount, we shall pay the excess. We have sold you absolutely the land as described above, for the consideration of Rs. 3,000 without any oral and written terms of any kind whatsoever."

Stated briefly, the effect of this was that the plaintiffs sold their equity of redemption in survey No. 493 to defendant No. 1 for Rs. 3,000, but this sum was to be spent in redeeming the mortgage on that field and the other lands and only the balance if any remaining after doing this and after deducting the cost of litigation was to be paid to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs agreed to pay any excess over Rs. 3,000. The other mortgaged lands were to be handed over to them.

On the following day, August 30, the parties entered into an agreement which was reduced to writing. That is exhibit A. The material portion of this document is :—

"We have yesterday (date August 29, 1916) executed a sale deed in your favour for Rs. 3,000 in respect of the land, survey No. 493 of Saswad. In that there is a term in the deed that after paying whatever is found due to the creditor after taking accounts, the balance is to be paid to us.' But you are not to pay us at all the balance that will be left over. Only that you are to keep with yourself permanently the land that has been sold to you and you are to give us the remaining mortgaged lands that will be freed from the mortgage.

You are only to pay off the encumbrance in favour of the creditor and the land is to remain with you as sold absolutely for that and your labour."

According to this writing then the plaintiffs gave up their claim to any balance there might be after paying off the mortgagees, and defendant No. 1 on the other hand apparently became liable to redeem the mortgage whatever it cost. This document was not registered.

Defendant No. 1 duly filed a redemption suit No. 16 of 1917 and in September, 1920, he obtained a decree for redemption without any payment being required to be made to the mortgagees. The decree was confirmed in appeal in September, 1921. There were some review proceedings which ended in March, 1924, but they left the decree as it was.

In July, 1932, the plaintiffs sued defendant No. 1, his brothers and subsequent purchaser of part of the property to recover Rs. 4,999 by sale of survey No. 493. This amount was made up of Rs. 3,000, the purchase price under exhibit 26, plus Rs. 2,760 interest from the date of the appellate Court's decree in the redemption suit, less Rs. 240 allowed to defendant No. 1 for expenses of the litigation, less Rs. 521 which were remitted. This suit was obviously based on the vendors' charge for unpaid purchase money under s. 55(4)(b) of the Transfer of Property Act.

The trial Court held that exhibit A was inadmissible in evidence. Defendant No. 1 was allowed Rs. 500 for the expenses of the litigation and the plaintiffs were given a decree for Rs. 3,746. The decree was confirmed in appeal by the Assistant Judge. I may say that both the lower Courts relied very largely on s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, but that has nothing to do with the case, exhibit A not being an oral agreement.

There was a second appeal which was heard by Mr. Justice Kania. The principal points argued before him in support of the lower Courts' finding were that there was a statutory charge in favour of the vendors under s. 55(4)(b) and that the effect of the second document exhibit A was to extinguish that charge, so that the document required registration. In the alternative it was contended that the second document purported to alter the consideration for the first. This alternative is really the same point in a different form. The cases in which it has been held that an unregistered writing cannot alter the terms of a registered instrument all turned on the point that the unregistered writing in question affected immoveable property and therefore itself required registration. Substantially there is only one point in the appeal viz. whether exhibit A is compulsorily registrable under s. 17(1)(b) of the Indian Registration Act, and that depends on whether the sale deed gave the plaintiffs a charge under s. 55(4)(b) of the Transfer of Property Act, and whether, if so, exhibit A operated to extinguish that charge.

Mr. Justice Kania says in one place that no interest in immoveable property was created in respect of the balance, if any, payable to the plaintiffs. But I gather that what he really meant was that the value of the interest was not Rs. 100 or over and therefore even if exhibit A extinguished that interest it did not require registration. He says :—

“It does not appear on the face of the document what amount if any would be payable to the vendors for the balance. Indeed the document contemplates the contingency of the sum of Rs. 3,000 not being sufficient to satisfy the claims of the mortgagees and the costs to be incurred in litigation. It was therefore provided that if any amount in excess was to be spent the vendors would pay the same. Under these circumstances, I am unable to consider that the property was under a statutory charge of over Rs. 100.”

But, with deference, we think it is incorrect to make the money value of the statutory charge under s. 55(4) (b) depend on the probability or otherwise of the charge being required. There must always be more or less uncertainty as to the extent to which, if at all, it may be necessary to rely upon the charge. What the statute says is that where the ownership of the property has passed to the buyer before payment of the whole of the purchase money, the buyer has a charge upon the property for the amount of the purchase money remaining unpaid. When the ownership passes at once, the money value of the charge at the date of the sale deed must, we think, be the amount of the purchase money remaining unpaid at that date, neither more nor less. It may be pointed out that the charge is not excluded by the fact that the buyer is to pay the money to a creditor of the seller : Sivasubramania Ayyar v. Subramania Ayyar<sup>1</sup> and Naima Khatun v. Sardar Basant Singh<sup>2</sup>.

Broomfield J.

It has also been held by Mr. Justice Kania that even if a charge is created by the sale deed in favour of the plaintiffs it was not extinguished by their agreeing that the balance if any was not to be paid to them. This agreement he thought did not affect immovable property. He has also observed that a promisee has a right at any time to give up the performance of any part of the promise. This was in answer to the argument that exhibit A altered the consideration for the sale deed, but, as already pointed out, that seems to be merely a part of the same point. No doubt the promisee may give up part of the consideration if he wishes. He cannot be compelled to take the whole of his pound of flesh. But the question here is not whether he can give it up but whether he can be forced to give it up. That depends in the present case on whether plaintiffs are bound by the agreement exhibit A. To make them bound it is necessary to prove the agreement and it cannot be proved if it is compulsorily registrable. If the plaintiffs are really entitled to the charge which they are seeking to enforce and became entitled to it on the date of the sale deed, the agreement to relinquish their claim to a possible balance had the effect of depriving them of the right which they had to the land as security, and we think it could hardly be disputed in that case that exhibit A would operate to extinguish their right and would be compulsorily registrable under s. 17(1) (b) of the Indian Registration Act.

In our opinion, however, there is a simple answer to the plaintiffs' claim and it is this. The statutory charge under s. 55(4) (b) is on the property sold. In this case the property sold was the equity of redemption in the land. That is all the plaintiffs had to sell. The agreement was, however, that the price was to be paid on redemption and not before. So that there could be no question of any charge on the equity of redemption, there being an implied contract to the contrary. Anyhow plaintiffs are not seeking to enforce a charge on the equity of redemption; they are seeking to recover their money by sale of the land after redemption of the mortgage. It seems to us to be, to say the least of it, extremely doubtful whether the statutory provision could operate to give the plaintiffs a charge on the land after redemption. But, assuming for the sake of argument that it could, the charge would only arise when the ownership of the land passed to defendant No. 1 i.e. on redemption of the mortgage. But before that time there was a contract to the contrary embodied in exhibit A, by reason of which no charge for the balance of the price could arise, since the claim to that balance had been abandoned. On this view exhibit A did not require registration, because it did not operate to extinguish any right or interest to or in the land, plaintiffs at that time having no such right or interest. Mr. Justice Kania, therefore, was right in admitting exhibit A in evidence and as a necessary consequence dismissing the plaintiffs' suit.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

There is nothing in O. XXI, r. 2(1), of the Civil Procedure Code, to prevent the decree-holder withdrawing his application before it is recorded. There is nothing in the sub-rule which says that the moment a certificate is presented it becomes binding for all time and that the parties cannot change their minds and withdraw from the compromise.

EXECUTION.

On November 30, 1936, one Vithaldas (plaintiff) obtained a decree against Dattatraya and others (defendants Nos. 1 to 5) for a sum of Rs. 81,000, which was made payable by instalments. Defendants Nos. 3 to 5 were the minor sons of Dattatraya, defendant No. 1.

On November 19, 1937, the plaintiff made an application under O. XXI, r. 2(1), of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to the Court to record an adjustment. The terms of the adjustment were that in satisfaction of his decree the plaintiff was to take certain immoveable properties of the defendants. At the same time an application was made to the Court for sanction of the compromise on behalf of the minor defendants Nos. 3 to 5. Notices were issued but on February 24, 1938, the application to record the compromise was dismissed for want of prosecution.

On February 7, 1939, the plaintiff issued the present darkhast against the defendants. The defendants contended that the mere institution of the application of November 19, 1937, amounted to a valid certification of adjustment of the decree which was thereby extinguished and could not therefore be executed. The trial Judge held that the decree had not been extinguished and that the darkhast was maintainable. He observed as follows :—

"It is undisputed that the decree-holder did not plead in his application for certification that he had received money out of Court and his decree was satisfied. But on the other hand he set out a particular adjustment whereunder valuable landed and house property of defendants was alleged to have been offered to him by them in satisfaction of his decree. It is not only that but the interests of three minor judgment-debtors were involved under this alleged adjustment and therefore the decree-holder had applied to Court to issue notice to the guardian of the minor judgment-debtors and had sought for the permission of Court to sanction such adjustment of the decree. Obviously then the decree-holder pressed for the compliance of these two specific conditions before the Court recorded the adjustment of the decree. The decree-holder made no secret of his intention and he treated the adjustment as provisional till the above two conditions were fulfilled. The adjustment of the decree must be to the satisfaction of the decree-holder as laid down in sub-cl. (1) of r. 2 of O. XXI. In order to attain that, the decree-holder cast a liability on the judgment-debtors as well as the Court. The judgment-debtors were required to give their consent to the alleged adjustment and abandon their rights over the property involved therein. The Court was also required to fulfil its part of the liability by sanctioning leave to the adjustment so far as the minors were concerned. Both of these conditions were neither imaginary nor self-imposed but they were quite essential for a valid certification. ... Further in case of minors where a decree is sought to be adjusted the leave of the Court is absolutely necessary under O. XXXII, r. 7, even in execution proceedings. (Vide 26 Bom. 109, Virupaxappa v. Shiddappa and Basappa, 56 Mad. 430, Muthalakkammal v. Narappa Reddiar). Adjustment of decree without the leave of Court cannot be certified under O. XXI, r. 2, sub-cl. (1) (vide 29 Mad. 309, Arunachellam Chetty v. Ramanaadhan Chetty, and 146 I. C. 707, R. V. Veerappa Chettiar v. M. R. V. Veluswami Thevar). In the present case, there was neither such a leave of the Court nor a final certification."

BEAUMONT C. J. This is an appeal raising a question in execution. In the year 1936 the respondent obtained a decree against the appellants for a sum of Rs. 81,000 odd, which was made payable by instalments. On November 19, 1937, the decree-holder made an application to the Court, which is exhibit 1, asking the Court to record an adjustment, the terms of the adjustment being that in satisfaction of the decree, the decree-holder was to take certain immoveable properties. At the same time an application was made to the Court for sanction of the compromise on behalf of defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5, who were minors. Notices were issued, but eventually on February 24, 1938, the application to record the compromise was dismissed for want of prosecution. The present darkhast was issued on February 7, 1939, and the learned First Class Subordinate Judge of Bijapur has held that it is entitled to proceed. Hence this appeal.

The contention of the appellants is that the application of November 19, 1937, was a certification of an adjustment under O. XXI, r. 2(1), Civil Procedure Code, 1908, which became binding immediately on presentation, that the fact that it was not recorded by the Court is irrelevant, and that it was not competent for the decree-holder to withdraw the application. The argument would, I think, have been the same even if the judgment-debtor had agreed that the application should be withdrawn; the appellants' contention being that as soon as such an application is presented to the Court, that disposes of the decree, which cannot afterwards be executed.

The question turns primarily on the construction of O. XXI, r. 2. Sub-rule (1) provides :

"Where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, and the Court shall record the same accordingly."

An application under that rule being made by the decree-holder is prima facie an application against his own interest; he is admitting that he has received part payment or something less than the whole claim in satisfaction of the decree, and, therefore, it is not surprising to find that no duty is cast upon the Court to consider whether the arrangement is a proper one or not. But at the same time the duty is imposed upon the Court of recording the certificate. In my opinion, although the Court is not concerned to consider the merits of the adjustment, it is concerned to consider whether the arrangement to be recorded is an adjustment, that is to say, a legal adjustment. To put an illustration, which I put in the course of the argument, supposing a decree-holder were to come forward and say "the judgment-debtor has agreed in satisfaction of my foregoing the decree to give me his daughter in marriage." That is not an extravagant illustration, having regard to the habits of some of the backward classes in this country, but it is obvious that in such a case no Court would record such an arrangement; the Court would be bound to hold that it was not a legal adjustment. In my opinion, further, where, as here, some of the judgment-debtors are minors, the Court is bound under O. XXXII, r. 7, to satisfy itself that the compromise is for the benefit of the minors before recording it. I feel no doubt that that duty is cast upon the Court before it records an adjustment under sub-r. (1) of O. XXI, r. 2(2), and that view has been taken by the High Court of Madras in Arunachellam Chetty v. Ramnadhan Chetty and Alamelu Achi,<sup>1</sup> by the Allahabad High Court in Kastori Singh v. Pati Ram,<sup>2</sup> and by the Rangoon High Court in Veerappa v. Veluswami.<sup>3</sup>

But Mr. Coyajee for the appellants relies strongly on a decision of a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court in second appeal in Mt. Champi Bai v. Pearey Lal.<sup>4</sup> In that case it was, no doubt, held that the fact that a Judge had wrongly declined to record an adjustment under sub-r. (1) would not prejudice the judgment-debtor, and that the Court in execution was entitled to act upon the certificate, although not recorded. The view of the Court depended on sub-rs. (2) and (3) of O. XXI, r. 2. Sub-rule (2) enables the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court to certify the adjustment, where the decree-holder has omitted to do so; and, as such an application is prima facie in the interest of the applicant, and not, like an application, under sub-r. (1), against his interest, the rule naturally provides that the Court shall serve notice upon the decree-holder to show cause why the adjustment should not be certified, and if the decree-holder fails to show cause, then only is the Court required to record the adjustment as certified. Then sub-r. (3) provides :—

“A payment or adjustment, which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree.”

The view of the Allahabad High Court, relying on the use of the disjunctive “or” between “certified” and “recorded”, was that “certified” means certified under sub-r. (1), and “recorded” means recorded under sub-r. (2); but that ignores altogether the obligation imposed on the Court under sub-r. (1) to record the adjustment, and it seems to me that that construction of O. XXI, r. 2, would defeat to a large extent the purpose of the rule. The purpose of the rule appears to be to ensure that an executing Court can either act upon the decree in the form which it originally took, or, if there has been an adjustment, it can act upon an adjustment recorded by the Court. So that the execution Court is not concerned to go into disputes as to whether the decree has been adjusted, and if so, on what terms. It has the record of the Court. But if all that is required is a certificate of the adjustment under sub-r. (1), and, be it noted, there is nothing to show that the adjustment must be certified in writing under that sub-rule, it is obvious that the execution Court may be called upon to decide disputed questions as to whether there has been a certification of adjustment, and, if so, what were the terms of the adjustment. In my opinion, such a construction is against the meaning of the rule, and I think that, to give effect to the words of the whole — It would be possible, I think, to dispose of this appeal without going as far as that, because even if a certificate alone, without any record by the Beaumont C.J. Court, is a sufficient compliance with sub-r. (1), I can see nothing in that — sub-rule to prevent the decree-holder withdrawing his application before it is recorded. There is nothing in the sub-rule which says that the moment a certificate is presented, it becomes binding for all time, and that the parties cannot change their minds and withdraw from the compromise. However, I feel no doubt myself that the Court is not, under sub-r. (1), a mere recording machine; it has to satisfy itself that the adjustment, which it is asked to record, is a legal adjustment.

We were referred to a recent decision of the Privy Council in Prakash Singh v. Allahabad Bank, Ltd.<sup>1</sup>, in which this rule was discussed; but all that their Lordships held there was that an application under sub-r. (1) to record an adjustment was not an application within the meaning of art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act. That has nothing to do with the case with which we have to deal.

I may mention, merely as illustrating the danger of recording an adjustment in a case in which minors are interested without seeing that it is to their benefit, that when this appeal first came before this Court the respondent offered to adhere to the compromise, and we thereupon directed that the matter should be considered by the guardian ad litem of the minors, and that, if he approved of the compromise, he should make an affidavit to that effect. He was not prepared to say that he thought the compromise beneficial to the minors.

In my opinion, there is no substance in the appeal, and it must be dismissed with costs.

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Secs. 4(3) (i), 41—"Charitable purposes"—Trust wholly for religious and charitable purposes—Exemption from income-tax—Rate of assessment.

A trust fund was created having for its objects (a) the advancement of any purpose which might in the uncontrolled opinion of the managing committee be national or of national importance for the inhabitants of British India, (b) the political advancement of India having for its goal the acquisition of complete national autonomy or "swarajya", (c) the diffusion of political education and knowledge as to the political affairs of India and propagandist work both in India as well as in any part of the world, (d) any object which might conduce to any of the aforesaid objects. A question having arisen whether the income of the fund was exempt from payment of income-tax under s. 4(3) (i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, as being a trust wholly for charitable purposes, and if not so exempt, what was the rate of assessment:—

Held, (1) that the four sub-clauses setting out the objects of the fund were distributive;

(2) that sub-cl. (a) went beyond the definition of "charitable purposes" contained in s. 4 of the Act, inasmuch as the selection of the purpose rested in the uncontrolled opinion of the managing committee;

(3) that sub-cl. (b) also went too far, because it was really a gift for political purposes;

(4) that therefore the income of the trust fund did not fall within the purview of s. 4(3) (i) of the Act and was assessable to income-tax;

(5) that the case fell within the first proviso to s. 41(1) of the Act, and the tax should be assessed at the maximum rate.

Held, further, by Kania J., that sub-cl. (c) which contained the words "political education and knowledge" coupled with "propagandist work both in India as well as in any part of the world" fell within the rule stated in Tribune Press Trustees, Lahore v. Income-tax Commissioner<sup>1</sup>; and that sub-cl. (d), being the general clause dealing with objects subsidiary to the three objects mentioned in the preceding sub-clauses shared the same infirmity.

Per Beaumont C. J. Trusts for the benefit of the inhabitants of a particular locality are regarded as charitable; but trusts for the benefit of a particular political party, or for the advancement of particular political opinions, are not regarded as charitable.

The definition of "charitable purposes" as contained in s. 4(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act goes further than the definition of charity to be derived from the English cases, because it embraces purposes of general public utility.

There is no authority for the proposition that a gift for such purposes as a particular individual or individuals may consider to be charitable is good.

Per Karia J. When there is a general charitable intention, the Court will uphold it, and if within that limit discretion is given to the trustees to select an object, the trust will not fail because of the discretion so given.

If the dominant purpose of a trust is political, it is not a charitable object within the meaning of the Indian Income-tax Act.

REFERENCE under s. 66(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The trusts in respect of the Lokamanya Tilak Jubilee National Trust Fund were declared by a trust deed dated December 31, 1920.

The objects of the trust were as under :—

(a) The advancement of any purpose which might in the uncontrolled opinion of the Managing Committee be national or of national importance, for the inhabitants of British India by any means which in the like opinion of the Managing Committee be constitutional.

(b) The political advancement of India having for its goal the acquisition of complete national autonomy or "Swarajya" to be attained by all constitutional means.

(c) The diffusion of political education and knowledge as to the political affairs of India and propagandist work, both in India as well as in any part of the world outside India, having for its aim the acquisition of complete national autonomy or "swarajya" as aforesaid.

(d) Any object which may conduce to any of the aforesaid objects.

The assessee, who was the managing trustee of the fund, was assessed on a total sum of Rs. 12,443 as the trust income for the assessment year 1939-40, under s. 23(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, at the maximum rate, under the first proviso to s. 41 of the Act by the Income-tax Officer, Market Ward, Bombay.

The assessee preferred an appeal, under s. 30 of the Act, to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, A Range, Bombay, who upheld the assessment.

The assessee petitioned to the Commissioner of Income-tax praying that the assessment be revised under s. 33 of the Act, or that, in the alternative, a reference be made to the High Court on the questions of law arising in the case.

The Commissioner referred the following questions for the opinion of the High Court :—

(1) Whether the Income-tax Officer was correct in holding that the income of the trust does not fall within the purview of s. 4(3) (i) of the Act?

(2) Whether the Income-tax Officer was correct in levying income-tax at the maximum rate under the first proviso of s. 41(1) of the Act?

The opinion of the Commissioner on the questions referred was thus expressed :—

"It will appear from the objects of the trust, mentioned in paragraph 3 above, that the main and dominant purpose of the Trust is the political advancement of India, having for its goal the acquisition of complete national autonomy or 'swarajya' to be attained by all constitutional agitation and means. Thus the object of the Trust is political and as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Tribune case (I. T. R. 1939, 415) a political object is not a charitable object.

The objects of the Trust are, it is submitted, not charitable purposes within the meaning of s. 4(3) of the Act. It is submitted that the present case is different from the Tribune case, decided in favour of the assessee as in that case the object of the settlor was to supply the province with an organ of educated public opinion and not, as in the present case, the political advancement of India with a view to acquire complete national autonomy or swarajya. Attention is invited to the cases of Bowman v. Secular Society Ltd. (1917, A. C. 406), In re Tetley (1923, 1 Ch. 258), The Bomar Law Memorial Trust v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (1923, 17 T. C. 508) and the recent decision of this Honourable Court in Subhas Bose v. Gordhandas Patel (42 Bom. L. R. 89).

In regard to the second question, it is submitted that in the present case the beneficiaries being indeterminate and unknown, the first proviso to s. 41(1) is clearly applicable and the tax is leviable at the maximum rate.

I therefore respectfully submit that both the questions set out in paragraph 7 above be answered in the affirmative.*

The reference was heard.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, instructed by Y. V. Dixit, for the assessee. The question here is, whether the trust income should be exempted under s. 4(3) (i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. The funds of this trust are held for charitable purposes and therefore the income derived therefrom must be exempted. We rely on the definition of "charitable purposes" contained in the Act. "Charitable purposes" includes "education" and "the advancement of any other object of general public utility." The four sub-clauses in the trust deed which define the object of the trust fund should be read conjunctively and not disjunctively. The dominant motive is to create a charitable trust. All the objects specified in the sub-clauses are to be carried out. Sub-clauses (a) and (c) specifically create a charitable trust. The words in sub-clause (a) are "The advancement of any purpose...of national importance for the inhabitants of British India" and in sub-clause (b) "The diffusion of political education and knowledge as to the political affairs of India." Under these sub-clauses there is a direct gift to inhabitants of India. The trust is for the benefit of India and therefore falls under the following English cases: Mitford v. Reynolds<sup>1</sup>; Nightingale v. Goulbourn<sup>2</sup>; Nightingale v. Goulbourn<sup>3</sup> and Smith, In re: Public Trustee v. Smith<sup>4</sup> (arguments on p. 154).

In Subhas Chandra Bose v. Gordhandas Patel<sup>5</sup> the words used were "political uplift of India." The words used in these clauses are different.

Counsel referred to the arguments of A. M. Latter K. C. for the appellants in Tribune Press Trustees, Lahore v. Income-tax Commissioner<sup>6</sup>.

M. C. Setalvad, Advocate General, for the Commissioner. On the true construction of the trust deed the sub-clauses are disjunctive. The trustees can apply the fund to any one use, e.g. they can utilise it for "the political advancement of India having for its goal the acquisition of complete national autonomy or 'Swarajya' to be attained by all constitutional agitation and means" [sub-cl., (b)]. A political object will not be a charitable purpose

O. C. J. as laid down in Subhas Chandra Bose v. Gordhandas Patel<sup>1</sup> and Tribune Press Trustees, Lahore v. Income-tax Commissioner.<sup>2</sup> This trust has various objects and purposes and not one indivisible object. In sub-clauses (a), (b) and (c) there are areas of distribution suggested which are not charitable. This makes the trust a bad charitable trust. The managing committee can in their discretion apply the funds for non-charitable purposes [sub-cl. (a)]. This vitiates the trust as a charitable trust. Counsel referred to Tudor on Charities, 5th ed., p. 64 : "The charitable application of the gift must be compulsory, otherwise it will fail, for if the gift is such that the trustee is not bound to apply it to purposes strictly charitable it is not, in the eyes of the law a charitable gift at all... the question which should be asked in all cases where there is an apparent vagueness as to the objects of a gift, and it is sought to uphold it as a gift to charity, is this : Is it clear that the only possible objects of the gift are charitable objects in the technical sense of the word ? If the answer is in the affirmative, the Court will uphold the gift, if in the negative, the gift is void for uncertainty."

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a reference made by the Commissioner of Income-tax under s. 66(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and it raises two questions :

(1) Whether the Income-tax Officer was correct in holding that the income of the trust does not fall within the purview of s. 4(3) (i) of the Act ?

(2) Whether the Income-tax Officer was correct in levying income-tax at the maximum rate under the first proviso to s. 41(1) of the Act ?

The trust, with which we have to deal, is a trust known as the "Lokamanya Tilak Jubilee National Trust Fund," and the principal question which arises is, whether the funds of the trust are held for charitable purposes within s. 4(3) (i). Its objects are set out in the trust deed dated December 31, 1920, clause 11 of which is in these terms :

"The objects of the said Trust Fund shall be—

"(a) The advancement of any purpose which might in the uncontrolled opinion of the Managing Committee be national or of national importance for the inhabitants of British India by any means which in the like opinion of the Managing Committee be constitutional.

"(b) The political advancement of India having for its goal the acquisition of complete national autonomy or 'Swarajya' to be attained by all constitutional agitation and means.

"(c) The diffusion of political education and knowledge as to the political affairs of India and propagandist work both in India as well as in any part of the world outside India having for its aim the acquisition of complete national autonomy or 'Swarajya' as aforesaid.

"(d) Any object which may conduce to any of the aforesaid objects."

This Court in Subhas Chandra Bose v. Gordhandas Patel<sup>3</sup> had occasion to consider the general questions which arise in cases of this kind as to whether trusts for a national or political purpose can be regarded as charitable. The actual case, with which we had to deal there, was a trust for the political uplift of India, and we held that the trust was not charitable. As I expressed my opinion in that case on the general principles which apply to cases of this character, it is not necessary that I should repeat them.

There is, I think, no doubt on the authorities that trusts for the benefit of the inhabitants of a particular locality are regarded as charitable, and I will assume that that principle would apply to the inhabitants of British India. On the other hand, it is clear that trusts for the benefit of a particular political party, or for the advancement of particular political opinions, are not regarded as charitable. The objects specified in the four paragraphs of cl. 11 of the trust deed, with which we have to deal, are, in my opinion, clearly distributive. The whole of the trust fund can be applied for any one or more of the objects specified, and if any of those objects do not fall within the purview of the legal definition of "charity", the trust cannot be regarded as a good charitable trust. One has, of course, to bear in mind the definition of "charitable purposes" in s. 4(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act, which provides that "charitable purposes" include relief of the poor, education, medical relief and the advancement of any other object of general public utility. That goes further than the definition of charity to be derived from the English cases, because it embraces purposes of general public utility; and if all the purposes in cl. 11 could be regarded as of general public utility for the benefit of the inhabitants of British India, then the trust would be, in my opinion, a good charitable trust. But, to my mind, sub-cl. (a) and (b), at any rate, cannot be brought within those limits. Sub-clause (a) includes the advancement of any purpose which may in the uncontrolled opinion of the Managing Committee be national or of national importance for the inhabitants of British India by any means which in the like opinion of the Managing Committee be constitutional. It is impossible to say that the Managing Committee may not regard purposes, which are not according to law charitable, as being nevertheless of national importance for the inhabitants of British India, and the Committee may regard methods as constitutional which the law would not regard as constitutional. Assuming the objects specified in sub-cl. (a) to be charitable, this is not the case of a gift for such charitable purposes as the Managing Committee may think fit. A gift of that sort would, no doubt, be good, because the Managing Committee would be bound to keep within the ambit of charity, and if they go beyond the legal boundary, they can be controlled by the Court. But I know of no authority for the proposition that a gift for such purposes as a particular individual or individuals may consider to be charitable is good. There are many purposes which an individual, acting quite bona fide, may regard as charitable, but which the law does not so regard. Therefore, I think sub-cl. (a) goes too far; and I think, sub-cl. (b) goes too far also, because it is really a gift for political purposes. Assuming that the attainment of national autonomy may be regarded as a national purpose accepted generally by, and for the good of, the inhabitants of British India, there is a very keen divergence of opinion as to the methods by which that national autonomy should be attained; and it is impossible, I think, to avoid the conclusion that a gift for the attainment of that object by such methods as the Managing Committee may approve is really a gift for political purposes, and as such falling within the ruling in Bowman v. Secular Society, Limited<sup>1</sup>. In my opinion, therefore, it is impossible to say that the Income-tax Officer was wrong in holding that the income of the trust does not fall within the purview of s. 4(3) (i), and we must answer the first question in the affirmative.

With regard to the second question, it seems to me that the first proviso to s. 41(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act is perfectly plain. It provides in connection with funds held by a trust that where income, profits or gains or any part thereof are not specifically receivable on behalf of any one person, or where the individual shares of the persons on whose behalf they are receivable are indeterminate or unknown, the tax shall be levied and recoverable at the maximum rate. It may be rather hard on this trust fund that it should be charged at a higher rate than the amount of its income would attract if it belonged to an individual. But that is not a matter with which the Court can deal. In my opinion, it is perfectly plain that the case falls within the first proviso to s. 41(1), and, therefore, we must also answer the second question in the affirmative.

The assessee to pay costs.

KANIA J. I agree. In order to get an exemption the assessee must bring his case within s. 4(3) (i). The words there used are that the income should be derived from property held under trust wholly for religious or charitable purposes. By the explanation added at the end, the term "charitable purposes" is stated to include an object of general public utility. Even so, it is for the assessee to show that his case falls within that extended meaning.

Certain propositions of law now appear to be well settled as a result of authorities. First, that when there is a general charitable intention, the Court will uphold it, and if within that limit discretion is given to the trustees to select an object, the trust will not fail because of the discretion so given. If a trustee selects an object which is not charitable according to law, the Court can intervene and rectify the error. Secondly, there are cases, which are compendiously described as "locality cases," of which Smith, In re : Public Trustee v. Smith<sup>2</sup> is a good illustration. In that case the gift was "unto my country England." It was held that every area and purpose which would fall within that gift was charitable, and the gift was upheld. Thirdly, it is held that if the dominant purpose of the trust is political, it is not a charitable object within the meaning of the Income-tax Act. That was held in Tribune Press Trustees, Lahore v. Income-tax Commissioner<sup>3</sup>. It was laid down in the same case that propagandist work does not form part of educational work and is not within the ambit of charity.

Having regard to these principles, the four sub-clauses in the trust deed in question have to be considered. It may be noticed that under cls. 14 and 19 of the trust deed the Managing Committee is made the sole judge as to whether any particular object falls within the category of any of the objects and purposes of the trust fund. Bearing that in mind, when cl. 11, sub-cl.

(a), is looked at, it is clear that the words "national or of national importance for the inhabitants of . . . India" are controlled by the preceding words which state the object of the trust. They are "The advancement of any purpose which might in the uncontrolled opinion of the Managing Committee be." The object of the trust, therefore, is the advancement of a purpose, the selection of which is left to the uncontrolled opinion of the Managing Committee, and the purpose according to that uncontrolled opinion has to be national or of national importance for the inhabitants of British India. It is not possible to hold that the words as used in sub-cl. (a) amount to a gift for an object national or of national importance for the inhabitants of British India simpliciter. It is a gift for the advancement of any purpose, and the selection thereof is left to the uncontrolled opinion of the Managing Committee. I do not think under the circumstances it can be properly argued that that clause amounts to a general charitable bequest, and only the manner of application has to be selected by the trustees. Sub-clause (b) clearly is for the political advancement of India, and the goal thereof is only defined. But the object is clearly the political advancement of India. That is pre-eminently a political purpose and falls within the rule stated in the Tribune case. Sub-clause (c) whilst containing the words "political education and knowledge" couples the same with "propagandist work both in India as well as in any part of the world outside India" and also falls within the rule stated in the Tribune case. The fourth sub-clause, cl. (d), is the general clause dealing with objects subsidiary to the three objects mentioned in the preceding sub-clauses. The construction of the clause shows that the three objects in sub-cl. (a), (b) and (c), have to be separately read, and if any of those objects is not charity, the whole gift must fail, because if the trustees choose to apply the whole of the fund to the particular object, which according to the law of the land is not charitable, then they will not be committing a breach of trust, and the trust could be said to be properly administered. The law does not permit the administration of a trust which can be so used entirely for a non-charitable object and hold it as charitable on construction. Therefore, cl. 11 of this trust deed, which defines the objects of the trust, is not within s. 4(3) (i) of the Indian Income-tax Act charitable, and the answer to the first question must be against the assessee.

As regards the second question, the Court has to administer the law as found in the Act of the Legislature, and hard cases cannot make a different law. The answer to that question must also go against the assessee.

October 1. Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Secs. 25(3), 26(2)—“Discontinued”, meaning of—Assessment in case of discontinued business.

Section 25(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act of 1922, before it was amended in 1939, treated business, profession or vocation as if it was a sort of legal entity. After its amendment, read with s. 26(2) of the Act, it ceased to treat the business as a single unit and split up the tax between the owners for the time being of the business.

Section 25(3), as amended, provides that no tax shall be payable for the period between the end of the previous year and the date of discontinuance of the business. Hence, the income of the previous year, that is the whole of it, shall be deemed to be the income of that period.

The word “discontinued” in s. 25(3) covers a discontinuance either by cessation or by disposal.

The exception in s. 25(3) may cover a case, very unlikely to occur but at the same time possible, in which there has been a succession to which sub-s. (4) applies, and subsequently there has been cessation of business within the year of assessment.

The assessee, who carried on business in coffee, butter etc. was at first assessed to income-tax under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act of 1918, on the basis of income made during the year of assessment. In 1922, the new Indian Income-tax Act was passed, under which the tax was assessed on the basis of income made during the previous year. On January 1, 1939, the assessee assigned his business to a limited company. The Act of 1922 was amended on April 1, 1939, by amending, among other sections, s. 25 which dealt with assessment in case of discontinuance of business. During the assessment for the year 1939-40, the assessee contended that in view of the amended s. 25 he should be relieved from the payment of double income-tax in respect of the income made during the year 1938, because his business was discontinued at the end of the year :—

Held, (1) that the assessee was entitled to the benefit of s. 25(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, as amended in 1939;

(2) that if the income of the year 1938 was to be deemed to be the income of the period between the end of the previous year and the date of discontinuance of the business (which period did not exist in the present case), the assessee was not liable for any tax;

(3) that therefore no tax was payable by him in respect of his income from his business for the year 1938 liable to assessment in respect of the year 1939.

REFERENCE under s. 66(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

One P. E. Polson was the sole proprietor of Polson Manufacturing Co., carrying on business for many years in coffee, butter, flour and casein.

A notice under s. 22 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, was issued by the Income-tax Officer, Companies Circle, Bombay, on the assessee for the financial year 1939-40.

* Income-tax Reference No. 4 of 1941, made by J. B. Shearer, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan, under s. 66(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

A return of income was submitted by the assessee on August 4, 1939, showing a total income of Rs. 1,00,399, consisting of income of Rs. 3,279 from property, Rs. 1,64,726 from business, loss of Rs. 71,072 in the share business and income of Rs. 3,466 from other sources.

Before the assessment was made on November 29, 1939, a revised return of income showing 'nil' under all items was put in. In the covering letter, sent with the revised return, it was stated that while the actual income was as declared in the original return, the revised return was put in as the assessee was desirous of claiming the benefit of the provisions of s. 25(3) of the amended Income-tax Act, 1939.

The Income-tax Officer came to the conclusion that the claim under s. 25 (3) was inadmissible.

The assessee preferred an appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, B Division, on January 5, 1940, who confirmed the order of the Income-tax Officer by his order dated March 30, 1940.

The assessee preferred a petition to the Commissioner of Income-tax requesting that certain questions of law arising out of the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner be referred to the High Court.

It appeared that P. E. Polson was the sole proprietor of the concern till January 1, 1939, when the business was taken over by a limited company under the name of Polson, Limited. The business in question was assessed to income-tax under the Act of 1918 and was entitled to the benefit of s. 25(3) if there was a discontinuance within the meaning of s. 25(3). The question was whether the business could be said to be discontinued so as to make the provisions of s. 25 (3) applicable. There was no dispute that the business was continued by the successors, viz. Polson, Limited.

The assessee contended that though the discontinuance contemplated by the section might have been of that nature before its amendment, by the addition of the words "Then unless there has been a succession by virtue of which the provisions of sub-s. (4) have been rendered applicable", in the amended s. 25(3), the legislature intended that s. 25 (3) should apply not only to the case of absolute discontinuance and cessation of business but also to cases in which business was discontinued by one party and taken over by another as successor in business.

The Commissioner referred the following questions for the opinion of the High Court :—

(1) Whether on the facts of the case the assessee is entitled to the benefit of s. 25(3) of the Income-tax Act?

(2) Whether in view of the provisions of the said s. 25(3) no tax is payable by the assessee in respect of his income from business of Polson Manufacturing Co. for the calendar year 1938 liable to assessment in respect of the financial year 1939-40?

The opinion of the Commissioner on the questions referred was thus expressed :—

"It is submitted that s. 25(3) as amended, on its true construction, does not apply to the assessee's case. The words introduced by the amendment in that section have only the effect of creating an exception to which the rule laid down in the section is not to apply. That exception is dealt with in s. 25 (4) of the Act. The addition of the words relied on by the assessee cannot and does not affect

BEAUMONT C. J. This is a reference made by the Commissioner of Income-tax under s. 66(2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, raising questions arising under s. 25 of the Act as amended in 1939.

The material facts are that the assessee, Mr. Polson, was carrying on a business under the name of Polson Mfg. Co., which dealt in coffee, butter, flour and casein, which business had been in existence whilst the Income-tax Act of 1918 was in force. On January 1, 1939, Mr. Polson assigned his business to a limited company, and the Amended Income-tax Act came into operation on April 1, 1939. Mr. Polson had paid income-tax in respect of his business under the Act of 1918, and under that Act income-tax was assessed in respect of the year of assessment, and not in respect of the previous year. Under the Act of 1922 income-tax was assessed in respect of the previous year's income, and, therefore, it followed that for the income of the year 1921 income-tax was paid twice,—once under the Act of 1918 in respect of the year 1921, and once under the Act of 1922 in respect of the year 1922. So that, eventually it would happen, unless some relief was given, that tax would be payable for one year more than the life of the business. In order to remove that hardship s. 25(3) of the Act of 1922 provided that where any business, profession or vocation on which tax was at any time charged under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918, was discontinued, relief was given. It will be noticed that that sub-section seems to treat business, profession or vocation as if it was a sort of legal entity. It speaks of a business, profession or vocation on which tax was charged. Tax, of course, is not charged on a business; tax is charged on the owner in respect of the business. It is not disputed in this case that Mr. Polson was charged in respect of his business under the Act of 1918, and that such business was the same business as the business assigned on January 1, 1939, though I apprehend that in point of fact the business, as it existed in 1939, was not identical with the business as it existed in 1918.

Then under the Act of 1922, s. 26(2) dealt with the case of assignment of a business, and provided that where, at the time of making an assessment under s. 23, it was found that the person carrying on any business, profession or vocation had been succeeded in such capacity by another person, the assessment should be made on such person succeeding as if he had been carrying on the business, profession or vocation throughout the previous year, and as if he had received the whole of the profits for that year. So that there again the business is taxed as if it was an entity, and the tax is charged against the owner of the business at the time of the assessment, although he may not have been the owner of the business during the accounting year.

Under the old Act, reading those two sections together, it was held that the word "discontinued" in s. 25(3) referred to discontinuance by cessation, and not to discontinuance by disposal of the business to somebody else. That was so held in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Sanjana & Co. Ltd.<sup>1</sup> The Advocate General has referred us also to an English case of Sir H. H. Bartlett v. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue<sup>2</sup> where Mr. Justice Scrutton, as he then was, said that a business, which was disposed of, and carried on by the successors, is not discontinued. I am not sure that the matter is quite so simple as Mr. Justice Scrutton seemed to think, because there may be cases in which a business is disposed of in such a way that it would be difficult to suggest that the same business was carried on by the successor. For instance, a business on a small scale may be sold to the owner of a big concern, and amalgamated with the big concern. In such a case the business assigned may not altogether cease to exist, but is difficult to identify under its new guise, and, in my view, can fairly be said to have been discontinued. In point of fact, a business carried on by one man is never quite the same as a business carried on by another man; for one thing, the credit of the owner is different, and that may affect methods of business.

Under the amended Act the scheme as to succession was altered, and s. 26(2) provides that where there has been a succession to business, then the predecessor and the successor are each to be assessed in respect of his actual share of the income, profits and gains of the previous year. So that there you cease to treat the business as a single unit, and split up the tax between the owners for the time being of the business. That alteration in the law required a change to be made in s. 25, because relief had to be given to the predecessor of the business in respect of the double tax with which s. 25 deals. That was dealt with by the addition of a new sub-section, sub-s. (4), to s. 25, which provides that where the person who was at the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, carrying on any business, profession or vocation on which tax was at any time charged under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918, is succeeded in such capacity by another person, then he is given relief.

Now, sub-s. (4) of s. 25 does not apply here, because at the time when the amended Act came into operation, namely April 1, 1939, Mr. Polson was not carrying on his business, the assignment having been made on January 1. So he cannot get relief under s. 25(4), and the question is whether he can get relief under sub-s. (3) of the amended s. 25. That sub-section provides :

"Where any business, profession or vocation on which tax was at any time charged under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918, is discontinued, then, unless there has been a succession by virtue of which the provisions of sub-section (4) have been rendered applicable, no tax shall be payable in respect of the income, profits and gains of the period between the end of the previous year and the date of such discontinuance, and the assessee may further claim that the income, profits and gains of the previous year shall be deemed to have been the income, profits and gains of the said period..."

The sub-section seems to me to be very clumsily worded, and there is difficulty in this case, because in point of fact there is no period between the discontinuance of the old business and the end of the previous year. The previous year ended on December 31, 1938, and that is the date when the old business was sold to the company. So that taking the sub-section literally, and assuming its application to this case, it provides that no tax shall be payable for this non-existing period between the end of the previous year and the date of discontinuance, and the assessee may further claim that the income of the previous year, that is the whole year 1938, shall be deemed to be the income of the said period. I suppose that if the income of 1938 is to be deemed to be the income of a period which does not exist, and in respect of which no tax is to be charged, it is correct to say that the assessee is not liable for any tax, and that point has not been disputed by the Commissioner of Income-tax. His contention is that under the new Act, as under the old, "discontinued" refers only to discontinuance by cessation, that the business of the assessee was not discontinued by the assignment, and that consequently the assessee is not entitled to relief under s. 25(3). As I have already indicated, I think the word "discontinued" by itself, and if not controlled by the context, as it was under the Act of 1922, would cover a discontinuance by disposal. Having regard particularly to the fact that s. 26(2) as amended imposes tax, not in respect of a continuing business, but upon the owners of the business for the time being, I think that the word "discontinued" in the new Act covers discontinuance either by cessation or by disposal. I was at first disposed to think that the words which followed "discontinued" in the amended Act, namely, "unless there has been a succession by virtue of which the provisions of sub-s. (4) have been rendered applicable," showed conclusively that "discontinued" in the amended Act was recognised as covering a succession to which sub-s. (4) might apply. But it is, I think, correct to say, as the learned Advocate General does, that the exception might cover a case, very unlikely to occur but at the same time possible, in which there had been a succession to which sub-s. (4) applied, and subsequently there was cessation of business within the year of assessment. For example, suppose the assignment of the business here had taken place on May 1, instead of January 1, and the business had been brought to an end on, say, August 1, in that case undoubtedly the exception would apply. At the same time it is unlikely that a business, acquired during a year, would be brought to an end during the same year, and I think the reference to a succession under s. 25(4) indicates that relief is to be given under sub-s. (3) if the case does not fall under sub-s. (4) and assists the extended meaning which I am disposed to give to the word "discontinued" under the amended Act.

In my opinion, therefore, the questions raised by the Income-tax Commissioner : (1) whether on the facts of the case the assessee is entitled to the benefit of s. 25 (3) of the Indian Income-tax Act ; and (2) whether in view of the provisions of the said s. 25 (3) no tax is payable by the assessee in respect of his income from business of Polson Mfg. Co. for the calendar year 1938 liable to assessment in respect of the financial year 1939-40, must both be answered in the affirmative.

Commissioner to pay costs.

KANIA J. I agree that the questions should be answered as suggested in the judgment just delivered.

The question for consideration rests on the construction of s. 25(3) and s. 26(2) as found in the Act before the amendment of 1939 and as those sub-sections exist now. It appears that before the amendment of 1939 the wording of s. 25(3) read with s. 26(2) made out a scheme where business was considered an entity existing throughout the year of assessment. It made no difference if the business was owned by different persons in the course of the year. The liability to tax was as if of the business, and to be satisfied by the person who was the owner of it at the moment of assessment, that is at the conclusion of the assessment year. When the Act was amended in 1939, a vital change was made by the amendment made in s. 26(2). By that amendment the aspect of the business being charged was abandoned, and it was provided that each person should be assessed in respect of his actual share of the income, profits and gains of the previous year. Therefore, in making the assessment the revenue authorities had not to ascertain what was the profit or income of the business as an entity, but immediately their attention was drawn to the fact that there was a change in the ownership, the process was to ascertain what particular income the individual for the time being earned out of that business. This aspect of the section is very material, because the words used in s. 25(3) are peculiar. They open with words which indicate that it was the business which was charged. Now, the discontinuance may be of a business, or the term may be applicable to an assessee discontinuing his business. When a business is transferred, in certain aspects it may be conceived that although the ownership had changed hands, the business as such continues. In no event, however, when the word is taken as relating to the assessee, it can be properly stated that the business has continued. So far as the assessee is concerned, it has certainly come to an end, although the business as an entity may, as I have pointed out, in certain cases continue. If s. 26(2) has to be read now as authorizing assessment of individuals in respect of a particular share of income or profit earned by the particular party in business, the aspect of assessing a business is gone and s. 25(3) has now to be read in that light.

Section 25(3), as has been pointed out, was inserted to grant relief to avoid a double taxation. If the construction now urged on behalf of the Commissioner is adopted, it will mean that while the assessee cannot get the benefit of s. 25(3), because, according to the Commissioner's contention, the business continues, the transferee also will not get the benefit of it. The learned Advocate General has contended that the words "has been a succession" in the exception inserted by the amendment indicate that there should be a succession before discontinuance. I do not suggest that that construction is wrong. But the further illustration which he gave, in my opinion, is not appropriate at all. It was suggested that if the business was transferred on May 1, 1939, and then discontinued in September, 1939, under s. 25(4) the last owner would come under that sub-section and claim the relief provided by reason of the discontinuance of the business. That overlooks the fact that he has not been assessed at all in respect of the business. This will be more clear by taking the date of transfer in December, 1939, and of discontinuance in July, 1940. The assessment will be under s. 26(2), and for the profits which he actually received during the period between December 1 and March 31. He cannot contend that the business as an entity exists or has been discontinued, because he will be met by the wording of s. 26(2), which does not deal with the business being charged as an entity at all. I, therefore, think that the illustration given by the learned Advocate General is inappropriate. Having considered the matter from different aspects, it appears to me that if there is a case of doubt, and s. 25 (3) having been clearly inserted in the Act to grant a relief, if the legislature wanted to prevent that relief being given in certain exceptional circumstances, it was their duty to provide so in clear words.

In my opinion, as the whole scheme of assessment or charging business as an entity has been changed, and s. 26 (2) has been brought in line with the general scheme of the Act that it is the individual who has to be charged and not an abstract thing like business or profession, the word "discontinuance" is wide enough to include the contingency of a transfer under the amended Act as it exists now. The answers to both questions should, therefore, be in the affirmative.

GENERAL INDEX.

ABKARI ACT (Bom. V of 1878), S. 4—Power to grant licences.

Section 4 of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, relates only to control in reference to establishment, and not to the power to grant licences to tap trees producing toddy.

RATANSHAW v. McELHINNY. 43 Bom.L.R. 896.

—S. 14.

Section 14 of the Bombay Abkari Act read in conjunction with the Bombay Toddy Tapping Rules, 1928, made under the Act, contemplates that such licences shall be granted in accordance with the rules to enable the duties imposed to be levied.

The implied power conferred upon the Collector by s. 14(1) of the Bombay Abkari Act to grant or refuse a licence is limited by the rules. If the requirements of the rules are complied with, there is a statutory duty imposed upon the Collector to grant a licence, and this duty is not affected by anything contained in s. 4.

Sections 35 and 35A of the Bombay Abkari Act contemplate that the powers of the Abkari officers to issue licences are controlled only by rules having the force of law made under these sections, and not by orders issued by Government under s. 4. Such orders do not override the rules.

Under r. 534 of the Rules of the High Court of Bombay, 1936, an order for taxation on the original side cannot be made in respect of costs incurred on the appellate side of the High Court. A Judge has discretion under that rule to direct attorney's bills to be so taxed in any other case.

The taxation of a bill of costs does not determine the liability of the client to pay, and he is entitled to challenge his liability on a summons under r. 895 after taxation has taken place.

Since the power of a Judge to direct taxation under r. 534 is discretionary, when an application is made ex parte for a common form order for taxation under that rule, the Court may direct the solicitor to issue a summons, and may hear what the client has to say in the matter. If the Court thinks that there is a serious dispute as to the fact or terms of employment of the solicitor, the Court may refuse to make an order for taxation and leave the attorney to file a suit; and in that suit the solicitor's right to recover can be first determined, and the amount to be recovered can be determined subsequently by taxation.

The Taxing Master of the High Court has power to tax the bill of costs of an attorney on the original side scale in relation to work done in the mofussil.

—TABLE OF FEES, ITEM 14—Interpretation of "final trial".

In the Rules of the Bombay High Court, 1936, under items 40 and 41 in the "Table of Fees to be taken by Attorneys," the Taxing Master has to reckon the number of hours of attendance, irrespective of whether they took place on the same day or not. Having completed the first hour, for which a sum of Rs. 15 is allowed, all subsequent hours are to be allowed at the rate of Rs. 10.

In counting hours of attendance of attorneys, under items 40 and 41, referred to above, the time taken up by the midday adjournment of Court is not to be reckoned.

BOMBAY SALT ACT (Bom. II of 1890), S. 3 (o)—"Possession"—"Removal"—Interpretation.

The effect of s. 3(o) of the Act, defining the terms "possession" and "removal", is to provide that where it is proved that the person in possession or removing salt is a servant or agent, then the possession or removal shall be deemed to be that of the master or principal, to the exclusion of liability of the servant or agent.

—S. 47(a)—Salt—"Possession" or "removal of salt" by servant or agent—"Removal", "Transportation", "Possession" of salt—Liability of servant removing contraband salt on behalf of master.

Section 47, sub-s. (c), of the Bombay Salt Act, 1890, deals with possession of contraband salt, and makes knowledge or belief that it is contraband salt necessary to constitute an offence. Under sub-s. (a) to the section, however, it is an offence merely to manufacture, remove or transport salt, not merely contraband salt. The words "removal" and "transportation" in the sub-section are used interchangeably. The word "removal" is not confined to salt removed from the salt-works of Government under s. 28 of the Act.

Where the accused, a cart-driver, is employed by another person to convey con-

BOMBAY SHOPS AND ESTABLISHMENTS ACT (Bom. XXIV of 1939), S. 4—"Employer" in s. 30, meaning of—One-man shop governed by Act.

The owner of a shop cannot be said to be a person occupying a position of management as contemplated by s. 4(1)(a) of the Act. One of the incidents of ownership is no doubt the right to manage; but it is difficult to say that the owner is a person occupying a position of management.

EMPEROR v. MAHOMED. 43 Bom.L.R. 952.

—S. 5.

Section 5 of the Bombay Shops and Establishments Act, 1939, is intended to include a one-man-shop.

Accordingly, where the owner of a one-man shop keeps the shop open for business after 9 p.m., he renders himself liable to punishment under s. 30 read with s. 5 of the Act.

EMPEROR v. MAHOMED. 43 Bom.L.R. 952.

—S. 6.

The effect of s. 6 of the Act, or one effect at any rate, is to protect an employer, who has been compelled to close his shop at 9 p.m., from competition by sales in a public place after that hour; another object may be to prevent a man who has been compelled to close his shop from reopening his business in the street or other public place.

—S. 14.

Section 14 of the Act clearly protects the shop which has been compelled to close at 9 o'clock from competition after that hour by a place of public amusement.

EMPEROR v. MAHOMED. 43 Bom.L.R. 952.

—S. 30.

The word "employer" as used in s. 30 of the Act means a person having charge of or owning the business of a shop.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE—Scope of.

Circumstantial evidence must be consistent, and consistent only with the guilt of the accused; if the evidence is consistent with any other rational explanation, then there is an element of doubt of which the accused must be given the benefit. One of the circumstances which has to be taken into account is the fact that the accused has offered no explanation, or has offered a particular explanation; but it must be borne in mind that the accused cannot go into the witness-box, and is not bound to give any explanation at all. The fact that he does not open his mouth cannot be used against him. Often the accused is an illiterate person, and makes a statement under s. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, which is obviously untrue, or he is not prepared to admit anything.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, S. 10—Stay of suit—Suit pending in mofussil Court—Suit subsequently filed on Original Side of High Court—Application for stay of suit in High Court made to Appellate Side Bench of High Court—Whether application competent.

An application under s. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, for stay of suit should be made to the Court which is actually seized of the case.

An application under s. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code was made on the Appellate Side of the High Court to stay a suit which was instituted on its Original Side until the decision of a previously instituted suit between the same parties in a Court in the mofussil. On the question whether the application to the Appellate Side Bench of the High Court was competent:—

Held, that the application should be made on the Original Side to the Judge trying the suit.

NAGAPPA v. RAMSING. 43 Bom.L.R. 236.

—S. 11—Court declining jurisdiction—Reason for such decision whether binding as res judicata—Indian Registration Act (XVI of 1908), Sec. 17(1)(b)—Award—"Ownership", interpretation of—Compulsory registration of award.

A Court which declines jurisdiction cannot bind the parties by its reasons for declining jurisdiction: such reasons are not decisions, and are certainly not decisions by a Court of competent jurisdiction. On a dispute as to the jurisdiction of a Court to try an issue, the Court, by its reasons for holding that it had no jurisdiction, cannot, upon the principle of res judicata, decide and bind the parties upon the very issue which it was incompetent to try.

Hence, a decision by the High Court that no Court in the province had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award within the meaning of para. 20 of sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, which applies the test whether it would have had jurisdiction to try the suit in which the relief claimed was the relief granted by the award, and in so doing construes the award, such construction is not res judicata between the parties on the question of the true construction of the award.

The respondent advanced in 1912 a sum of Rs. 50,000 to the appellant for the purpose of partially clearing of incumbrances on a village upon the term that he should have the option to acquire a half share in the village in lieu of the repayment of his loan. The option was exercised in 1914 and the respondent thenceforward enjoyed a half-share of the profits of the village, but no conveyance was executed. Differences having arisen between the parties, a reference was made to arbitrators, who awarded payment of Rs. 61,400 by the appellant to the respondent, and directed: "The ownership of the second party [i.e. respondent] in one-half of ... [the] property shall not cease till after the above sum be fully paid up." A question having arisen whether the award was compulsorily registrable under s. 17(1) (b) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908:—

Held, (1) that the aforesaid provision was not framed as one which purported to create or confer an interest in immoveable property; but it was framed on the assumption that an interest was already in existence and provided that that existence should not cease until a specified event had happened;

(2) that the mere use of the word "ownership" could not outweigh the consideration that the whole wording of the sentence pointed to the continuance of the status quo, and not to the creation of a new condition of affairs;

(3) that the award did not purport or operate to create, declare or assign any right, title or interest in the village, and therefore did not require registration under s. 17(1) (b) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908.

Defendant No. 1, who resided in Bombay, was the liquidator of a joint stock company, which had its registered office in Bombay but which owned a factory at Dhulia in West Khandesh District. Negotiations opened in Bombay between defendant No. 1 and the plaintiff's broker on behalf of the plaintiff for the sale of the factory, some of the terms of sale were settled between the parties, and defendant No. 1 afterwards sent the broker to the company's solicitors for settling other terms, receiving the earnest money, and drawing up a draft agreement and an engrossment of that draft. The further terms were settled, the earnest money was received by the solicitors, and a rough draft of agreement was prepared. The agreement was engrossed in due course, but before it could be signed by the plaintiff, the solicitors of defendant No. 1 declined to proceed in the matter saying that they were instructed to put an end to the negotiations. Defendant No. 1 then sold the factory to defendants Nos. 2 to 5 at a higher price. The plaintiff having sued in the Dhulia Court for specific performance of the agreement and for possession of the factory:—

Held, (1) that the suit, in the form in which it was brought, was not in personam so as to attract the application of the proviso to s. 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908;

(2) that O. II, r. 2, of the Code, had no application, inasmuch as the cause of action for specific performance, being on the contract, was not the same as the cause of action for possession, which was on the conveyance resulting from the contract;

(3) that the combination of the two suits in one was not repugnant to any provision of the law;

(4) that the Dhulia Court alone had jurisdiction to try the suit against defendants Nos. 2 to 5, and that it also had jurisdiction to try the case as against defendant No. 1 by virtue of the language of s. 16(d) of the Code;

(5) that the cause of action for specific performance, being distinct from that for possession, a subsequent suit for possession was not barred by res judicata or O. II, r. 3;

(6) that though a separate suit for possession was not barred the two causes of action could be joined in the same suit for the sake of convenience or to avoid multiplicity of suits;

(7) that the option to join the prayer for possession was not dependent on the leave of the Court under O. II, r. 4;

(8) that even assuming that the leave of the Court was necessary, strictly speaking the case was covered by s. 99 of the Code;

(9) that, however, under the circumstances the agreement arrived at between the parties at the first interview only contemplated execution of the engrossed draft in the solicitors' office and was not a concluded agreement between the parties, which could be enforced;

(10) that the above rule of English law applied also to India;

(11) that therefore the suit failed.

RAMABAI v. GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY.

—S. 60—Attachment of portion of public servant's salary—Order imposing liability made against Government or public body—Right of Government or public body to move Court to shew illegality of order—Inherent jurisdiction of Court to hear such application—Attachment of salary of public servant which is exempt from attachment under s. 60(i) of Civil Procedure Code—Whether public servant can contract himself out of statutory provision or waive his right—Voluntary transfer of part of salary by public servant—Public policy—Illegality of such transfer—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), Sec. 6(f)—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), Sec. 23.

Where an order is made against Government or a public body, and the law imposes liability in case the order is not obeyed, it is open to Government or the public body to move the Court and contend that the order is not justified by the law, and the Court has inherent power to consider such an application.

A public servant, whose salary is exempt from attachment under s. 60 (i) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, cannot contract himself out of this statutory provision. Such a contract is opposed to public policy and is void under s. 6(f) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

A decree for Rs. 236 was passed against a peon serving in a Government Post Office and drawing a monthly salary of Rs. 41. The judgment-debtor got him arrested in execution of the decree. In order to escape from arrest he entered into a compromise with the judgment-creditor whereby he agreed that a sum of Rs. 6 per mensem should be deducted from his salary until the decree was satisfied. The Court recorded the compromise and passed an order under O. XXI, r. 48, Civil Procedure Code, directing the Post Master General to send Rs. 6 every month to the Court till the decree was fully satisfied. The Post Master General applied under O. XXI, r. 58, to set aside the order on the ground that it was illegal in virtue of the provisions of s. 60 (i) of the Civil Procedure Code, s. 6(f) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and of s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. The lower Court overruled the contention holding that the order was not illegal and that the Post Master General had no locus standi to apply under O. XXI, r. 58, and it therefore refused to raise the attachment. On appeal:—

Held, reversing the order of the lower Court, (1) that O. XXI, r. 48, was subject to the provisions of s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Post Master General was entitled to bring to the notice of the Court the illegality of the order of attachment as Government would be liable for any sum paid in contravention of the section;

(2) that the agreement between the judgment-creditor and the judgment-debtor amounted to a voluntary transfer of a part of the latter's salary and was opposed to the provisions of s. 6(f) of the Transfer of Property Act and s. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code;

(3) that it was not open to the judgment-debtor to contract himself out of those statutory provisions or to waive their benefit; and

(4) that, therefore, the attachment of the salary and the transfer thereof were illegal and opposed to public policy.

POST MASTER GENERAL, BOMBAY v. CHENMAL.

—S. 64; O. XXI, r. 54; O. XXXVIII, r. 10—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), Secs. 40, 54, 55(4)(b)—Attachment before judgment by creditor—Agreement to sell property to third party entered into by debtor before attachment—Sale effected after attachment—Attaching creditor whether entitled to sell property in execution of his decree—Right of attaching creditor to purchase-money.

An attachment before judgment of property subject to a contract of sale merely gives the attaching creditor a right to the balance of the unpaid purchase-money and he is not entitled to bring that property to sale in satisfaction of a decree subsequently obtained by him. If the purchase-money or the balance thereof has not been paid, he can attach it in the hands of the purchaser. He would also in that case have the benefit of the vendor's lien under s. 55(4)(b) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

The holder of a money-decree had attached the immovable property of his judgment-debtor before judgment. Before attachment the judgment-debtor had agreed to sell the property to a third party who had paid a certain amount as earnest money and who was put in possession of the property. The sale was completed by a conveyance after the attachment when a further sum was paid to the judgment-debtor and the balance was retained by the purchaser to satisfy certain mortgages on the property. In a suit by the decree-holder for a declaration that the property was liable to be attached and sold in execution of his decree:—

Held, that the attaching judgment-creditor was not entitled to sell the property in execution of his decree; but that he could only attach the purchase-money or the balance thereof which has not been paid by the purchaser, or he could also have the benefit of a vendor's lien under s. 55(4)(b) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

Section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, excludes any claim of plaintiff based upon an averment that property purchased by the certified purchaser at a Court auction sale was purchased by him on his own behalf and on behalf of the plaintiff or some one through whom he claims. The section is not a bar to a claim based on a title independent of the auction purchase.

BISHUN DAYAL v. KESHO PRASAD.

—S. 73—Rateable distribution—Execution of decree against father and son, members of Hindu joint family—Sale proceeds of property held in Court—Whether judgment creditors of father can ask for rateable distribution—Construction.

A decree obtained against a father representing a joint Hindu family and a decree obtained against the father and his son constituting the joint family are not decrees obtained against "the same judgment-debtor" for the purpose of rateable distribution under s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

Applicant obtained a decree against a father and son who were members of a Hindu joint family. The opponents obtained decrees against the father alone as manager of the joint family. In execution of the applicant's decree ancestral property belonging to the father and son was sold and the amount realised was held in Court. The opponents in execution of their decrees asked for rateable distribution of the assets with the applicant :—

LAXMAN ANANT v. GOVIND RAMBHAT.

43 Bom.L.R. 695.

—Rateable distribution—"Same judgment-debtor," meaning of—Decree against judgment-debtors personally and another decree against them in representative capacity—Whether such decrees are against "same judgment-debtors."

A decree against a person individually and a decree against that person as representative of a deceased person are not decrees against "the same judgment-debtor" within the meaning of s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, so as to entitle the holders of the two decrees to rateable distribution.

The expression "the same judgment-debtors" in s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, denotes identity of individuality, and identity of character or interest. Decrees obtained against the same individual, but in different capacities may be regarded as not obtained against "the same judgment-debtor."

JAMIYATRAM v. UMIYASHANKAR.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, S. 92—Advocate-General—Counsel.

Consent of the Advocate General under s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is not necessary where a trustee sues to recover trust property in the hands of a stranger to the trust.

—Plaint, amendment of, in suit under s. 92—Amendment when permissible—Sanction of Advocate General or Collector when necessary—Amendment by Court without such sanction—Procedure under O. 1, r. 8, whether to be followed in suits under s. 92.

In suits under s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, it is for the Court to decide, as in any other suit, whether an amendment of the plaint is permissible, and the consent of the Advocate General or the Collector, as the case may be, is really evidence which has to be taken into consideration before deciding whether the amendment should be allowed. Amendments which do not substantially change the character of the suit or enlarge the scope of it may be made by the Court itself without the sanction of the Advocate General or the Collector. Amendments which enlarge the scope of the suit, for instance by allowing further reliefs, without substantially changing its character, may be made with the sanction of the Advocate General or the Collector, such sanction being evidence that the suit after amendment is to all intents and purposes the same suit and not a different one. Amendments which substantially change the character of the suit are not permissible even with the sanction of the Advocate General or the Collector.

The procedure laid down in O. 1, r. 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is not applicable to suits under s. 92 of the Code.

Proof of breach of trust or mismanagement is not essential for removal of a trustee of a charitable institution. The Court has a wide discretion under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, to take such action as it thinks necessary or desirable for the good of the charity.

A Magistrate hearing an appeal under s. 86 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, acts as a persona designata; and therefore an order passed by him under the section is not open to revision by the High Court under s. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

An application under O. XXI, r. 95, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, made by an auction-purchaser to get possession of the property of the judgment-debtor, was rejected by the trial Court on the ground that it was barred by limitation. The auction-purchaser applied in revision to the High Court under s. 115 of the Code against the order of the lower Court. On the question whether the application came within the terms of s. 115:—

Held, that the finding of the lower Court on a question of limitation, whether right or wrong, was a finding on a point of law which the Court had jurisdiction to decide and therefore it did not come within the ambit of s. 115.

The High Court has jurisdiction, under s. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to grant an injunction in personam against a person who has submitted to its jurisdiction to restrain him from proceeding with a criminal complaint in a Court which is not subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court; but the jurisdiction should be exercised with extreme caution.

Accordingly, the High Court of Bombay refused to grant an injunction in personam against a defendant, who had submitted to its jurisdiction, restraining him from proceeding with the complaint filed by him against the plaintiff in the Court of the City Magistrate at Benares, praying in effect that the defendant had no cause of action against him as regards the subject-matter of the complaint.

Under O. Where a Mahomedan brings a suit against his co-heirs for administering the property that has come to their hands, and one of the defendants, who has the same interest and is in the same position as that of the plaintiff, dies, but no application is made by the plaintiff to bring his heir on record, the suit does not come to an end by reason of abatement as against the deceased defendant.

Where in a suit for dissolution of partnership and partnership accounts, the plaintiff dies, the Court has jurisdiction, under O. —O. XXI, r. 2—Decree—Assignment of decree—Application for execution by assignee—Judgment-debtor pleading payment—Payment not certified or recorded by Court—Whether Court to which application for execution is made could recognise such payment.

Where an assignee of a decree makes an application under O. XXI, rr. 11 and 16, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to the Court passing the decree for executing it, the Court is hearing the application as an executing Court and is bound in virtue of O. XXI, r. 2(3), not to recognise payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded as required by r. 2(1)(2).

A person after obtaining a decree for maintenance assigned certain arrears of maintenance under that decree to the applicant. The applicant applied, under O. XXI, rr. 11 and 16, of the Civil Procedure Code, to the Court passing the decree to execute it. The judgment-debtor contended that the arrears of maintenance purported to have been assigned to the applicant had in fact been paid, and, therefore, there was no effective assignment. The alleged payment was, however, not certified or recorded as required by O. XXI, r. 2(1)(2):—

Held, that the Court was bound by O. XXI, r. 2(3), not to recognise the payment.

—Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), arts. 181, 182(5)—Application to record part payment of decretal debt—Whether such application a step-in-aid of execution.

An application made to the Court to record an adjustment or a part payment of a decretal debt under O. XXI, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, cannot be regarded as an application within the meaning of art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and it does not, therefore, amount to a step-in-aid of execution under art. 182(5) of the Act so as to save limitation.

The plaintiff obtained a decree on July 11, 1932. On June 30, 1935, a part payment was made by the defendants of the amount due under the decree. On September 16, 1935, the plaintiff applied to the Court under O. XXI, r. 2(1), of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to certify the part payment, and the Court acceded to the application. On November 8, 1935, the plaintiff filed a dakhast against the defendants in execution of his decree. On the question whether the application of September 16, 1935, was a step-in-aid of execution under art. 182(5) of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908:—

Held, that the application could not be regarded as an application within the meaning of art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and that, therefore, it did not amount to a step-in-aid of execution under art. 182(5) of the Act so as to save limitation.

—“Or,” interpretation of—Mortgage decree—Application by decree-holder to record adjustment—Minor judgment-debtors—Dismissal of application for want of prosecution—Execution of decree by decree-holder whether permissible.

In O. XXI, r. 2, sub-r. (3), of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, the disjunctive “or” must be read as the conjunctive “and”.

Where some of the judgment-debtors are minors, the Court, before recording an adjustment under O. XXI, r. 2(1), of the Civil Procedure Code, is bound, under O. XXXII, r. 7, of the Code, to satisfy itself that the compromise is for the benefit of the minors.

Under O. XXI, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, although the Court is not concerned to consider the merits of the adjustment, it is concerned to consider whether the arrangement to be recorded is an adjustment, that is to say, a legal adjustment. The Court is not a mere recording machine under the rule.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, O. XXI, r. 2—
(Contd.)

There is nothing in O. XXI, r. 2(1), of the Civil Procedure Code, to prevent the decree-holder withdrawing his application before it is recorded. There is nothing in the sub-rule which says that the moment a certificate is presented it becomes binding for all time and that the parties cannot change their minds and withdraw from the compromise.

Where an application for execution of a decree is made by a transferee of the decree, he has to establish his title, and he has therefore to make an application under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to the Court that passed the decree. On a notice being issued on this application, the Court has to decide whether the applicant is the person entitled to execute the decree. The extent of his right and the conditions on which the assignee may proceed with the execution are not touched by this decision; nor does the Court decide how far the decree can be executed or the objections, if any, to the decree being executed. If the notice under O. XXI, r. 16, is made absolute the transferee acquires a right to execute the decree in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as the decree-holder himself had. Any objections raised by the judgment-debtor as to the execution of the decree cannot be considered at that stage. The transferee has then to apply for execution of the decree under O. XXI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code, when the objections, if any, of the judgment-debtor will be considered.

A mortgage decree was passed by a Court in British India in favour of the plaintiff which directed that the plaintiff could get the defendant's properties sold if he was not paid certain instalments. The plaintiff was afterwards declared an insolvent by a Court of an Indian State and a receiver was appointed. The receiver then applied in his own name, to the Court in British India, to execute the mortgage decree by sale of the mortgaged property, as there was default in payment. On the question whether the "receiver" was entitled to execute the decree:—

Held, that the title of the receiver, appointed by the Court of the Indian State, to execute the decree could not be recognized by the Court in British India; and that therefore, without a proper assignment of the decree in his favour, he was not entitled to execute the decree.

—O. XXI, r. 52—Decree—Execution—Immoveable property—Custody of Court receiver—Mode of execution against property in custody of receiver—Practice and procedure.

Order XXI, r. 52, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is only a mode of attachment of property in the custody of the Court. It does not deal with the leave necessary to be obtained for proceeding under it. The rule is not limited so as to exclude immoveable property.

The words used in r. 52 are not permissive but are imperative for the judgment-creditor. The judgment-creditor has to apply for attaching the property in the hands of the receiver. He may, while making the application, put before the Court sufficient grounds to prevent the Court from making the ordinary order prescribed by the rule or limit the operation of such order to a named property or a named period. At the time of considering the judgment-creditor's application and making an order under the rule, the Court has jurisdiction to vary the terms and directions given to its officer.

The rule does not permit the judgment-creditor to proceed under O. XXI, r. 54, merely after he obtains leave to proceed to execute the

On July 11, 1932, the defendant obtained a money decree under which the decretal amount was payable at any time within six months of its date. On August 9, 1932, while the decree was still unexecutable, the defendant applied for an order of attachment of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property, and obtained the order on August 31. Thereafter the Court passed an order directing the attached property to be sold and issued notice under O. XXI, r. 66, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The process fee not having been paid, the Court dismissed the application, but allowed the attachment to continue. While the attachment was thus in force, the judgment-debtor sold a portion of the attached property to the plaintiff. The defendant having subsequently obtained an order for attachment and sale of the attached property including the property sold, the plaintiff filed a suit to obtain a declaration that the property sold to him was not liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree:—

Held, decreeing the suit, (1) that the order of dismissal of defendant's application on the score of non-payment of process-fees as well as of non-prosecution should be deemed to be an order passed under O. XXI, r. 57, with the result that as soon as the application was dismissed the attachment came to an end;

(2) that there having been no review or appeal from the order of dismissal the order, though passed by the Court under a misapprehension, was still a binding order and should be taken to be an order under O. XXI, r. 57;

(3) that on the principle of constructive res judicata, which applied to execution proceedings, the order should be regarded as binding on the defendant in the second application;

(4) that therefore, in spite of the order of the Court continuing the attachment, there was no legal and valid attachment after the date of the order, and the plaintiff purchased the property free from any attachment;

(5) that the defendant should have applied to the executing Court and filed an application for an order of attachment even before the decree became executable, but he having allowed the dismissal of his application had to abide by the consequences of it.

A, being in debt, assigned his immovables to his brother, B, in 1923, by a deed, reserving only a maintenance allowance to himself. In 1928 an execution application was made in respect of a money decree passed in 1926 in favour of C against A. B was added to the application as a "judgment-debtor" although no judgment had ever been obtained by C against him. Part of the estate having been attached in execution of C's decree, B applied for releasing the properties from attachment both under O. XXI, r. 58, and s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, on the ground that he was no party to the decree and that there was no charge on the attached properties for the decretal debt. The trial Judge held that B was a representative of A within the meaning of s. 47 of the Code, and that by virtue of s. 146 the decree could be executed against him as representing A. He eventually dismissed both the applications. However, on the day of the Judge's order a compromise petition was filed in the Court, by which B undertook to pay C the sum due by way of an immediate cash payment and the balance by fixed annual instalments. The instalments not having been paid as agreed, C applied for execution, B again being cited as judgment-debtor. Part of the estate was again attached and then sold. A month after the sale B applied under O. XXI, r. 90, of the Civil Procedure Code, to have the sale set aside, alleging irregularities as to notice in connection with the sale. The trial Judge held that the sale was without jurisdiction because the compromise deed was unenforceable in execution against B in the absence of any decree against him. The High Court on appeal confirmed the sale and held that the trial Judge's decision in the first execution application that B was a representative of A, the judgment-debtor, concluded the case against B on the principle of res judicata. On appeal to the Privy Council:—

Held, confirming the sale, that the application of B under O. XXI, r. 90, of the Civil Procedure Code, was misconceived, since an application based on the allegation that the properties had been wrongfully sold in execution must be made under O. XXI, r. 58, of the Code, and not under O. XXI, r. 90, of the Code, which was concerned with irregularities in publishing or conducting the sale.

Quare. Whether an application under O. XXI, r. 58, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, made one month after the sale would be in time.

Interpretation.

The appellant was declared insolvent after he had filed an appeal against a money decree passed against him. The respondent applied for an order dismissing the appeal under O. XXII, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, contending that by reason of the insolvency of the appellant the appeal abated:—

Held, that the words "might maintain" in O. XXII, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, meant that the Official Assignee had the power or was entitled to maintain the appeal; and that as in the present case the Official Assignee could not maintain such an appeal, the appeal did not abate.

—O. XXIII, r. 1—Suit—Withdrawal—Permission to file fresh suit—Such permission terminates the suit—Procedure when permission asked for.

Where the plaintiff, under O. XXIII, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, simply wishes to withdraw from a suit, he can do so without asking for any permission from the Court. Where, however, he wishes to withdraw it with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter, he should ask for permission from the Court, which could be given on such terms as it thinks fit. The permission relates not to the withdrawal from the suit but to the filing of another suit.

When once an order is made permitting the withdrawal of a suit on certain conditions, it is not open to the plaintiff to ask the Court to modify or annul those conditions, because the suit has already ended when the order is made.

In applying for withdrawal of a suit, the plaintiff should request the Court to acquaint him with the terms which it wishes to impose, before the final order is made. It is also open to the Court without any such request to indicate such terms to the plaintiff, and after hearing the plaintiff it may modify them or even allow him to withdraw his application for withdrawal and proceed with the suit. All this, however, must be done before the order of withdrawal is formally made.

of application without obtaining permission to file suit—Whether such withdrawal bars suit to enforce award—Application to file award and suit to enforce award whether amount to proceedings in same subject-matter.

Defendant executed a promissory note in favour of the plaintiff on June 12, 1933. There was a reference to arbitration in 1935 without the intervention of Court and an award was made. The plaintiff made an application to the Court to file the award under para. 20 of the second schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The application was registered as a suit. Subsequently he applied for permission to withdraw his application which was granted. He filed a fresh suit on October 28, 1936, against the defendant to enforce the award or in the alternative to recover the amount due on the promissory note. The defendant contended that the application to file the award was a suit under para. 20, second schedule, of the Civil Procedure Code, and as no permission to file a fresh suit was obtained from the Court when the application was withdrawn, the suit was barred under O. XXIII, r. 1:—

Held, that the plaintiff's failure to obtain the leave of the Court to bring a suit was not fatal to his suit;

that it was not material whether the application to file the award was to be regarded as a suit within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 1, or not, because the rule was essentially a rule of procedure and was applicable under s. 141, Civil Procedure Code;

that if the word 'suit' in O. XXIII, r. 1, means an application to file an award, it must have that meaning wherever it occurs in that rule;

that O. XXIII, r. 1, could not be construed to mean that the withdrawal of the application to file the award without liberty reserved was a bar to the institution of the suit;

that, even if the withdrawal of the application to file the award without liberty to apply barred the suit, it would only be a suit on the same subject-matter, but the application to file the award and the suit to enforce the award were proceedings not in respect of the same subject-matter;

that the plaintiff's claim for relief on the promissory note apart from the award was not on the same subject-matter and could be enforced.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, O. XXXIV, r. 6
—Personal decree—Mortgagee of leasehold—Whether privity of estate or privity of contract between such mortgagee and lessor.

In the case of mortgage of leasehold interest, as between the lessor and the mortgagee of the leasehold interest from the lessee, there is neither a privity of estate such as to render the latter liable for the burdens of the lease, nor is there a privity of contract between them in respect of the rent and lessee's covenants, irrespective of the fact that the mortgagee has entered into possession of the mortgaged property.

Where, therefore, the lease creates a charge on the lessee's interest in the leasehold property for payment of rent or other obligations and in pursuance of such charge the leasehold property is sold and the sale proceeds are not sufficient to satisfy the claim of the lessor, the lessor cannot apply for a personal decree against such a mortgagee for any deficit under O. The words "not subject to appeal" in O. XLVI, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, mean that the law provides no appeal in any circumstances. They include a case in which it can be said that there might have been an appeal from the decree passed by the High Court, although it was extremely unlikely that there should have been one.

The words "any such decree" in the rule mean either (a) a decree in a suit where no appeal is provided against the decree, or (b) a decree in an appeal where no further appeal is provided.

NISAR AHMAD KHAN v. MOHAN.

COMMON EMPLOYMENT—Whether the doctrine applies to India.

The basis of the doctrine of common employment is the implied contract by the servant to accept the risk of his fellow servants' negligence; and if that contract is to be implied, the servants must be engaged in common work, that is work which necessarily and naturally or in the normal course involves juxtaposition, local or causal, of the fellow employees, and exposure to the risk of the negligence of the one affecting the other. Difference in grade and responsibility does not exclude the doctrine so long as the nexus exists.

Quere. Whether the doctrine of common employment is part of the law of India.

Questions have been raised whether a doctrine so unsatisfactory, both as to its policy and as to its practical results ought to be followed at all or at any rate without qualifications by the Indian Courts as a part of the law of India, particularly when in England it has been qualified and largely abrogated by legislation which has no counterpart in India.

COMPANIES ACT (VII of 1913), S. 73—
Company—Name-board of company—Business premises or office of company—Place where name-board can be affixed.

The words "outside the office or place where the business is carried on" in s. 73(a) of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, do not mean outside the premises. The section has nothing to do with advertising the whereabouts of a company or affording facilities to members of the public in finding its place of business. The requirements of the section will be satisfied if a company affixes a board of the necessary conspicuousness and legibility outside the office room though it be inside the building.

Hence, where the office of a company is situated in a building within a compound, it is not necessary that the name of the company should be painted or affixed outside the compound as well as the building. It is sufficient for the requirements of s. 73(a) if the board of the company is affixed outside the office in the building.

CONTRACT, construction—Literal and grammatical construction of two provisions lead to inconsistencies—One provision susceptible of possible construction different from its literal meaning—Possible construction removes inconsistency—Adoption of such construction—Court not to speculate as to reasons why particular language was used in contract.

Where in a document there is an apparent inconsistency according to the literal construction of the words used, if by any other reasonably possible construction the apparent inconsistencies can be reconciled, that construction should be adopted.

It is not for a Court to speculate as to the reasons which may have dictated the employment of the language used in a contract.

A clause in an agreement contained two provisions which, if construed according to their literal and grammatical meaning, were inconsistent with each other. But of the two inconsistent provisions one was susceptible of a possible construction different from its literal meaning, while the other was not; and if the possible construction was applied all inconsistency disappeared:—

Held, on the true construction of the clause, that the possible construction should be adopted.

A guarantor is entitled to have the debt of the principal debtor proved as against him, before he is made liable for the debt. The fact that the principal debtor has admitted the debt, or that a judgment or award has been given against him for the debt, does not bind the guarantor, unless he was a party to the admission of the principal debtor, or was party to the proceedings in which the judgment or the award was given.

The liability of a guarantor must depend on the true construction of the guarantee which he has given. If the guarantor merely guarantees payment of the debt of the principal debtor, then he is entitled to require the debt to be proved as against him in accordance with the ordinary law. If, on the other hand, the principal debtor has agreed that as against him the debt shall be proved in a particular way, and the guarantor has guaranteed the debt so to be proved, then there can be no doubt that the guarantor would be bound by the particular method of proof agreed to by the principal debtor and accepted by himself. *SREE MEENAKSHI MILLS, LD. v. tions for brief—Mode of reckoning fees for hours of attendance—Whether mid-day adjournment to be reckoned as attendance in Court—Refreshers in chamber summons adjourned into Court—Discretion of Taxing Master to allow additional brief fee—Taxing Master not asked to increase brief fee—Whether Court has power to do so.

In the Rules of the High Court of Bombay, 1936, item 14 of the "Table of Fees to be taken by the Attorneys", which relates to "instructions for brief", is not confined either to suits or to matters in Court. The wording of the item does not draw a distinction between chamber matters and matters heard in Court. The essential thing is that there should be a final trial of a suit or matter. The words "final trial" are not confined to a final trial of a suit. The Taxing Master has, therefore, jurisdiction to allow a sum as an item of instructions for brief on a chamber summons which originated in chambers but was adjourned to be heard in Court.

The Court normally does not interfere with the discretion of the Taxing Master as to the quantum of costs allowed, unless he has misdirected himself or not properly exercised the discretion vested in him. If the Taxing Master takes into account merely the length of time occupied by the hearing in assessing fee for "instructions for brief", or attaches undue importance to it, he misdirects himself. The words "instructions for brief" do not mean the same thing as "instructions for counsel." Instructions given orally to counsel in the course of hearing cannot be included in "instructions for brief."

It is open to the Taxing Master in his discretion to allow an additional brief fee, if he thinks that for some reason or another the solicitor has not been able to calculate and has not, in fact, correctly calculated, the length of time the case was likely to last.

On a review of taxation no increase of charges are allowed over those charged in a bill of costs.

Where the Taxing Master has not been asked to allow additional brief fee, having regard to the unexpected length of time the case has taken, and where no application is made to the chamber Judge to have the matter sent down to the Taxing Master to consider whether an extra allowance should not be made, the Appeal Court will not increase the fee or ask the Taxing Master to do so.

Where a suit for account, in which the claim is valued at an arbitrary figure, results in a decree for a sum of money, the party appealing from the decree should value the claim in appeal at the amount of the decree, and not at the arbitrary figure, for purposes of paying the court-fees.

Where on a preliminary objection taken at the hearing of an appeal, the Court orders payment of additional court-fees on the memorandum of appeal, and the appeal is rejected for non-payment of such fees, the respondent is entitled to payment of his costs of the hearing of the preliminary objection. Such costs should be taxed at Rs. 30 under r. 130 of the Bombay High Court, Appellate Side, Rules.

Where a memorandum of appeal is rejected for non-payment of court-fees, the cross-objections filed in the appeal fail with the appeal.

—S. 289—Trial by jury—No evidence against accused—Direction by Judge to jury—Acquittal of accused.

In a case tried by a jury if the Judge comes to the conclusion that there is no evidence to go to the jury, it is the duty of the Judge to direct the jury that in law they must acquit.

It is the function of the jury to determine whether the evidence is true, and if the Judge thinks that the prosecution evidence, if true, will lead to a conviction, then he is bound to leave the case to the jury. He may think that the prosecution story is inherently improbable, that the evidence is discrepant, and that it is of a class which is generally unreliable; but if he thinks that though weak the evidence if true will justify a conviction, he must leave the case to the jury, cautioning them about the weak points in the evidence.

If, however, the Judge, after the prosecution case is closed, comes to the conclusion that, assuming that the jury believe every word of the prosecution evidence, nevertheless they will not be justified in convicting, then he is bound in law to say so and to direct the jury that in law they must bring in a verdict of not guilty, and he ought not in such a case to leave the matter to the jury.

—Trial by jury—No evidence against accused—Duty of Judge—Withdrawal of case from jury.

Section 289 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, provides that if the Court considers that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence, it may, in a case tried by a jury, direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. It confers in terms a discretion on the Judge—a discretion which must be exercised judicially. Where the Judge is satisfied that there is no evidence to go to the jury, he must in his discretion withdraw the case from the jury, or, in other words, direct them to return a verdict of not guilty. The question whether there is any evidence to go before the jury is a question of law.

If the Judge is of opinion that the evidence led for the prosecution is very weak, that there are discrepancies in it, that it is of a type usually found to be unreliable, and that the story is inherently improbable, he is bound to bring such defects to the attention of the jury.

Where, however, the evidence is such that if it is believed by the jury, it must lead to a conviction, the Judge is bound to leave the question to the jury, because it is for them to decide whether the evidence is to be believed or not. If the Judge comes to the conclusion that, assuming that the jury believes the whole of the evidence placed before them, in law they cannot convict the accused, then he is bound to hold that there is no evidence to be placed before the jury, and he is bound to direct them in law to return a verdict of not guilty.

The object of s. 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, is to avoid vagrancy by providing that a Magistrate may up to a limited extent see that a wife and children are maintained by a husband or father able to maintain them.

Where a Magistrate finds that the husband and wife are living apart and the children are living with the wife and the father refuses or neglects to maintain the children where they are living, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to make an order for the maintenance of the children under s. 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898. If the father's case is that the children ought not to be living with the wife, but ought to be living with him or under his direction, then he must take proper proceedings in a civil Court to get the children removed from the custody of the mother, and although such proceedings may sometimes involve expense which a father is unable or unwilling to bear, that cannot deprive the Magistrate of the right to exercise his powers under s. 488. If the civil Court makes an order under which the children cease to reside with the mother, and if the father is then willing to provide for their maintenance, he can then apply to the Magistrate, under s. 489 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to modify his previous order.

ty to the complainant. The accused having applied in revision against the order:—

Held, setting aside the order, (1) that it was not justified under s. 516A of the Code, inasmuch as the Magistrate having referred the complaint to the police for investigation, it could hardly be said that an offence appeared to the Magistrate to have been committed at the date of the order;

(2) that the order went outside the scope of the section, for the power of the Magistrate to make an order was limited to property which was produced before him;

(3) that the order was bad for the reason that at its date there was no inquiry or trial pending before the Magistrate.

Circumstances of urgency may necessitate the passing of ex parte orders under s. 516A, but orders passed in that way can only be interim orders subject to vacation, variation or confirmation, after hearing the parties concerned.

There is a common law right of a person to take inspection of a document in which that person is interested, for the protection of such interest.

Except as controlled by any rule made by the High Court under s. 554 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, a Magistrate or a Judge of a subordinate Court has a discretion to allow inspection of the record of his Court. Such discretion must be exercised judicially. In exercising his discretion the Magistrate or the Judge will be bound to have regard to the terms of s. 548, and it will generally be improper for him to refuse inspection of any document of which a party is entitled to a certified copy under the section.

The right to a certified copy pre-supposes a right of inspection, because a party cannot be expected to make up his mind whether he wants to have a copy of a document, if he is not entitled in the first place to read it, and see what it is about. Therefore, under s. 548 of the Code a party has prima facie an implied right to ask the presiding Magistrate or Judge to allow him inspection of the record referred to in the section.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE, S. 548—

Whatever meaning be assigned to the expression "papers exhibited in the proceedings" used in Criminal Circular No. 160A issued by the High Court under s. 554 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it does not deprive the Court of the right which it previously enjoyed of granting inspection of the whole record to a party properly entitled thereto.

Under the customary law applicable to the Mahomedan Tulla clan resident in the Shahpur district in the Punjab, collaterals of the tenth degree of a deceased landowner do not take precedence over his married daughters in succession to his non-ancestral estate.

The English rule that "a custom, in order that it may be legal and binding, must have been used so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary" does not apply to conditions in India. A custom observed in a particular district derives its force from the fact that it has, from long usage, obtained in that district the force of law. It must be ancient, but it is not of the essence of this rule that its antiquity must in every case be carried back to a period beyond the memory of man. It will depend upon the circumstances of each case what antiquity must be established before the custom can be accepted. What is necessary to be proved is that the usage has been acted upon in practice for such a long period and with such invariability as to show that it has, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular district.

A money decree passed by consent directed the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the amount of Rs. 9,000 by yearly instalments of Rs. 2,000 each, and made the whole amount payable on default of payment of two instalments. It further gave a charge in favour of the plaintiff for the decretal amount on certain shares belonging to the defendant, and provided: "If defendant fails to pay money in time, the same should be recovered by sale of the said shares." The defendant having failed to pay two instalments on their due dates, the plaintiff had the shares sold and realised Rs. 4,350. The plaintiff next applied to execute the decree for the balance by attachment and sale of a house belonging to the defendant. The defendant contended, first, that the plaintiff having taken a charge on specific shares, had abandoned his right to recover the money by any other means, and alternatively, that even if he had such right, he should first of all proceed to get a personal decree for payment:—

Held, in construing the decree, that the plaintiff having failed to realise the whole amount of his debt by sale of the charged shares could proceed under the decree to attach any other property of the judgment-debtor which might be available.

DEFAMATION, libel by newspaper—Publication of disparaging statement in newspaper regarding profession and work of a person—Criticism by journalist—Criticism must be fair—Publication of matter of public interest—How far privileged—Imputation of criminal offence—Distinct charge of offence necessary—Mere suspicion not sufficient.

A statement which, being published of another in the way of his lawful trade, business, calling, or office, conveys a reflection on him calculated to disparage or injure him therein, is a defamatory statement, even though it may not be calculated to hold him up to hatred, contempt, or ridicule.

To publish in a newspaper of a woman, who is an instructress in physical culture and dancing, and who also runs an industrial institution for poor Parsi girls, that she is unfit to carry on her profession or work, and that by carrying it on she would be in a position to ruin the future of the girls taking their training in her classes, is a gross libel.

Newspapers are subject to the same rules as other critics, and have no special right or privilege, and in spite of the latitude allowed to them, they have no special right to make unfair comments, or to make imputations upon a person's character, or imputations upon or in respect of a person's profession or calling.

The range of a Journalist's criticisms or comments is as wide as that of any other subject, and no wider.

Even if in a sense newspapers owe a duty to their readers to publish any and every item of news that may interest them, this is not such a duty as makes every communication in the paper relating to a matter of public interest a privileged one.

Any person, whether he is a private individual or a public journalist, has a right to hold any views he pleases on any subject of public interest and to express the same. It is immaterial whether the opinion or the comment is correct or not correct, whether it is just or unjust, or whether it is couched in language which may not err on the side of moderation. What is material and important is that the comment must not go beyond the limits which the law calls "fair."

An imputation of a criminal offence in order to be actionable per se must be a distinct charge and must not be a mere statement of suspicion. It may be made in so many words, or it may be made in words from which the charge could be inferred, but the inference must be clear and unequivocal.

Offences under the Defence of India Rules, 1939, r. 6, differ very much in their gravity and they should not be dealt with by any rule-of-thumb sentence. If there is any reason for supposing that a man has entered a prohibited area with a view to obtaining information which might be useful to an enemy, he would deserve a severe sentence. Similarly if a man has entered a prohibited area knowing full well that it is prohibited, having climbed over a fence or eluded a sentry or done something of that sort, he would deserve a more severe sentence; but a man who has entered a prohibited area without appreciating that it is such an area should not be dealt with so severely.

to Bombay and cashed the draft. While boarding a steamer bound for the Persian Gulf but which was to stay for a day at Karachi, the accused, who did not know English or any Indian language, was searched by a Preventive Officer and a sum of Rs. 8,900 in currency notes was found on his person. On these facts the accused was charged and convicted under r. 90B(7) of the Defence of India Rules, 1939, for contravening the provisions of r. 90B(3) (a) and the Magistrate on conviction ordered the sum of Rs. 8,900 "to be confiscated and held subject to the orders of the Government of India." On appeal:—

Held, (1) that the conviction of the accused was improper, for it was a condition precedent to liability under sub-r. (3) (a) of r. 90B, that the Officer of Customs should "order" a traveller to declare with full details the money and gold which he had with him, and there was no evidence of such a request, much less of an order;

(2) that the Customs Officer was entitled only to seize the currency notes in excess of Rs. 1,000, which amount, under the order made by the Reserve Bank of India under sub-r. (2) of r. 90B, the accused could take or send out of British India;

(3) that as by virtue of s. 3 of the Defence of India Act, 1939, r. 90B(6) prevailed over s. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, the balance of the money, viz., Rs. 7,900, was properly seized by the customs authority and under that sub-rule became subject to the orders of the Government of India; and that that sum never became subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, either of the trying Magistrate or of the High Court on appeal, to make any order as to the disposal of that sum.

In a suit for redemption under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, it is necessary for the plaintiff when claiming the benefit of s. 10A of the Act to prove that he was an agriculturist at the date of the suit and not merely that the person through whom he

—S. 22—Decree—Execution—Immoveable property—Attachment and sale—Status of agriculturist—When can such status be pleaded—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sec. 51.

Under s. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, in cases where there is not a single order for attachment and sale in execution of a decree, but there is an order for attachment alone intended to be followed by an order for sale, it is open to the judgment-debtor to set up his status of an agriculturist both when an order for attachment is sought, and also subsequently on the application for an order for sale.

The expression "belonging to", used in the section, not being a term of art refers to the beneficial title, and the question which has to be determined under the section is whether at the critical moment the party to whom the property belongs beneficially is an agriculturist. Under cl. 10 of the Letters Patent, 1865, the High Court is empowered to remove or suspend from practice an advocate or attorney on "reasonable cause". A wide discretion is given to the High Court in regard to the exercise of disciplinary jurisdiction by the use of the words "reasonable cause".

"Reasonable cause" means professional or other misconduct under s. 10 of the Bar Councils Act, 1926. "Misconduct" is a wide expression and it is not necessary that it should involve moral turpitude. Any conduct which in any way renders a man unfit for the exercise of his profession or is likely to hamper or embarrass the administration of justice by the High Court, or any of the Courts subordinate thereto, amounts to "misconduct".

The High Court has power to remove an advocate or attorney if he is unfit to be entrusted with a professional status and character. If an attorney is found guilty of moral delinquency in his private character, he is liable to be struck off the roll.

An attorney of the High Court sent two notices, under s. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to a Judge of the Small Cause Court, Bombay, alleging that the Judge had acted with prejudice, bias, and malice, in the course of his judicial duties, that he decided a case in which the attorney figured as a witness not according to his own convictions but to please somebody else, and that the remarks made by him in respect of the evidence of the attorney were false, unjustified, malicious and irrelevant, and that in passing those remarks he did not act honestly, judicially, or in good faith. On a petition presented by the Advocate General for taking disciplinary action against the attorney:—

Held, (1) that the fact that the allegations were contained in notices under s. 80, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, did not prevent them from being contempt of Court;

(2) that the Court had to consider the conduct of the attorney as it affected his position as an attorney and his relations to the Court; and

(3) that the conduct of the attorney in writing the notices to the Judge amounted to a reasonable cause for taking disciplinary action against him under cl. 10 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

DISTRESS—Suit to recover damages for abuse of legal process—Essentials for such suit—Termination of proceedings in plaintiff's favour—Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), Secs. 53, 60—Distress warrant—Distraint of tenant's property—Release of distraint on payment of rent—Termination of proceedings, not in tenant's favour.

To succeed in an action to recover damages for the abuse of civil proceedings e.g. the wrongful issue of a distress warrant, the plaintiff has to allege and prove that the defendant acted without reasonable and probable cause and maliciously. In certain classes of cases the plaintiff has also to prove that the proceedings have come to a proper or legal end, that is, terminated in his favour. This is not necessary if from the nature of the proceedings they are incapable of so terminating.

Hence where a landlord distrains property belonging to his tenant for non-payment of rent due under a distress warrant duly issued under the provisions of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, and afterwards releases the distrained property on payment of the rent due, but the tenant has taken no steps to have the warrant discharged by the Court from which it issued, the proceedings cannot be regarded as having terminated in his favour so as to sustain an action for damages against the landlord.

Under s. 53 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, it is competent to the landlord to apply for the issue of a distress warrant even if the rent in arrears is for one month only.

An application to discharge or suspend a distress warrant, under s. 60 of the Act, is generally made on the ground, (1) that the debtor is not justly indebted for the rent claimed from him, or (2) that the rent claimed is excessive, or (3) that it has not become due or payable, or (4) that it is not due and payable for the period for which it is claimed.

There can be no cause of action in respect of the doing of a legal act even if it is done

Rule 40A of the Indian Electricity Rules, 1922, provided that no electrical installation should be carried out upon the premises of a consumer or owner except by an electrical contractor licensed by the Provincial Government and under the direct supervision of a person holding a certificate of competency issued by the Provincial Government, but reserved to the Provincial Government power to exempt any work or specified class of consumers or owners from the operation of the rule. Accordingly by a notification issued on November 15, 1934, the Provincial Government exempted from the operation of the rule all electric supply companies in so far as "their own works" were concerned. Rule 40A was superseded by the Indian Electricity Rules, 1937, on March 27, 1937, but the corresponding new r. 48 did not come into force till March 22, 1938.

The accused, who was a licensee and proprietor of an electric supply company at Ilkal, and who held a certificate of competency issued by the Provincial Government but not an electrical contractor's license, carried out, in February and early in March, 1938, small installation works on the premises of half a dozen inhabitants of Ilkal, at the expense of the supply company, the light points, switches etc. remaining the property of the company, for which he was charged with a breach of r. 48 of the Indian Electricity Rules, 1937:—

Held, acquitting the accused, (1) that he had committed no breach of r. 48 of the Indian Electricity Rules of 1937, for it was not in force at the time the offences were alleged to have been committed;

(2) that the old r. 40A could not be deemed to have remained in force till the new r. 48 was promulgated under s. 24 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, because the notification by which the new rules of 1937 were introduced expressly stated that they were in supersession of the rules of 1922;

(3) that s. 24 of the General Clauses Act came into operation only where a Central Act or Regulation had been repealed and re-enacted, and neither the Act or Regulation included a rule made under an Act;

(4) that, even assuming that r. 40A applied, the accused was protected by the notification of 1934, inasmuch as he was one of the "Electric Supply Companies" doing "their own works";

(5) that the words "their own works" in the notification did not mean "such works when carried out on their own premises";

(6) that by the word "works" was meant the kind of works referred to in the rule and not the kind of works referred to in the definition of the term as given in s. 2(n) of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910;

(7) that the words "their own works" meant works carried out by the exempted bodies themselves, or perhaps works belonging to them;

(8) that since the notification applied to installation works the works carried out by the accused were fairly included in the expression "their own works."

It is usually a sound rule of construction to give the same meaning to words used in rules made under an Act as the words have in the Act itself.

A custom observed in a particular district derives its force from the fact that it has, from long usage, obtained in that district the force of law. It must be ancient, but it is not of the essence of this rule that its antiquity must in every case be carried back to a period beyond the memory of man. It will depend upon the circumstances of each case what antiquity must be established before the custom can be accepted. What is necessary to be proved is that the usage has been acted upon in practice for such a long period and with such invariability as to show that it has, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular district.

The Indian Evidence Act, 1872, being a statute which purports to contain the whole law of evidence applicable in India, is imperative. It is, therefore, not open to a Judge to exercise a dispensing power to admit evidence inadmissible by virtue of the Act because it appears to him that the irregular evidence will throw light upon an issue being determined. The principles of exclusion of evidence adopted by the Act must be applied strictly and cannot be relaxed at the discretion of the Court.

against another not relevant if made after termination of conspiracy.

The evidence of a conspirator is admissible against his co-conspirator on the principle that the thing done, written or spoken was something done in carrying out the conspiracy and was receivable as a step in the proof of the conspiracy. The words written or spoken may be a declaration accompanying an act and indicating the quality of the act as being an act in the course of the conspiracy; or the words written or spoken may in themselves be acts done in the course of the conspiracy.

The words of s. 10 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, must be construed in accordance with the above principle, and are not capable of being widely construed so as to include a statement made by one conspirator in the absence of the other with reference to past acts done in the actual course of carrying out the conspiracy, after it has been completed. The common intention is in the past.

The words "common intention" in s. 10 signify a common intention existing at the time when the thing was said, done or written by one of them. Things said, done or written while the conspiracy was on foot are relevant as evidence of the common intention, once reasonable ground has been shown to believe in its existence. Hence, any narrative or statement or confession made to a third party after the common intention or conspiracy was no longer operating and had ceased to exist is not admissible against the other party. There is then no common intention of the conspirators to which the statement can have reference.

There is a distinction between communications between conspirators while the conspiracy was going on with reference to the carrying out of the conspiracy and statements made after arrest or after the conspiracy has ended, by way of description of events then past.

Section 105 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, is a general provision which imposes the burden of bringing himself within an exception upon the person who relies upon the exception; and there is no distinction between a case in which the exception is contained in the body of the statute imposing the prohibition and a case in which it is not so included.

Hence, the accused who relies upon the permission given to him by sub-s. (5) of s. 123 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, has the burden cast upon him to prove that he comes within the terms of the sub-section and is thereby relieved of the liability which is otherwise upon him under sub-s. Illustration (a) to s. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, directs that the Court may presume that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession. The question, what period is covered by the expression "soon after", depends upon the circumstances of each case. The Court is not bound to draw this presumption, and it must always ask itself whether in the circumstances of the particular case the presumption is one which in fairness to the accused can be drawn. When one is dealing with property of some value, and it is very unlikely that the man, from whom the accused got it, had come by it honestly, or when one is dealing with property stolen in a village where there are not likely to be many dealings in it, the presumption may be drawn more readily than in the case of a theft in a big city.

Hence where an old brass bell stolen in the city of Bombay was found in the possession of an old iron dealer in the city thirteen days after the theft, the presumption under s. 114, ill. (a), was not drawn.

It is not open to a Magistrate to convict an accused who pleads not guilty on his own statement. It is for the prosecution to prove their own case.

on a particular point and do not want to waste the time of the Court by examining-in-chief a witness who was examined in the lower Court, they may tender him for cross-examination. But before doing that the witness ought to be asked by the prosecution, with the consent of the pleader for the accused and the leave of the Judge, whether his evidence in the lower Court is true. If he gives a general answer as to the truth of his evidence in the lower Court, he can be cross-examined on that. But he must in some way be examined-in-chief before he can be cross-examined. A Court will not allow itself to be used as an instrument of fraud, and by the application of rules of evidence or procedure it will not allow its eyes to be closed to the fact that it is being used as an instrument of fraud. Once the Court finds that the plaintiff is seeking its assistance to enable him to get the benefit of what is a fraud, it refuses to assist him. If, as a result of such refusal, the defendant is left in possession of some advantage derived from the common fraud of the plaintiff as well as the defendant, that is not due to any action on the part of the Court, but on the principle that the Court will not assist either party to the fraud.

Where a plaintiff is relying upon a deed, the defendant is entitled to give evidence of the circumstances under which it came into exist-

tence. When those circumstances include an allegation of a joint fraud by both the plaintiff and the defendant, the particulars of that fraud must be pleaded. The duty of the Court then is to look into the matter, and if it comes to the conclusion that the parties were acting together with a view to perpetrate a fraud, and did in fact perpetrate that fraud, and that there is no difference in the degree of guilt of the plaintiff and that of the defendant, it will not assist either party. It is the Court's duty to dismiss the plaintiff's claim because it knows that it has before it two persons equally guilty of fraud and it will not assist either of them.

Per Divatia J.—The law on the subject of fraud by plaintiff and by defendant can be summarized as follows:—

I. In all cases of unilateral or bilateral fraud which has not been successfully effected, either party can repudiate the fraudulent transaction and can recover or maintain his possession by proving his real title.

II. In cases where fraud is accomplished—

(1) Where only one party acts fraudulently, he cannot be allowed, either as plaintiff or as defendant, to plead his fraud, on the principle that no man shall be heard to plead his own fraud;

(2) Where both parties are equally fraudulent, the Court will refuse to enforce the fraudulent transaction on the principles that where each party is equal in fault, the law favours him who is actually in possession, and will give relief to neither, and that a right of action cannot arise out of fraud, with the result that—

(a) where the plaintiff seeks relief on the allegation and on the basis of joint fraud, his suit will be dismissed; and

(b) where he seeks relief by suppressing the fraud, the defendant can plead and prove the common fraud to defeat the plaintiff's claim.

Plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain lands from the defendants alleging that he had purchased them from the defendants and had leased them for cultivation to the defendants who refused to deliver possession. The defendants contended that the sale-deed was passed without consideration, that the transaction was part of a fraudulent attempt to defeat their creditor who sought to attach the lands in execution of his decree, that the plaintiff was a benamidar and party to the fraud perpetrated on the creditor, and that he could not take advantage of it:—

Held, dismissing the suit, that it was a fraud for the plaintiff to claim beneficial title under a deed in respect of which he was a mere benamidar, and that the defendants were entitled to prove the benami nature of the transaction, even though in doing so they might have to rely on their own fraud.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1935, S. 205

—Object of—Construction of—Whether High Court has to consider question of certificate in every case or only in cases where question of interpretation of the Act or any Order in Council arises—Direct appeal to Privy Council from High Court decree whether barred where question of certificate not considered by High Court and no certificate given—Question of certificate preferably to be considered by same bench that gave decision—Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 10—Profits made by sale of securities at enhanced value, whether taxable—Profits on sale of securities by bank to meet withdrawals by depositors whether taxable—Proof of separate business in buying and selling securities whether essential.

The object of s. 205, Government of India Act, 1935, is to ensure that in every proceeding where a judgment, decree or final order is made by any High Court in British India which involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Act or any Order in Council made thereunder, the appeal, if any, that is the direct appeal, shall lie to the Federal Court. The word 'direct' is used because s. 208 makes provision for an appeal in such a case on certain conditions from a decision of the Federal Court to His Majesty in Council. The section does not provide for a case where no such certificate is given, however plain it may be that it ought to have been given. There is no provision, express or implied, taking away from His Majesty in Council the right to entertain a 'direct appeal' in such case, and a fortiori there is nothing taking away the right of direct appeal to His Majesty in Council in a case where no substantial question of law of the character specified in the section could by any reasonable possibility arise.

The language in the latter part of sub-s. (1) of s. 205 is of a very comprehensive kind and is directory. It imposes duty on the Judges of the High Court for the purpose of ensuring that, if the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act or any Order in Council, the High Court will carry out the intention of the section by giving a certificate which will ensure that the appeal, if any, shall be to the Federal Court; but there is no condition precedent imposed on an appeal to His Majesty in Council in the absence of a certificate. The duty imposed on the Judges by words of a directory character is one which arises only in a case where there is some reasonable ground for thinking that a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act or any Order in Council may be involved.

S. 205—(Contd.)

In construing s. 205, first, no question of the jurisdiction of His Majesty in Council can arise unless there is a certificate, in which case the direct appeal lies to the Federal Court; secondly, if in the absence of a certificate it appears to the Board on an appeal that there is ground for thinking that there is a matter for the consideration of the High Court and that they ought to have given or to have withheld a certificate, the Board ought to decline to hear the appeal until the High Court have had an opportunity of doing one or the other; thirdly, the cases dealt with by the section are cases where there is a reasonable possibility that a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act or any Order in Council may arise, and the duty is imposed on the Judges of the High Court only in those cases.

Where s. 205 is applicable, it is the duty of the High Court to record a determination to withhold a certificate if it thinks that that is the right course. Preferably that should be done by the Judges who have heard the case, but it is not essential in every case and may sometimes be impossible.

—Appeal—Federal Court—Certificate to appeal—"Judgment, decree or final order"—"Substantial question of law"—Such question must arise directly—Remote possibility of question arising not enough—Opinion of High Court obiter—Reference to High Court—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Sec. 432.

An order made by the High Court, under s. 432 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, merely answering a question raised by a Presidency Magistrate and expressing an opinion on a question of law, is not a final order within the meaning of s. 205 of the Government of India Act, 1935.

A mere possibility of "a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of" the Government of India Act, 1935, arising in a remote contingency is not enough to justify the granting of a certificate under s. 205 of the Act.

On a reference made by a Presidency Magistrate, under s. 432 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, two questions arose, first, whether the Bombay Abkari Amendment Act, 1939, was ultra vires the Bombay Legislature, as being beyond its scope by virtue of the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935; and, secondly, whether a certain notification issued under the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, was revived by the Amending Act of 1939. The High Court disposed of the reference by answering the second question; but only expressed an opinion obiter on the first question. The Magistrate following the answer returned by the High Court on the second question acquitted the accused. The Government of Bombay appealed and the acquittal was upheld by the High Court. The Government of Bombay then applied for a certificate to appeal to the Federal Court of India under s. 205 of the Government of India Act, 1935, on the ground that the case involved a substantial question of law on the interpretation of that Act:—

Held, (1) that the answer given by the High Court on the second question in the reference was not a "final order" for the purpose of s. 205 of the Act;

(2) that the order passed by the High Court in appeal from the order of acquittal was the only final order, and it did not involve directly any question under the Act;

(3) that the accused having secured acquittal in two Courts, the High Court should have, to justify the grant of certificate to appeal against the acquittal to a third Court, a clear indication in the statute that it was its duty to give the certificate;

(4) that the wording of s. 205(2) indicated that the Legislature did not contemplate an appeal against a decision not based on a point of law, arising under the Government of India Act;

(5) that therefore no question of law under the Act was involved in the case and no certificate should be granted under s. 205.

GOVERNMENT TRADING TAXATION ACT (III of 1926)—Government of India Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. V, c. 101), Sec. 65—Act III of 1926 whether ultra vires legislature—Patiala State—Banking business of Indian State—Business carried on only in Indian State—Income derived from securities in British India—Whether such income liable to tax in British India—Applicability of Act III of 1926—Definition of "company" whether includes Dominion Government—Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922).

The Government Trading Taxation Act, 1926, is intra vires the Government of India.

A tax on income accruing or arising or received in British India by a person resident outside British India is legislation relating to something i.e. certain income in British India and it falls within the words of s. 65 of the Government of India Act, 1919.

The Government Trading Taxation Act, 1926, applies wherever a Government of the nature specified in the Act carries on a business anywhere, and is not confined to business carried on in British India.

Where a Dominion Government, as specified in the Government Trading Taxation Act, 1926, is carrying on a business anywhere, it is liable to British Indian income-tax in respect of the income, profits and gains of that business which accrue or arise or are received in British India, as though such Government were a company.

The definition of "company" in s. 2(6) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, includes a Dominion Government deemed to be a company under the Government Trading Taxation Act, 1926.

The income derived by an Indian State Bank from its investments of surplus funds in the Government of India securities in British India are profits from the business of the bank received in British India, and as such liable to be assessed to income-tax, by the combined operation of s. 2 of the Government Trading Taxation Act, 1926, and the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

A property, situate within British India, taken over by an Indian State Bank from its debtor, a subject of the Indian State, in part satisfaction of the loan advanced to him, is not property occupied in British India for the purposes of the business, but the income derived from such business is income arising in connection with such business and is liable to be assessed to income-tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The profits made by an Indian State Bank on the sale of investments made by it in the Government of India securities—such profits being the excess realised over the cost price of the investments, if not appropriated as accretions to capital, are assessable to income-tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

—S. 7—Minor in custody of aunt since birth—Application by father for custody of minor—Applicability of s. 25.

Under s. 7 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, the Court, before making an order, should insist on evidence showing that the order was in the best interests of the child. It cannot pass such an order in advance. It is bound to consider, at the time when the order is to take effect, whether the applicant is the proper person to have the custody of the child.

—S. 17—Minor—Custody—Child of tender years—Natural mother preferable to father as guardian—Interest of minor.

In the matter of the custody of a minor child, the paramount consideration is the interest of the child rather than the rights of the parents. In the case of a minor child of tender years, the proper person to whom the custody of the child should be given is the natural mother and she should be preferred to the father, as it is impossible to find any adequate substitute for the love and care of the natural mother.

GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT, S. 17—(Contd.)

All orders made as to the custody of a child are of a temporary nature, and those interested in the minor are always at liberty to apply to the Court for a change in the custody.

GUARANTEE—Liability of guarantor—Construction of guarantee—Proof of debt against principal debtor—Nature of proof.

A guarantor is entitled to have the debt of the principal debtor proved as against him, before he is made liable for the debt. The fact that the principal debtor has admitted the debt, or that a judgment or award has been given against him for the debt, does not bind the guarantor, unless he was a party to the admission of the principal debtor, or was party to the proceedings in which the judgment or the award was given.

The liability of a guarantor must depend on the true construction of the guarantee which he has given. If the guarantor merely guarantees payment of the debt of the principal debtor, then he is entitled to require the debt to be proved as against him in accordance with the ordinary law. If, on the other hand, the principal debtor has agreed that as against him the debt shall be proved in a particular way, and the guarantor has guaranteed the debt so to be proved, then there can be no doubt that the guarantor would be bound by the particular method of proof agreed to by the principal debtor and accepted by himself.

HIGHWAY—Private ownership of land.

The existence of a highway or a public road is consistent with the ownership of a private person in the soil.

There is a presumption that a highway, or waste lands adjoining thereto, belong to the owners of the soil of the adjoining lands. The site of the road must be presumed to belong to the adjoining proprietors half to one and half to the other up to the middle of the road. Where the property is bounded by a road or a river, the boundary, even if given as the road or the river, is the middle of the road or the river as the case may be.

Hence, the use of the road by the public for passage as of right is not inconsistent with the proprietorship of a private individual to the soil of the road. A road, therefore, cannot be said to be the property of Government merely because it is used by the public.

NARHARSINGJI v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

43 Bom.L.R. 167.

HINDU LAW, ADOPTION, conditional adoption—Joint Hindu family—Sole surviving coparcener—Widow of predeceased coparceners—Arrangement under which adoptive widow of sole coparcener takes life interest—Consent of adopted son's natural father to such arrangement—Son subsequently adopted by widow of another coparcener—Whether such arrangement affects rights of subsequently adopted son.

Under Hindu law an arrangement which regulates the rights of the adoptive mother vis-à-vis the adopted son cannot affect the rights or claims of a person who is subsequently adopted in the undivided family and who is not a party to the arrangement.

One V was left the sole surviving coparcener in a joint Hindu family after the death of his two brothers who died childless leaving their widows surviving them. On July 17, 1928, V executed a document in the nature of a testamentary deed of his estate by which he authorised his widow L to adopt M who was the son of his daughter by his predeceased wife. L was authorised to manage V's "property in her independent right till her death." Soon after this V adopted M and executed a registered deed of adoption under which L was authorised to manage the property in the terms of the previous deed. This arrangement was agreed to by the natural father of M. V then died and on February 26, 1935, the widow of one of V's brothers adopted the plaintiff. The plaintiff filed a suit against L and M for partition claiming a half share in the joint family property. L contended that the arrangement evidenced by the adoption deed was binding on the plaintiff and governed the relationship between him and L as well as M :—

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the family continued to be joint so long as any widow remained in it with a power to adopt, the adoption of the plaintiff was valid and affected the family property ;

(2) that the arrangement evidenced by the deed of adoption, validated on the ground of custom, was binding in so far as it regulated the right of L as against M ;

(3) that it could not be supported on the basis of a supposed alienation by a sole surviving coparcener prior to the adoption of the plaintiff, because the deed was to come into operation after V's death ;

(4) that the rights or claims of persons subsequently adopted in the family who were not parties to the arrangement were not affected by it ; and

(5) that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to half a share in the family property.

LAXMIBAI v. KESHAVRAO. 43 Bom.L.R. 214.

—Prohibition to adopt—Power to adopt—Construction of will—Prohibition to adopt.

The testator, who was joint with his brother, made, shortly before his death, a will, addressed to his brother, in which he said : " You are the only heir of the property ... After their death [i.e. death of the testator's two widows] they [i.e. ornaments] are yours only. Excepting maintenance, they have no other right whatsoever ... In order that my name should remain after my death, Rs. 100 per annum should be spent on religious acts &c. You should do this, and you and your descendants, heirs and legatees should enjoy the ownership of the entire estate from generation to generation. On the strength of this will, you should get the khata transferred to your name in respect of the above lands. In regard to that my wives and anybody else whatever have no sort of right at all... Consequently, all the rights go to you only and are with you." Shortly after the testator's death, one of his widows adopted a son. After the death of that son, she adopted the plaintiff, who was a son-in-law of the surviving brother. Thereafter the surviving brother gifted away portions of the family property to his two daughters. After the death of the brother, the plaintiff sued to recover possession of the properties, when it was contended by the daughters that the will contained an implied prohibition to the widows to adopt and the plaintiff's adoption was therefore invalid :—

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the testator had said nothing about an adoption one way or the other and the prohibition of adoption was sought to be inferred from statements about other matters or from conduct, it stood to reason that the inference suggested, if it was to be acted upon, should be a necessary inference ;

(2) that the Court should be able to say with confidence that what the testator had said or done showed that he would have prohibited an adoption, either in any circumstances or in the circumstances existing at the material time, if he could have foreseen them ;

(3) that if the Court could say no more than that he might have, or even that he probably would have, prohibited adoption in any circumstances or in those particular circumstances, it could not be said that his statements or his actions were equivalent to a prohibition ;

(4) that in his will the testator was obviously anxious that the family should continue to be regarded as what it was in fact, a joint family, and that the fact that some lands were in his separate name should not give rise to any claim of separate ownership ;

(5) that though he emphasised the rights of his brother as the sole surviving coparcener, it did not follow from that that he was opposed to one of the ordinary incidents of a joint family or that he would have objected to an adoption by his widow if his brother himself did not object ;

(6) that the plaintiff having been at the date of adoption the brother's son-in-law, it could not be said with any confidence that the testator would have prohibited the adoption if he had foreseen it ;

(7) that from the terms of the will the Court could not spell out any implied prohibition to adopt ; and

(8) that therefore the plaintiff's adoption was valid.

HINDU LAW, DEBT, manager—Joint family—Debts—Bombay Co-operative Societies Act (Bom. VII of 1925), Sec. 54—Awards against manager how far binding on coparceners—Disclosure of status in pleadings whether necessary—Presumption that suit against manager is in representative capacity—Auction sale of joint-family property—"Right, title and interest"—Price paid at auction not less than valuation of property—Whether this is evidence that entire interest of coparceners was sold—Effect of sale under Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. V of 1879)—Partition suit by next friend of minors—Severance of status.

A decree against the manager of a joint Hindu family representing the family in respect of a debt contracted for family purposes is binding on all the members of the family and may be executed against the whole coparcenary property. A decree against the manager personally, even though in respect of a family debt, cannot be executed against the whole coparcenary property but only affects the manager's own interest.

HINDU LAW, DEBT—(Contd.)

In order that a decree against the manager of a joint Hindu family should bind coparceners not parties to the litigation it is not essential that the pleadings should expressly state that he was suing or being sued as manager.

Where the manager of a joint Hindu family has contracted debts for family purposes and is sued in respect of those debts, there is a presumption that he is sued in his representative capacity, so that a decree against him will be binding on all the coparceners.

It is not necessary that the plaintiff should state in distinct terms that the defendant is being sued as manager.

The expression "right, title and interest" is an ambiguous one; it is quite consistent with the sale of every interest which the judgment-debtor may have sold, and it is a question of fact in each case what has in fact been sold.

Where joint family property is sold at an auction sale and the price paid is not less than the valuation of the property made independently, it is good evidence that what was put to auction and sold was the entire interest of all the members of the joint family and not merely the individual interest of the manager who incurred debts in respect of which the property was sold.

HINDU LAW, ENDOWMENT—Dedication—Complete or partial dedication—Relinquishment of property by donor—Ghat on the Ganges at Benares—Ghatias of Benares—Right of ghatias over the ghat—Practice—Suit decreed as prayed, not a proper form of order.

Under Hindu law, the dedication of property to religious or charitable uses may be complete or partial. In the absence of a formal and express endowment evidenced by deed or declaration, the character of the dedication can only be determined on the basis of the history of the institution and the conduct of the founder and his heirs. Partial dedication may take place not only where a mere charge is created in favour of an idol or other religious object, but also where the owner retains the property in himself and grants the community or part of the community an easement over it for certain specified purposes.

Under Hindu law in the usual case of complete dedication made to an idol the property ceases altogether to belong to the donor and becomes vested in the idol as a juristic person. Complete relinquishment by the owner of his proprietary right is by no means the only form of dedication known to the law and is very different from anything that can ordinarily be inferred from the public user of a highway. From the standpoint of the Hindu law it is not essential to a valid dedication that the legal title should pass from the owner nor is it inconsistent with an effectual dedication that the owner should continue to make any and all uses of the land which do not interfere with the uses for which it is dedicated.

Whether the property be charged with a sum of money for the worship of an idol or be subjected to a right of limited user on the part of the public, it descends and is alienable in the ordinary way, the only difference being that it passes with the charge upon it.

The land or other property of a bathing ghat on the banks of the Ganges at Benares dedicated to such a purpose, is dedicated to an object both religious and of public utility, notwithstanding that it is not dedicated to any particular deity; but from such dedication it cannot be at once concluded that in any particular case there has been a dedication in the full sense of the Hindu law which involves the complete cessation of ownership on the part of the founder and the vesting of the property in the religious institution or object.

The river bank at Benares is a sacred and historical spot with a powerful claim to the regard of a pious Hindu; but the practice of bathing in the Ganges is not in general so directly connected with the worship of a particular deity that nothing short of complete dedication would be appropriate for a public bathing ghat. The character of the use to be made of the bank does not require it. Nor does the public right of use for purposes of bathing take its origin as a rule from an immediate and express act of dedication; rather does it begin by acts of user which are acquiesced in by the owner of the property who in due course makes provision for the public needs as an act of charity or piety.

The ghatias of Benares as members of a class have no customary right to claim exclusive possession of portions of a public bathing ghat by placing platforms or canopies over them in order to carry on their profession. No individual ghatia can have any right by custom to exclusive possession of any parts of the ghat either by prescription or lost grant.

A right to stand, sit or squat on a ghat for the purposes of exercising the profession of ghatias may be acquired by consent of the owner of the ghat.

There was a ghat on the bank of the river Ganges as it flowed past the city of Benares, which the plaintiff's predecessor had purchased and rebuilt in the year 1814. No express dedication of the ghat to the public was proved by the production of a deed of endowment or otherwise. No manager was ever appointed, nor was it shown that the plaintiff or her predecessor had purported to act as superintendent, sebaite or mutawalli. They were treated as owners whenever there was disrepair of the ghat, which they repaired at their own expense. They closed it to bathers

HINDU LAW, ENDOWMENT—(Contd.)

on proper occasions and levied tolls on the keepers of shops at festivals. Their expenditure on the ghat often exceeded their receipts and they never wished to make a profit from the tolls. There was evidence as to agreements taken from ghatias upon nearby ghats:—

Held, that the above evidence pieced together showed that the plaintiff had a proprietary right in the ghat and the soil underneath it.

—Sham sale deed between coparceners—References in deed of definite share of each coparcener—Whether such references effect severance of status of members of coparcenery.

Under the Mitakshara system of Hindu law coparceners who intend to remain joint and undivided do not become divided contrary to their intention because in a document for purposes of pretence they refer to their interests as represented by a fractional share.

A member of a Mitakshara family may sometimes be forgiven for speaking of his "one-third share" instead of using the more accurate but more elaborate expression "the share which if a partition were to take place to-day would be one-third". Where, however, a third party has been induced to act upon such a document, very different questions may arise by reason of estoppel or otherwise, but if the case is limited to the parties themselves then propriety or impropriety of language matters little, since the document does not warrant any inference of a previous or independent agreement to hold in divided shares.

HINDU LAW, MAINTENANCE, widow—
Income by personal exertions—Whether such income justifies reduction of maintenance—Reduction when permissible.

Under Hindu law personal income obtained by a widow by her own exertions cannot be regarded as a sufficient change in the circumstances to justify the Court in reducing the amount of maintenance fixed under a decree. It is only the permanent reduction in the income of the family property which affords a valid reason for reducing the amount of maintenance.

Joint family—Claim for arrears of maintenance during husband's life-time—Right attaches to property in which her husband has interest—Liability of person in possession of such property—Suit brought against coparcener for arrears of maintenance after husband's death—Right of widow for maintenance not similar to right of creditor.

Under the Hindu law the right of a wife or a widow for maintenance against the husband as well as the members of her husband's joint family is not the same as the right of a mere creditor against the estate arising out of contract, but is a right which attaches to her status as a member of the joint undivided family. In the case of a widow this right attaches to the undivided share in the property which her husband would have got by partition if he had been alive and she is entitled to follow the property in the hands of the coparcener taking it. The property is liable as much for arrears of past maintenance as for future maintenance. The right to demand the arrears exists against the husband or the surviving coparcener or any person who has inherited his separate property.

The rule that a creditor cannot follow the property in the hands of a surviving coparcener, unless it has been previously attached during the life-time of the deceased coparcener, does not apply to the case of a Hindu widow both for arrears of maintenance as well as for future maintenance.

The claim of a Hindu widow for arrears of maintenance, which have accrued due during the lifetime of her husband, is not a personal cause of action which dies with his death, but it exists against the husband's property which comes to the hands of either his heir or his surviving coparcener.

into between the mother of the plaintiff, who was a minor Hindu girl, acting as her guardian and on her behalf, the father of the defendant on behalf of the defendant who was a Hindu and a major :—

Held, on consideration of the habits and customs prevailing amongst Hindus, that the contract being for the benefit of the minor girl could be enforced by her, and she could maintain a suit for damages for breach thereof by the defendant.

Under the Hindu law the contract of marriage is conditional on the husband being a suitable spouse at the time when the marriage is to be performed, and there being no more suitable husband available.

JOTIRAM v. RAMCHANDRA.

43 Bom.L.R. 843.

HINDU LAW, REVERSIONERS—Widow—Daughters—Reference by widow of reversioners' rights to arbitration—Whether such reference binds reversioners.

Under Hindu law a reversioner has no right or interest in presenti in the property which the female owner holds for her life. Until it vests in him on her death, should he survive her, he has nothing to assign or to relinquish, or even to transmit to his heirs. His right becomes concrete only on her demise; until then it is mere spes successionis. His guardian, if the reversioner happens to be a minor, cannot bargain with it on his behalf or bind him by any contractual engagement in respect thereto.

A Hindu left, by his will, his divided property one of which was mentioned as ancestral, to his wife in the first instance, and on her death to his daughters. A dispute about the ancestral property having arisen between the widow and her husband's collaterals, the widow in her own right as well as the mother and guardian on behalf of her minor daughter referred it to arbitrators, who decided that the property should be enjoyed by the widow during her lifetime, and that after her death it should be divided among the collaterals. After the widow's death, the only surviving daughter, who was a minor at the date of arbitration, sued to recover possession of the ancestral property alleging that the award was not binding on her:—

A property, situate within British India, taken over by an Indian State Bank from its debtor, a subject of the Indian State, in part satisfaction of the loan advanced to him, is not property occupied in British India for the purposes of the business, but the income derived from such business is income arising in connection with such business and is liable to be assessed to income-tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The profits made by an Indian State Bank on the sale of investments made by it in the Government of India securities—such profits being the excess realised over the cost price of the investments, if not appropriated as accretions to capital, are assessable to income-tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

In order to avoid liability to income-tax under s. 4(3) (i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the assessee has to establish that the income assessed is derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes.

If the object of an association is relief of the poor, it is none the less charitable, because some political body may consider that it affords the best method of relieving the poor, and may, therefore, adopt the scheme.

An unregistered Association consisting only of persons who had become its members was created for the following objects:—“To raise loans, to collect subscriptions, to hold immoveable property, to invest funds under proper security, to give and take mortgage for the furtherance of hand-spinning and khaddar, to give financial assistance to khaddar organisation by way of loans, gifts or bounties, to help or establish schools or institutions where hand-spinning is taught, to help or open khaddar stores, to establish a khaddar service, to act as agency on behalf of the Congress to receive self-spun yarn as subscription to the Congress and to issue certificates and to do all the things that may be considered necessary for the furtherance of its objects, with power to make regulations for the conduct of affairs of the Association or the Council and to make such amendments in the present constitution, as may be considered necessary from time to time.” The Income-tax Officer assessed the association to income-tax and super-tax on the total income of Rs. 88,601 for the year 1936-37, overruling its contention that it was not assessable to income-tax by reason of the exemption contained in s. 4(3) (i) of the Indian Income-tax Act. This was confirmed on appeal to the Assistant Commissioner. The assessee then applied to the Commissioner either to revise the order or to state a case to the High Court; but the latter refused to do so. The association then applied to the High Court under s. 66(3) of the Act and the High Court directed the Commissioner to state a case. The Commissioner thereupon referred the following question to the High Court:—“Whether having regard to the objects of the Association and the manner in which they are carried out and the purpose for which its funds are applied the income of the Association is liable to income-tax and/or super-tax." The Commissioner was of opinion that the objects of the Association were not charitable and therefore the Association was properly assessed:—

Held, that the document specifying the objects of the Association was not couched in the language of obligation but of permission, and there was nothing therein which limited in any way the purposes for which any profits derived by the Association could be applied;

that the Association had failed to show that the property from which the profits were derived was property held under trust or other legal obligation for charitable purposes and that there was a binding legal obligation to devote its profits to charitable purposes; and that, therefore, the Association had not brought itself within the exemption in s. 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act and was rightly assessed to income-tax and super-tax.

—"Charitable purposes"—Trust wholly for religious and charitable purposes—Exemption from income-tax—Rate of assessment.

A trust fund was created having for its objects (a) the advancement of any purpose which might in the uncontrolled opinion of the managing committee be national or of national importance for the inhabitants of British India, (b) the political advancement of India having for its goal the acquisition of complete national autonomy or "swarajya", (c) the diffusion of political education and knowledge as to the political affairs of India and propagandist work both in India as well as in any part of the world, (d) any object which might conduce to any of the aforesaid objects. A question having arisen whether the income of the fund was exempt from payment of income-tax under s. 4(3)(i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, as being a trust wholly for charitable purposes, and if not so exempt, what was the rate of assessment:—

Held, (1) that the four sub-clauses setting out the objects of the fund were distributive;

(2) that sub-cl. (a) went beyond the definition of "charitable purposes" contained in s. 4 of the Act, inasmuch as the selection of the purpose rested in the uncontrolled opinion of the managing committee;

(3) that sub-cl. (b) also went too far, because it was really a gift for political purposes;

(4) that therefore the income of the trust fund did not fall within the purview of s. 4(3)(i) of the act and was assessable to income-tax;

(5) that the case fell within the first proviso to s. 41(f) of the Act, and the tax should be assessed at the maximum rate.

Held, further, by Kania J., that sub-cl. (c) which contained the words "political education and knowledge" coupled with "propagandist work both in India as well as in any part of the world" fell within the rule stated in Tribune Press Trustees, Lahore v. Income-tax Commissioner (41 Bom. L. R. 1150), and that sub-cl. (d), being the general clause dealing with objects subsidiary to the three objects mentioned in the preceding sub-clauses shared the same infirmity.

Per Beaumont C. J. Trusts for the benefit of the inhabitants of a particular locality are regarded as charitable; but trusts for the benefit of a particular political party, or for the advancement of particular political opinions, are not regarded as charitable.

The definition of "charitable purposes" as contained in s. 4(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act goes further than the definition of charity to be derived from the English cases, because it embraces purposes of general public utility.

There is no authority for the proposition that a gift for such purposes as a particular individual or individuals may consider to be charitable is good.

Per Kania J. When there is a general charitable intention, the Court will uphold it, and if within that limit discretion is given to the trustees to select an object, the trust will not fail because of the discretion so given. If the dominant purpose of a trust is political, it is not a charitable object within the meaning of the Indian Income-tax Act.

—S. 5(2)—Transfer of income-tax cases by Central Board of Revenue—Completed assessments not affected by transfer—Further proceedings by assessee covered by transfer—Hearing of appeal under order of transfer—Hearing valid—Power to state case to High Court.

On March 31, 1939, the assessee was assessed to income-tax by the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, Bombay, who was subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan. On April 1, 1939, the Income-tax Act, 1922, was amended, one of the effects of which was that the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) was appointed. On April 15, 1939, a demand for payment was made on the assessee. The assessee applied under s. 27 of the Act to get the assessment set aside, but his application was rejected. On April 18, 1939, the Central Board of Revenue, acting under s. 5(2) of the Act, as amended, transferred among others the case of the assessee by name to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central). On May 10, 1939, the assessee appealed against his assessment, and the appeal was disposed of by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, Sa. I to VI, A-Range, Bombay, who was appointed, under the amended Act, to hear appeals against assessments made by the Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, Bombay, which appeals were pending on June 3, 1939. The assessee then applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) asking him to state a case to the High Court, under s. 66(2) of the Act, in the matter of his assessment; but the Commissioner refused to do so on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. On application to the High Court :—

Held, (1) that the order of transfer of cases, under s. 5(2) of the amended Act, did not include assessments already completed on March 31, 1939, though it did operate on any further proceedings relating to the assessee;

(2) that the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, Ss. I to VI, A-Range, Bombay, was the proper tribunal to hear the appeal filed by the assessee, whether the transfer made on April 18, 1939, embraced the assessment in question or not;

(3) that inasmuch as the assessment made on March 31, 1939, had not been validly transferred to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central), that Officer had no jurisdiction to entertain the application and to state a case under s. 66(2) of the Act;

(4) that that Officer could not therefore be ordered to state a case and that the application failed.

Enhanced values obtained from realisation or conversion of securities may be assessable to income-tax where what is done is not merely a realisation or change of investment but an act done in what is truly the carrying on, or carrying out, of a business.

Where some of the securities of a bank are realised in order to meet withdrawals by depositors, it is a normal step in carrying on the banking business and the profits accrued therefrom are assessable for the purposes of income-tax.

In order to render taxable profits realised on sales of investments by an assessee it is not necessary to establish that the tax-payer has been carrying on a separate business either of buying or selling investments or of merely realising them.

—S. 25(3)—“Discontinued”, meaning of—Assessment in case of discontinued business.

Section 25(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act of 1922, before it was amended in 1939, treated business, profession or vocation as if it was a sort of legal entity. After its amendment, read with s. 26(2) of the Act, it ceased to treat the business as a single unit and split up the tax between the owners for the time being of the business.

Section 25(3), as amended, provides that no tax shall be payable for the period between the end of the previous year and the date of discontinuance of the business. Hence, the income of the previous year, that is the whole of it, shall be deemed to be the income of that period.

The word “discontinued” in s. 25(3) covers

a discontinuance either by cessation or by disposal.

The exception in s. 25(3) may cover a case, very unlikely to occur but at the same time possible, in which there has been a succession to which sub-s. (4) applies, and subsequently there has been cessation of business within the year of assessment.

The assessee, who carried on business in coffee, butter etc. was at first assessed to income-tax under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act of 1918, on the basis of income made during the year of assessment. In 1922, the new Indian Income-tax Act was passed, under which the tax was assessed on the basis of income made during the previous year. On January 1, 1939, the assessee assigned his business to a limited company. The Act of 1922 was amended on April 1, 1939, by amending, among other sections, s. 25 which dealt with assessment in case of discontinuance of business. During the assessment for the year 1939-40, the assessee contended that in view of the amended s. 25 he should be relieved from the payment of double income-tax in respect of the income made during the year 1938, because his business was discontinued at the end of the year :—

Held, (1) that the assessee was entitled to the benefit of s. 25(3) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1932, as amended in 1939;

(2) that if the income of the year 1938 was to be deemed to be the income of the period between the end of the previous year and the date of discontinuance of the business (which period did not exist in the present case), the assessee was not liable for any tax;

(3) that therefore no tax was payable by him in respect of his income from his business for the year 1938 liable to assessment in respect of the year 1939.

On an application, under s. 26-A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, to register a firm, it is open to the Income-tax Officer to say that the shares which appear in the deed of partnership presented to him for registration are not the true shares of the partners and therefore there is no proper application by the requisite firm under that section. If it were shown that one of the partners was only a nominee of a share allotted to him or her for another partner, the deed would not then specify correctly the individual shares and registration would be refused.

INCOME-TAX ACT, S. 26A—(Contd.)

A large money lending business with many branches was being carried on by A and his three sons. They formed a bank at a town K in British India and another at P in an Indian State out of British India. Their business was transferred to these two banks as well as to a limited company registered in the Indian State. All the shares of the two banks were held by A and the members of his family and the banks were controlled by them. The P bank advanced several loans through one of its branches to a branch of the K bank. Six of these loans were used in the Rangoon business of the K bank. The income arising from those loans was assessed for the purpose of income-tax. The K bank objecting to the assessment, the Commissioner made a reference to the High Court of Madras under s. 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, in which he stated that in substance those loans represented money lent by the P bank to the K bank, but the transactions had been unnecessarily complicated by resorting to a series of entries which were as superfluous as they were confusing. He submitted that the income from those loans accrued and arose to the P bank directly or indirectly through or from a business connection in British India, within the meaning of s. 42(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, between the K bank and the P bank. The High Court decided that the submission of the Commissioner was right. On appeal to His Majesty in Council:—

Held, (1) that the suggestion that in revenue cases the substance of the matter might be regarded as distinguished from the strict legal position was wrong;

(2) that the terms of s. 42 of the Indian Income-tax Act were wide enough to cover profits or gains which could be said to accrue or arise to the P bank directly or indirectly through or from any business connection which might exist between the P bank and the K bank in British India;

(3) that the income-tax authorities were acting within the power conferred upon them by s. 43 of the Income-tax Act in treating the K bank as the agent of the P bank for the purposes of the Act; and

(4) that the income from the loans was chargeable to income-tax in the name of K bank.

INCOME-TAX ACT, S. 42—(Contd.)

In taxation cases the subject is not to be taxed merely because, in accordance with a Court's view of what it considers the substance of the transaction, the Court thinks that the case falls within the contemplation or spirit of the statute. He is not taxable by inference or by analogy, but only by the plain words of a statute applicable to the facts and circumstances of his case. The principle of all fiscal legislation is that if the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law, he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the Crown, seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be.

A suit "relating to the property of the insolvent", within the meaning of s. 68(1)(d) of the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act, 1909, means a suit which, if successful, will increase the assets distributable amongst the creditors or the defence of which may prevent the assets being diminished. A right to institute an appeal, which merely relates to a money claim against an insolvent, is not a legal proceeding relating to the property of the insolvent and does not fall within the powers given by s. 68 to the Official Assignee.

A Court of Appeal will not direct an appellant to give further security for the costs of the appeal merely on the ground of his poverty.

The appellant was declared insolvent after he had filed an appeal against a money decree passed against him. The respondent applied for an order dismissing the appeal under O. XXII, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, contending that by reason of the insolvency of the appellant the appeal abated:—

Held, that the words "might maintain" in O. XXII, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, meant that the Official Assignee had the power or was entitled to maintain the appeal; and that as in the present case the Official Assignee could not maintain such an appeal, the appeal did not abate.

The words “which are not the property of individuals” in s. 37 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, are not confined in their application to “all lands wherever situated” but also apply to roads, bridges, beds of the sea, lakes, tanks, etc. Similarly, the words “except in so far as any right of such persons may be established” govern all the previous expressions and not merely lands.

The particular presumption mentioned in s. 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, is not directed to be made save upon two conditions (among others): first, that there is no satisfactory evidence of the date of the commencement of the tenancy, and, secondly, that this lack is due to the antiquity of the tenancy. The first condition is not excluded by showing that the tenancy had its origin at some date within a period of twenty years which cannot be more precisely ascertained. This is not satisfactory evidence of the date of its commencement. By a tenancy's antiquity the section does not intend any reference to remote ages in the past or to “time immemorial” in the sense of the English law. It is to be given the practical meaning appropriate to its context and afforded by the limits within which living testimony to past facts is necessarily restricted.

Hence, where lands are held under tenancies which are not proved to have been in existence before 1892, the presumption under s. 83 cannot properly be applied to them, notwithstanding that the evidence by no means excludes the possibility of an earlier origin.

Section 83 of the Code shows that a right on the part of the landlord to enhance a rent payable is not unknown in the Province of Bombay.

The fact that a tenancy is for agricultural purposes does not prima facie indicate that it is permanent or indeed that it is more than an annual tenancy. The inference of permanence is an inference which it is difficult to make and which requires the presence of circumstances explicable when taken as a whole only on the hypothesis of permanence.

A statement by the kulkarni of a village as to the character of a tenancy right in the village is admissible in evidence under s. 13 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

Held, also, that there were circumstances in the case sufficient to show that the presumption in favour of the truth of the Record of Rights derived support from a number of independent considerations the cumulative effect of which should be regarded as strong.

The fact that the tenancies were granted for the purpose of agriculture could not be regarded as sufficient either in fact or in law to negative the conclusion indicated by so many strong circumstances that the tenancies were of a permanent character.

—S. 135J—Record of rights—Entry—Presumption.

An entry in the Record of Rights that a tenant has permanent interest in the land is presumed to be true by virtue of s. 135J of the Bombay Land Revenue Code of 1879. Proper effect should be given to such a statutory presumption. The presumption is not weakened by the mere consideration that when the record was made the landlord was a minor and his property was being managed by the Collector on his behalf, nor does the fact that at the time of the preparation of the record the permanency of the interest of the tenants was not disputed in any way detract from the force of the presumption.

Where the existence of a Record of Right does not appear from the judgment of the first appellate Court to have been appreciated by it and no effect whatever has been given to the

The terms of a clause in a lease were—“That the lessees shall pay the following Municipal taxes, viz., general tax, halalkhore tax and License Fees, the water tax by meter . . . and riot taxes and all other existing and future rates taxes or dues of whatsoever kind or nature for the time being payable either by the landlord or tenant in respect of the demised premises or any part thereof and the lessees shall pay to the lessors the amount of such taxes or dues when demanded.” On a question having arisen whether the lessees were bound to pay to the lessor the Urban Immoveable Property Tax imposed subsequent to the date of the lease, the lessees contended that under the above clause the only taxes payable by them were municipal taxes:—

Held, that on the true construction of the clause the lessees were bound to pay the Urban Immoveable Property Tax which was both a tax and a due in respect of the demised premises and that the liability of the lessees was not confined to municipal taxes.

As the word “dues” follows the words “riot taxes”, it is not restricted to municipal taxes, and has a wider import than the word “rates” or “taxes”.

—Determination of tenancy—Permission to lessees to erect temporary structures on land leased—Lessees given right to remove structures on determination of tenancy—Lessees vacating premises without removing structures—Attachment of lessees’ interest in land and structures—Sale of structures mentioned in proclamation of sale—Whether lessees’ interest in structures continued after determination of tenancy—Application by lessor to raise attachment—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), Sec. 108—Contract to exclude provisions of this section.

A clause in a lease required the lessees to deliver over possession of the demised premises at the determination of the tenancy in the same good condition as it was at the time the lessees entered into possession subject to wear and tear. Another clause provided that “on the determination of the tenancy the lessees shall be entitled to remove the structure or shed which they might have erected during the continuance of the tenancy.” The lease came to an end on August 31, 1939, and the lessees vacated the premises without removing certain structures. On September 13, 1939, a creditor of the lessees attached their right, title and interest in the land and the structures. On an application by the lessor to raise the attachment:—

Held, that, as the first clause made it obligatory upon the lessees to deliver over possession at the determination of the tenancy, the lessees were given no right to remain in possession after the determination of the tenancy;

that the second clause amounted to a contract between the parties which excluded the provisions of s. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882;

that having regard to the words “on the determination of the tenancy” in the second clause, if the lessees wished to remove the structures they were obliged to make provision for their removal by severing them from the soil, or by taking any steps which might be necessary so that they could remove them on the determination of the tenancy;

that as the lessees had not done so, they lost all their rights to remove the structures or to demand possession of them from the lessor;

that even if the lessees had the right to remove the structures after the determination of the tenancy and after they had gone out of possession, they would only have had the right to remove them within a reasonable time of the determination of the tenancy, forty-eight hours being enough in this case.

LETTERS PATENT, CL. 10—Disciplinary jurisdiction—Attorney—“Reasonable cause”—“Misconduct”—Interpretation.

Under cl. 10 of the Letters Patent, 1865, the High Court is empowered to remove or suspend from practice an advocate or attorney on “reasonable cause”. A wide discretion is given to the High Court in regard to the exercise of disciplinary jurisdiction by the use of the words “reasonable cause”.

“Reasonable cause” means professional or other misconduct under s. 10 of the Bar Councils Act, 1926. “Misconduct” is a wide expression and it is not necessary that it should involve moral turpitude. Any conduct which in any way renders a man unfit for the exercise of his profession or is likely to hamper or embarrass the administration of justice by the High Court, or any of the Courts subordinate thereto, amounts to “misconduct.”

The High Court has power to remove an advocate or attorney if he is unfit to be entrusted with a professional status and character. If an attorney is found guilty of moral delinquency in his private character, he is liable to be struck off the roll.

Defendant No. 1 drew in Bombay on defendant No. 2, who was residing at Calicut, five bills of exchange in favour of the Bombay branch of the plaintiff-bank. The bills were endorsed by the plaintiffs in favour of a bank at Calicut for collection. They were presented to defendant No. 2 who accepted them, but on the due date dishonoured them. The plaintiffs filed a suit in the High Court of Bombay with leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent to recover the amount due under the bills from both the defendants. Defendant No. 1 did not enter an appearance, but defendant No. 2 defended the suit and contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit as his liability having arisen only on acceptance of the bills at Calicut, no part of the cause of action arose in Bombay :—

Held, that, in order to give rise to the liability of defendant No. 2 as drawee, the plaintiffs had to establish that the bills of exchange were drawn by defendant No. 1 on defendant No. 2 in favour of the plaintiffs, who were the payees in Bombay; and that, as that material fact took place in Bombay, part of the cause of action arose in Bombay, and with leave obtained under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, the Court has jurisdiction to try the suit.

The petitioner owned lands upon which trees producing toddy were grown. Up to July 31, 1939, licences were granted to the petitioner for tapping the trees and supplying toddy to shops for sale. Thereafter owing to the introduction of prohibition no such licences were granted. On November 18, 1940, the petitioner applied,

LICENCE—(Contd.)

under the provisions of the Bombay Toddy Tapping Rules, 1928, to the Collector of Bombay (respondent No. 1), for the issue of a licence to him to tap and draw toddy from his trees for domestic consumption only. On November 29, 1940, respondent No. 1 replied regretting his inability to grant such a licence. The petitioner thereupon appealed under the said provisions to the Commissioner of Excise (respondent No. 2), but the latter informed him on December 7, 1940, that respondent No. 1 was not bound to issue the licence asked for and that there was no reason to interfere with respondent No. 1's order. The petitioner, thereupon, presented a petition to the High Court, under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, against the respondents praying that they or either of them might be ordered to grant and issue the licence applied for. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that they had acted in the matter under the directions of the Provincial Government, as s. 4 of the Bombay Abkari Act made the Provincial Government the supreme authority in relation to the granting of such licences, and that by virtue of this section respondent No. 1 was bound to obey the orders issued by the Provincial Government with reference to granting of such licences :—

Held, that s. 4 of the Bombay Abkari Act related only to control of establishment and had no application to the grant of such licences; that respondents, who were charged with the power to issue licences, were controlled by the Bombay Toddy Tapping Rules, 1928, which were made under the Act, and which had the force of law, and that the respondents were bound to consider the petitioner's application for licence in the light of those rules;

that, even if s. 4 of the Act applied, as there was not in existence at the date of the petitioner's application any notification, rule, or order of the Provincial Government prohibiting the possession of toddy or the tapping or drawing of toddy from toddy trees, respondent No. 1 was not entitled to refuse the petitioner's application and respondent No. 2 to refuse his appeal;

that as the respondents acted under the mistaken belief that the prohibition policy of the Provincial Government amounted to an order justifying them in the action which they took, the Court could interfere and order them to act as they ought to have acted; and that respondent No. 1 should forthwith grant a licence to the petitioner on payment of such fees, if any, and subject to such restrictions and on such conditions and in such form as was contemplated by s. 30 of the Act.

LIMITATION ACT (IX of 1908)—Interpretation.

The Indian Limitation Act ought to receive such a construction as the language in its plain meaning imports. A law of limitation and prescription may appear to operate harshly or unjustly in particular cases, but it must, if unambiguous, be applied with stringency. The law must be enforced even at the risk of hardship to a particular party. The Court cannot, on equitable grounds, enlarge the time allowed by the law, postpone its operation, or introduce exceptions not recognised by it.

—S. 6—Alienations by Hindu widow—Adoption made after alienations—Death of adopted son after attaining majority—Second adoption—Suit by second adopted son to set aside alienations—Whether suit by second adopted son to set aside alienations barred—Cause of action—Limitation.

A Hindu died in the year 1900 without issue leaving certain properties. His widow alienated some of his lands in 1901 and 1904 by passing sale deeds in favour of defendants' predecessors-in-title. She adopted a son to her husband, but he died unmarried in 1918 after attaining the age of majority. In 1934 she adopted another son to her husband. In a suit by the second adopted son to set aside the alienations made by his adoptive mother, it was contended that the prior adopted son, who had been validly adopted and had attained majority long after the alienations, had a right to challenge the alienations, and* as against him the period of limitation had commenced to run, the plaintiff could not acquire a fresh cause of action to set aside the alienations in respect of which time had already run :—

Held, that the effect of ss. 6, 7, 8 and 9 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, was to bar the prior adopted son's right to sue, and as his right was barred, no further right to sue in respect of the alienations could accrue to the plaintiff.

—S. 10—Trust—Deed of settlement—Trust administered by trustees according to deed for number of years—Suit by settlor's heir for declaration that deed was void and inoperative and for order directing cancellation of deed and delivering property.

A person who claims to be entitled to property, as an heir of the settlor, on the ground that the trust deed is void, is not a person claiming against a trustee holding the property for an express purpose. Section 10 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, does not apply to such a case.

A Mahomedan made a trust deed of his immovable property on October 22, 1895, under which the income of the property was to be given to him during his life-time, and after his death the trustees were to pay the income in certain proportions to the beneficiaries under the deed. Since the death of the settlor on June 7, 1897, the trustees administered the property as under the trust. On March 28, 1939, the plaintiff who was the settlor's heir's heir filed a suit for a declaration that the deed was void and inoperative, and for an order cancelling the deed and directing the trustees to deliver the property to him and render account of their management :—

Held, that, as the trustees were in possession of the property under the trust deed and had held it for the beneficiaries and administered it according to the deed, the property was not vested in the trustees for a specific purpose; and that s. 10 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, therefore did not apply and the suit was barred by limitation.

Meanwhile in June 1933 the widow of plaintiff No. 1 adopted the applicant, who applied on July 31, 1934, for a final decree on the mortgage. An assignment of an administration bond under s. 292 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, does not create thereunder a new cause of action so as to give a fresh starting point for the purposes of limitation to the assignee who sues for a breach of a condition in the bond.

A suit by the assignee of an administration bond to enforce the bond is a suit "on a bond subject to a condition" within the meaning of art. 68 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and the period of limitation is three years from the date of the last breach and not the date when some person able to give a valid discharge for the estate claims it from the administrator or his representatives and fails to obtain it.

The plaintiffs' ancestors mortgaged their lands to the predecessor-in-title of the defendants in October, 1791. One of the mortgagors sued in 1849 to redeem the mortgage in which suit the pleader of the mortgagee put in a statement signed by him of the account of the mortgaged property. In 1863 another of the mortgagors sued to redeem a portion of the mortgaged property, and in the appeal arising in that case the mortgagee's pleader put in in 1867 a memorandum of appeal signed by him in which the existence of the mortgage and the relationship between the parties as mortgagors and mortgagees was admitted as subsisting. The plaintiffs having sued to redeem the mortgage in 1933, the defendants contended that the mortgagors had lost their right to redeem and their title to the property mortgaged was extinguished:—

Held, (1) that the law of limitation applicable to the suit was the law in force at the date of its institution, provided that neither the right to the property in question had been extinguished nor the right to sue in respect of it barred before that law came into force;

(2) that the mortgage in suit being of the year 1791 was governed by s. 1, cl. (15), of the Indian Limitation Act, 1859, read with s. 1 of the Amending Act XI of 1861, according to which a suit for redemption of the mortgage was barred after January 1, 1862;

LIMITATION ACT, 1908, ART. 148—
(Contd.)

(3) that the suit having been already barred attracted the application of s. 2 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877 as well as s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, which prevented the Act of 1877 from affecting any title acquired or reviving any right to sue barred under the Act or under any enactment thereby repealed;

(4) that the alleged acknowledgment of 1849 did not save limitation, because under s. 1, cl. (15), of the Act of 1859, the acknowledgment should have been signed by the mortgagee or some person claiming under him, and an acknowledgment signed by his pleader as the agent of the mortgagee was of no avail;

(5) that in any case the present suit having become barred at the date the Limitation Act of 1877 came into force and the right to sue having been lost under its s. 2, it could not be revived even though the acknowledgments of 1849 and 1867 were good under the Limitation Act of 1908 when the suit was brought;

(6) that the suit was therefore barred by limitation.

The High Court of Bombay has, under its general jurisdiction, power to make an order appointing a guardian of the undivided property of a minor who is a member of a joint Hindu family and who resides within the limits of its original jurisdiction, that is to say the town and island of Bombay. Such jurisdiction extends also to a minor in a joint Hindu family, who is a British subject and who resides within the presidency of Bombay. It is derived from the prerogative of the Crown as paterfamilias to protect subjects of the Crown who cannot protect themselves.

Where the karta of a joint Hindu family applies to the Court for an order sanctioning a sale of joint family property in which the minor coparcener has a share, the Court, before according its sanction to the sale, should make the minor respondent to the petition and he should be represented by a guardian ad litem. Such guardian ad litem should normally be an officer of the Court, who should satisfy himself as to the interest of the minor. He may require further evidence as

A deed of mortgage effected in the course of execution proceedings before a Collector without his permission, as required by sch. III, para. 11, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is null and void. Such a deed falls within the words "discovered to be void" in s. 65 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. The mortgage, however, stands in respect of the personal liability for the money actually paid, with proper interest thereon. If the loan is bona fide and is actually received and the terms are not unreasonable, the mortgagee is entitled to receive payment of whatever may be due on the mortgage, with interest thereon at reasonable rate.

MORTGAGE—(Contd.)

ment of three months' period by act of parties whether permissible.

A mortgagee cannot be restrained from exercising his power of sale merely by reason of the mortgagor filing a suit for redemption, unless he pays the mortgage amount to the mortgagee or tenders the same.

A mortgagor is entitled to file a suit to restrain the mortgagee by an order and injunction of the Court from exercising his power of sale, if the power is exercised in a wrong and improper manner, or contrary to the terms of the contract.

The equitable relief by way of injunction is not to be refused because the mortgagor was unable to pay in the past and may be unable to pay in the future. The relief may be granted even if the mortgagor can come forward later and claim damages on account of an improper sale.

In order that the mortgage moneys may become immediately payable on the exercise of the mortgagee's option, there must be an act indicating to the mortgagor the exercise of that option so as to enable the mortgagor to realise his position and save his equity of redemption if possible. An advertisement by a mortgagee for sale of the mortgaged property by public auction, without any intimation to the mortgagor, is not an appropriate action by the mortgagee to make the mortgage amount immediately payable at his option.

A notice of demand or even the filing of a suit amounts to such appropriate action.

The notice in writing required by s. 69(2) (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is imperative, and the period of three months which must expire after service of such notice cannot be curtailed by agreement of parties.

The Borough Municipality of Broach framed by-laws under s. 61 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, one of which made it compulsory for traders in fire-wood and charcoal to obtain licenses for carrying on their trade, but prescribed no fee for the grant of such licenses. Subsequently the Municipality, with the sanction of Government, framed, in the exercise of the power given to it by the provisions of s. 58(j) of the Act, a new rule r. 208

MUNICIPAL ACT (BOROUGH), S. 58 (J)

(a), under which it levied a yearly license fee, not only in respect of storing wood, coal and charcoal, but also for the manufacture and sale of sweetmeats, the object of the levy being to enable the Municipality to meet educational expenses.

The plaintiffs, who respectively were traders in fire-wood and charcoal and manufacturers and sellers of sweetmeats and confectionery, and carried on their business within the municipal limits of Broach, sued for a declaration that the Municipality had no right to recover from them any sum under the pretext of license fees. The lower Courts having held that the levy was legal, the plaintiffs appealed :—

Held, (1) that, under s. 90(I) of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, the question of charging license fees would arise when a license was granted, and a license could only be granted if the law required a license to be granted ;

(2) that there was no provision in the Act requiring persons carrying on the trades enumerated in its s. 186(I) to apply for and obtain a license, that under the scheme of the Act it was left to the discretion of the Municipality to so require them, that the Municipality might, by framing the necessary by-laws, require any trade to be carried on under a license, and that the section therefore provided a penalty for using a place for a trade without a license only when the by-laws provided for obtaining a license ;

(3) that the object for which a fee or tax was levied by a public body did not serve necessarily as a guide for saying whether an imposition was a "fee" or "tax" ;

(4) that merely because the Municipality before making the rule had in a public notification indicated the object for which it was to be applied (viz., to meet educational expenses), that would not render the formality observed in passing the rule unsuitable or unauthorised ;

(5) that inasmuch as the by-laws provided for a license to be taken in the case of storage of fire-wood and charcoal, the Municipality was competent to make rules prescribing the fee to be charged for such license ;

(6) but that as regards the manufacture and sale of sweetmeats the Municipality not having first made a by-law insisting upon a license and then framed a rule prescribing a fee under s. 58(j) of the Act, the levy of fees upon the manufacturers and sellers of sweetmeats was not in accordance with law.

The words "decision upon any appeal" in s. 111 of the Act do not imply that the decision of the appeal referred to means the final decision. The revising Court, therefore, can interfere in revision with interlocutory orders passed by a Magistrate under s. 110 of the Act.

—S. 123.

The accused who relies upon the permission given to him by sub-s. (5) of s. 123 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, has the burden cast upon him to prove that he comes within the terms of the sub-section and is thereby relieved of the liability which is otherwise upon him under sub-s. (7) of the section.

EMPEROR v. DAHYABHAI SAVCHAND.

—S. 123(5)—Exception contained in sub-section—Burden of proof.

In order to bring himself within the exception contained in s. 123 (5) of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, the burden lies upon the accused to prove that his work was not inconsistent with any provisions of the Act or by-laws. This, however, presupposes that a question has arisen as to whether he has committed a breach of any provision of the Act or by-laws. As soon as the Municipality has notice that the accused is going to rely on s. 123(5), the Municipality must allege what provisions of the Act or by-laws they say the accused has broken which disentitles him to rely on the sub-section. When such an allegation is made, the burden is upon the accused to prove that he has not committed the breach of the Act or by-law alleged. Unless, therefore, the Municipality alleges a breach of some specific provision of the Act or by-law, there is no issue on which any question of burden of proof can arise.

MUSSALMAN WAKF ACT, S. 2 (C)—

principal Act. Rule 26 of the Bombay Mussalman Wakf Rules, 1936, provides that the order of sanction shall state the offence in respect of which the accused is to be prosecuted.

In dealing with a case involving breach of the provisions of ss. 3 and 5 of the Mussalman Wakf Act, 1923, the civil Judge expressed in his judgment an opinion that an offence punishable under s. 10 of the Act had been committed and directed the papers to be sent to the Public Prosecutor for taking necessary action against the offender. It was objected that the subsequent proceedings failed for want of sanction:—

Held, that the remarks made by the Judge were sufficient compliance with r. 26 of the Bombay Mussalman Wakf Rules, though it might be better if a formal sanction had been given independently of the judgment.

A mutawalli, who is in possession of property situate within the local limits of the Small Causes Court at Bombay, is bound to furnish the particulars required by s. 3 of the Mussalman Wakf Act, 1923, to the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court at Bombay, although other properties of the wakf may be situate, and those who benefit from the wakf may be resident, outside Bombay or outside British India. The section applies to any property of a wakf within the jurisdiction of the local Court.

The term “wakf” as defined by s. 2(e) of the Mussalman Wakf Act is not confined to dedication of property by a beneficial owner, but includes a dedication by a trustee provided he keeps within the terms of his trust. Hence, such dedication is constituted by persons collecting money on terms which make it charitable in the hands of the trustees who hold it, their subsequent investment of that money in immoveable property, and their declaration of a trust of that immoveable property for the charitable purpose for which it is held.

There cannot be an offence under s. 5 of the Mussalman Wakf Act unless a statement has been delivered under s. 3 of the Act.

NEGLIGENCE—Shipowner—Responsibility of shipowner for health of crew—Illness of crew—Duty of master and Chief Steward—Reasonable and proper care.

The responsibility of a ship-owner in regard to the securing of the health and safety of the crew is in general limited to the exercise of reasonable care, though a higher degree of responsibility may be imposed on him by statute, in which case the duty is generally imposed in mandatory terms.

The plaintiff was serving as a lascar on board the defendants' steamship on a voyage from Calcutta to ports on the east coast of North America and the United Kingdom in September and October, 1933. The plaintiff fell ill near Gibraltar with a bad cold on September 18, 1933. He was given cough mixture by the Chief Steward with the approval of the Master and was put off duty. Subsequently at every port of call the plaintiff was examined by doctors, but as they declared that it was not a hospital case, he could not be removed to a hospital on shore. When the ship arrived at Avonmouth on the return voyage, the doctor diagnosed the plaintiff's illness to be advanced phthisis, and advised his removal to hospital. This was done on November 3, 1933. He was eventually after treatment sent back as a distressed seaman to India, where he was finally discharged. He sued the defendants for the negligence of the Master or the Chief Steward or both for not taking proper care in regard to the illness from which he suffered during the voyage. No breach of any statutory obligation under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, was alleged or proved. The High Court held that the Master and the Chief Steward had failed to take proper care of the plaintiff when they knew that he had a bad cold and that the defendants were therefore responsible for the negligence of their two officers, and awarded Rs. 5,000 as damages to the plaintiff. On appeal by the defendants to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council:—

Held, setting aside the decree of the High Court, that the shipowners were not personally guilty of any neglect or default; that no defects were found in the equipment of the vessel or in regard to the competence of the officers or to the system of working the ship;

that, on the evidence in the case, the Master and Chief Steward did all that was possible for them to do under the circumstances; and that it had not been established that the Master and Chief Steward failed in their duty to the plaintiff and were careless or negligent in the matter of taking reasonable and proper care of him.

Under the law of England shipowners can raise a defence based on the doctrine of common employment to a claim by a seaman against them based on negligence of a fellow servant including in that category the Master of the vessel.

Where the terms of business between a pakka adatia and his constituent were:—"We shall do forward business for four lots of wheat or linseed or one hundred bales of cotton or ten or twelve bars of silver without any deposit. Deposit will be necessary for more business (than this)"—

Held, on the true construction of the terms, that the word "or" was to be strictly construed, and that once the constituent had done business to the limit mentioned in any one of the commodities specified, if he wished to do business in any of the other commodities, he must, so long as the business already done to the limit mentioned was outstanding, pay deposit in respect of the further business.

Contracts effected in different markets for different quantities of particular commodities with different delivery dates, evidenced by separate memoranda, are for all purposes distinct, and the liabilities of the parties thereof in respect of each are separate.

Where there are separate outstanding transactions with different provisions as to initial deposit and margin money, the pakka adatia, if he wants to insist upon the payment of margin, so as to give him a right to close any transaction for non-compliance with the demand, must specify to the constituent in respect of what outstanding transaction the demand is made, and what is the amount of the demand in respect of it. The constituent may wish to comply with the demand in respect of some transactions so as to keep them alive, and not wish to comply with it in regard to others. Where the pakka adatia makes one general demand for an amount of margin money in reference to all the outstanding transactions, he is not entitled to close all those outstanding transactions on the ground that the demand has not been complied with.

Where a pakka adatia wrongfully closes his constituent's outstanding contracts before due dates, the constituent is entitled, owing to the special obligation imposed by custom on the pakka adatia, to close at any time upon instructions before the due dates, and to have an account taken on the footing of the prices prevailing in the market on the date on which the constituent instructs him to close the contracts. *ULFATRAI v. PANCHNAMA—Identification parade—Corroboration—Independent evidence.

A panchnama is merely a record of what a panch sees. The only use to which it can properly be put is that when the panch goes into the witness box and swears to what he saw, the panchnama can be used as a contemporary record to refresh his memory.

If the police want to rely on a panchnama they must call a panch to prove it.

A police-officer is not entitled to give evidence of what the panch told him that he saw, and that is what it comes to if a police-officer is allowed to put in the panchnama. A police witness may state that he held a panchnama and offer to produce the record if the accused asks for it, but he cannot bring it on record in his evidence-in-chief. If the police hold a panchnama, and do not offer to call the panch, an inference may be drawn against them from the fact that the panch is not submitted for cross-examination. The putting in of a panchnama without calling the panch is not only an infringement of the rules of evidence against the admission of hearsay evidence, but it is unfair to the accused, because it enables the police to get the advantage of evidence in corroboration without putting that evidence to the test of cross-examination.

Section 1(2) of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1936, extends the Act even to Native States in India in its application to Parsis, provided the Parsis are subjects of His Majesty.

The expression "Parsi subjects of His Majesty" in the section refers to the political status of such subjects as opposed to their civil status, in other words, to their nationality and allegiance and not to their domicil. The change of domicil does not necessarily involve change of political status of a subject. The words "subject of His Majesty" mean the same thing as "British subject." A British subject, unless a certificate of naturalization in a foreign country has been granted to him, ordinarily means a person who is a natural-born British subject.

PANTHAKY v. PANTHAKY. 43 Bom.L.R. 569.

—S. 29(3)—"Resides"—Interpretation.

The real meaning to be attached to the term "resides", as used in s. 29(3) of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, depends upon the circumstances of each case. If a person resides permanently at a particular place, that place is his or her residence; but the residence need not necessarily be permanent. It is enough for the purposes of the section if the residence is bona fide, with an element of continuity about it, so that even if it is not permanent, it cannot be said to be merely casual or for a temporary or passing purpose.

Common object.

Where three accused produced property which had been stolen on the occasion of a robbery and murder, and at the trial they did not offer any explanation of the possession of the property but merely said that they did not produce it, an inference that they were guilty of robbery would be justified. Further, where the evidence disclosed that the accused belonged to the same village as that of the woman murdered at the time of committing robbery and were known to her, the only possible common intention which could be attributed to them was that they intended to murder her in order to prevent her giving evidence against them. The Court, under such circumstances, would be justified in coming to the conclusion that the accused committed the robbery and that pursuant to their common intention to rob the deceased and avoid detection they had the further intention of murdering her, and that they carried out that intention.

—S. 70—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Sec. 386—Fine, recovery of, by sale of immoveable property of offender—Warrant issued for recovery of fine—Darkhast filed after six years from date of sentence—Limitation.

Section 70 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, is not controlled by s. 386, sub-ss. (1) (b) and (3), of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898. Section 386 of the Criminal Procedure Code deals only with procedure for levying fine imposed under the Indian Penal Code.

The warrant issued by a Court passing a sentence, under s. 386, Criminal Procedure Code, to recover fine from an offender is to be deemed as a decree for certain purposes only, and is executed according to the mode laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, but s. 48, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply to such a warrant.

The period during which such a warrant could be executed is governed by s. 70 of the Indian Penal Code and not by the Indian Limitation Act. A darkhast filed after six years to recover fine by sale of immoveable property of the offender is, therefore, time-barred under s. 70 of the Indian Penal Code.

Section 373, Indian Penal Code, 1860, is not a counterpart of s. 372 of the Code. Section 373 deals with obtaining possession, and not merely with obtaining possession from a third person. Because an offence under s. 372, which is aimed at disposing of a girl, necessarily involves two parties to the transaction, it does not follow that an offence under s. 373, which is aimed at obtaining possession, must involve two parties.

Where a girl aged seventeen years and a half went with the accused voluntarily and there was nothing to show that the accused had exercised any control over her or prevented her from doing anything she liked:—

Held, that the accused did not obtain possession of the girl within the meaning of s. 373, Indian Penal Code, and he could not, therefore, be convicted of an offence under that section.

mation by the complainant the accused relied on the protection afforded by exception 1 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860 :—

Held, (1) that exception 1 had no application, because assuming that the newspaper article gave a substantially correct account of the resolutions, it could not be said that their publication was for the public good ;

(2) that excessive publication took the case out of the privileges conferred by exceptions 9 and 10 of the section, for it could not be said that it was necessary for the protection of the interest of the accused or other members of the community that the resolutions should be published in a newspaper.

Transactions of mortgage between a legal adviser and client to secure the repayment of money advanced at the time are not ordinarily subjected by Courts to the same jealous scrutiny as, for instance, a gift from a client to a legal adviser, or purchases or sales at under-value between a legal adviser and client. If the money is sorely needed and is paid, the mortgagor has its benefit, the rate of interest is reasonable, and the terms neither excessive nor onerous, the transaction stands as a valid mortgage between the parties.

Act (XI of 1890); Sec. 3—Agents of Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Bombay—Appointment by Commissioner of Police, Bombay, as additional Police Officer—Power of such agent to arrest.

The complainant, an agent of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Bombay, was appointed as an additional Police Officer for the purposes of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1890, by the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, under s. 9(1)(a) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, as it stood in 1934. Subsequently in 1935, the power of appointing additional Police Officers became vested in the Government of Bombay. In 1938, the Government again delegated the power to the Commissioner of Police, Bombay. In 1940, the complainant arrested the accused, a hack victoria driver, for causing unnecessary pain or suffering to his horse by overloading the carriage. It was contended that the appointment of the complainant as additional Police Officer had lapsed because at one period since his appointment the Commissioner of Police ceased to have power to appoint additional Police Officers :—

Held, overruling the contention, that the appointment of the complainant as an additional Police Officer for the purposes of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1890, was for life or until the same was revoked by competent authority, and as it had not been revoked, the complainant could arrest without warrant under s. 33(1) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902.

—S. 27 as amended by the City of Bombay Police (Amendment) Act (Bom. XIV of 1938)—Order of externment passed by Commissioner of Police—Commissioner of Police whether executive officer or Court subordinate to High Court—Validity of such order—Whether High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision—Application for revision whether lies to High Court—Practice.

In passing an externment order under s. 27 of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, as amended by the City of Bombay Police (Amendment) Act, 1938, the Commissioner of Police acts as an executive officer and not as a Court subordinate to the High Court. The High Court, therefore, has no jurisdiction to interfere in revision with such an order. The order can only be called in question by a Court on the grounds mentioned in s. 27(7) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, or under the circumstances referred to in Emperor v. Anna Vithoba (33 Bom. L. R. 1164) and Emperor v. Yarmahomed Ahmedkhan (40 Bom. L. R. 483) as for instance, when an attempt is made to impose a penalty for breach of the order.

An application for revision of an externment order under s. 27 of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, does not lie direct to the High Court.

EMPEROR v. ALLADATTA. 43 Bom.L.R. 702.

POLICE ACT (CITY), S. 27(2A)—Commissioner of Police—Removal of certain persons out of city of Bombay—Unauthorised return of externee—Offence—Sentence—Enhancement of sentence.

On a charge being preferred under s. 128 of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, against a person who has been externed and has disobeyed the order, it is competent for the Court to consider whether the order of externment made by the Commissioner of Police was legal, that is to say, whether the case fell within the terms of s. 27(2A) of the Act.

If there are more than two convictions for separate offences the case falls within s. 27(2A), irrespective of the fact whether the offences were tried together at one trial under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code or tried separately; though it would normally be harsh to make an order of externment when all the offences have been committed at one and the same time and as part of the same transaction, if the Commissioner has nothing else to go upon.

The Commissioner of Police, in deciding whether to make an externment order in a case falling within s. 27(2A), is acting in an administrative, and not in a judicial, capacity. It is, therefore, not open to the Court, in dealing with a case of breach of an order of externment made under the sub-section, to consider the reasons which induced the Commissioner to make the order of externment.

Under s. 128 all that the Court can do is to consider whether the order of the Commissioner of Police was legal; and if it was, whether it has been broken; and, if so, what is the proper punishment.

An order of externment under s. 27(2A) is made in the public interest, and it is a serious offence to ignore that order. The mere fact that it has only been ignored once is not a good reason for imposing a light sentence.

The age of the accused is only relevant in passing a sentence where the accused is very young or very old.

Where the accused proves conclusively that he had some reason for coming to Bombay unconnected with any criminal intent, it is a matter which may be taken into account in imposing the sentence.

The period of time during which the accused has remained in custody is a matter to which the Court always pays some regard in imposing a sentence.

A conviction under the Bombay Children Act, 1924, prior to its amendment by Act VII of 1936, can be taken into account in passing an externment order under s. 27(2A) of the

POLICE ACT (CITY), S. 27(2A)—(Contd.)

City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, though such an action is contrary to the spirit of the amended Bombay Children Act.

The convictions referred to in s. 27(2A) of the City of Bombay Police Act need not be convictions arising in the course of separate transactions or convictions passed on separate dates. Thus the offence of house-breaking under s. 457 of the Indian Penal Code and the offence of theft under s. 380 committed in the course of the same transaction and punished separately amount to two convictions and not one within the meaning of s. 27(2A).

Per Beaumont C. J. The Legislature in enacting s. 27(2A) did not contemplate that the practice of some Magistrates of convicting accused persons on more than one count in respect of the same transaction would involve two convictions within the meaning of that section. The obvious intent of that section seems to be that a man is not to be externed under it unless on more than two occasions he has shown that he does not intend to live within the law.

POSSESSION — Tenant-in-common — Adverse possession—Evidence of ouster necessary—Decree—Final or declaratory—Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Secs. 11 and 47.

Possession of immovable property by one tenant-in-common or joint tenant is possession of all, and is not to be regarded as adverse to other tenants-in-common or joint tenants in absence of evidence of ouster.

A Hindu died leaving two daughters A and B who inherited his property. B died leaving her husband C and a minor son, the plaintiff, C brought a suit in 1924 against A for partition of lands comprising a survey number. The suit was decreed in his favour but the decree was not executed and became time-barred. The plaintiff brought a suit in 1937 against A's two sons, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, A being dead, for partition of the same survey number. Defendants contended that the suit was barred by limitation, barred under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and barred as res judicata :—

Held, (1) that, as the parties were tenants-in-common and there was no evidence that the plaintiff was ousted from the property, the plaintiff's title to the survey number was not barred by limitation ;

(2) that the decree of 1924 directed that C was entitled to partition, but as the survey number paid land revenue to Government, the matter rested with the Collector to effect partition, and that whether the decree was regarded as a declaratory decree or as a final decree, there was nothing for the parties to do in execution, and therefore, s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, did not apply ;

(3) that, if the decree of 1924 was a final decree deciding the rights of the parties, there was nothing to prevent the Collector from performing his duties by partitioning the property, and if it was a declaratory decree it was not a decree finally decided within the meaning of s. 11, Civil Procedure Code, and that section was not a bar to the filing of a fresh suit.

SALE OF GOODS ACT (III of 1930), S. 21
—Sale of unascertained goods—Contract com-appropriated—Payment of price does not affect such completion—Liquor—Sale of liquor—Bottling of liquor after completion of sale—Deliaffect completion of contract—Bombay Abkari Act (Bom. V of 1878), Sec. 45(c)—License to sell country liquor—Breach of condition of license.

The expression 'specific goods' as used in
s. 21 of the Indian Sale of Goods Act, 1930, necessarily means goods capable of being ascertained with certainty—certum est quod certum reddi potest. A sale of some specified quantity of liquor out of a store-house or cask is not capable of ascertainment until it is removed or separated. The words 'specific goods' will, according to their natural interpretation, mean goods the delivery of which can be demanded in specie.

The accused was a vendor of country liquor under a license, condition No. 2 of which prohibited him from selling liquor at any place other than the licensed premises. The accused sent round his servants to tout for customers and canvass orders. The servants secured orders and carried them to the accused's shop, where liquor was measured out in fulfilment of the orders, and it was supplied to the customers at their respective places of residence and the price of liquor sold was recovered there. The accused was prosecuted for an offence punishable under s. 45(c) of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, for a breach of a condition of his license for selling liquor outside the licensed premises:—

Held, applying the provisions of the Indian Sale of Goods Act, 1930, (1) that the contract to sell some liquor out of a big cask containing much larger quantity, the required quantity not being separated or bottled, was not a contract of sale of specific goods within the meaning of s. 21 of the Act;

(2) that a contract of sale of a small quantity of liquor stored in bulk could more properly be regarded as a contract for sale of unascertained goods, and, under s. 23(1) of the Act, the ownership would not pass till the quantity ordered by the purchaser was ascertained and appropriated, which might be done by the bottling of the liquor;

(3) that in view of the provisions of
s. 23(2) it was immaterial that the delivery of the goods took place at the house of the purchasers;

(4) that in the present case the servant of the seller could very well be treated as a bailee for the purpose of the transmission to the buyer, and delivery to such servant, which admittedly took place in the licensed premises, would be effective delivery to the buyer himself;

(5) that it was not material for the purpose of the charge to ascertain whether the price of the liquor was paid in the shop, for the completion of the sale did not depend upon payment of the price of the goods sold;

SALE OF GOODS ACT, S. 21—(Contd.)

(6) that therefore the sales in question were completed within the licensed premises and the accused was not guilty of the offence with which he was charged.

SEPARATION DEED—Similarity to commercial contract—Covenant in deed that neither party shall have any claim against the other—Petition by wife for judicial separation and alimony—Whether such petition maintainable—Wife's costs.

The Courts should give full effect to agreements of the nature of separation deeds. Such agreements are formed, construed and dissolved and are enforced on precisely the same principles as any commercial agreement. Courts will not enforce stipulations in such agreements which are illegal either as being opposed to positive law or public policy.

Petitioner and respondent, wife and husband, who were Christians, entered into a separation deed on September 25, 1934, under which the respondent made all the payments he was required to make. A clause in the deed provided—"Neither party from this day shall have any claim against the other party in respect of any matter or account." The petitioner filed a suit in 1941 against the respondent for judicial separation and alimony on the grounds of alleged cruelty before the deed of separation and desertion:—

Held, dismissing the petition, that the separation deed was a conclusive answer to the allegations of cruelty and desertion; that, as the separation deed was acted upon for seven years and no attempt had been made to set it aside, the Court could not ignore it; and that as long as the deed stood it could not be maintained that the respondent had deserted the petitioner without reasonable cause.

SOCIETIES REGISTRATION ACT (XXI of 1860)—Society—Promotion of education—Position of such society whether akin to club or joint stock company—Suit, maintainability of, for wrong done to society—Suit by minority of members in their own name.

The position of a society registered under the Societies Registration Act, 1860, is like that of a club or a joint stock company. In order to redress a wrong done to the society or to recover moneys or damages alleged to be due to the society, the action should be brought by the society itself. Where the persons against whom the relief is sought are in majority and control the society and do not permit an action to be brought in the name of the society, the minority of members can bring an action in their own names. But they cannot have a larger right to relief than the society itself would have if it had brought the action, and cannot complain of acts which are valid if done with the approval of the majority of the members, or are capable of being confirmed by the majority. The cases in which the minority can maintain such an action are confined to those in which the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or beyond the powers of the company.

A society was registered in 1932, under the Societies Registration Act, 1860, to promote the education of boys and girls hailing from Southern India. At a general meeting of the society called on December 4, 1938, eight persons were elected to form the managing committee and they co-opted one more member in April, 1939. The managing committee resolved to borrow money for the purpose of erecting a school building. The plaintiff, who was a member of the society, challenged the advisability and legality of the acts of the managing committee. On a requisition being sent by eighteen members of the society, a general meeting was convened on October 15, 1939, at which the election of the managing committee and their acts were validated. The plaintiff filed a suit on behalf of himself and other members of the society, except the defendants who were the nine members of the managing committee whose appointment and acts were confirmed by the general meeting held on October 15, 1939. The plaintiff sought for a declaration that the loans raised by the defendants were unauthorised and prayed that a managing committee be constituted under the direction of the Court:—

Held, that, as the acts of the defendants which were challenged were in respect of allegthat it was not competent to the plaintiff, either alone or representing himself and the other members of the society other than the defendants, to bring a suit without ascertaining the wishes of the society; and that, therefore, the suit as framed was not maintainable and the Court had no jurisdiction to try it in the absence of the society.

To validate a mortgage by an administrator, it must first be proved that the mortgage was executed in the due course of administration, and, secondly, that he was entitled to mortgage the general estate.

An executor (unless expressly authorised by the will) or an administrator is not entitled to continue the business of the deceased except for the purposes of winding it up. If he continues it for any other purpose than winding up, it is deemed to be continued at his own risk.

The Parsis in the mofussil are, in the absence of any statutory provision, governed in the first place by usage, and, secondly, by the rules of equity and good conscience, i.e. by the general principles of English law applicable to a similar set of circumstances.

Accordingly, a Parsi guardian, whether de facto or de jure, has no authority to alienate the estate of a ward except with the permission of the Court.

for supplying toddy to shops, tree-foot booths, hawkers or for domestic consumption, and to indicate that they may not be issued for any other purpose. —S. 53A—Part-performance—Limits of rule of part-performance—Agreement to lease—Present demise—Registration—Indian Registration Act (XVI of 1908), Secs. 17(1)(d), 17(2)(v).

The first requirement of s. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is that there should be a writing signed by the transferor or on his behalf from which the terms necessary to constitute the transfer can be ascertained with reasonable certainty. The words "signed on his behalf" in the section must mean presumably signed by a person who has authority to bind or represent the transferor.

The third clause of the section makes it a condition that the transferee has performed or is willing to perform his part of the contract. The section is primarily intended for the benefit of the transferee. When the section speaks of the performance of his part or willingness to perform his part, it means complete performance or complete willingness so far as he is concerned.

The section debars the transferor from exercising rights which he would have apart from the agreement. There is, however, an exception to this disablement in the words "other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract." It is clear that the transferor can in any case derive no rights from this section which are inconsistent with the conditions subject to which the section comes into operation. As it is a condition precedent that the transferee shall have performed his part of the contract or should be willing to perform his part of the contract, the material time being obviously the time when the section is sought to be made use of, it follows that a suit for damages for breach of a contract can never be founded upon the section.

The Borough Municipality of Ahmedabad sold the right to occupy their vegetable market for a period of three years at an auction, one of the conditions of which was that the successful bidder was to pass a registered rent-note at his own expense. The defendant's predecessor was the successful bidder, who at the end of the auction signed the conditions of auction, which were also signed by the Chairman of the Standing Committee who held the auction. The sale was in due course adopted by the Standing Committee and adopted by the General Body of the Municipality. The bidder went into possession of the market and paid two months' rent in advance. When called upon to pay the estimated cost of getting a rent-note executed and registered, he took no notice of the demand and also of the reminder that was sent to him subsequently. He still continued to occupy the market and paid the rent regularly till he died. His widow intimated to the Municipality that the contract was at an end and offered to hand over possession of the market to the Municipality, which she later did. The Municipality then sued to recover damages for breach of the contract after forfeiting the deposit, relying on s. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 :—

Held, dismissing the suit, (1) that the conditions necessary for the coming into operation of s. 53A were not satisfied in the case,

(2) that, apart from s. 53A, there was a present demise of the market, and that the contract contained in the writings relied on by the Municipality required registration under s. 17(1)(d) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908;

(3) that the whole case of the plaintiff implied that there was an agreement by way of lease, and not merely an agreement to execute a lease at a later date such as would come under s. 17(2)(v) of the Indian Registration Act.

—Statutory charge—Vendor's lien—Agreement giving up claim to refusal of consideration money on redemption of mortgage.

The plaintiffs, who had mortgaged their land, sold, under a registered deed, a portion of it to defendant No. 1, for Rs. 3,000, which sum was to be spent in redeeming the mortgage, and defendant No. 1 was to take possession of the land sold to him and to deliver rest of the land to plaintiffs. The mortgage deed provided that if there was any balance left out of Rs. 3,000 after redemption it was to be given to plaintiffs, and if the sum was found insufficient to pay off the mortgagee the plaintiffs were to make the shortage good. On the next day there was another agreement between the parties, which was in writing but was not registered, under which the plaintiffs gave up their claim to any balance that might be left after paying off the mortgage and defendant No. 1 undertook to redeem the mortgage whatever it cost. Defendant No. 1 next sued to redeem the mortgage, and got a decree without having to pay any money for redemption. The plaintiffs then sued to recover the amount of Rs. 3,000 less expenses incurred by defendant No. 1, contending that the second deed not having been registered was inadmissible in evidence:—

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT, S. 55

Held, negating the contention and dismissing the suit, (1) that the statutory charge under s. 55(4)(b) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, being on the property sold, i.e. the equity of redemption, could not materialise, inasmuch as there was an implied contract to the contrary, viz. that the price was to be paid on redemption and not before;

(2) that it was extremely doubtful whether the statutory provision would operate to give the plaintiffs a charge on the land after redemption;

(3) that even assuming that it could, the charge would only arise when the ownership of the land passed to defendant No. 1, i.e. on redemption of the mortgage, but before that time there was a contract to the contrary, viz. the second agreement, by reason of which no charge for the balance of the price could arise, since the claim to that balance had been abandoned;

(4) that the second agreement did not therefore require registration, because it did not operate to extinguish any right or interest to or in the land, plaintiffs at that time having no such right or interest.

SHANKAR v. GOTIRAM. 43 Bom.L.R. 1014.

—S. 69—Deed of mortgage—Power of sale—Effect and construction of clause containing such power—Provision to buy in property by mortgagee at auction sale—Suit by mortgagor to restrain mortgagee from exercising power of sale—Expiry of mortgage—Mortgagor bound to redeem—Injunction.

The expression "power of sale" is a well-known expression in conveyancing. The words "power of sale," as used in s. 69(c) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, refer to a clause to be expressly included in a deed of mortgage. They must therefore be understood to mean what is ordinarily known and understood in conveyancing by that expression.

A power of sale includes all steps which are necessary to be taken in that connection. In order to make the power bad words must be pointed out in s. 69 which render the whole power invalid according to law.

Where a party contends that a clause conferring a power of sale on the mortgagee restricts in any way the liberty of the parties to enter into a contract, the burden is on him to show that the words of the section prevent an agreement between the parties as embodied in the document.

A power to sell necessarily includes a power to postpone the sale. It is a power to sell either now or at a later date.

A power to buy in, or rescind or vary any contract of sale, is not bad as against the provisions of s. 69. The expression "buy in" contained in a power of sale is never intended to give the mortgagee that right. The power is used so that in effect the party at whose instance the auction is held takes the property out of the auction, should the highest bid be inadequate in price.

After a mortgage debt has become due, it is not competent to the mortgagor to file a suit to restrain the mortgagee from exercising the power of sale contained in the mortgage deed, without first offering to redeem and tendering the amount in Court.

The relief by way of injunction is always discretionary. The Court will always be slow to grant such a relief to a party who admits that he has committed a breach of the contract and at the same time wants to prevent the opposite party from enforcing his rights under the contract. The more so, in a case where the contract between the parties gives rise to a claim for damages in case the power of sale under the contract is exercised improperly or irregularly.

In 1927 R (father of defendant No. 1) borrowed a sum of Rs. 1000 from Government as tagai allowance and made the amount a charge on his land No. 5/2, for the improvement of which the loan was taken, and offered his other lands Nos. 381, 382 and 124 as collateral security. In 1929 R mortgaged lands Nos. 381 and 382 to defendant No. 3. On January 25, 1932, R sold lands Nos. 5/2 and 124 to the plaintiff who kept Rs. 1000 out of the purchase money with himself and paid off the tagai loan with that money. Four days before the sale, i.e., on January 21, 1932, defendant No. 2, who held a money decree against R, attached land No. 5/2 in execution of his money decree and at a Court-sale which followed purchased the land himself. In 1935, the plaintiff sued for a declaration that the amount of tagai loan repaid by him was a charge on lands Nos. 5/2, 381 and 382, and for recovery of the amount by sale of the lands:—

Held, (1) that if the plaintiff came within the terms of s. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, he would have the same rights as Government not only against defendant No. 1, who borrowed the money from Government but also against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who derived their rights from defendant No. 1;

(2) that the plaintiff did not fall within the scope of the section, because there was in fact no mortgage to Government but only a statutory charge on the lands in favour of Government;

(3) that inasmuch as part of the consideration for sale of land 5/2 was retained by the plaintiff for the discharge of incumbrances on the land, that money should be regarded as the money of R and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to subrogation under the first part of the section;

(4) that the plaintiff could not come under the third paragraph of the section, because there was no registered agreement giving him the right of subrogation;

(5) that the plaintiff was not entitled to a personal decree against the defendants by reason of the equitable principle enunciated in s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, since the repayment of the tagai loan to Government was to be regarded as the act of the vendor R and not the act of the plaintiff purchaser, and even if there was a payment by the plaintiff within the meaning of the section, it was a payment which he was bound to make under the terms of his agreement with R and it was not open to him to say that it was a payment which some other person was bound to make;

(6) that the plaintiff's suit was misconceived and that his only legal remedy was to sue his vendor, defendant No. 1, for damages.

The plaintiff, his brother, father and uncle (defendant No. 2) were members of a joint Hindu family having a family business. The share of the plaintiff's branch in the business was ten annas and that of defendant No. 2 six annas. After the death of the plaintiff's father a partition of the assets of the business was effected and the business was taken over by defendant No. 2. The plaintiff's father was interested in two religious charities and it was decided at the time of the partition that the two branches of the family should provide Rs 10,000 for each of the charities according to their shares in the business. Rs. 2,000 having been already provided for one of the charities before the partition, the plaintiff's branch had to find Rs. 5,000 for that charity and Rs. 6,250 for the other charity. The plaintiff, thereupon, drew two hundis, dated December 1, 1916, for Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 6,250 respectively, on defendant No. 1 bank payable to bearer. Each of the hundis was headed with the name of the charity concerned under the word 'credit,' thereby showing the charity as the party of account in whose favour it was intended. The hundis were taken to defendant No. 1 by defendant No. 2, and defendant No. 1 credited the two sums in the names of the respective charities. On February 10, 1920, the two sums amounted to Rs. 15,732-15-9 with interest, and on that date at the instance of defendant No. 2 Rs. 15,700 were credited to defendant No. 2's overdraft account with defendant No. 1, and the balance of Rs. 32-15-9 was paid to defendant No. 2, and the account in the names of the charities was closed. Defendant No. 2 opened two new accounts in the names of the two charities in his money-lending business. He was adjudicated insolvent on January 4, 1926. The plaintiff came to know in 1929 of defendant No. 1 setting off the charity monies against the overdraft account of defendant No. 2, and he thereupon sued defendant No. 1 to refund to the charities the money received by it in reduction of defendant No. 2's overdraft on the footing that this application of the money was a breach of trust on the part of defendant No. 2 of which defendant No. 1 had notice and by which it had profited:—

R. 138.

Held, (1) that defendant No. 1 in appropriating the charity money to itself took a transfer of property which in equity it was bound to restore to the charities, as it failed to prove that the transfer was within the authority of defendant No. 2 and not a breach of trust by him;

(2) that, even if any authority was given by the plaintiff to invest the trust funds in defendant No. 2's business, the discharge of the overdraft account of defendant No. 2 did not come within the scope or intention of that authority;

(3) that art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and not art. 36, governed the plaintiff's suit as the claim against defendant No. 1 was not that a breach of trust was committed by it but that it took the trust property by a transaction with defendant No. 2 which was a breach of trust on his part and with notice that it was a breach of trust;

(4) that the period of limitation ran from the date in 1929 when the plaintiff came to know that the money of the charities was set off against defendant No. 2's debt to defendant No. 1 upon his overdraft.

V of 1879), Sec. 37—"Which are not the property of individuals"—"Are hereby declared to be the property of Government"—Interpretation.*

A talukdari wanta in Gujarat is neither an alienated nor an unalienated holding. It is a peculiar estate which continues to be the property of its holder under the British rule as it was in pre-British dynasties from ancient times. It was subjected to legislation from time to time.

A talukdar is neither an inamdar nor an occupant of his lands. His wanta is a freehold and not a leasehold. What was paid formerly as tribute and peshkush as a political levy is now converted into a fixed amount in lump as a revenue payment, but his proprietary right over all the lands comprised in the wanta was affirmed at the commencement of the British rule and has not since been taken away by any legal process.

The existence of a highway or a public road is consistent with the ownership of a private person in the soil.

There is a presumption that a highway, or waste lands adjoining thereto, belong to the owners of the soil of the adjoining lands. The site of the road must be presumed to belong to the adjoining proprietors half to one and half to the other up to the middle of the road. Where the property is bounded by a road or a river, the boundary, even if given as the road or the river, is the middle of the road or the river as the case may be.

Hence, the use of the road by the public for passage as of right is not inconsistent with the proprietorship of a private individual to the soil of the road. A road, therefore, cannot be said to be the property of Government merely because it is used by the public.

The owner of land abutting on a non-navigable river is entitled to the soil in the bed of the river ad medium filum aquae.

The words "which are not the property of individuals" in s. 37 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, are not confined in their application to "all lands wherever situated" but also apply to roads, bridges, beds of the sea, lakes, tanks, etc. Similarly, the words "except in so far as any rights of such persons may be established" govern all the previous expressions and not merely lands.

The words "are hereby declared to be the property of Government" in s. 37 of the Code do not take away rights which existed when the section became law, e.g., wanta lands.

Held, on the evidence, that the Thakor of Amod is the full and absolute proprietor of half of the river-bed which is bounded on one side by his wanta lands, and of roads up to the middle line where wanta lands abut on them on one side, as also of roads, tanks and other waste areas which are within or bounded by his wanta lands.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT (VIII of 1923), S. 10—Notice of accident—Trivial injury—Trivial injury developing serious consequences—Notice when to be given—Notice to co-employee whether sufficient—Finding that evidence showed sufficient cause for not giving notice whether question of law—High Court—Practice.

Under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, it is not necessary for a workman to give notice of every trivial accident to which he may be subject.

A workman is, however, bound to give notice of any accident which is not trivial, and it is not for him to decide whether it is likely to give rise to a claim for compensation. If an accident, too trivial in the first instance to require notice, subsequently develops serious consequences, the obligation to give notice as soon as practicable would be met by giving notice when the consequences ensue.

Notice to a fellow workman is not sufficient under s. 10(2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT, S. 10—(Contd.)

The question whether there was any evidence before the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation on which he could hold that there was sufficient cause for not giving notice of an accident under s. 10 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, is a question of law on which the High Court can interfere in appeal. AHMEDABAD VICTORIA IRON WORKS LTD. v. MAGANLAL. 43 Bom.L.R. 611.

—S. 12—Selling agents undertaking to take delivery of goods at manufacturer's godown—Selling agents employing contractor for transport of goods—Contractor employing workmen to remove goods from godown—Accidental death of workman in course of such work—Whether claim for compensation against selling agents sustainable—Construction of Act in light of cases decided under English Workmen's Compensation Act, whether desirable.

The sole selling agents of a mill company manufacturing cloth, under an agreement with the company, undertook to take delivery of the goods at the company's godowns. The selling agents employed a firm, of whom one N was a partner, to transport the goods from the company's godowns to their shop. On one occasion when the selling agents desired to transport some bales from the company's godowns to their shop, N's firm hired a lorry from a lorry-owner, B who was a cleaner on the lorry was engaged by N to help to remove the bales from the godown and to stack them in the lorry. In the course of this work B was accidentally killed. On a claim for compensation made by B's mother against the selling agents under s. 12 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923 :—

Held, that on the construction of the agreement the work which was being done by the contractor, i.e. N's firm, at the time when the accident occurred was work ordinarily done by the selling agents, and therefore the selling agents were liable to pay compensation under s. 12 of the Act.

To construe an Indian Act in the light of cases decided under an English Act differently worded is much more likely to cause confusion than to render assistance. There is no justification for incorporating into the administration of the Indian Act difficulties which arise on the construction of the English Act.

THE BOMBAY AGRICULTURAL DEBTORS RELIEF ACT, 1939.

THE Bombay Legislature has passed the Bombay Agricultural Debtors' Relief Act. It has received the assent of the Governor-General on January 19, 1940. It is to come into force on a notification to be issued by the Provincial Government which may be expected before the expiry of the Small Holders Relief Act.

The object of the Act, as stated in the preamble, is mainly the relief of the agricultural debtors. This is intended to be achieved by a twofold method—by freeing the debtor from his existing debts and by placing impediments in his way of contracting fresh debts. All the debts of the debtors are to be brought into hotchpotch and the total liability is to be ascertained. He is to be freed from this liability by asking him to discharge it by easy instalments whenever this course is within his means or by declaring him insolvent and giving him a discharge. The Act makes it difficult for him to secure fresh loans as his property will be charged even with unsecured debts under s. 54, and as he is prevented from alienating his property under s. 65. The object and the method to achieve it are good, but so long as no provision is made to meet the daily needs of the agricultural debtor the provisions of the Act will make the plight of the debtor worse than before.

The Act extends its benefits to those agricultural debtors who hold lands used for agricultural purposes, who cultivate them personally, and whose income from non-agricultural resources does not exceed Rs. 300 or twenty per cent. of the agricultural income whichever is greater. The limit of Rs. 300 is increased to Rs. 500 in the case of a joint Hindu family. Moreover, the total amount of the debts of the debtor must not exceed Rs. 15,000 on January 1, 1939. Hence a debtor who does not hold land but maintains himself by agricultural labour is excluded from the benefit of the Act. Similarly, a person who gets his land cultivated through his tenants will not get the benefit of the Act. It may be stated here that both these persons are agriculturists according to the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the object of which also is the relief of agricultural debtors. The Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is repealed by s. 85 of the Act.

The Act seems to be based on the assumption that all agriculturists who cultivate their lands personally are debtors. The idea seems to be that such agriculturists are never creditors. Had this not been the idea, the Act would not have made such harsh provisions against creditors. As a fact such agriculturists constitute the majority of creditors and will be hard hit by the Act. These agriculturists have by sheer dint of labour and thrift laid by and advanced money to their fellow agriculturists in times of need.

The Act appears to be directed against private money-lenders. It exempts from its operation debts due to Government, local authorities, co-operative societies, etc. (vide s. 3). Why should such distinction exist if the sole object of the Act was to relieve agricultural debtors of their indebtedness? The distinction made is unjustifiable.

The scheme of the Act is to fix the total liability of the debtor. This is to be done through the medium of what are called Debt Adjustment Boards. The Boards are to come into existence under the Act and are to supersede the civil Courts. They are to go into the history and merits of the transactions between the debtor and his creditors and after determining the total liability by going through several elaborate processes they are to make an award which is to be executed. The Act contains special provisions as regards insolvency and miscellaneous matters.

The Act runs athwart legal ideas and principles. It nullifies decrees pronounced by competent Courts and re-opens the liabilities concluded by such decrees. It defeats legitimate expectations of persons who lent or happened to lend money to agriculturists—expectations which they were well entitled to entertain under the then existing law.

The Act benefits agricultural debtors at the cost of their creditors. It reduces the amounts found due to creditors. To adjudicate upon an amount as being due is one thing and to reduce the amount which is adjudged as being due is another thing. It amounts to taking money out of the pocket of the creditor and putting it into that of the debtor.

On examining some of the provisions relating to the determination of the amounts as being due from the debtor to the creditor one is convinced of the truth of the above remarks. In determining the amount as being due the Debt Adjustment Board is to inquire into the history and merits of the case and is to take accounts of the dealings between the parties from their commencement. In doing this neither a decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction nor a settlement between the parties comes in the way.

Section 42 describes the mode of taking accounts. Sub-section (2), sub-cl. (e), (i), relates to the taking of the accounts of transactions entered into prior to January 1, 1931. It runs as follows :—

“In the case of transactions which were commenced before the 1st January 1931, the Board shall take accounts in accordance with the provisions of this section up to 1st January 1931, provided that in the account of interest there shall be debited to the debtor yearly interest on the balance of the principal for the time being at 12 per cent. per annum or at the agreed rate whichever is lower. On taking such accounts, the amounts found due on 1st January 1931 in respect of the principal as well as in respect of the interest shall, each separately, be reduced by 40 per cent. notwithstanding that a decree or order of a civil court has been passed in respect of any such amount or portion thereof, provided that if such transactions had commenced after 1st January 1930, the reduction in both the amount of the principal and interest found due shall be 30 per cent. The amounts so reduced shall be taken to represent the amount due in respect of the principal and interest on 1st January 1931. Separate accounts shall thereafter be taken of the principal and interest up to the date of the application provided that the interest shall be calculated at the rate agreed to between the parties or 9 per cent. per annum whichever is lower ;”

There is one more relevant portion of s. 46. It is as regards how far decretal debts are binding. Sub-section (2) of s. 46 is as follows :—

“In so far as such decree or order is in respect of transactions entered into before 1st January 1931, the amount of principal and interest found due on 1st January 1931 shall be reduced by 40 per cent. as provided in paragraph (i) and the rate of interest shall be modified as provided in paragraph (iii) of clause (e) of sub-section (2) of section 42, provided that if the said transactions commenced after 1st January 1930 the reduction shall be by 30 per cent.”

The question is why such reduction in the amounts found due is to be made. One fails to understand any principle justifying this reduction. The reduction is dependent upon whether the transactions commenced before or after January 1, 1931. There will be reduction if the transactions have commenced prior to January 1, 1931, and there will be no reduction if they have commenced after the said date. Wherever there is reduction it will be forty per cent. or thirty per cent. according as transactions have commenced before or after January 1, 1940.

The above provisions lead to absurd results. Let us suppose that A has borrowed a loan of Rs. 100 from X on December 31, 1929, that B an equal amount from Y on January 2, 1930, and that C an equal amount from Z on January 2, 1931. Let us further suppose that the rate of interest agreed upon between the parties in respect of each of these debts is nine per cent. per annum and that no interest has as yet been paid by any of the debtors. Now the principal amounts and the interest thereon in the first two debts will be reduced by forty per cent. and thirty per cent. respectively, so that the amounts that will be found due on January 1, 1931, by way of principal and interest in each will be respectively Rs. 60 and Rs. 5-6-0 and Rs. 70 and Rs. 6-5-0. There will be no reduction in respect of the third debt. Thereafter a further account is to be taken of these debts up to the institution of the application for adjustment debts. Taking the date of application to be January 1, 1941, the amounts that will be found due on that date will be respectively Rs. 119-9-0, Rs. 139-7-0, and Rs. 190. Here we find that though X's loan is older than that of Z he gets Rs. 119-9-0 and Z gets Rs. 190, and though Y's loan is later in time by two days than the loan of X he gets Rs. 139-7-0 and X gets Rs. 119-9-0.

The injustice is more glaring in the case of a debt which is merged in a decree. Let us suppose that X has obtained a decree on January 1, 1931, for Rs. 200 in respect of a loan of Rs. 100 advanced prior to January 1, 1930. Let us further assume that the decree awards interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum on the principal amount of Rs. 100 and that nothing has been recovered under the decree as yet. So the amount that will be due on January 1, 1941, under the decree will be Rs. 260 (leaving aside costs). Now according to the above method of determining the amount Rs. 120 will be found due on January 1, 1931—Rs. 60 by way of principal and Rs. 60 by way of interest. And the decree-holder X will be entitled to that amount only even on January 1, 1941, supposing this to be the date of application for adjustment because X is not entitled to more than double the amount of his principal (vide s. 42(2) (g)).

Under such circumstances it is not unnatural if the decree-holder thinks that he had made a mistake in advancing a loan to an agricultural debtor prior to January 1, 1931, and in obtaining a decree in respect of it.

The misfortune of the creditor does not stop here. The amount found due after taking account is further to be scaled down. Section 52(1) provides that all debts shall be scaled down. The manner of scaling down is detailed in the next three sub-clauses. The section is as follows :—

“52. (1) Notwithstanding any law, custom, contract, or decree of a court to the contrary, all debts payable by a debtor at the commencement of this Act shall be scaled down in the manner hereinafter provided.

(2) If all the debts due by a debtor are unsecured, such debts as are found due on taking accounts under this Act shall be scaled down pro rata to the value of the paying capacity of the debtor.

(3) If all the debts due by a debtor are secured debts, and the total amount of such debts found due on taking accounts under this Act is more than eighty per cent. of the value of the property belonging to the debtor, such debts shall be scaled down pro rata to eighty per cent. of the value of such property.

(4) If the debts due by a debtor are both secured and unsecured, and if the total amount of the secured debts due on taking accounts under this Act is more than eighty per cent. of the value of the property on which such debts are secured, the secured debts shall be scaled down pro rata to eighty per cent. of the value of the property on which such debts are secured and the unsecured debts shall be scaled down pro rata to eighty per cent. of the value of the other property belonging to the debtor over which no debts are secured.”

The whole section though simple in language is terse and difficult to understand in all its bearings. We shall illustrate the clause which relates to unsecured debts. According to it the amount of the unsecured debts found due is to be scaled down pro rata to the value of the paying capacity of the debtor. Section 51 provides the manner in which the paying capacity of the debtor is to be assessed. It will be in this case the aggregate amount consisting of eighty per cent. of the value of immoveable property and eighty per cent. of the value of moveable property. So in the case of the decree-holder in our illustration the amount of Rs. 120 found due in respect of the decretal amount of Rs. 260 will by operation of s. 52 come to Rs. 96 only; hence the decree-holder who was entitled to Rs. 260 under the decree according to the present law will now be entitled to Rs. 96 only. This is the result of the combined operation of ss. 42, 46, 51, and 52 of the Act.

The amounts found due and scaled down as above are to be paid by the debtor by instalments not exceeding twenty-five in number. In fixing the instalments regard shall be had to the net annual income of the debtor. The instalment is not to exceed the net annual income of the debtor. The net annual income is the balance of his annual income after deducting such sum as may be considered necessary for the maintenance of the debtor and his dependants and the sum due by the debtor to pay the debts due to Government and to local authorities and to pay off loans borrowed for the purposes of financing crops.

The Act contains special provisions as regards insolvency. If the paying capacity of the debtor is inadequate to pay the total amount of his debts as scaled down, or if for any other reason it is found that the debts found due from the debtor cannot be liquidated by annual instalments, he shall be adjudged insolvent.

In the insolvency proceeding only half the property of the debtor is available for the satisfaction of the debts of creditors. And if the remaining half exceeds six acres of irrigated land or eighteen acres of dry land or any land assessed at Rs. 30, the excess also shall be sold for the liquidation of the debts. So the result will be that the debtor will be freed from all his debts and he will be left with the half of his property provided it does not exceed the above-said limits. It is really a novel principle even in the law of insolvency that the debtor-insolvent should retain property while his creditors should go unsatisfied.

After examining the provisions of the Act a question arises, is this all allowable under the Government of India Act, 1935? The Act under consideration is obviously expropriatory. And if it is so is it intra vires or ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature? Legislation as regards money-lender and money lending is within the competence of the Provincial Legislature, but it must not be such as will contravene the provisions of s. 299 of the Government of India Act. It is submitted that the Act under discussion is not within the intendment of s. 299, for according to it the acquiring of property even for a public purpose cannot be made without compensation.

THE ARBITRATION METHOD.

(Its value in business disputes.)

THE new legislation consolidating and amending the law relating to arbitration has found a place in the Statute book and came into force on July 1, 1940.

That the method of present day litigation in the field of ordinary everyday business disputes is very expensive and dilatory cannot be disputed by any one who has had anything to do with the law Courts. According to a great American jurist, next to war commercial litigation is the largest item of preventable loss in civilisation. The commercial world has not failed to recognise this evil, and in fact, beginning with the inauguration of the City of London Chamber of Arbitration about forty years ago, has been definitely turning its attention to arbitration as a more desirable method of settling disputes in business transactions than litigation. In almost all countries well established Chambers of Commerce and other trading and industrial groups are having their own tribunals of arbitration which have for their object the determination, settlement and adjustment of disputes and differences relating to trade, business and manufactures and to customs of trade, and they recommend to their members the insertion in contracts entered into by them of a clause providing for arbitration according to the rules framed by them in this behalf. In the field of international commercial transactions, the International Chamber of Commerce has a similar system and is making meritorious efforts towards international commercial conciliation and co-ordination of arbitration procedure in as many transactions as it can influence. The Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act VI of 1937 is India's response to this effort.

The object of the scheme of arbitration in all cases is to provide a means of justice which is prompt, inexpensive and efficient, by offering to the business community the services of a body of men skilled in various technical branches of industry and commerce, who are also acquainted with the legal incidents of arbitration; and by insisting upon the prompt determination of disputes under the simplest rules of procedure involving small expense.

Although our law Courts deserve the highest praise for the standard of justice they maintain, the delay and cost of ordinary litigation frequently cause vexation and sometimes almost a denial or failure of justice. There is no doubt that delay and expense cause hardship both to those making and to those resisting claims. The plaintiff with a just cause of action finds that it is better to compromise even at a sacrifice than be kept waiting and put to expense; while the defendant with a good defence equally finds it easier to pay than to undergo the worry and incur heavy costs of litigation.

Under the arbitration method, the disputants submit their differences to one or more disinterested parties (arbitrators), usually men in the same or similar line of business under an agreement to abide by their decision. In disputes involving technical matters the appointment of arbitrators having special knowledge of the particular trade or business or profession concerned will avoid a good deal of waste of time which will otherwise be involved in explaining technical terms and methods. The hearings are held by the arbitrators with whatever degree of informality may be desired, subject to a few simple regulations prescribed by law, and the award is made a judgment of the Court with the same force and effect as if it were a judgment made after trial by a Court of law.

If compared with ordinary legal procedure, arbitration has not so far achieved the prominence anticipated for it, it is simply because it still awaits development on the right lines. With the growth of a healthy business mentality it is inevitable that the parties to a business dispute should in their own interests as business men want their differences to be settled in such a way as to leave them friends again. As Lord Justice Scrutton remarked some years ago, commercial arbitration has this merit in it, that while helping business men to get a quick and cheap settlement of their disputes, it enables them to continue trading afterwards as though there had been no dispute.

Litigation too often promotes unfriendliness with the result that litigants, even of the highest type, find themselves enemies at or before the conclusion of the litigation with consequent injury to future business. The arbitration method avoids this, for it is essentially consistent with a spirit of friendliness and good will, and promises to be particularly so when, through usage, it becomes a habit and is regarded as a matter of course on the occasion when a dispute arises.

The invitation to refer a disputed matter to Mr. A. is far less likely to stir up bitterness than the service of summons to dance attendance in a Court house at very inconvenient hours, on pain of losing the case or getting otherwise damaged in case of failure to do so. Further, as Sir Josiah Stamp pointed out in an illuminating address delivered to the London Institute of Arbitrators seven years ago, "arbitration has a future of rich promise. As industry becomes more and more diversified and specialised, technical and complicated questions of fact and quality and degrees of fact and quality are likely to increase vastly in proportion to the simple legal questions of right and wrong, and these will require to be settled by the application of impartial and disinterested judgment requiring specialised skill." Arbitration will have to be more and more resorted to, not merely because it is expeditious where the law is slow, and cheap where the law is costly, but because it is the more appropriate economic instrument of settlement. The superiority of the arbitration method over legal procedure and conflict is well expressed in the following passages in the Law Quarterly Review, Vol. IX (1893) pp. 87-8: "A judge knows his own art, the law, but he does not know other people's. When a commercial case comes before him he has to begin at the beginning and learn the very meaning of trade words, trade documents, and trade usages, which to the litigants are the A B C of their calling and he has to do this through the medium of expensive expert evidence. After having thus laboriously worked up the whole thing, and mastered the commercial position of the parties, he has to apply the law more or less correctly to the result so obtained. The commercial arbitrator grasps the whole situation at once. He may not have the same capacity of weighing and sifting evidence as a trained judge, but he knows instinctively what the usages and course of his particular business require, and he comes to the consideration of the matter animated by a natural sense of justice unfettered by any technicality." "Our law has failed not so much because of its delay or costliness, but because it has ceased to command the confidence of commercial men; and it has ceased to command their confidence because lawyers and judges are not in touch with the living forces of commerce. Whether it is ever possible for them to be so seems now extremely doubtful, so complicated has our commercial and industrial machinery become. . . . The rate at which business is carried on has been enormously accelerated, its methods have changed, intercourse with foreign nations has increased a hundred-fold; entirely new branches of business have sprung up. All these things necessitate a renewal, a remodelling of the law merchant, and the basis of such renewal can best be laid by the decisions of a commercial tribunal in touch with mercantile usage, and governed by flexible principles of natural equity and mercantile convenience."

If these remarks were true forty-seven years ago, they are a fortiori so now, as economic activity is every day becoming more and more diversified and specialised, each newly differentiated field of knowledge and activity requiring the application of principles and procedure appropriate to itself. Accordingly, a machine which exists to deal with legal aspects merely, becomes less and less capable of dealing with the finer technicalities and complicated issues of business transactions.

For arbitration to prove of real value, it is however essential that it should not be a mere imitation of the law Court. Legal framework and rules may indeed be necessary but they should rest as lightly and unobtrusively as possible on its method of work. The more arbitration procedure apes that of the law Courts the less is it likely to justify itself.

It is stated in the statement of Objects and Reasons of the new Bill that it seeks to consolidate and standardise the law relating to arbitration throughout British India embodying in it such of the provisions of the existing law, the amended English Law of 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. V, c. 14) and the recommendations of the Civil Justice Committee, as are most suitable to this country. It is therefore reasonable to hope that the new legislation will encourage a greater use of the arbitration method and help to lessen litigation and the resort to the law Courts.

BIAS OF TRIBUNAL

It is fortunately a rare occurrence in this country for a litigant or prisoner to feel impelled to call into question the impartiality of the tribunal by which his case is heard. An allegation of this nature was, however, made the subject of a motion to the Divisional Court on July 16 when it was sought on behalf of two women to obtain an order of prohibition against the North London Police Court magistrate,

Mr. Basil Watson, prohibiting him from trying a charge against these women of contravening s. 5 of the Public Order Act, 1936.

This case did not raise any new principle of law, but it would appear from the arguments adduced in support of the motion that there may be some misapprehension as to the circumstances in which the High Court will intervene upon an allegation of bias in an inferior Court. The general principle was laid down by Cave, J., in 1881 in Reg. v. Mayor and Justices of Deal (1881, 45 L.T. 439). In that case it was sought to prohibit the Mayor of Deal from trying a case of cruelty to a horse on the ground that he was biased in such cases, the evidence of alleged bias being that he was a subscriber to the R.S.P.C.A. Delivering the judgment of the Divisional Court, Cave, J., said :

"Any pecuniary interest however slight or remote is sufficient to disqualify..... As to the bias in the justices' minds, it must be a real bias in favour of one of the parties to the litigation."

In other words, it is not sufficient to show that the tribunal may have a bias against the particular type of crime, but is prejudiced against the particular person charged. This is well exemplified by a subsequent case in which readers may well think that there may have been some doubt whether or not the prejudice against the class of offence may not have influenced the decision, although clearly a dislike of a particular crime does not logically lead to the conclusion that the alleged offender has been guilty of it. In this case (Reg. v. Worthing Justices : ex parte Wilder, 1902, 73. J.P, 761) certiorari was sought on behalf of a motorist to quash a conviction for exceeding a speed limit. The evidence of alleged bias, which does not appear to have been contradicted, was that the chairman had said that it would be a good thing if the motor industry (then, of course, in its infancy) were destroyed. Wills, J., delivering the judgment of himself and Channell, J., is reported as having said :

"A magistrate is at liberty to entertain strong views on a subject, though it were better if he kept his views to himself..... It has been pointed out to me by Channell, J., that for centuries past it had been alleged that magistrates were very much prejudiced against poachers, but no one had ever heard of an application similar to the present one being made upon a conviction for poaching."

In the present case the applicants had been charged that in distributing a certain leaflet they had thereby been guilty of "insulting behaviour whereby a breach of the peace was likely to be occasioned" contrary to s. 5 of the Public Order Act, 1906. The learned magistrate upon the facts being opened to him was alleged to have remarked : "This is the same as a leaflet which appeared in a similar case before me a short time ago when I sent the man to prison for five weeks" (Times, July 17). It is obvious that in a charge of this kind the guilt or innocence of the accused would very largely depend upon the contents of the document distributed, although, of course, there might be circumstances in the manner and time and place of its distribution by which it could properly be distinguished. It is indeed difficult to see how this statement was evidence of bias any more than if a judge upon a prosecution for libel were to comment that he had already ruled in another case that the document in question was capable of a defamatory meaning. It was, however, further alleged that the learned magistrate when remanding the applicants in custody had said that he disliked "people of that sort." This evidence was denied by the magistrate, who further stated that as the applicants had called his conduct into question, in any event he would prefer not to deal further with the case.

The Divisional Court (Humphreys, Hilbery and Croom-Johnson, JJ.) dismissed the motion. Humphreys, J., delivering the leading judgment, pointed out that there was no evidence of "bias" against the applicants. He then repeated the words of Wills, J., that a magistrate was entitled to hold "strong views," though it was better that he should not express them. The applicants were ordered to pay the costs of the motion.—L. J.

NUISANCE

IN a recent article in The Law Journal (vol. 89, p. 154) it was pointed out that, as a result of the decisions in Wringe v. Cohen (1939, 4 All E. R. 241) and Sedleigh-Denfield v. St. Joseph's Missionary Society (1939, 1 All E. R. 725), certain dicta in a substantial number of cases must be treated as overruled or modified. If those decisions were to stand, then (1) liability for nuisance did not depend upon knowledge or means of knowledge, and (2), where a nuisance had been caused by a third party, the occupier was under no obligation to abate the nuisance. We note with relief that the House of Lords has overruled the Court of Appeal in the Sedleigh-Denfield case. Lord Wright approved the statement by Farwell, J., in Barker v. Herbert (1911, 2 K. B. 633, at p. 645) that a landowner may become liable for a nuisance caused by a third party, against his will, "if he permits it to continue and fails to abate it within a reasonable time after it has come, or ought to have come, to his knowledge." His Lordship also observed, in effect, that he could see no difference, in the matter of liability, between nuisances not caused by the landowner and those which he had himself caused: Sedleigh-Denfield v. St. Joseph's Missions (1940, 3 All E. R. 350, at p. 366). Wringe v. Cohen, although not referred to in the report, appears to have been impliedly overruled. It seems to be impossible to reconcile the view of the Court of Appeal that liability for nuisance is independent of knowledge, with any of the judgments of the noble Lords in the Sedleigh-Denfield case. It is still possible that the defendant in the Wringe case was liable, because he ought to have known of the condition of the property. So much that we learn must be unlearned. It is comforting to find occasionally that the old law is still good law—particularly where the old law was also "good sense."—L. J.

FROZEN WATER PIPES

THE Court of Appeal have now upheld the decision given earlier in the year by Mr. Justice Lewis in Watson v. Sutton Water Co., and reported 56 T. L. R. 787. We made some comment on the case at the time (89 Law Journal, p. 254). It was decided upon the common law duty of those who supply water to take care for those who consume it. The plaintiff, who succeeded below, simply said that she was leaving her house late last year, before the great frost came, and asked the defendant water company to cut off her water supply. This they did by turning off a tap outside the house. But, as Lord Justice MacKinnon said, it was a tap which anybody passing the house could turn on again. Some mischievous person did so. The plaintiff could not prove that this mischief was done by the appellant company; yet somehow it was done and the plaintiff's house was flooded. The water company said that there was, inside Mrs. Watson's house, a "governing tap," that this should have been turned off and that, if it had been, no flooding would have occurred. The Court of Appeal thought little (so far as the report shows) of this plea of contributory negligence. Once the plaintiff, or her son, ordered complete separation from the water supply, and the defendants undertook to carry out that order, there was, it seems, no duty on the plaintiffs to take any additional safeguard.—*L. #### DAMAGES AGAINST THE DEAD

WE have all heard much about damages for the dead and the baffling problems raised by Rose v. Ford (1937, A. C. 827.), the Act which it expounded, and the consequent decisions. Not so much has been heard on the question of damages against the dead. At all events, if the injured plaintiff is still alive, they do not present the same difficulties as they do if he has unhappily succumbed to his injury. A judge on circuit had such a case before him this week, and it resulted in a judgment for a large sum of over 4,000*l.* against a dead man who was represented by his widow—a poor woman. The learned judge was satisfied that it was the deceased defendant who was to blame for the accident—of course, as usual, a motor vehicle collision; and our sympathy is strong for the injured motor-cyclist. Even 15 months after his injury he was still a cripple on a stretcher. At the same time old-fashioned lawyers cannot even now reconcile themselves to the law which allows judgment and heavy damages to be given against a person who has not been heard.—L. J.

WAIVING THE TORT

IN concluding his elaborate and convincing judgment in the appeal in United Australia, Ltd. v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., last week, the Lord Chancellor remarked that "while admiring the subtlety of the old special pleaders, our Courts are primarily concerned to see that rules of law and procedure should serve to secure justice between the parties." The result of the judgment of the House, it will be agreed, "secured justice" by its effective declaration that the rule embodied in the decision in Smith v. Baker, L. R. 8 C. P. 350, as expressed by Chief Justice BOVILL, was wrong when he laid down that "the law is clear that a person who is entitled to complain of a conversion of his property, but who prefers to waive the tort, may do so and bring his action for money had and received for the proceeds of goods wrongfully sold. The law implies under such circumstances a promise on the part of the tortfeasor that he will pay over the proceeds of the sale to the rightful owner. But if an action for money had and received is so brought, that is in point of law a conclusive election the other way. The principles which govern the subject are very well illustrated in the case of Buckland v. Johnson, 15 C. B. 145, where it was held that the plaintiff, having sued one of two joint tortfeasors in tort, could not afterwards sue the other for money had and received." This the House has now authoritatively laid down to be wrong in law, and that the true proposition was that formulated as long ago as the time of Chief Justice Holt, namely, that it is judgment in the first action, and not merely the bringing of the claim, which constitutes a bar to the second action, a conclusion much more in harmony with justice than the very technical rule which till now has been generally accepted.—S. J.

TWO VOICES

AFTER a young barrister had finished arguing an appeal in the King's Bench Divisional Court recently he was asked to re-argue it from the point of view of the respondent, who was not represented. He acquitted himself well in this rather Gilbertian situation, but won his appeal. There is distinguished precedent for his double role, though generally in the past it has been played through inadvertence. Thus Bethell, afterwards Lord Chancellor Westbury, once by mistake drew a bill in Chancery against a client for whom he held a standing retainer, and at the hearing when his two voices were claimed by the defendant he had to argue against his own pleading. "Your honour," he began, "of all the cobwebs that were ever spun in a Court of justice this is the flimsiest; it will dissolve at a touch." It did, and the solicitor who first instructed him must have been but little consoled when Bethell whispered in his ear as he left the Court: "The bill is as good a bill as was ever filed."—S. J.

RECENT ENGLISH CASES.

DAMAGES—Measure of—Motor accident—Negligence causing death—Pain and suffering—Loss of expectation of life—Action by administrator—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. V, c. 41), s. 1. The plaintiff, whose wife had died in consequence of injuries sustained by her in a collision between two motor vehicles through the negligence of the defendants, brought an action against the defendants claiming (inter alia) under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, as administrator of the estate of the deceased, damages for her loss of expectation of life and for her pain and suffering.

As to the expectation of life of the deceased, it appeared that at the time of her death she was thirty-four years of age, that she had been a healthy woman who had never had an illness, that she had four children of her marriage, that her prospect of life according to actuarial tables was another thirty-four years, and that her social position was that her husband, the plaintiff, was a provision shop manager.

As to her pain and suffering, the medical and other evidence showed that her injuries consisted in fracture of the skull, of two ribs, and of the pelvis, and severe bruising of the chest and ankles; that she survived in hospital for four days after the accident, that after admission to hospital she suffered for a time from intense irritation which made it difficult to examine her nervous system, that next day she was quieter and would answer to her name, that her condition improved a little until the third day when she became more restless, resenting interference, that eventually her respiration became feeble and she collapsed and died, and that the degree of pain which she suffered was extremely difficult to estimate owing to her marked restlessness which was probably due to cerebral irritation rather than to actual pain:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, reducing both the respective sums which had been allowed as damages by the trial Judge, that the plaintiff should recover 1000 l. in respect of the loss of expectation of life of the deceased, and 50 l. in respect of her pain and suffering. MILLS v. STANWAY COACHES, LD., [1940] 2 K. B. 334.

HIGHWAY—Pedestrian crossing place—Precedence of foot passengers over vehicular traffic—Duty of driver approaching crossing—Transit across road divided by refuge—Single crossing or two separate crossings—Contributory negligence—Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Provincial Regulations, 1935 (dated January 25, 1935),

Reg. 5. The plaintiff left the western pavement of a road and started to go over a controlled pedestrian crossing when the traffic lights were in his favour and against the defendant's car, but before he reached a refuge which was on the crossing in the middle of the road, the lights changed and the defendant received a signal that she might proceed over the crossing between the refuge and the eastern pavement of the road. The plaintiff paused at the refuge and then stepped into the roadway in front of the defendant's car which knocked him down. In an action for damages for personal injuries the plaintiff alleged that the defendant had been guilty of negligence and breach of the statutory duty imposed on her by Reg. 5 of the Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Provisional Regulations, 1935, in that she had not allowed him free and uninterrupted passage over the crossing, he having started to go over the crossing, which must be regarded as a single crossing from pavement to pavement, although divided by the refuge, before she had received a signal that she might proceed over the crossing. The defendant denied negligence and contended that there were two crossings, one from the western pavement to the refuge and the other from the refuge to the eastern pavement, and that she was not in breach of her statutory duty because the defendant had not started to go over the crossing where the accident took place before she received a signal to proceed :—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the whole transit from pavement to pavement was not a single crossing but was two separate crossings, interrupted by a refuge, and that as the lights had changed from green to red before the plaintiff left the refuge to cross to the eastern pavement, he was guilty of contributory negligence and could not recover. WILKINSON v. CHETHAM STRODE, [1940] 2 K. B. 310.

TRADE MARK—Infringement—Proprietary medicine—Published formula—Advertisement of competing article—Mark referred to in pamphlet for price comparison—Not used in reference to proprietor of mark or to goods so marked—No infringement—Trade Marks Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. VI, c. 22), s. 4. The plaintiffs were the owners of a trade mark in the word "bisurated" as applied to "bisurated magnesia," a proprietary medicine sold under a published formula. The defendants, who were manufacturing chemists and retailers, sold the plaintiffs' goods and also made and sold a similar preparation which they called "bismuthated magnesia." They published a pamphlet containing a list of various proprietary medicines made to formula, including bisurated magnesia, and opposite to this list a number of medicines made by them, said to be similar in all respects to the proprietary medicines, but sold, as stated, at a much lower price, the formulæ published in both lists being identical. The plaintiffs having claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from infringing their mark :—Held (per Sir Wilfrid Greene M. R. and Clauson L. J., MacKinnon L. J. dissenting) that the defendants had used the plaintiffs' trade mark as a convenient method of describing the merits of their own goods and had infringed the exclusive right of the plaintiffs as defined by s. 4, sub-s.(1), of the Act. BISMAG, LD. v. AMBLINS (CHEMISTS), LTD., [1940] 1 Ch. 667.

ARBITRATION—Validity of reference to arbitration at the instance of a lawyer engaged by the agent. A reference to arbitration at the instance of a lawyer is valid if the vakâlât-nâmâ in favour of the lawyer is executed by a duly authorised agent.

empowering the lawyer to enter into such arbitration on behalf of the principal, even though such agent himself is not authorised to refer the matter to arbitration. EAST BENGAL BANK, LTD. v. JOGESH CHANDRA BANERJI, [1940] 2 CAL. 237.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE, how to be placed before jury—Misdirection. A theoretical discourse of what is circumstantial evidence couched in language which must be unintelligible to the jury is quite worthless. The Judge should direct the jury that, if the circumstances are capable of a reasonable interpretation consistent with the innocence of the accused, then he is entitled to be acquitted even if the circumstances raise a strong suspicion against him. In a case depending on circumstantial evidence a direction to the jury to the effect that they should consider whether they are prepared to accept the evidence as showing the guilt of the accused is quite inadequate. A direction to the jury at the end of the discussion of the evidence against each individual accused person, asking them to consider whether the accused has been falsely implicated may very likely mislead the jury into thinking that, unless they are satisfied that the case is false, they should find the accused guilty. It is, therefore, a misdirection. EMPEROR v. MUJJAFFAR SHAIKH, [1940] 2 CAL. 258.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, s. 115—"Case decided"—Order refusing amendment of plaint in the matter of description and array of parties—Civil Procedure Code, order I, rule 10. An order refusing an amendment of the plaint in the matter of correct description and array or addition of parties amounts to a case decided within the meaning of s. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and a revision lies therefrom. JAGDISH SARAN v. BHAGWAT SARAN, [1940] ALL. 564.

—O. XXI, rr. 15 and 2—Power of partner who is joint decree-holder to give release to judgment-debtor—Satisfaction of decree if and when can be recorded at instance of one of joint decree-holders—Adjustment of decree in favour of several judgment-creditors binding on all of them only if executing decree-holders authorised to receive payment on behalf of all, or if all of them in fact received their shares. When partners have become joint decree-holders (and are not merely joint private creditors), no one of them can receive the joint decree debt so as to release the judgment-debtor from further liability in execution. Satisfaction of a decree cannot be entered on the mere report of one of the joint decree-holders : to do so would be a violation of the provisions of Order XXI, r. 15, Civil Procedure Code. If express authority of the executing decree-holder to receive the decretal amount on behalf of all joint decree-holders is proved, or if it is established that in fact all decree-holders have received their shares of the amount, then an adjustment binding on all decree-holders can and should be recorded. SHAHBAZKHAN FATEKHAN v. KAKALMAL BUDHUMAL, [1940] KAR. 461.

—O. XLI, rr. 11 and 12—Admission of appeal—As a whole and not in part only. Under the terms of O. XLI, rr. 11 and 12, of the Code of Civil Procedure, there are only two courses open to a Court in dealing with an appeal, namely, to dismiss or admit the appeal as a whole. It cannot direct that the appeal be admitted in part only. ESWABIAH v. RAMESWARAYYA, [1940] MAD. 785, F. B.

COMPANIES LAW (Act VII of 1913), s. 103—Memorandum of Association—Managing Agents not given power of borrowing—Unauthorized borrowings by managing agents—Borrowings not bona fide and not for benefit of company—Company whether liable for the borrowings. Where the managing agents of a company are not given the power of borrowing money under the memorandum and the articles of association, then the company is not liable for the unauthorized borrowings by the managing agent, where the borrowings are not bona fide and necessary for the company, but are an attempt to saddle the company with liabilities without any benefit to it. THE EQUITY INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED v. MESSRS. DINSHAW & CO., (BANKERS), LIMITED, (1940) 15 LUCK. 515.

CONTRACT ACT (IX OF 1872), SS. 65, 68—Minor, contract by—Payment made, whether can be recovered under s. 65—Hindu male minor—Marriage, loan for expenses of—Section 68, whether applies—Suretyship, contract of—Nature of—Surety in minor's contract, whether liable. [Payment made to a minor under a contract entered into by him is not recoverable from him under s. 65 of the Indian Contract Act. Advancing funds to a male Hindu minor for meeting his own marriage expenses is not supplying with necessities within the meaning of s. 68 of the Contract Act and a person advancing such funds is not entitled to be reimbursed from the property of the minor. A contract of suretyship for a minor is a collateral contract and is enforceable against the surety though the main contract entered into by the minor is not enforceable under law. TIKKILAL v. KOMALCHAND, [1940] NAG. 632.

EVIDENCE ACT, SS. 13, 40, 41, 42, 43—Judgment not inter partes—Admissibility. A judgment not inter partes is not admissible to prove the truth of the fact which it states. Where the right of a party has been concluded by a judgment, that judgment is admissible under ss. 13 and 43 of the Indian Evidence Act to prove that fact. MAROTI v. JAGANNATHDAS, [1940] NAG. 699.

HINDU LAW—Debt—Suit against father and sons—Sons exonerated and dismissed from suit—Decree against father alone—Executable against son's interests in joint family property, if. A decree obtained against a Hindu father after his sons who were impleaded in the suit had been exonerated and dismissed therefrom, can be executed against the sons' interests in the joint family property. The decision of the Privy Council in Raja Ram v. Raja Bakhsh Singh, (1937) I. L. R. 13 Luck. 61 has not overruled in any way the decision of the full bench in Periasami Mudaliar v. Seetharama Chettiar, (1903) 27 Mad. 243. KRISHNAN v. SOMI, [1940] MAD. 815.

—Inheritance—Illegitimate daughters—Right to succeed to the stridhanam of their mother's mother. The illegitimate daughters of a Hindu woman are not entitled under Hindu law, apart from special custom, to succeed to the stridhanam of their mother's mother. The general principle of Hindu law is to limit heirship to legitimate issue except in the case of illegitimate sons amongst Sudras in whose favour a special exception has been made in the texts. There is no authority which extends the right of an illegitimate daughter to succeed beyond the right to succeed to her mother's stridhanam. MEENAKSHI v. MURUGAYYA, [1940] MAD. 739.

—Maintenance—Hindu coparcener, whether entitled to sue for maintenance—Suit for partition, if necessary—Unmarried daughter of coparcener, if entitled to sue manager for maintenance. A Hindu coparcener, whether a major or a minor, who is denied maintenance by the head of the family is entitled to sue for maintenance alone; he need not sue for partition.

An unmarried daughter of a Hindu coparcener can sue the manager of the joint family for her maintenance. She is not bound to sue her father and proceed against his share only in the joint family properties. CHERUTTY v. RAVU, [1940] MAD. 830.

INSANITY—Insanity, how far protects an accused—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 84. Under s. 84 of the Indian Penal Code, an accused is protected not only when, on account of insanity, he was incapable of knowing the nature of the act, but also when he did not know either that the act was wrong or that it was contrary to law, although he might know the nature of the act itself. He is, however, not protected if he knew that what he was doing was wrong, even if he did not know that it was contrary to law, and also if he knew that what he was doing was contrary to law even though he did not know that it was wrong. A direction to the jury to the effect that an accused cannot claim the protection of s. 84 of Indian Penal Code, if he knew that he was killing somebody, without the further direction that the jury were to consider whether the accused knew that the act he committed was either wrong or contrary to law, is a misdirection. GERON v. EMPEROR, [1940] 2 CAL. 329.

LAND ACQUISITION ACT (I. OF 1894), SS. 3(d) AND 30—Reference under s. 30 to Subordinate Judge—Decision appealable. An appeal lies from the decision of a Subordinate Judge appointed by the Provincial Government under s. 3(d) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, to decide a dispute referred by a Collector under s. 30 of the Act. The Subordinate Judge so appointed to decide a dispute with regard to the allocation of compensation money is a civil Court and proceedings before him are governed by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. CHIKKANNA v. PERUMAL, [1940] MAD. 791, F. B.

LIMITATION ACT (IX OF 1908), s. 20—Interest—Payment of interest "as such" under s. 20, whether to appear in the handwriting of payer—Court to find from evidence and circumstances, whether payment was for interest. There is no law requiring that payment of interest "as such" must necessarily appear in the handwriting or under the signature of the party making the payment. No doubt it is necessary that at the time of the payment it must be clearly mentioned that the payment was being made on account of interest. Where there is nothing to show whether a payment has been made in respect of principal or interest, the Court is entitled to find out on the evidence and from the circumstances for what purpose the payment was made. BACHCHU LAL v. BHAGWATI, (1940) 15 LUCK. 524.

PENAL CODE (ACT XLV OF 1860), s. 289—Tethering of horse in narrow street—If negligent omission. The tethering of a horse in a narrow street where people cannot pass without going near the animal's hind legs is a negligent omission to take order with the animal sufficient to satisfy the requirements of s. 289, Indian Penal Code. GAGUMAL MULCHAND v. CROWN, [1940] KAR. 445.

RES JUDICATA—Mortgage—Suit for possession by mortgagee—Amount due on mortgage determined in suit for possession—Redemption suit brought subsequently—Decision regarding amount due, whether operates as res judicata. Where a suit is brought for possession of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee and in that suit it became necessary to determine the amount due on the mortgage, the decision regarding the amount due on the mortgage in that suit operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit for redemption of the mortgage. *SHEO KUMAR v. ## REVIEWS.

The Code of Criminal Procedure. By V. V. CHITALEY, B.A., LL.B., AND K. N. ANNAJI RAO, B.A., B.L. Second Edition. 1940. NAGPUR : The All India Reporter Ltd. Royal 8vo. Vol. 1 (pp. 1-1159), Vol. 2 (pp. 1160-2352). Price Rs. 27 for three Volumes.

IN this second edition of a work first published five years ago, the authors have carefully revised the text in the light of the changes effected in the Code and the various decisions reported in the intervening period. The volumes under review deal with ss. 1 to 430. The method of treatment is the same as that employed in the authors' treatise on the Civil Procedure Code. The commentary on each section is prefaced by a synopsis which facilitates reference to the point required in the detailed discussion of the section. The case law bearing on the subject is exhaustively dealt with and the principles of law deduced therefrom are classified under different headings. To add to their utility the volumes contain local amendments to the various sections and a chart showing how the sections are affected by legislative amendments. One more volume will complete this work which will be very useful to the profession as an exhaustive commentary on the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Sohni's Commentaries on the Code of Criminal Procedure. Edited by W. T. SUNDARRAJAN, B.A., B.L., Advocate, High Court, Madras. BOMBAY : The New Book Company, 188-90 Hornby Road. 1941. Fourteenth edition, Crown 4to. Pages ccxiii and 1389. Price Rs. 20.

THIS well-known commentary, which now enters into its fourteenth edition, has been carefully and thoroughly revised. It incorporates the amendments made by the Indian Legislature up to 1941 as well as those effected by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, and these are explained in the footnotes to the commentaries. The case law is fully dealt with and brought up to date. Apart from the detailed references to all the Indian cases the editor has cited important English and American cases in elucidating the points under discussion. We, however, think that it was unnecessary to make transatlantic excursions to elucidate principles of procedure. The editor has made the book handy by the deletion of much obsolete and redundant matter. There is a detailed subject index and an useful appendix which gives the text of some thirteen Acts including the Charter Act and the Letters Patent, the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, the Coroners Act, 1871, the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1908, the European Vagrancy Act, 1874, the Indian Extradition Act, 1903, the Indian Oaths Act, 1873, the Police Acts of 1861 and 1888, the Prisoners Act, 1900, the Prisons Act, 1894, the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897, and the Whipping Act, 1909. This book which has held the field for over a generation will be very useful to the Bench and the Bar.

ATTACHMENT BEFORE JUDGMENT OF PROPERTY IN AN INDIAN STATE.

THE question whether a British Indian Court is empowered to order attachment before judgment of property situated in an Indian State requires consideration. There are numerous instances where a British Indian Court passes such an order ; and when the order is sent to the Court of the Indian State wherein the property is situated, the property is attached. In support of this, the following argument is advanced.—

(i) Order XXXVIII, r. 5, read with s. 136 of the Civil Procedure Code empowers a Court to pass such an order.

(ii) Under the new Civil Procedure Code, it is not only within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a civil Court that the right to order an attachment of property before judgment can be exercised by such Court, but it is open to the Court to exercise that right even beyond the limits of its jurisdiction.

(iii) There being reciprocity between British Indian Courts and the Indian State, such orders can be validly passed.

(iv) The territories of Indian States being adjacent to those of British India, it usually happens that persons having property in an Indian State are able to contract debts in British India. To say that a British Indian Court is not empowered to attach before judgment such property, is tantamount to saying that such persons can, after a suit is launched against them in British India, freely dispose of their property in an Indian State and thus frustrate the ends of justice. To avoid this unhappy result, s. 136, Civil Procedure Code, enacts that a Court can attach before judgment property lying outside its jurisdiction.

It is true that in a trial Court the question of attachment before judgment has special importance of its own ; it is equally true that a Court should and must try its level best not to frustrate the ends of justice ; but the question remains whether the argument given above can be accepted, and whether it can be legally maintained that a British Indian Court can order attachment before judgment of property situated in an Indian State.

Under the old Code there was a conflict of decisions as to whether a Court could or could not attach before judgment property lying outside its jurisdiction ;

but in view of the omission of the words "Within the jurisdiction of the Court" and in view of the words "Outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court" appearing in s. 136, the Court is now clearly empowered under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, and s. 136 of the Civil Procedure Code, to order attachment of properties whether situated within or without jurisdiction. (Vide Haji Jeva Nur Muhammad v. Abubakar Ibrahim Meman<sup>1</sup>; Kedar Nath Dutt v. Seeva Veyana Rana Luchman Chetty<sup>2</sup>; Kanahyi Ram v. Dina Nath Hardial Mal<sup>3</sup>; Somasundaram Chetty v. Muthu Veerappa Chetty,<sup>4</sup> etc.).

These cases, however, do not decide that a civil Court can attach before judgment property which is outside British India. There is not a single case on the point as to whether a British Indian Court is empowered to order attachment before judgment of property lying in an Indian State. We may, however, refer to some cases that can guide us in reaching a definite conclusion on the point.

In Mela Mal v. Bishan Das<sup>5</sup> a question of law arose whether a civil Court at Hoshiarpur was competent to attach before judgment moveable property of a defendant (a British Indian subject) which was in Kashgar in China. It was held that inasmuch as Kashgar was admittedly a foreign territory, the mere fact that a Consular Court had been created there by His Majesty for certain purposes did not bring that territory within British India, and that the rule regarding the attachment before judgment by a civil Court of property beyond its jurisdiction was restricted to Courts in British India.

In Zubeda Begam Saheba v. Kommana Kaniah<sup>6</sup> it was held that the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapattam had no jurisdiction in a suit pending before him to attach before judgment properties which admittedly were in the Agency tracts over which the Court had no jurisdiction.

In Ramabhadra Raju Bahadur v. Maharaja of Jeypore<sup>7</sup> a suit was brought under the Civil Procedure Code in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapattam to enforce a mortgage of properties, some of which were situated in the Agency tracts subject to the special jurisdiction of the Agency Courts, and a decree on the mortgage and for the sale of the mortgaged property was made by the Subordinate Judge, and affirmed by the High Court. On appeal to the Privy Council it was held that so far as the decree was for sale of the mortgaged property in the scheduled districts, the Courts had no jurisdiction to make it, s. 21 of the Code not being applicable to such a case, and it could be set aside notwithstanding that no objection to the jurisdiction had been taken in the Subordinate Judge's Court. The decree was, therefore, varied by the Privy Council by deleting the order for sale so far as applicable to the lands lying within the Agency Districts.

In Nilkanth Balwant v. Vidya Narsinh<sup>8</sup> it was held that a Court in British India had no jurisdiction to try a suit so far as it related to properties situated in an Indian State. In this case the properties in respect of which relief was sought by the plaintiffs were situated in Satara, Belgaum and Kolhapur. The Bombay

High Court held that the Satara Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit regarding the properties in the Kolhapur District, and for this view reliance was placed upon s. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code, which runs as follows :—

“Where a suit is to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property situate within the jurisdiction of different Courts, the suit may be instituted in any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any portion of the property is situate :

Provided that, in respect of the value of the subject-matter of the suit, the entire claim is cognizable by such Court.”

Relying upon this section the Bombay High Court held that the Satara Court was empowered to try the suit relating to the properties in Kolhapur. The Privy Council, however, held that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit in respect of the properties in Kolhapur, as the words “Situate within the jurisdiction of different Courts” in s. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure referred solely to Courts in British India.

From these cases it appears that a British Indian Court has no authority to order attachment before judgment of property situated in an Indian State and, if such order is passed, the Court in an Indian State is not bound to give effect to that order.

The preamble to the Civil Procedure Code recites that it is expedient to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of civil judicature ; and s. 1(3) provides that s. 1 and ss. 155 to 158 extend to the whole of British India and that the rest of the Code extends to the whole of British India, except the Scheduled Districts. It is, therefore obvious that the provisions of the Code are regulations dealing with the jurisdiction and governing the procedure of the Courts in British India. When the Code refers to jurisdiction of different Courts, that must mean within the jurisdiction of different Courts to which the Code applies, that is to say, Courts in British India.

Under s. 44 of the Civil Procedure Code the Provincial Government may by notification in the Official Gazette declare that the decrees of any Civil or Revenue Courts in any Indian State, not being Courts established or continued by the authority of the Central Government or of the Crown Representative, or any class of such decrees, may be executed in the Province as if they had been passed by Courts of British India. And under s. 45 of the Civil Procedure Code the Courts in British India are empowered to send decrees for execution to any Court established or continued by the authority of the Central Government or of the Crown Representative in the territories of any foreign Prince or State to which the Provincial Government has by notification in the Official Gazette declared this section to apply.

It would be seen that these provisions relate to the execution of decrees and there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code which lays down that British Indian Courts can order attachment before judgment of property lying in an Indian State. There may be reciprocity between Courts in British India and those of an Indian State ; but that reciprocity cannot avail a British Indian Court to attach before judgment any property situate in an Indian State. The very fact that the Civil Procedure Code makes special provisions regarding execution in Indian States of decrees passed by British Indian Courts, and that there is no provision for attachment before judgment of property in Indian States, goes to show that the Civil Procedure Code does not warrant such attachment.

The conclusion that is arrived at is :—

(i) Under the present Civil Procedure Code, an attachment before judgment can be of property within as well as without the jurisdiction of the civil Court.

(ii) The rule, however, that attachment before judgment can be ordered by a civil Court beyond the limits of its jurisdiction, is restricted to Courts in British India.

(iii) Even if there be reciprocity between the Courts in British India and those of an Indian State, that reciprocity is to be relied upon for execution of decrees and not for attachment before judgment.

(iv) It is not within the powers of a British Indian Court to order attachment before judgment of property lying within an Indian State; and even if such order is passed and sent under s. 136 to the Court of the Indian State within whose jurisdiction the property is situated, that order need not be executed by that Court.

For the ends of justice, there ought to be some provision empowering a British Indian Court to order attachment before judgment of property in an Indian State; but in the absence of any provision to that effect, and in the light of the case law as it stands, such orders cannot be legally passed.

THE AGRICULTURIST DEBTORS' RELIEF ACT, 1939.

THE Bombay Legislature has passed the above Act apparently for the relief of agriculturist debtors. But the provisions of the Act are so novel, drastic and revolutionary, that it is very doubtful whether it will give any relief to debtors and whether its operation will be smooth and equitable.

In addition to the defects in the Act pointed out in 43 Bom. L. R. Journal p. 1 there is one more revolting aspect of that Act. An enactment provides a remedy or lays down procedure for the settlement of a dispute that arises between two parties, but no enactment should foment litigation or force people to go to Court, where no dispute exists between them. But this Act by the operation of ss. 17 and 32 makes it compulsory on every creditor to file an application against his debtor, even if there be no dispute existing between them. If the creditor does not file such an application within eighteen months of the appointment of the Board, his debt is to be considered as wiped out. The framers of this Act have hardly contemplated on the inequity of such a provision and, furthermore, on the enormous number of applications that will have to be filed. Every village grocer and trader will have to file a suit for every article or goods given on credit to any agriculturist, be the amount however small or big, and no matter that there is no dispute between the parties.

Further, the Act applies to all transactions even after the appointment of the Board, and hence this would mean that if rupees five worth of grain is given to an agriculturist on credit a day previous to the expiry of eighteen months from the date of the appointment of the Board, and an application is not filed on the very next day for the recovery of the amount, the debt becomes time-barred, and in case of an article given on credit to an agriculturist on any day eighteen months after the Board is appointed, its price cannot be recovered. Such absurd results follow from the provisions of this extremely ill-digested and ill-considered law passed for the relief of agriculturist debtors!

The enactment will hit hard both the creditors and the debtors. When the credit of an agriculturist is ruined he will only fall an easy prey to extortionate lenders like Pathans who do not have recourse to law for the recovery of their debts but have their own methods of coercion etc. for the recovery of their dues.

There are many other aspects of the Act which are equally subversive of all good principles. In fact the Act will subvert the whole structure of village society and will lead village life into chaos from which it would be difficult to extricate it. The only remedy is to abrogate it or not to appoint Boards on the formation of which the Act comes into effect.

ANIMAL OWNERS' NEGLIGENCE.

If it does not go further, the decision of the Court of Appeal in Aldham v. United Dairies (London), Ltd., (1940) 84 S. J. 43, looks like being a leading authority. It clears up the obscurity in the relationship between negligence and absolute liability based on scienter, for damage done by an animal mansuetæ naturæ, which arose out of the limitation placed on May v. Burdett, (1846) 9 Q. B. 101, by Cox v. Burbridge, (1863) 13 C. B. (N. S.) 430.

The former decision laid down that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed, without proof of negligence, who had established that she had been bitten by a monkey, kept by the defendant, well knowing that it was of a mischievous and ferocious nature, and was used and accustomed to attack mankind, and that it was dangerous and improper to allow it to be at large. On the other hand, in Cox v. Burbridge, where a horse of mild disposition, for no apparent reason, kicked a child aged five, it was held that no claim lay for negligence.

Although the decision was clearly right, the judgments in Cox v. Burbridge do not make it clear where a claim based on May v. Burdett ends and an ordinary claim for negligence begins. For example, Erle, C. J., at p. 436 of the report, says :—

“To entitle the plaintiff to recover, there must be some affirmative proof of negligence in the defendant in respect of a duty owing to the plaintiff... I take the well-known distinction to apply here, that the owner of an animal is answerable for any damage done by it, provided it be of such a nature as is likely to arise from such an animal, and the owner knows it.”

Willes, J., at p. 439, said :—

“As to animals which are not naturally of a mischievous disposition, the owner is not responsible for injuries of a personal nature done by them unless they are shown to have acquired some vicious or mischievous habit or propensity, and the owner is shown to have been aware of the fact.”

As Cox's case was a claim for negligence, although trespass was discussed, it is excusable to suppose that the Court of Common Pleas was laying down the rule that no action lay for damage by a tame animal, unless knowledge of its propensity to do that particular type of damage was shown, whether the cause of action was called trespass or negligence.

The case of Cox v. Burbidge has been applied in a number of later cases. For example, Hadwell v. Righton, [1907] 2 K. B. 345, where the defendant's hen when on the highway was startled by a dog and flew into the spokes of the bicycle which the plaintiff was riding, thereby causing her injury. The Divisional Court held that the plaintiff could not recover for, among other reasons, there could be no negligence in the absence of anticipated danger.

Other examples are Higgins v. Searle, (1909) 100 L. T. 280 (C.A.); Ellis v. Banyard, (1912) 106 L. T. 51 (C.A.); Jones v. Lee, ib., 123; and Bardley v. Wallaces, Ltd., [1913] 3 K. B. 629. In Higgins v. Searle a sow had escaped from her sty and was lying beside the road when, roused by the sound of the horn of the plaintiff's car, it stood up and caused a van horse coming the other way to shy. The plaintiff in order to avoid the horse and van drove his car into a wall and suffered damage. It was held, following Cox v. Burbidge and Hadwell v. Righton, that he could not recover.

The defendant's cows, in Ellis v. Banyard, had strayed on to the highway from his field next to it because, in circumstances which were not shown, the gate of the field was left open. The plaintiff was riding her bicycle along the highway, and the cows "threw her down" and injured her. The Court of Appeal held that she could not recover for various reasons, among others, that there was no evidence of negligence. Buckley, L. J., also gave as one of his "cumulative reasons" why the defendant was entitled to judgment, that there was no evidence that the cows were vicious. In Jones v. Lee a young horse strayed from the defendant's field which was defectively fenced on to the highway and for some unknown reason ran across the road as the plaintiffs were passing on a tandem bicycle. The horse collided with the bicycle, fell, and as it got up, lashed out and injured one of the plaintiffs and the bicycle. The County Court Judge, having found that it was negligent of the defendant to leave the horse in a field with a gap in the fence, held, following Cox v. Burbidge, that the plaintiff could not recover, and a strong Divisional Court, consisting of Hamilton and Bankes, JJ., upheld him. Both Judges apparently took the view that unless the defendant knew of the propensity of the horse to behave as it did, the plaintiff could not recover (see 106 L.T., at pp. 125 and 126).

The decision in Bradley v. Wallaces, Ltd., turned on whether an action lay where a man working on premises was kicked by a horse whose tail he had slightly touched, the horse, which was not known to have any vicious propensities, having been brought there by the servant of the person sought to be made liable, and left unattended. The Court of Appeal held that no action lay for negligence, as leaving the horse unattended, assuming it were negligent, would not in the ordinary course of things lead to its kicking a man.

It is not clear to what extent the case of Heath's Garage, Ltd. v. Hodges, [1916] 2 K. B. 370, followed Cox's case, and to what extent it arrived at the same result by another route. There two sheep of the defendant's had got on to the highway, having separated from the rest of the flock which was in a field next to the highway. The Court of Appeal held that the defendant was under no duty to members of the public to prevent sheep straying on to the highway. Pickford, L.J., thought that the case of Cox v. Burbidge did not apply, for in that case the horse had behaved viciously, whereas in the case then before the Court, the sheep had behaved naturally, for they had merely run across the road and collided with the plaintiff's car. He did not think that an owner was liable for allowing harmless domestic animals on the highway even if they, on their own volition, caused an obstruction (see [1916] 2 K. B., at pp. 378 and 380).

The authorities up to Hodges' case appear, therefore, to establish that a person will not be liable for the act of an animal mansuetæ naturæ, that is, an act that the animal does of its own volition and not under direction, which he allows to be at large, unless it was the type of act that the particular animal would be likely to do and that person knows it. Moreover, both Hamilton, J., in Jones v. Lee, 106 L. T., at p. 125, and Avory, J., in the Divisional Court, in Hodges' case, [1916] 1 K. B. at pp. 213-4, thought that such an act must have a vicious or mischievous quality.

The case of Deen v. Davies, [1935] 2 K.B. 282, marked a distinct departure from the last noted view. The defendant in that case rode his pony into Merthyr Tydfil and put her in a stall, tied to a wooden bar. The pony escaped and in running through the streets, on its way home, injured the plaintiff. It having been found that the defendant was negligent in tying-up the pony, the plaintiff was held entitled to recover. There was nothing vicious in the behaviour of the pony, but the Court thought that the defendant ought to have anticipated that the pony would behave as it did, if not properly tethered. Romer, L.J., distinguished the case from Hodges' case on the basis that a different principle was applicable in the circumstances of a person bringing an animal on to the highway from that which applied where the animal strayed on to the highway from adjoining land (see [1935] 2 K.B., at pp. 294-295).

Alldham v. United Dairies (London), Ltd., supra, raised the negligence point very clearly. There a pony of the defendants, attached to a milk cart, was left for half an hour in a main thoroughfare. It had often been left in the particular spot and the evidence showed that it used to put its "paws" on the pavement and move its jaw, of which the defendants were aware, but the jury at the trial found that the defendants did not know that the pony had a propensity to attack human beings. When the plaintiff was passing the pony it "jabbed at her," bit her face, caught her by the coat, dragged her down and pawed her with its feet. The jury also found that the defendants were negligent in leaving the pony unattended knowing that it had a habit of straying on to the foot pavement. Humphreys, J., the trial Judge, held that the plaintiff could not recover, but the Court of Appeal reversed his decision.

The principal judgment is that of du Parcq, L.J., who lays down the following propositions (see p. 527 of [1939] 4 All E.R.):—

(a) The general principles of the law of negligence are the same in the case of the control of an animal as in the control of a motor car or any other inanimate object, subject to limitations, in the case of an animal mansuetæ naturæ, owing to its capacity for spontaneous action.

(b) Negligence cannot be established merely by proof that a defendant has failed to provide against the possibility that a tame animal of mild disposition will do something contrary to its ordinary nature.

(c) Even if a defendant's omission to control or secure his horse is negligent, an act on the part of the horse which is contrary to its ordinary nature cannot be regarded, in the absence of special circumstances, as being directly caused by such negligence.

These propositions seem to give due weight to the authorities, to reconcile them, and, if one may say so, to be clear and precise. It is to Aldham's case that the lawyer will, we think, look in the future for enlightenment on this branch of the law.—S. J.

INNKEEPER'S LIABILITY FOR THEFTS FROM CARS.

THE black-out affords increased opportunities for pilfering from cars outside hotels.

The liability of an innkeeper for a theft from a motor car (before the war) was considered in Thorpe v. Weymouth at Bristol County Court in November last year. The plaintiff had left his car in the "pull-in" of the New Inn, Farmborough, while having some refreshment in the bar or lounge. After a stay of a quarter of an hour, the plaintiff found that his raincoat was missing, and he immediately informed the licensee, the defendant. The police were unable to recover the property, and the plaintiff therefore claimed its value (11. 1s.) from the defendant for breach of his common law duty. The car was a tourer, and therefore the doors could not be locked, but they were left shut, with the hood up.

The plaintiff's case was that he was not disentitled from recovering by any negligence on his part, as there was no obligation upon him to place his goods in the care of a servant of the innkeeper. The defendant's case was that the so-called "car park" was only a temporary "draw-in" for customers, to prevent obstruction of the traffic. It was not in the same category as the accommodation outside big hotels, where an attendant was sometimes provided. Moreover, the plaintiff had merely gone into the bar or lounge, and, as he had not entered the inn, the defendant's common law liability as an innkeeper had not arisen. If, however, the plaintiff had been a guest, the loss was due to his own negligence, and the defendant was therefore not liable.

The learned Deputy Judge (Mr. A. M. Wilshere) observed that the premises were admittedly an inn. He found as a fact that the "car park" or "pull-in," as the parties respectively described it, was used as a part of the inn by the defendant, whose liability as an innkeeper therefore arose. Nevertheless the plaintiff was himself negligent in leaving the coat in the car, and his claim therefore failed. Judgment was given for the defendant, with costs.

The position in regard to a recognised car park was illustrated in Stewart v. Titley (1939, L. J. N. C. C. R. 89). The plaintiff had left his car in a flood-lit car park outside the "Black Prince" on the Rochester Way. An attendant, in a peaked cap, was provided, but the car was missing at 11-20 p.m. It was eventually recovered, but the plaintiff claimed damages for its temporary loss, as there had been an implied invitation to park the car, and the defendant was liable as an innkeeper at common law, or as a bailee. The defendant denied liability on the ground that the car was not left "within the inn," or "received" in the car park, but had merely been left there for the plaintiff's convenience. Furthermore, the innkeeper's liability only arose in the event of the goods being lost, and it ceased if and when the goods (like the plaintiff's car) were recovered. His Honour Judge Sir Gerald Hurst, K.C., held that, once the goods were within the inn, the innkeeper's liability arose at common law. It was therefore unnecessary to prove delivery and reception of the goods. The defence failed on the plea that the car was not "within the inn," and the liability of the innkeeper could only be discharged if the loss was due to an act of God, the King's enemies or the guest's own negligence. None of these was alleged, and, as the defendant was liable at common law, no question arose of his liability as a bailee. Judgment was given for the plaintiff for 52*l.* with costs.

There was no evidence of any direction by the attendant to place the car in the park, but this circumstance did not enable the case to be distinguished from Aria v. Bridge House Hotel (Staines), Ltd. (1927, 137 L. T. 299). In that case the hall porter had directed the plaintiff to park his car in the space which was commonly used for the purpose, and was marked by a sign, "Free for Visitors." While the plaintiff was at dinner his car was stolen, but the defendants denied liability and, in the alternative, contended that their liability was limited to 30*l.* under the Innkeepers' Liability Act, 1863, s. 1, a copy of which had been duly exhibited. Swift, J., ruled, however, that that Act did not apply to the facts of the case, and—without deciding any question of negligence—he held that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the amount awarded by the jury, viz., 267*l.* 10*s.*, with costs.—L.J.

TAX ON KNOWLEDGE

If Sir Kingsley Wood is not afraid, as Mr. A. P. Herbert put it, to go down to history as the first Chancellor of the Exchequer to put a tax on the Word of God, he may not be deterred from putting a tax on Halsbury's Laws of England. He must then be classed with Habakkuk as capable de tout. It is not, however, necessary to equate His Majesty's Judges and writers of legal textbooks with the Major and Minor Prophets, or the Statutes with the Decalogue, in order to make out a very strong case for the exemption of them all from the operation of the purchase tax. Legal textbooks are not luxuries; they are the tools of a lawyer's trade. Agricultural implements and medical appliances are to be exempt from the tax because in the community's interest it is inadvisable to restrict their use; but we are at a loss to understand how the community can do other than suffer from inadequate legal help at a time like the present. Textbooks and legal reports and periodicals are always necessary, and they are doubly so now, as everyone knows. To keep abreast of the present spate of legislation without them passes the wit of man. Cost of production has risen enormously during the war, and the proposed tax must inevitably raise the price still higher. Lawyers are certainly not profiting from the war, and students (who cannot study without books) are poorer than ever. A tax upon any book is a deterrent to knowledge; but a tax upon law books is more; it will result in the impairment of an essential social service. There is another aspect, less tangible but potent. In our struggle against tyranny we are given free and great aid by the Dominions and Colonies because we have the same conception of liberty, based on our common heritage of the law. Legal reports, textbooks and periodicals go in large numbers from us to all parts of the Empire, and although the tax does not apply to exports, any detriment to their production at home weakens a link which should be preserved.—L. J.

THE BLACK-OUT DANGER

WE have often expressed our view that the imposition of black-out regulations does not alter the common law at all, but increases the necessity for observing its rules. Generally one has to insist on this point for the guidance of those who use our roads; but a decision of Mr. Justice Humphreys this week (Times, August 20) shows that additional care must also be taken by those who are responsible for their safety. The plaintiff, a pedestrian, collided with a sand-bin which was left on the footway in a London borough. He sued the local Council for negligence and succeeded. The learned Judge said that it was the duty of the defendants to keep their roads safe, and that in this case safety could have been assured by putting a big splash of white on the sandbin. It is not for us to say whether such an expedient would have averted this particular accident, but it is certainly true that the duty of the highway authority is to keep their roads safe and that an action for negligence may follow in any case where it can be shown that something has been done to make them unsafe. The defendant had brought about a source of danger and had done nothing to warn passengers of it; so that the antiquated doctrine "no liability for non-feasance" would not save them. A good case showing the limits of that doctrine or rule is Shoreditch Corporation v. Bull (1904, 2 L. G. R. 756), which was applied and followed in Newsome v. Darton U. D. C. (1938, 3 All E. R. 93). No doubt there must be many cases of this kind in these days of dark roads; and the learned Judge granted a stay of execution pending notice of appeal. We shall await the appeal with interest and, pendente lite, must say no more.—L. J.

ABOUT TURN

LORD Eldon used to tell a somewhat similar story of the great Dunning in an earlier generation: "I was once junior to Mr. Dunning, who began his argument and appeared to me to be reasoning very powerfully against our client. Waiting till I was quite convinced that he had mistaken for what party he was retained, I then touched his arm and, upon his turning his head towards me, I whispered to him that he must have misunderstood for whom he was employed, as he was reasoning against our client. He gave me a very rough and rude reprimand for not having sooner set him right, and then proceeded to state that what he addressed to the Court was all that could be stated against his client, and that he had put the case as unfavourably as possible against him in order that the Court might see how very satisfactorily the case against him could be answered. And accordingly Dunning very powerfully answered what he had before stated." Similar stories are told of Lord St. Leonards and of the Scots Lord Eldin.—S. J.

RECENT ENGLISH CASES.

DEFAMATION—Libel—Newspaper article—Article defamatory in primary sense, but defamatory in secondary sense by reason of special facts—Special facts known to certain readers of article, but no evidence that anyone misled thereby—Liability of publisher of newspaper. In an action for libel in respect of words which are not defamatory in their primary meaning, but are capable of being understood in a secondary and defamatory sense by persons having knowledge of certain special facts, in order to support an innuendo that the words bear the secondary and defamatory meaning, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to allege and to prove that there are persons who knew the special facts and so might understand the words in that secondary and defamatory sense, without proving that any person did in fact understand them in that sense. HOUGH v. LONDON EXPRESS NEWSPAPERS LD., [1940] 2 K. B. 507.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—No covenant to do external repairs—Landlord's right to enter and view the premises and effect repairs—Landlord's practice to do all repairs—Accident to third party on highway through want of repair of cellar cover—Action against landlord for damages for personal injury—Negligence—Liability of landlord. In order that a person injured while proceeding along a highway by the defective condition of premises alongside it may be entitled to sue the landlord instead of the occupying tenant for personal injuries, it is not necessary that the landlord should have covenanted with the tenant to do the external repairs; it is sufficient that he has reserved the right to enter on and view the premises and to do all necessary repairs. HEAP v. IND COOPE AND ALLSOP, LD., [1940] 2 K. B. 476.

—Rent—Payment by stranger to tenancy—Acceptance by landlord—Payment not ratified by tenant—Satisfaction. Payment to a landlord by a stranger to the tenancy of a sum equivalent to the amount of the rent owing by the tenant is not a good satisfaction of the rent, even if it be accepted by the landlord, unless it is made by the payer as agent for, and on behalf of, or in the name and on account of, the tenant, or with his authority or subsequent ratification. SMITH v. COX, [1940] 2 K. B. 558.

MASTER AND SERVANT—Servant employed at weekly wages—Absences from work ill—No wages paid or expected to be paid—Subsequent claim for wages during those periods—Inference of implied term that those wages are not to be paid. The question whether a servant is or is not entitled to be paid his wages during short periods of absence from work through illness, depends entirely on the terms of the contract which will often require to be ascertained by reference to the facts.

In a case therefore where a servant had been absent from work on three occasions through sickness and he had neither received nor expected to receive wages during those periods, the Court drew the inference that it was an implied term of the contract of employment that he should not be paid wages during such absences from work. O'GRADY v. SAPER, LD., [1940] 2 K. B. 469.

RECENT INDIAN CASES.

CHEQUE—Countermand of payment—Bank's liability—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 10, 31. A bank, which has negligently paid a cheque notwithstanding countermand of payment by the customer, cannot debit the customer's account with the amount of the cheque. The current account rule of a bank that "the bank will register instructions from the drawer regarding cheques lost, stolen, etc., but cannot guarantee constituents against loss in such cases in event of a cheque being paid" applies to events happening prior to the time when a cheque reaches the bank and is presented for payment and has no application where the negligence is committed by the bank after presentation. SYED MAHAMMAD YAKUB v. IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA, [1940] 2 CAL. 678.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 53—Decree for partnership accounts, whether saleable at the instance of a creditor who has attached it in execution of his decree. A decree for accounts passed in a suit for dissolution of partnership and for partnership accounts, though attachable, is not saleable at the instance of a creditor who has attached it in execution of his decree. KHIMJI POONJA AND CO. v. RATANSHI HIRJI BHOJRAJ, (1940) 19 PAT. 935.

—Sch. II—Reference to arbitration—Debt due to joint Hindu family—Only managing member joining the reference—Whether other members of the family bound by it—No record of. A manager of a joint Hindu family is competent to make a reference to arbitration so as to bind the other members of the family and the mere fact that the other members of the family did not join the reference does not invalidate it. KANSHI RAM v. HARNAM DAD, [1940] LAH. 599.

GAMING AND WAGERING—Brokers' claim against customer—Customer, if can set up plea of gaming and wagering. The plaintiff acted as broker on behalf of the defendant for sale and purchase of jute. The defendant never intended to give or take delivery and was simply gambling in differences, but the plaintiff was not a party to those gambling transactions :—Held, that the plea of gaming and wagering could not be set up by the customer against the broker's claim. GOAL DAS DAGA v. MANICK LAL BAITY, [1940] 2 CAL. 385.

LIMITATION ACT (IX OF 1908), SS. 19 AND 20—Promissory note debt—Payment towards debt generally—Appropriation not made by either party before suit—Payment whether available under s. 20 to save limitation. Where a debtor makes payment to his creditor to whom he owes money on a promissory note and the payment is an open payment and the evidence establishes that neither party made any appropriation either towards the principal or towards the interest at any time prior to the suit, or after the suit, the payments in question cannot save limitation. RISHI KISHEN v. KRISHNA KUMAR, (1940) 15 LUCK. 578.

REVIEWS.

The Madras Law Journal : Golden Jubilee Number. MADRAS : Madras Law Journal Office, Mylapore.

WE accord first our hearty greetings to our esteemed contemporary on attaining its golden jubilee. Fifty years ago it saw the light of day ; and at this date it is in vigorous growth. We wish it a long career of usefulness. This is the oldest law journal extant in India. The memorial volume, which symbolizes the jubilee, is divided into two parts. The first part contains messages of goodwill. The second part contains articles, twenty-two in number, on different topics of law written by writers of note. The volume contains much interesting reading.

Principles and Forms of Pleading. By SURESH CHANDRA GHOSH, Barrister-at-Law. CALCUTTA : Eastern Law House, Ltd., 15 College Square, 1941. Roy 8vo. Pages cxxvii and 1410. Price Rs. 16.

PLEADING, we are told, is an art, in which perfection depends on practice; and brevity is the soul of pleading as of wit. The object of pleading is definition, and a good pleading is concise, precise, relevant and comprehensive. It is a survival, in a remote way, of the forms of action in England. The idea underlying a settled form is to direct the attention of the plaintiff to the requirements of law and the points of attack which he is prepared to deliver. The book is divided into four parts. Part I deals with the history of pleadings and outlines the present day English and Indian systems of pleading. The principles of pleading are dealt with in part II, which treats in a systematic manner the general rules which govern the difficult art of pleading. No beginner in law can afford to neglect a study of these pages, for he can thereby assimilate the collected experience of bygone centuries which has contributed to the growth of the science of pleading. What is most practical in the book, however, is part IV, which sets out about six hundred forms of plaints and written statements in all conceivable forms of action, arranged, for facility of reference, in an alphabetical order. We have nothing but praise for this attractive volume. It is calculated to be of great use to the beginner; and even an experienced lawyer can derive considerable help by turning to it occasionally, if not constantly.

Indian Succession Act. By NRISINHADAS BASU, B.L., Advocate, Calcutta High Court. CALCUTTA : Eastern Law House, 15 College Square. 1941. Second Edition. Roy. 8vo. Pages clxx, 1276 and cxlxxiv. Price Rs. 12.

THIS is an exhaustive and up to date edition of the Indian Succession Act. The text of the Act as well as cases noted are brought down to July 1940. The annotations are arranged under cognate headings, printed in heavy type. Plentiful excerpts are taken from the English standard works on the subject. The principle and scope of each section are fully brought out. The practitioner need hardly go to any other edition of the Act, for he will find whatever information he needs within the covers of this bulky volume. There is an interesting introduction which surveys in brief the history of the legislation on the subject. The appendix contains sixteen Acts germane to the subject and also rules framed by the different High Courts in India. The volume is neatly printed and moderately priced.

The Indian Income-tax Act. By A. C. SAMPATH IYENGAR, B.A., B.L. Advocate, High Courts, Madras and Bangalore. MADRAS : Madras Law Journal Office, Mylapore. 1941. Royal 8vo. Pages 712 cxxxii, lxxii. Price Rs. 10-8-0.

SINCE the amendment of the Indian Income-tax Act in 1939 several commentaries on the Act have been published and the present one is one more. The author has approached his subject with this difference that he has stated the principles of the law in a narrative form without the least detriment to the exhaustiveness of his exposition. The treatment of the subject is both lucid and concise and towards this end the author has interspersed his text with illustrations and has not burdened it with detailed facts of cases. The case-law is dealt with in the footnotes appended to each proposition of the law in the text and for further elucidation these are amplified by the inclusion of brief summaries of the cases cited. No case of any importance is left out and the case-law has been brought down to the end of 1940. To add to its utility the book contains a number of appendices which include the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940, notifications relating to exemptions under s. 60 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, Double Income-tax Relief Orders and Rules, the Indian Income-tax Rules, 1922, the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1940, and the Excess Profit Tax (Amendment) Act, 1940. This is an up-to-date, comprehensive and clear treatise on a somewhat intricate statute of everyday reference ; and we recommend it to the profession with confidence.

The Law of Pleadings in British India. By RAI BAHADUR P. C. MOGHA, B.A., LL.B. CALCUTTA : Eastern Law House, 15, College Square. 1940. Sixth edition. Royal 8vo. Pages 897. Price Rs. 10.

THIS is a revised and up-to-date edition of a book which has now established itself as one of the authorities on the law of pleadings in British India. The case-law reported up to April 1940 is incorporated. The portion dealing with the principles of pleading and the footnotes appended to the part dealing with precedents are thoroughly revised and certain portions are rewritten in view of new Acts and amendments. It is not necessary here to expatiate on the manifold merits of this book which is well-known to the profession at large. The learned author has spared no pains in elucidating the science and art of pleadings. It is a work of outstanding merit and must find a place on the shelves of every legal practitioner. The book is moderately priced and neatly got up.

Law relating to Company Directors in India. By H. R. MEHROTRA, G.D.A. CALCUTTA : Progressive Publishing Co., P. 35B, Central Avenue. 1940. Demi 8vo. Pages. 274. Price Rs. 8.

THIS book which is primarily written for the use of directors, managing agents and other company officers summarizes the important provisions of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, relating to the rights, powers, duties and liabilities of company directors. The author has dealt with the subject under different heads and has in a clear and concise manner indicated the varied responsibilities which are imposed by law on the directors of companies. All leading decisions on the subject are referred to in the text. The author, who as a Public Accountant and Auditor of Companies, had practical acquaintance with the difficulties and requirements of company directors and officers, has here lucidly set forth the principles and has within a small compass gathered all the necessary information on the subject. The book will be of great help to company officers as well as to accountants and auditors as a handy reliable compendium.

The Indian Sale of Goods Act, 1930. By OM PRAKASH AGGARWALA, M.A., Punjab Civil Service. LAHORE : Lahore Law Depot, Kachery Road. 1941. Demi 8vo. Pages 731. Price Rs. 7-8-0.

THE law governing the relations of buyer and seller affecting as it does the community at large needs to be widely known and any new exposition of it is welcome. The book gives a comprehensive survey of the entire law on the subject contained in the Act of 1930. The author has critically examined the principles underlying the rules formulated in the provisions of the Act and these are illustrated by select cases. The case-law, both English and Indian, is brought down to December, 1940. The author in dealing with the English decisions has pointed out the extent to which the English law differs from the Indian enactment. A number of useful appendices add to the utility of the book, viz., one dealing with 'conflict of laws' and another with C.I.F., F.O.B. and Ex-ship contracts. The book will be of great use to the profession and to the public generally.

The Law of Hundis and Negotiable Instruments. By CHIRANJIVA LAL AGARWAL, M.A., LL.B., Advocate, Lahore High Court. LAHORE : The University Book Agency, Kacheri Road. Fourth edition. 1941. Demi 8vo. Pages 480. Price Rs. 5-8-0.

IN its fourth edition the author has carefully revised the text and has considerably enlarged it. The book opens with a short introduction which traces the origin, growth, object and meaning of negotiable instruments and hundis. This is followed by a brief summary which outlines the essential features of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. These preliminary chapters will be helpful to the beginner as a clear conspectus of the subject before he ventures to tackle the intricate provisions of the Act. The commentary on the Act is lucid, and the relevant case law, both English and Indian, is fully dealt with. There are useful appendices which give the various forms of hundis and the customs relating to them prevalent in India, stamps on negotiable instruments, the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, and the rules relating to Notaries Public. The book can be recommended not only to the lawyer and the student of law but also to bankers, businessmen and students of commerce.

The Arbitration Act, 1940. By N. L. GUPTA, B.SC., LL.B., U.P.C.S. (Judicial). ALLAHABAD : Law Publishing House, 33, Sheocharan Lal Road, 1940. Royal 8vo. Pages 306. Price Rs. 5.

THIS is, we believe, the first commentary on the recently enacted Arbitration Act which consolidates and amends the law of arbitration in British India. With the rapid growth of commerce and the consequential development of the practice of arbitration the law relating to it has assumed a highly technical aspect and any attempt to clarify it will therefore be of great help to arbitrators and lawyers alike. The learned author has clearly set out the plain meaning of the various sections and in elucidating these has extensively referred to the relevant case law on the subject. A number of appendices add to the usefulness of the book. These include Reports of the Select Committee and the Civil Justice Committee of 1925, the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, and the English Arbitration Acts of 1889 and 1934. The book may be recommended to arbitrators and lawyers as a handy guide on an important piece of legislation.

The Law and Practice of Excess Profits Tax in India. By S. K. IYER, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras, and S. C. MANCHANDA, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. LAHORE : Indian Law Agencies, Krishna Nagar. 1940. Roy. 8vo. Pages xvii, 116 and lxvii. Price Rs. 5.

THE Excess Profits Tax Act is purely a war measure, and let us hope it will disappear when the war is over. It is a piece of legislation co-ordinate with the Income-tax Act, and shares with it the clumsy drafting. The authors have done well in commenting on the new Act. The annotations are prepared from decided cases, and illustrated by concrete examples. The appendices contain the various rules framed under the Act. The book will undoubtedly be of help in interpreting the provisions of the Excess Profits Tax Act.

The "Yearly Digest" 1940. Edited by R. NARAYANASWAMI IYER, B.A., B.L., MADRAS : Madras Law Journal Office, Mylapore. Royal 8vo. Columns
1296. Price Rs. 4.

THIS is a digest of Indian and select English cases reported in all the important legal journals during the year 1940 and is indispensable to the profession. Its arrangement of titles and sub-titles leaves nothing to be desired.

The Indian Partnership Act. By ANUKUL CHANDRA MOITRA, M.A., B.L.
CALCUTTA : Sanyal & Co., 1/1A, College Square. 1940. 2nd edition.
Demi 8vo. Pages 335. Price Rs. 3-12-0.

IN this second edition the author has revised the commentary in the light of new decisions and has added much useful matter to the appendices. These latter contain the Rules framed by the several Provincial Governments under the Act, the procedural law in partnership suits, the text of the English Partnership Act, the repealed sections of the Indian Contract Act relating to partnership, and accounting and book-keeping in partnership concerns. The case-law is exhaustively dealt with and brought up-to-date. This edition, like its predecessor will commend itself to the profession.

How to form a Company. By H. R. MEHOTRA, G.D.A. CALCUTTA : Progressive Publishing Co. 1940. Demi 8vo. Pages 160, Price Rs. 3.

THIS book deals with the law and practice relating to formation of companies under the Indian Companies Act. The main provisions of the Act are arranged in a practical order and the reader is taken from the initial stages of the formation of a company down to the issue of the certificate of incorporation. There are also chapters dealing with the principal statutory requirements of companies and various forms and other vital information are embodied in the appendices. To promoters and officers of companies this publication will be useful.

For Necessary Action, Vol. II. LAHORE : Indian Cases, Ltd. 1941. Royal 8vo.
Pages 164.

THIS is a further selection from the speeches and judgments of the Hon'ble Sir Douglas Young, Chief Justice of the High Court at Lahore, delivered since the publication of Vol. I in 1938. The speeches cover a large variety of topics ranging from an apocalyptic new year's message to a graceful tribute to the memory of the late Mr. C. F. Andrews. The judgments are those delivered in five causes célèbres including the famous Shahid Ganj case. There is much instructive and interesting material in this book which will fill in the leisure hours of the busy lawyer or the lay reader.

1. CONSIDERING the various texts above quoted it appears that the persons suffering from certain disabilities are excluded from partition as well as inheritance.

Though from the text of Baudhayana above quoted the disqualification was originally confined only to those who were incapable of transacting business ( अकर्मिणः ), later on as observed by Mayne in his learned treatise on Hindu Law, physical and mental incapacity according to the standards of those days as well as incapacity to beget offspring formed the real foundation of the rules of the disqualification, and the exclusion of the outcast and the person addicted to evil deeds was based on social grounds. The bar on disqualified persons was imposed, though partly on religious grounds, was chiefly on physical and mental incapacity.

2. On the question whether murder as a ground of exclusion from inheritance can be supported from the ancient texts of Hindu Dharma Shashtra, in Vednayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal<sup>1</sup> their Lordships of the Madras High Court in dealing with the case of the mother who had murdered her son as succeeding to his estate discussed the meaning of the terms 'Patit' ( पतित ) degraded person and Pitradwit ( पितृद्विद् ) hostile to his father, as to whether on the strength of these terms, a murderer can be excluded from inheritance, and came to the conclusion that the point under consideration was clearly one untouched by the Hindu law. In the matter of the term, 'Patit' they observed that the rules dealing with the matter of degradation which even assuming that they were at one time more than mere moral injunctions could not be treated as otherwise than obsolete. As regards the text purporting to exclude from the succession a son 'hostile to the father', though their Lordships remarked that it undoubtedly showed how repugnant to the spirit of the Hindu law must be the contention that the estate of the deceased person passes to the heir who murders him, as if it were a reward for his unnatural act, they laid down that the text had never been acted upon and that it also must be considered obsolete. But their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kenchava v. Girimallappa,<sup>2</sup> have observed as follows (p. 574) :—

"There is much to be said for the argument of the Subordinate Judge that the principles of jurisprudence which can be traced in Hindu Law, would warrant an inference that according to that law a man cannot take advantage of his own wrong, and that if this case had come under consideration by the Hindu sages they would have determined it against the murderer."

But thinking it unnecessary so to decide, their Lordships remarked that the High Court had rightly decided that the principles of equity, justice and good conscience excluded the murderer. Thus it is now an undisputed proposition of Hindu law that a murderer is disqualified from succeeding to the estate of the person murdered and that he should be treated as non-existent when the succession opens on the death of his victim and he cannot be regarded as a fresh stock of descent.

3. But the question is whether a Hindu co-parcener murdering his father can forfeit his rights in the joint family property as a coparcener. On behalf of the murderer it is likely to be contended that the rulings on the point of succession cannot be applied to his coparcenary rights in the joint family property which he acquires by birth in the family and that any interest in the joint family property being once acquired by birth cannot be divested on account of his subsequent disqualification due to his act of murder and that this disqualification based on the ground of murder is on a different footing from other disabilities which under Hindu law exclude a person from inheritance and partition.

4. The original word Daya heritage as given in the Mitakshara signifies wealth which becomes the property of another solely by reason of his relation to the owner.<sup>1</sup> It comprises both heritages—the unobstructed अ प्रतिबन्ध) and obstructed (सप्रतिबन्ध). The words (मृते पितरि) 'when the father is dead' in the passage from Devala Smriti quoted at the outset are explained in Smritichandrika as used in the text simply to indicate the time of partition. So from this it appears that the general word inheritance comprises both the rights of succession and survivorship. This interpretation gets support from the dicta of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter on p. 976 of I. L. R. 45 Madras,

"Chapter II Sec. 10 Plactium I (of Mitakshara as arranged by Mr. Colebrooke) begins with the statement that the rule of exclusion propounds an exception to Daya-Grahan by the sons, widows and other heirs and the reunited members and this by necessary implication refers one back to the definition of Daya in the beginning of Chapter I. Daya apparently means property considered in the light of something which in the natural course of events will pass from one person to another and includes both Apratibandha Daya and Sapratiibandha Daya, the former passing by survivorship to the sons, &c. and the latter passing by succession to the widows and other heirs. This is the reference to Vibhaga or partition in placita 6 and 7 and placitum 8 also shows that the word Daya-Grahana includes within its scope both property which passes by survivorship and that which passes by succession."

5. The next question to be considered is whether a subsequent disqualification would deprive a person of his coparcenary rights acquired by his birth. It is likely to be argued that the properties once vested in a co-parcener cannot be divested. In this connection in Muthusami Gurukkal v. Meenammal,<sup>2</sup> Mr. Justice Sheshagiri Ayyar while dealing with the case of an insane father surviving his son, has on page 470 made some general observations out of which those that are relevant for the purpose in hand are as follows :—

"Ideas which we find imported into the discussion of this question by speaking of the inheritances 'vesting', or 'being divested,' of the succession opening on the death of the father', &c. which may have meaning when applied to Jeemutha Vahana's exposition of Hindu Law are not correctly applied to Vijnaneswara's School of Law."

Similarly in A. I. R. 1935 Madras 775 Mr. Justice Vardachariar observed as follows :—

"Further though a text of a Yagnavalkya postulates equal rights of father and son in paternal grandfather's estate, the development of this conception into the doctrine of right by birth, with the incidents of right to demand partition and right to interdict alienation, is found only in the Mitakshara and even under the Mitakshara the right of survivorship is more a result than an expressed incident."

Later on in the same case it has been further observed as follows :—

"When in placitum 6 Vijnaneswara goes on to draw a distinction between disqualification prior to division and disqualification subsequent to division, he is developing something like the modern theory of vesting and divesting which is only latent in the original text."

This means that the right of a coparcener is vested in him only after division of his share in the family partition and not before. In I. L. R. 13 Patna p. 712 Mr. Justice Wort has on p. 729 remarked as follows :—

<sup>1</sup> तत्र दायशब्देन यद्धनं संबन्धादेव निमित्ता- दन्यस्य स्वं भवति तदुच्यते । स च द्विविधः

"The term 'Vesting' however seems to me to be inappropriate to anything but to a case of inheritance but may be loosely used in relation to the right acquired by the birth of a person born in a joint Hindu family".

6. All these passages quoted from the various rulings establish that the interest which a person acquires by birth in the joint family property cannot be legally said to be vested in him. Moreover, it is clearly laid down in Mitakshara<sup>1</sup> that the disqualified persons would not get any share if they be affected by the disability before partition. If the right of vesting is to be conceded, then a coparcener who, after birth but before partition, gets disqualified, cannot be excluded from his share in the family property—a result quite contrary to the original texts in Hindu law. •

7. The position of a person excluded from right of inheritance and partition in a joint Hindu family is discussed in the various texts of Hindu Dharma Shastra. Mitakshara lays down that though the excluded persons do not share the estate, they must be supported by an allowance of food and raiment only and that the penalty of degradation would be incurred if they be not maintained.<sup>2</sup> Manu also states the same thing (Vide Manu IX, 202). Yagnavalkya in verse 2 quoted at the outset opines that the sons of excluded persons are entitled to allotment if free from similar defects. But from the passages quoted at the outset from Narada and Devala, it appears that the outcast and their issues were not provided with maintenance as those excluded on other grounds. It is observed in Vishnu-Smriti<sup>3</sup> that sons born to a degraded man, after the commission of the act which caused his degradation, could not be allowed any share. Vasishtha also enjoins that outcasts as well as their sons should not be maintained.<sup>4</sup> From all these texts it is clear that the sons of all persons excluded from inheritance as well as partition except those of the degraded, born after the act of degradation, were provided with shares if they were themselves free from any such defects. But since the establishment of the British Rule in this country, the change of religion and loss of caste which at one time were grounds of forfeiture of property and of the exclusion from inheritance have ceased to be so since the passing of the Freedom of Religion Act, XXI of 1850. All this discussion shows that generally the disability is purely personal and does not extend to the legitimate issue of the disqualified person.

8. Further it is laid down in the Mitakshara that if the defect be removed by medicaments or other means at a period subsequent to the partition, the right of participation takes effect on the same principles on which "When the sons have been separated, one who is afterwards born of a woman in class shares the distribution."<sup>5</sup> This text of Mitakshara has been commented upon in Venkateswara Pattar v. K. Mankayamma<sup>6</sup> as follows :—

"But the statement in placitum 7, as regards the right of a person whose disqualification subsequently disappears is wholly the author's own; there is nothing corresponding to it even in the Dayabhaga system of Jimutavahana. The Mitakshara bases this rule on the analogy of the after-born son. Having introduced this conception, Vijnaneswara does not pause to make it clear whether this doctrine of restoration is to be applied even to cases of strict inheritance (Sapratibandha) by co-heirs or only to cases of partition among coparceners. Consistently with other well established theories in the law of inheritance, there is no scope for applying this doctrine as between co-heirs, because the inheritance is once, for all vested at the moment the succession opens".

The word Adi (आदि) in (औषधादिना) has been interpreted in the Balambhatti commentary as including Prayaschitta which would remove disabilities based upon religious grounds. From all this discussion, it appears that the disabilities based upon physical and natural defects were more leniently dealt with than those based upon social and religious degradation. The disability of a coparcener due to his act of the murder of his father would have been severely dealt with by the Hindu Dharma Shastras if they were required to consider his right in the family property, as generally the sin of a father's murder was punished by the infliction of Dehant Prayaschitta (the death punishment), and therefore in ancient Hindu law texts we do not find any discussion about the forfeiture of the rights of a coparcener murdering his father, in the joint family property.

9. As regards the right of a coparcener disqualified on account of physical and natural defects in the joint family property which he acquires by birth, it is laid down in Muthusami Gurukkal v. Meenammal<sup>1</sup>:

"The right of a member of a Hindu joint family to share in ancestral property comes into existence at birth and is not lost but is only in abeyance by reason of a disqualification. It subsists all through, although it is incapable of enforcement at the time of partition if the disqualification then exists. Hence, if on the death of all the other members, the disqualified member becomes the sole surviving member of the family, he takes the whole property by survivorship".

This principle finds support in Smritichandrika which while dealing with the case of excluded persons has quoted Katyayana who states that on failure of kinsmen he may take the paternal wealth, though this text does not appear to be cited in any ruling on this point. The same principle has been upheld in Venkateswara Pattar v. K. Mankayammal<sup>2</sup>. So all that has been held in favour of an ordinary disqualified person is that he is entitled to maintenance and will be given the right of survivorship only when he happens to be the sole surviving member of the family.

10. As already discussed above a murderer, though he could not be excluded on the strength of any explicit text of Hindu Dharmashastra, has been deprived of his right of inheritance to the estate of the murdered person on the general principles of justice, equity and good conscience. The case of a Hindu coparcener murdering his father stands on quite a different footing from that of a murderer who commits the murder of a third person whose estate he was to inherit. In Vednayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal<sup>3</sup> the Madras High Court while commenting on the term 'hostile to the father' considered it as obsolete but further observed as follows:—

"Even were it otherwise, relating as the text does to the case of father and son there would be no warrant for treating the words importing that relation as merely illustrative and virtually comprehending all cases of heritable relations, the foundation of the rule being most probably, the special reverence and regard to the father as head of the family inculcated by the Hindu Shastras".

These remarks lend some support to the inference that if the case of a coparcener murdering his father had been before their Lordships and if his rights in the co-parcenery property were to be considered by them, their Lordships would have, it appears, enjoined the forfeiture of even his coparcenery rights in the family property. Under the Hindu Dharma Shashtra the penalty for the murder of a father could not be otherwise than the death of the murderer; so they had no occasion to consider and deal with his civil rights in the family property. It is only after the introduction of the British rule in India that the offence of murder has been provided with the sentence of transportation for life only in appropriate cases. There are therefore very rare cases wherein a murderer after serving his sentence of transportation for life would turn up and claim his coparcenery rights such as partition &c. in the joint family property. Any how this point is not so far covered by any authoritative ruling. There is only one case Nilmadhav Mitter v. Jotindra Nath Mitter<sup>1</sup> referred to in Har Bhagwan v. Hukam Singh.<sup>2</sup> In this case the son who was excluded from inheritance by reason of his murdering his father served out the punishment inflicted upon him and claimed maintenance from his son who had got the inheritance and it was held that the murderer was entitled to maintenance and so his after-born son. But it is a case of inheritance under Dayabhaga and therefore the question of a coparcener's rights in the family property did not therein arise. But any how it may be taken as an authority for the proposition that the coparcener (murdering his father) and even his after-born sons would be entitled only to maintenance out of the family assets though the idea of providing maintenance to such persons appears most revolting to the spirit of Hindu Dharma Shastras. Taking the logical stand in the matter, the murderer coparcener is required to be taken to be extinct in the family and that is why the person was excluded on the ground of social and religious degradation as well as his issues born after the act of degradation were neither allotted shares nor provided with maintenance.

3 (1904) I. L. R. 27 Mad. 591.

11. But relying upon the text of Mitakshara, as regards the right of a person, whose disqualification subsequently disappears, it may be argued on behalf of the murderer that the disqualification due to murder would be removed by undergoing the term of the sentence of transportation for life and he would be free to claim his coparcenery rights which, in the case of an ordinary disqualification, only remain in abeyance so long as the defect lasts. But in the matter of this Mitakshara text it has been observed in Venkateswara Pattar v. K. Manikayammal,<sup>3</sup> as follows:—

"The original texts [both in Manu and Yagnavalkya] themselves do not provide for a case in which the disabilities may subsequently cease. It is therefore no wonder that they give us no guidance in determining the exact legal status of a man under disability, with reference to joint family property."

Thus Hindu law does not lay down any rule in regard to the precise point at issue and when Hindu law is silent on the point, Bombay Regulation III of 1827 enjoins that English Law directed by the principles of justice, equity and good conscience should be resorted to: vide Gangu v. Chandrabhagabai.<sup>4</sup> If therefore a murderer is to be excluded from his right of inheritance to the estate of the victim of murder under the general principles of justice, equity and good conscience, why should not a coparcener murdering his father be made, on the same general principles, to forfeit his coparcenery rights in the family property? After all the point is a moot one and there is likely to be a divergence of opinion on it.

B. R. PATWARDHAN.

SAGOTRA MARRIAGES.

THE impact of modern ideas has created violent disturbances practically in every department of knowledge and walk of life. The force of this impact is more keenly felt in the social sphere where old ideas and patterns of social behaviour are rapidly being felt to be obsolete and vexatious. The same spirit of discontent is invading the structure of Hindu law and we find new legislative enactments over-riding the provisions of the old Hindu law.

Some reformists think of abolishing the prohibition of sagotra marriages. Mr. Gajendragadkar's article in 42 Bom. L. R. Journal, pp. 49-52, illustrates such an advocacy.

It is obvious that the texts of ancient Dharmashastra and the present Hindu law are unanimous in holding that sagotra marriages are void. It is urged that it is unnecessary and even undesirable in the present advanced stage of Hindu society to stick to old rules of conduct which are difficult of justification on rational grounds. Thus the texts being unambiguous, it is attempted to go behind the express provisions of these texts and to find out what the ancient law-givers meant by this interdiction. It is also sought to be made out that this prohibition of sagotra marriages may be at variance with the true spirit of ancient Dharmashastras. But the question of intention or true spirit animating the relevant provisions of Hindu law in this behalf and the extraneous evidence as to the various meanings of the word "gotra" can only be relevant when the wording of the text is ambiguous.

Restrictions as to sapinda relationship seem reasonable, as the prohibition of marriage on the ground of consanguinity is present in practically every personal law; but it is now being urged that there is no reason underlying the interdiction of sagotra marriages. It must be admitted that both these restrictions involve a premium on personal liberty and circumscribe the choice of a marital partner. But that cannot be helped, for, the moment we act as social individuals and submit ourselves to social norms and patterns of behaviour there is bound to be a certain premium upon the freedom of individual action. A specific distinction is being made between सपिण्ड and सगोत्र restrictions, the former being pronounced as wholesome and the latter unreasonable and vexatious; but there are no definite criteria adduced to show the undesirability of the latter. Simply by adducing various interpretations of the word गोत्र one cannot establish that सगोत्र restrictions are undesirable on eugenic grounds. There can be no doubt that the question of marriage laws is a sociological problem which pertains primarily to the bio-sphere of human activity. Thus it would be more reasonable and especially with the advanced state of society in which we find ourselves at present, if we try to import sociological considerations in this essentially sociological problem. It is unsafe for a jurist or legal reformer to be too sanguine about the abolition of an age-old pattern of social behaviour or introducing a new one after the analogy from a different structure of society. It is advisable both in the interests of society whose laws we wish to remodel, and in the interest of modern science and reason and also in conformity with our advanced stage of society, that these sciences of life should be consulted before any judgment is pronounced. As Prof. Jennings says, man is first a biological animal, his affairs are biological affairs, and ought to be carried on not in contravention of genetical laws but by obeying them.

So before stigmatising a custom or pattern of social behaviour as unreasonable or unjust, one ought to specifically point out the social evil which such custom or mode of standardized behaviour (Āchāra) has produced during its continuance through the life of social groups. He must also point out the social advantages and welfare or better results following the abolition of such customs. It is urged that the prevalence of the सगोत्र restriction constitutes in itself a social wrong which heaps injustice upon marital partners; but there is as yet no evidence produced of evil results or deterioration of social groups which has resulted because of the observance of the सगोत्र rule or of population groups showing better results, a better vitality or a greater survival value which will follow the abolition of the said restriction.

When we read the various interpretations of the word गोत्र in Vedic and subsequent times, we are inclined to dispute the desirability of such a characteristic system of mating whose meaning itself is not uniform. But the fact of the word गोत्र being interpreted in manifold ways does not unsettle the inference that सपिंड and सगोत्र restrictions were observed even in Rigvedic times. It is admitted that the rule in the case of सगोत्र and antagonistic गोत्रs was observed from the times of the Brahmana literature i.e. from about 2000 B.C. It will not also be desirable if we ignore the effects of such a system on the genetic structure of social groups.

There appears to be a very general agreement among critics on Hindu law about the desirability of सपिंड restrictions; first because restrictions as to consanguinity and affinity exist in practically every personal law and secondly because these restrictions are wholesome from biological considerations. It is not clear whether before pronouncing सगोत्र restrictions as unreasonable and vexatious, and an interference with personable liberty in the advanced stage of Hindu society, the same were tested from the findings of the modern biological science and found undesirable. To my knowledge, no such attempt has as yet been made. This problem is quite a technical one and one which does not deserve a superficial treatment accorded to it up to now.

While admitting the desirability of सपिंड restrictions, it is tacitly admitted that according to the laws of biological inheritance persons belonging to the same type of genetic constitution should not be mated. But if the genetical qualities or potentialities are widely variable then even the सपिंड restrictions are silly; but if the genetical traits persist and are not variable then the सगोत्र restrictions are justifiable. Besides, it is rather strange that when the modern tendency is more and more towards out-breeding or even promiscuity, one should ask for सगोत्र men and women to be allowed as marital partners.

As I have suggested above that despite the various meanings of the word गोत्र the said restrictions are being observed for at least 4000 years. It is a question for the experts to decide whether, during forty centuries of a deliberate system of hereditary transmission a fixation of strains is inevitable. If it is established that an almost rigid observance of a particular system of perpetuation which excludes members of the same family or गोत्र or members of antagonistic गोत्रs during a period of 4000 years has absolutely no effect upon the genetic constitution of racial groups, then the demand for the prohibition of सगोत्र restrictions would have some force. It is urged that when after thousands of years in the present times both bride and bridegroom belonging to one गोत्र cannot even by a stretch of imagination trace their connection to the common ancestor of both, the prohibition imposed upon the marriage of such bride and bridegroom is hardly justifiable.

It is inaccurate to say that मनु does not refer to सगोत्र restrictions. (Vide मनु. ch III. 5. असर्पिदा च या मातुः असगोत्रा च या पितुः सा प्रशस्ता द्विजातीनां दारकर्मणि मैथुने ॥) *

If we look to judicial pronouncements on the question of सगोत्र restrictions, we find the idea of सगोत्र relationship to have been based on propinquity of blood. (Vide 32 Bom. 619 ; 11 Mad. 49 ; A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 588.) It is not also true to say that शूद्राः have no गोत्राः (A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 497)

It is also being urged that the various qualifications of a bride according to Hindu law as mentioned in verses 52, 53, 54 of याज्ञवल्क्य are not at all mandatory. (A. I. R. 1941 Journal, pp. 23-24) (अविष्कृतब्रह्मचर्यो लक्षण्याम् स्त्रियमुद्वहेत् अन्यपूर्विकां कान्तां असर्पिदां यवीयसी ॥ etc.) It is contended that inasmuch as most of the qualifications are not mandatory, there is nothing in the text itself to show that the restriction as to सगोत्र is mandatory. It must be admitted that the above text does not expressly lay down गोत्र as mandatory ; but neither does it lay down सर्पिद restriction as mandatory. It cannot be said that the various qualifications laid down are mere अर्थवादः left to the sweet will of marital partners for their observance.† There is ample evidence to show that these restrictions are wholesome both from the standpoint of the individual and the society. Manu in Ch. III. 6, 7, has enumerated such other qualifications which every lover of modern science and reason will have to admit as desirable. Under these circumstances it cannot be contended that these restrictions can be ignored as not being mandatory. The question as to how these restrictions are supported by modern sociological considerations is obviously outside the scope of the present article.

Another consideration which is rather seriously being urged is to formulate rules under Hindu law which should be applicable to all sections of the society alike ; in short the rules must be without exception of universal application throughout all the groups of population. This may, possibly be, one of the chief motives why the सगोत्र prohibition, which is more strictly observed in the Brahmin varna, is sought to be done away with. This proposition cannot be upheld, if the principles enunciated in ancient Dharmashastras as underlying the structure of Hindu society are to be respected ; or even on the strength of modern sociological considerations. The ancient law-givers did not intend to lay down homogeneous laws which would be applicable in the same manner to all the sections of society.

APPLICABILITY OF THE INDIAN LIMITATION ACT TO PROCEEDINGS BEFORE ARBITRATORS
UNDER CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES ACT.

THE question whether the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act apply to the proceedings before arbitrators appointed under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act is not free from doubt; for the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act does not contain any clear provisions on this point.

The preamble to the Indian Limitation Act declares that, that law is intended for suits appeals and certain applications to 'Courts'. Beaumont C. J. in Raghawendra v. Industrial Bank, Guledgud<sup>1</sup> has stated :—

"Now it seems to me perfectly clear that the award of the arbitrator under s. 54 of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act is not a decree of the Civil Court... I doubt myself whether the award ever becomes the decree of the Civil Court within the meaning of article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act."

Rule 35 of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Rules which regulates the procedure of proceedings before the arbitrators or Government nominees appointed under the Act, says that the decision or the award of the nominee shall be given in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience. It is significant that in rule 35 there is no mention of 'law' with justice, equity and good conscience as governing the principles of giving awards.

This topic was discussed by Mr. K. L. Punjabi, at one time the Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Bombay, in an article under the heading "Does Limitation Act apply to claims of Societies in Bombay Presidency?" contributed by him to the December 1937 number of the Bombay Co-operative Quarterly. Therein he said :—

"Under the circumstances it seems fairly clear that although the mandatory and rigid principles of the Law of Limitation are not binding upon the arbitrators appointed under s. 54 of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act yet they afford some guidance to the arbitrators who would be justified in rejecting stale claims in all cases where they are convinced that the enforcement of the claims would cause undue hardship on the defendants particularly if the society has not acted as promptly as it ought to have done".

From the above remarks of Mr. Punjabi he seems to be of the opinion that though the law of limitation, strictly speaking, does not apply to proceedings before arbitrators, nevertheless arbitrators would be justified in rejecting stale claims apparently on the ground of justice and equity. On the other hand arbitrators cannot be said to be legally wrong if they reject the plea of limitation advanced in proceedings before them. Thus the opinion of one who was at one time the head of the department does not help us in solving this doubt. Though it is considered doubtful whether the provisions of the Indian Limitations Act apply to proceedings before the arbitrators it is now established by decisions of the Bombay High Court that the law of limitation applies to execution proceedings of the awards passed by arbitrators. The learned Chief Justice has remarked in Raghawendra v. Industrial Co-operative Bank, that awards of arbitrators are not decrees of civil Courts thereby suggesting that arbitrators are not civil Courts but His Lordship also holds that darkhast must be filed within three years from the date of the grant of the certificate by the Registrar indicating thereby that the Indian Limitation Act applies to execution proceedings of the awards. Further their Lordships of the Bombay High Court in Maratha Co-operative Bank v. Keshav Trimbak Hunde,<sup>1</sup> have held that the application to execute an award made under the provisions of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act is subject to provisions of the Indian Limitation Act. Rangnekar J. has said in this case :—

“To hold that an award under the Co-operative Societies Act is not subject to the Law of Limitation would obviously lead to some absurd results”.

The question whether the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act apply to proceedings before arbitrators appointed under the Co-operative Societies Act is not directly decided by any of the High Courts. Recently a case on this point has been decided by the Burma High Court in U. Kyau. Tha v. Co-operative Town Bank of Henzanda.<sup>2</sup> The provisions of the Burma Co-operative Societies Act and the rules made thereunder are exactly similar to the provisions and the rules under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act. Section 5 of the Burma Act read with rule 15 provides that any dispute touching the business of a Co-operative Society between members or past members or persons so claiming shall be referred to the Registrar for his decision. The Registrar can also appoint his nominee. He is to decide the case according to equity, justice and good conscience, and awards made by arbitrators are to be enforced as decrees of civil Courts. According to the Burma Act the jurisdiction of civil Courts in matters connected with Co-operative Societies is also barred. These provisions regarding awards under the Burma Act are exactly similar to the provisions on this subject under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act. Hence the case decided by the Burma High Court can be taken to be a good authority by arbitrators in this province. The plaintiff-appellant in this case sought to have the awards passed under the Co-operative Societies Act declared void on various grounds, the most important of which was that the claim preferred by the society was at the time of the reference to the arbitrator barred by the law of limitation. It cannot be said that the Courts have no jurisdiction even to consider whether the awards bear errors in law on the face of them. For the Courts in considering awards are not to pass judgment in the matter of the dispute between the parties but in the matter of awards whose validity is challenged. These are entirely different matters. It seems unreasonable to hold that there is nothing in the statute regulating reference to arbitrators to indicate that the arbitrator is free to act in defiance of the laws of the land. There is no authority for such a proposition.

The Indian Arbitration Act, 1940, allows the Court to set aside an award when an arbitrator has misconducted himself or the proceedings or the award has been improperly procured or otherwise invalid (s. 30). In Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. I, under 'arbitration', para. 1132, it is observed that one of the grounds on which an award may be set aside is that the arbitrator has misconducted himself. In para. 1133 we find that misconduct occurs if the award is on its face erroneous in a matter of law. Looking into English cases we find that Bruce J. has observed in In re Astley and Tyldesley Coal and Salt Co.<sup>3</sup>—

“It seems to me unreasonable that parties to a submission should be precluded from raising the defence of the Statute of Limitations unless a provision to that effect be drawn up and embodied in the submission”.

It is true, no doubt, that the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act or the remarks in Halsbury's Laws of England are not applicable to awards under the Co-operative Societies Act. Still there is no reason why these observations should not apply with equal force in the case of arbitrators under the Co-operative Societies Acts. It cannot have been intended that in cases before the arbitrator, he should be permitted to ignore the operation of the laws applicable in matters which come before him and should be permitted to give his decision according to his mere caprice. Surely an arbitrator cannot be said to have decided according to justice, equity and good conscience, if he has allowed himself to ignore the laws of the land applicable to the matters before him.

Giving all such valid and sound reasons the Burma High Court has held in the case referred to above that where an award made by an arbitrator has ignored the law of limitation the civil Court has jurisdiction to set aside such an award. It is submitted that if the point comes before the Bombay High Court, it would give an exactly similar judgment. In the meantime arbitrators or the Government nominees appointed under the Co-operative Societies Act should always take into consideration the plea of limitation, if raised by the defendants in the proceedings before them. The Co-operative Department also should issue a circular giving clear instructions to their arbitrators on this point. The Department should further note that any attempt to strengthen the belief that the arbitrator is not bound by any rules of limitation would be, in a way, giving encouragement to Co-operative Societies to be careless and negligent about their duties. Cases of great negligence even to-day are not wanting. Claims are sometimes enforced against heirs of deceased members after a considerable time and the plight of sureties who are made responsible for the failure of principal borrower to repay the loan after lapse of time can be easily imagined particularly if the sureties have been kept ignorant of the continuing default of the principal debtors.

The above discussion is in reference to awards and proceedings before arbitrators. It is not applicable to orders passed by liquidators under s. 50 of the Act, for entirely different rules under the Act are applicable to those orders.

WAGES FOR A HOLIDAY.

UNDER the Indian Factories Act a workman is entitled to a weekly holiday which he is supposed to have earned by working for a week. Previous to the enforcement of the Payment of Wages Act, if a workman was absent on a day immediately previous or subsequent to the holiday, factory owners treated the workman as absent on that working day as well as on the following or preceding holiday, as the case might be. Even after the enforcement of the Payment of Wages Act, if a workman is absent on the two days immediately preceding or succeeding a holiday the majority of factory owners treat him as absent for three days and effect deduction in his wages accordingly. In one instance a Factory Inspector objected under the Payment of Wages Act, to an alleged non-payment of wages for a holiday falling in the period when a machine was stopped. This could only happen from a failure to appreciate the whole scheme of the Act.

The Payment of Wages Act does not contemplate total deduction of the wages for a holiday for a casual absence of one or more days nor does it go to the other extreme of payment of full wages for a holiday when they would not be rightly due. The Act has contemplated an ingenuous and a very equitable method of calculation which requires a clear understanding in order to be fully appreciated.

The Act lays down that the amount payable under the terms of the contract of employment is wages, and any deduction from the same should fall strictly under one of the clauses of sub-s. (2) of s. 7. Clause (b) of that sub-section provides for deduction for absence from duty and s. 9 of the Act lays down substantive provisions for the same. Sub-section (2) of s. 9 makes it clear that deduction for absence shall be in proportion to the number of days a workman is absent and the ratio provided is the total working days and the total wages on the one hand and the days the workman is absent and the deduction on the other. Thus in computing the entire wage for the purposes of deduction for absence, holidays are to be excluded at the outset, and wages are to be imagined to be payable for working days only, and in computing any deduction that may be made therefrom only the actual days of absence, exclusive of holidays, are to be counted. The notion of payability of wages under the Act is thus at variance with the commonly accepted notion inasmuch as ordinarily we understand wages to be payable for the wage-period as a whole including holidays, while under the Act it is the amount payable for the number of working days only.

Thus if a workman is paid Rs. 14 per hapta of sixteen days the employer should exclude the holidays in that hapta for the purposes of computing the amount to be deducted. Let us assume that there are two holidays in that hapta. Thus, in ordinary parlance we say that the wages are Rs. 14 for a hapta of sixteen days, and if the workman remains absent say for three consecutive days i.e. Saturday, Sunday and Monday, and if Sunday is a holiday, the employer deducts three days wages at the rate of Rs. 0-14-0 per day and the workman is paid Rs. 11-6-0. This, however, is contrary to law and for the purposes of the Act the wages are Rs. 14 for a hapta of fourteen working days and the employer is entitled to deduct wages for two working days only i.e. Saturday and Monday, at the rate of Rs. 14 per hapta of fourteen working days, and the workman must be paid Rs. 12. It will be clear that all the holidays in the wage-period having been excluded in the entire computation at the start there can be no second deduction for holidays at any stage under any circumstances.

It will thus be seen that the question of payment of wages for a holiday does not arise at all under the scheme as contemplated under the Payment of Wages Act. The Act requires that what would otherwise be wages for a holiday should be rateably added to the wages for working days and having done so, holidays should be left out of calculation in computing any absence from duty. Non-payment of wages for a holiday is, therefore, something which does not arise under the Act and the correct thing for an Inspector to do under such circumstances is to complain of disproportionate deduction and consequent breach of s. 9(2).

It will be noticed that in the scheme as contemplated by the Act a workman gets the exact proportion of wages for a holiday that he can be said to have earned by his work in the factory.

RECENT ENGLISH CASE.

NUISANCE—Ditch—Culvert blocked on respondents' land—Overflow—Damage—Liability. An occupier of land "continues" a nuisance if, with knowledge or presumed knowledge of its existence, he fails to take reasonable means to bring it to an end when he has ample time to do so; and he "adopts" it if he makes any use of the erection or artificial structure which constitutes the nuisance.

On the respondents' land was a ditch in which at a later date was placed a pipe or culvert for carrying off rain water, the pipe not being laid by the respondents, or with their knowledge or consent, and thus by a trespasser. They, however, subsequently became aware, through their servants, of its existence and they in fact used it for the draining of their fields. To prevent leaves or other matter blocking the opening of the pipe a grating was placed, not at some little distance from its opening where it would have been effective, but on the top of the pipe itself, with the consequence that during a heavy rainstorm the pipe became choked with leaves, so that the water overflowed on to the appellant's premises causing damage in respect of which he claimed to recover damages :—

Held, that the respondents must be taken to have had knowledge of the existence of the unguarded pipe on their land, notwithstanding that it was placed there by a trespasser, and, consequently, they were responsible for the damage caused to the appellant. SEDLEIGH-DENFIELD v. O'CALLAGHAN, [1940] A. C. 880.

RECENT INDIAN CASES.

CAUSE OF ACTION—Merger of cause of action into judgment—Effect of notification by the Governor-General in Council relating to execution of decree—Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), s. 44. A cause of action on which a judgment has been obtained is no longer in existence, but it merges into the judgment so obtained. This principle of law applies to domestic judgments of British Indian Courts, but has no application to a foreign judgment. Hence a fresh suit lies in British Indian Court on the same cause of action on which a foreign judgment has been already obtained even though such foreign judgment could be enforced in execution in British India by virtue of the notification issued by the Governor-General in Council under s. 44 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. *NIL RATAN MUKHOPADHAYAYA v. CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE (ACT V OF 1898), S. 488—Proceedings against whole family if contemplated—Magistrate, if can take into consideration the property of the family. Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, does not contemplate proceedings against a whole family merely because the husband against whom the proceedings are taken is a member of a joint Hindu family. Though the Magistrate may consider what is the property of the family, in considering what sum he should award the wife for maintenance, the order should be passed against the husband himself and not against the joint family. *HEMIBAI v. This rule is acted upon by the Divorce Courts in England and should, according to s. 7 of the Divorce Act, 1869, be followed in India.

Where the husband fails to pay the sum ordered by the Court to be paid to the wife for her costs for defending the suit and pleads inability to do so on account of poverty, the Court should stay proceedings in the suit until the payment is made. MASIH v. MASIH, [1940] ALL. 802.

REVIEWS.

The Code of Criminal Procedure, Vol. III. By V. V. CHITALEY, B.A., LL.B., and K. N. ANNAJI RAO, B.A., B.L. NAGPUR : The All India Reporter Ltd., 1941. Super Royal 8vo. Pages 2353 to 3599.

THIS concluding volume of the authors' commentary on the Criminal Procedure Code, deals with ss. 431 to 565 and the Schedules to the Act. A number of appendices containing reports of the Select Committees and extracts from certain enactments are included. The volume contains an exhaustive general index which facilitates ready reference. As the merits of this publication are already enumerated at length in the earlier reviews of the two preceding volumes, it is hardly necessary to say anything further in bringing it to the notice of the profession.

All India Digest, 1931-1940, Vol. I—Criminal. MADRAS : The Madras Weekly Notes Office, No. 5, Thambu Chetty Street. Royal 8vo. Columns 1988. Price Rs. 10.

THIS is a digest of criminal cases reported in the course of the last ten years in the leading law journals in India. The headnotes of cases are grouped under statutory headings and the statutes of local legislatures are arranged alphabetically under Provincial headings. To facilitate reference appropriate sub-headings are provided where the number of cases under a section are numerous. All the features which go to make a digest useful to the profession are present here and to lawyers practising in criminal Courts it will be helpful.

Penology in India. BOMBAY : The Indian Publications, Ltd., Lalgir Chambers, Tamarind Lane, Fort. 1940. Demi 8vo. Pages 208. Price Rs. 3.

THIS is a record of the proceedings of the First Indian Penal Reform Conference held in Bombay in February, 1940. At this conference a number of interesting and instructive papers, dealing with various aspects of penology in India, were read. All these are collected here under appropriate headings and will be of use to those who are interested in the subject of penal reform. It is a commendable venture on the part of the publishers to gather all this informative material in a handy publication.

Supplement to Watan Act and the Law of Saranjams and Inams. By N. H. PHADNIS, LL.B. DHARWAR : The Karnatak Law House. 1941. Demi 8vo. Pages 92. Price Rs. 2.

As its title indicates this is a supplement to the author's commentaries which were published in 1936. In this supplement the case-law is brought down to the end of 1940, and the recent Government Resolutions bearing on the subject are incorporated. This supplement brings up to date the author's previous publication which is so well known to the profession.

Yajnavalkya-Smriti with commentaries of Mitakshara, Viramitrodaya and Dipakalika : Prayasachitta Adhyaya, Chapters II to IV. By J. R. GHARPURE, B.A., LL.B., (Hons.), Principal, Poona Law College. BOMBAY : Collections of Hindu Law Texts, Angre's Wadi, Girgaon. 1941. Royal 8vo. Pages 1487-1654.

THIS volume contains three more chapters, translated into English, of the Prayasachitta Part of the Yajnavalkya Smriti, with the three standard commentaries on it. Chapter II deals with Duties in adversity ; chapter III treats of Duties of hermits ; and chapter IV handles Duties of the ascetics or the philosophy of the soul. The translation aims at facilitating the work of Judges and Lawyers in dealing with cases which give rise to questions of Hindu Law, and this purpose it carries out satisfactorily.

Smritimuktaphalam. Part V. Dharma Shastra Granthamala. By J. R. GHARPURE, B.A., LL.B. (Hons.), Principal, Poona Law College. BOMBAY : Collection of Hindu Law Texts, Angre's Wadi, Girgaon. 1940. Royal 8vo. Pages 825-1034.

IN the province of Madras, Vaidyaratdikshitiyam, as this work is otherwise called, is a Hindu law work of paramount authority. The present volume contains parts V & VI of that work. Part V deals with determination of Hindu dates, and is of academic interest to the lawyer. Part VI deals with prayasachitta or penances or redemption of sins. There is at the end an alphabetical index of the sayings of sages quoted by the author. This is unquestionably a valuable edition of the work in Sanskrit.

THE HON. MR. JUSTICE B. J. WADIA

The Bombay Law Reporter. JOURNAL

August 15, 1941.

Mr. JUSTICE B. J. WADIA

ON July 31, 1941, Mr. Justice Wadia took farewell of the Bombay Bar on the eve of his retirement. He was born on August 4, 1881. His father Jamshedji, who died in June last, was a well-known business magnet and an eminent economist. Jamshedji's thoughtful articles on economic and financial matters are well-known to the old readers of the Times of India. Mr. Justice Wadia received his early education at the Cathedral and the St. Xavier's High Schools. After passing the Matriculation Examination in 1896, he joined the St. Xavier's College, from which he passed the examination for the degree of B.A. standing first in the first class and winning the Cobden Club Medal in Political Economy and the Sir James Ferguson Scholarship. From 1901 to 1905 he was a Dakshina Fellow at the College imparting instruction in English to freshmen. In 1901 he took the degree of M.A. in Languages and Literature and in 1903 he passed the examination for the degree of LL.B. He proceeded to England in 1904 to qualify himself for the Bar. In the Bar Examination Final he took a first and was awarded a Certificate of Merit. In 1906 he was called to the Bar by the Inner Temple, and from January 1907 he commenced to practise at the High Court Bar.

During the Great War, when some of the Professors at the St. Xavier's College were interned, Mr. Justice Wadia acted as Professor in English at that College from 1914 to 1916. In 1914 he was also appointed Professor of Law at the Government Law School (now College), Bombay, and in 1919 he became its Principal, a post which he filled with distinction till 1925. He was a most popular Principal and his lectures at the Law School elicited high encomiums from law students.

During the twenty years that he was at the Bar he had built up a lucrative practice, and in June 1928 he was elevated to the Bench as acting Additional Judge for two months. In that brief period he made his mark as a sound Judge and won the esteem of the Bar. He again officiated as Judge of the High Court in 1929, 1930, and 1931, and was made a permanent Puisne Judge on June 19, 1931.

Mr. Justice Wadia brought to his exalted office many of the best attributes of a good Judge—learning, industry and impartiality. In that fierce light which beats upon the Bench he held the scales of Justice with a firm and even hand. To do justice and to give birth to the persuasion that justice is done, are two different things which he invariably combined. His thorough conscientiousness, untiring patience and devotion to duty, inspired confidence alike in the minds of advocates and suitors. There was no case, simple or complicated, in which he did not endeavour to grasp thoroughly all the facts before giving his decision. Leaning always towards doing substantial justice, he set his face against technicalities of any kind. He was never swayed by pre-conceived prejudices or extra-judicial considerations, and was ever anxious to temper justice with mercy. He was thoughtful and considerate towards those who, in the performance of their duties or in search of their rights, figured before him. His treatment of the members of the Bar, whether seniors, or juniors, was uniformly courteous and kind.

During the twelve years that he was on the Bench many interesting cases bearing on different branches of the law came before him for adjudication. We will note a few of them.

The mere use of a portion of joint family funds for a number of years under a sort of family arrangement for a temple does not establish a dedication to the temple (Bansilal v. Govindlal<sup>1</sup>). A father or manager of a joint Hindu family has no authority to impose the risk and liability of a new business upon any coparcener (Mulchand v. Jairamdas<sup>2</sup>). Under Hindu law a fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment does not affect the validity of a marriage to which the parties freely consent with knowledge of its nature (Bai Appibai v. Khimji<sup>3</sup>). A bequest "for the political uplift of India" does not create a valid charitable trust and is invalid (Subhas Chandra Bose v. Gokhdandas Patel<sup>4</sup>).

Under Mahomedan law mere entries in books of account are not sufficient to support a gift (Mahomed v. Aishabai<sup>5</sup>). Under Sunni law a gift of a life-interest in a property is valid; and such a life-interest is not enlarged into an absolute estate (Saroobai v. Hussein<sup>6</sup>).

Among Parsis a minor above the age of eighteen years and under twenty-one can maintain a suit for breach of promise of marriage (Freny v. Shapurji<sup>7</sup>). Cruelty under the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1936, need not necessarily be physical violence. A course of harsh conduct pursued by either spouse against the other may amount to cruelty (Cawasji v. Shehra<sup>8</sup>). Among Jews a formal bill of divorce is not necessary to get rid of a betrothal ceremony (Ezekiel v. Reuben<sup>9</sup>).

A sale or mortgage by a debtor of the whole of his property in consideration of a past debt is an act of insolvency (In re Adamali Nulvala<sup>10</sup>). Where there are several brokers working for the same party, the broker who is entitled to his remuneration is not necessarily the one who has first introduced the business, but the broker whose work is the effective cause of the completion of the business (Liladhar v. Mathuradas<sup>11</sup>). Sale of pledged goods without proper notice does not render the sale void, but makes the pawnee liable in damages for conversion to the pawnor (Cooverji v. Mawji<sup>12</sup>).

It is contempt of Court to write articles in newspapers vilifying parties to a pending suit (Demibai v. Rowji<sup>1</sup>). The Courts of one country are not bound, by the comity of nations, to accept as conclusive, on a question as to its own law and in a matter upon which it is called upon to adjudicate, the judgment of a foreign Court (Messa v. Messa<sup>2</sup>). No suit lies to get a refund of the penalty imposed under the Sea Customs Act (Bruusgaard v. Secretary of State<sup>3</sup>).

A combination of numerals can form a trade-mark. The right to use a particular trade-mark is confined to the article to which it is affixed, but it is open to a person to prove that the particular trade-mark has been so associated with his products that his name would suggest itself to the purchaser on seeing it on any other 'allied' product (Anglo Indian Drug & Chemical Co. v. Swastik Oil Mills Co.<sup>4</sup>). The features necessary to the validity of a patent are novelty and utility (Lallubhai v. Chimanlal & Co.<sup>5</sup>).

A solicitor has a lien upon the funds, money or property, recovered for his client (Narayandas v. Narayandas<sup>6</sup>). The Court does not interfere for the purpose of preserving the solicitor's lien after a bona fide compromise between the parties has been arrived at (Jhaverchand v. Achaldas<sup>7</sup>). A solicitor's lien is subject to all the equities between the solicitor's client and any other party interested in the property over which the lien is claimed (Anwar Laljee v. Ebrahim Laljee<sup>8</sup>). A solicitor trustee is not entitled to make a profit from his office as trustee, but when he acts as a solicitor for any of the beneficiaries or when he acts for himself and his co-trustees jointly, he is entitled to his usual costs in addition to his out-of-pocket costs (Shivramdas v. Nerurkar<sup>9</sup>). Where an unusual expense is about to be incurred in a case, the solicitor must inform his client fully of it (Gorakhram v. Pirozshah<sup>10</sup>).

Mr. Justice Wadia has been taking a very keen interest in the affairs of the the University of Bombay. He was nominated a Fellow of the University in 1921, and was elected a member of the Syndicate in 1930 and of the Academic Council in 1935. Now that he is free from the trammels of his high office, there is no worthier alumnus of his Alma Mater to grace the Vice-Chancellor's chair. Rumour goes that in 1933 he was offered the Vice-Chancellorship, but, as the post demanded more time than he could spare as Judge, he declined the offer. A man of parts and learning, he is very simple and unassuming in his manners and gentle and affable by nature.

"No haughty gesture marks his gait, no pompous tone his word,
No studied attitude is seen, no palling nonsense heard:
He 'll suit his bearing to the hour—laugh, listen, learn, or teach,
With joyous freedom in his mirth, and candour in his speech".

A serious homme de lettres, he has drunk deeply and not merely tasted the Pierian spring. A devotee of the 'Sweet Swan of Avon', his literary pursuits make us look askance at Coke's aphorism that "Lady Common Law should lie alone." His learned and thought-provoking contributions on various social, educational and other kindred topics, have appeared from time to time in various magazines and journals. A felicitous after dinner speaker, his bons mots set the table on a roar.

Mr Justice Wadia retires from the Bench wearing the white flower of a blameless life. His life's spring-time is over and its autumn days have come. But a scholar has no ennui. We heartily wish him long life and good health to enable him to do useful work in many other spheres.

ON July 31, 1941, after the Courts rose, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice B. J. Wadia took his seat in the Sessions Court where the members of the Original Side Bar and Attorneys of the High Court had mustered strong. Addressing his Lordship, Mr. M. C. Setalvad, Advocate-General, said :

My Lord,

I have the privilege, as representing the Bar on the Original Side, of giving expression today to the universal feeling of regret at the disappearance from the Bench of a personality so well esteemed and popular as your Lordship. The qualities which go to the making of a great Judge are said to be many and varied ; and not infrequently has there been a debate as to which of them are the most essential to the making of a great or a good Judge. But it will not, I think, be gainsaid that a keen and burning desire to do justice must needs be the foundation of all judicial eminence. And, if I may venture to say so, this quality your Lordship possessed in a pre-eminent degree. No one who practised at your Lordship's bar could fail to be struck with your persistent and overpowering desire to do justice. Whatever the legal forms, and whoever the persons appearing before you, your one and constant endeavour was to see that truth was discovered and substantial justice done.

My Lord, those alone who had the privilege of assisting your Lordship in this endeavour could fully realise the atmosphere of goodwill and kindness which pervaded your Lordship's Court. The administration of justice has undoubtedly to be carried on, in a certain measure, in a spirit of sternness and rigidity. But an even greater quality making for its efficient administration is the feeling and kindly heart of the Judge which alone can probe into the springs and motives of human conduct and reach a true conclusion. No one who had the occasion to appear in your Lordship's Court could forget that beneath a dignified and perhaps even a stern exterior lay a kind and gentle heart influencing every act and observation of the Court. A Judge's task is not an easy one ; and often a Judge's patience is sorely tried. It may be the exuberance or even the eloquence of counsel or it may be the irrelevant and irrational answers of witnesses ; but never have I heard a word of reproach or resentment or even of impatience escape your Lordship's lips.

That reminds me, My Lord, of another great quality which has distinguished your Lordship's long career on the bench. I refer to your innate modesty and unassuming nature. So unobtrusively did your Lordship give the benefit of your long and varied experience to the Bar and the litigating public that appearing in your Lordship's Court one felt that the Bench and the Bar were alike engaged in the common pursuit of unravelling the truth.

Having adverted to but a few of the qualities which distinguished your Lordship's career on the Bench, I will pass on to mention what perhaps the Bar has valued the most in your Lordship's Court. The willing and unstinted confidence which your Lordship reposed in every member of the Bar, whatever his standing, will never be forgotten. It was that confidence and the co-operation it called for in return which made us all feel so much at home in your Lordship's Court.

Notwithstanding your elevation to the Bench, we on the Original Side have always regarded you as one of us. Born and bred as it were on the Original Side and nurtured in its traditions, it was but fitting that your long years on the Bench should have been given almost wholly to the administration of justice on the Original Side. The greater, therefore, is our regret at parting with one who so endeared himself to us all.

Notwithstanding your devotion to the law you have found time for work in the sphere of education and literature, and while bidding you farewell with a heavy heart, every one of us wishes your Lordship a long and happy retirement with ampler opportunities for your literary and educational activities.

His Lordship replied :

Mr. Advocate General and friends,

I should not do justice to the feelings that are uppermost within me this evening if I did not say how deeply I appreciate the very kind and generous manner in which you have referred to me and to my work. Nothing can be more gratifying to any man than the appreciation of his work by his fellow-workers, and I look upon your appreciation as my highest reward. I thank you all very sincerely for it. I have a fairly long period of years, beginning from 1907, to look back upon in the legal profession. Some of us, whom I met in the High Court when I joined the Bar, have passed away ; others are happily still amongst us. It was always a pleasure to me to have worked with them during all the years that I was at the Bar, and I shall carry away very happy memories of that association in my retirement.

It is a needless platitude for any Judge to say how much he depends upon the help and assistance which he gets from the Bar. Our Bar is a strong, well-trained and independent Bar, and from all those who have appeared before me I have derived much help and assistance in the work that I had to do. To all of them, here and outside, seniors as well as juniors, I wish to tender my best thanks. My best thanks are also due to the members of the entire High Court staff, both on the Original and the Appellate Sides, from the highest officer downwards ; and I take this opportunity of thanking them in public for their unfailing courtesy towards me and their co-operation during the tenure of my office.

The profession of the law is an old and honourable one. Our heritage from the past is great. It is a heritage to which our best energies are called. And I am sure every member of the Bar, from the most senior down to the youngest junior, considers himself, along with the Judge, only a servant in the administration of justice. It should be the motto of each one of us to say that—Judges, advocates, solicitors, all may come and all may go ; but the great traditions of this Court, the great traditions of the Bar, the traditions of honour and industry and fearlessness, will go on for ever. I do not say this by way of request ; I do not even say it by way of an expression of hope. I say it as an expression of my faith and belief, engendered by years of collaboration with you, that these traditions will be maintained.

Many hard things are sometimes said about the legal profession. Much of the criticism is unjustified ; more still is misinformed ; and my first impulse, when I hear it or read about it, is to say to myself : " Well, let them say it." Just as the answer to the question whether life is worth living depends upon the individual who lives his life, so also the answer to the question whether our profession is elevating depends upon him who practises it. One can live as greatly in the law as in any other profession. Every calling is indeed great when greatly it is pursued. And if we keep to our high ideals, live up to them and work for them, I, for one, have no apprehensions of the future.

Friends, this is evening time. It is the evening of your day's work ; it is the evening also of my labours in the law. It is said that welcome ever smiles and farewell goes out sighing. Sighing, or not sighing, men pass, the institution remains ; and I am sure you will all be keenly conscious of the supreme necessity of safeguarding its independence and maintaining its reputation for impartial service to the public.

I have nothing further to say. I wish you all well. I wish you the best of luck. I only hope that we will remember each other in the future whenever kind memory gilds the past.

Mr. M. A. H. Payne, President of the Bombay Incorporated Law Society, speaking on behalf of the attorneys of the High Court, said.—

My Lord :

As representative and speaking on behalf of the attorneys of the High Court of Bombay, I associate myself with every word which has fallen from the Advocate General who has gracefully expressed the sentiment and opinions we would have liked ourselves to put into words. But there is one thing I may add, and that is, that your Lordship in the execution of your office as Judge of the High Court, have won not only the high respect and admiration, but also the esteem and personal affection of every member of our branch of the profession. We highly appreciate and are very grateful as we have every reason to be, for the unfailing courtesy, kindness and consideration you have always accorded to us, whether as practitioners appearing before you in Court or as individuals when we have had occasion to meet you outside the Court. We regard your departure from the Bench as a heavy personal loss to ourselves as well as a loss to the judiciary of the Presidency, and it needs no words to assure you that we shall always hold you in grateful memory as a Judge before whom we could bring our cases with perfect confidence that they would receive a patient and sympathetic hearing and an acceptable judgment. In bidding you farewell, as a Judge we wish you may have many years and much happiness in your retirement and that the future may have in store for you every good thing you desire.

His Lordship replied :

Mr. President and Members of the Bombay Incorporated Law Society.

I am very thankful to you all for the appreciative manner in which the President has referred to me and my work on behalf of the solicitors of Bombay. I have come in personal contact with most, if not all, of them, especially as a Chamber Judge. To the good work that they have done and are doing, and, as I hope and wish, they will continue to do in the future, I have borne testimony on more than one occasion in the past, and I take this occasion to do the same thing over again this evening. You, Mr. President, have referred just now to my courtesy. Now, courtesy is an infectious substance. It catches on, and it comes back to the person from whom it first emanates. Courtesy always begets courtesy, and I am very glad to say that with our mutual feelings of goodwill our work in Chambers and in Court has always been very smooth and pleasant. In my opinion it would be difficult, well-nigh impossible, for any Chamber Judge to go through his work unless he places faith and confidence in the solicitors who appear before him. I have reposed great trust in you, and I am glad to be able to say that the trust has been justified. The solicitor often does a lot of spade-work in preparing the cases which counsel argue in Court. The value of that spade-work is immense, not merely to the Bar, but also through the Bar to the Bench. How much valuable and helpful it is, those of us alone who, as the Advocate General has said, have been born, bred and nurtured on the Original Side, know best. I wish that your work was more appreciated by the public than it is. It is difficult for any outsider, even for counsel who goes over a brief of about fifty pages in an hour's time or less, to realise how many hours of patient labour and search have contributed to the pages which he reads within a short space of time.

Mr. President, I will not let this opportunity go without referring to the controversy which will always remain with us—the controversy regarding the Dual System. I have never swerved from the opinion which I have always held, that to do away with that system would, especially in a big commercial city like Bombay, be a distinctly retrograde step. We have been told that the public are against the system; but so far as I know the Judges have not had before them any authoritative expression of opinion to that effect from any large and disinterested public body who have thought and considered over this question. It will always remain with us along with that old question, the question of costs. Several years ago when I was appointed on the Committee to consider the question of reducing costs, we heard the cry from all sides that costs have increased, are increasing, and ought to be diminished. We have not shut our eyes to that complaint. We have tried to remedy it as best as we could, though I know that it has been done at great sacrifice to you. I wish you only to remember this, whether you are advocates or solicitors, that this is a matter which must be primarily considered from the point of view of the public. Advocates and solicitors exist for the public and not the public for them. The times are changing fast. However much we may love the old ways and the old methods, no one can hope that the things we have loved can continue unchanged for ever. And yet, on this the last day of my judicial career, I like to express my fervent wish that the two branches of the legal profession may continue to work together for many years to come. The system means efficiency, and I venture to say that in the long run it also means economy.

The time has now come for me to say good-bye to all my friends, advocates as well as solicitors. To all of you I extend my best wishes for your future success and welfare.

With these words, my friends at the Bar, and my solicitor-friends, I bid you my last and sorrowful, but most sincere, farewell.

SOME ANOMALIES IN THE INDIAN CHRISTIAN MARRIAGE ACT, 1872.

THE Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872, is designed for the purpose of solemnising marriages between persons, one or both of whom is or are a Christian or Christians. Section 4 of the Act provides for such marriages. It would, therefore, appear that marriages could be performed under this Act between a Hindu or a Mahomedan and a Christian, and also when both the parties are Christians. Section 88 of the Act, however, reads "Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to validate any marriage which the personal law applicable to either of the parties forbids him or her to enter into".

I do not think there is any dispute on the point that a Hindu belonging to one of the four main castes cannot, according to Hindu law, lawfully contract a marriage with a person outside his caste, and as such cannot contract a lawful marriage with a Christian. The question, therefore, arises : Can a Hindu and a Christian marry under the Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872 ? There is as yet no legal authority deciding it. In Chetti v. Chetti,<sup>1</sup> which was a case decided in England, it was held that a Hindu who had married in England according to English law cannot seek shelter under his personal law whereby he is debarred from marrying outside his caste. The learned Judges held that whatever the position in India the Hindu in this case would be bound by the English law as the marriage took place in England. A reference was made to the Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872, and Sir Gorell Barnes remarked that the Act applied only to marriages contracted in India. Another case similarly decided was that of Rex v. Hammersmith Superintendent Registrar of Marriages : Mir-Anwarruddin, Ex parte,<sup>2</sup> where a Mahomedan sought to dissolve his marriage with an English woman, which had taken place in England, by pronouncing talak which he could do by his personal law and the law of his domicile, and it was held that talak might be an appropriate method of dissolving a Mahomedan union according to Mahomedan law but a marriage solemnised in England between him and a Christian woman could not be dissolved at the will of one of the parties.

In Saldanha v. Saldanha,<sup>3</sup> the question came very near to being decided. The parties however were Christians and it was held that the prohibition under s. 88 did not embrace the prohibition as to the form of marriage. This decision does not help us to come to any definite conclusion as to the validity of a marriage between a Christian and a Hindu under the Act in India, but the learned Judges seem to accept the principle laid down in Sotomayor v. De Barras<sup>4</sup> that the law of a country where the marriage is solemnised must alone decide all questions relating to the validity of the ceremony, but, as in other contracts, so in that of marriage personal capacity must depend on the law of domicile. In India where there are many communities each governed by its own customs and usages it is not the lex domicilii which has to be considered but the personal law applicable to each community by their religion. If therefore either or both the parties to a marriage are debarred by their personal law from marrying each other then I think that in view of s. 88 a Hindu and a Christian cannot marry under the Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872. A marriage between a Hindu and a Christian is unthinkable under Hindu law and cannot be performed by a Hindu religious ceremony. If performed it is void ab initio. It is not only a question of the form of marriage but of the essentials of marriage and although in view of the decision in Saldanha v. Saldanha we might exclude from the scope of s. 88 the mere prohibition on the ground of form we cannot, in my opinion, overlook cases which are prohibited on essentials.

I have been unable to obtain much assistance from the commentaries on the subject. Mr. Paul Appaswamy has in his "Law applicable to Christians" devoted some pages to this very point. But I am afraid his opinion would not bear much weight in view of the observations of Mr. Justice Blackwell in Saldanha v. Saldanha (p. 28) :—

"I do not myself think that the words used in s. 88 justify the limitation suggested in the marginal note, that the personal law applicable is the personal law as to prohibited degrees. I think that the expression 'personal law' in that section would include any personal law, apart from any personal law as to the form of the marriage, which forbade either of the parties to enter into a contract of marriage with one another."

Nor do I think that the marginal note to the section would limit the implications of the section and it is a well-established rule that the marginal notes should not be referred to for the purpose of limiting or extending the words of the Act itself. The observations of Mr. Justice Blackwell are very pertinent and should prove useful in considering the question of the validity of a marriage between a Hindu and a Christian. If, as he says, the expression "personal law" includes any personal law then a Hindu who cannot, according to his personal law, marry a Christian is debarred from marrying a Christian under the Act. For the purposes of s. 88 the term "personal law" would include much more than the restricted words of the marginal note seem to import. Mr. Appaswamy goes further and says that the term "personal law" in the section was intended to apply only to the personal law applicable to Christians of different denominations. It is difficult to conceive that the legislature ever intended such a restricted meaning and if it did so it would be more correct to expect something in clearer terms.

There seems to be an erroneous impression that the Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872, is designed for solemnising all mixed marriages. The wide scope of s. 4 should be read with the restricted meaning of s. 88 of the Act. Considering that the Act is mainly concerned with the forms of marriage, s. 88 seems to have been specially added to exclude from the purview of the Act those marriages which either of the parties is debarred from contracting under his or her own personal law. It is interesting to note that whereas a Hindu, in view of what is stated above, is debarred from marrying a Christian under the Act, a Mahomedan is not. Under the personal law of a Mahomedan he can contract a valid marriage with a kitabia i.e. a Christian or a Jewess but not with an idolatress i.e. a Hindu or a fire-worshipper. But a Mahomedan woman cannot marry a Christian under the Act as under Mahomedan law a Mahomedan woman cannot contract a valid marriage except with a Mahomedan. Of course such a marriage is not void under Mahomedan law but only invalid and the impediment can be removed by the non-Mahomedan converting to Mahomedanism. But for the purposes of s. 88 it is enough to note that such a marriage being forbidden under Mahomedan law the section comes into play. This striking contrast between the case of a Hindu and that of a Mahomedan should make it clear that s. 88 is not contradictory to s. 4 but only restrictive to s. 4.

Likewise it would be interesting to consider the question whether a Catholic divorcee can marry under the Act. Divorce is not permitted to Catholics. Canon law does not recognise divorce. Marriage according to canon law is indissoluble, and a Catholic who may have obtained a divorce under the Indian Divorce Act still remains married under the personal law. I may state here that most of the High Courts have accepted canon law as the personal law of the Catholic. In Saldhana v. Saldhana Mr. Justice Blackwell says (p. 27) : " I think that the words 'personal law applicable to either of the parties' " in s. 88 clearly refer to the personal law of the religious community to which either of the parties belong " and adds " In my opinion on the evidence in this case the personal law applicable is the canon law of the Church of Rome." A similar opinion has been expressed in Lopez v. Lopez<sup>5</sup> and Lucas v. Lucas.<sup>6</sup> Assuming therefore, that in view of the opinion expressed by the High Courts canon law is the personal law of the Catholics as applied in this country at least for purposes of marriage, then a Catholic divorced under the Indian Divorce Act cannot remarry under the Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872, if the prohibition under s. 88 is to be considered. I am not certain if Protestants recognise divorce. To all appearances they do. But individual ministers may refuse to celebrate a marriage of a person whose former marriage has been dissolved on the ground of adultery. In such cases the parties have recourse to the Act and then I do not believe that the Registrar would be justified in refusing to celebrate the marriage as Protestantism does not impose any definite prohibition against divorce.

It should also be noted that according to canon law a Catholic cannot marry a non-Catholic divorcee. This doctrine is based on the principle that matrimony is indissoluble. There are, however, in canon law six cases of dissolution by the Church of valid marriages where the marriage is ratum but not consummatum. But these exceptions apply only where both the parties are Catholics. We are not concerned with such here. The Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act, 1866, provides for dissolution on account of desertion or repudiation in consequence of a change of religion by one of the parties. The Act excludes Mahomedans and Jews from the operation of the Act. But in canon law mere desertion or repudiation in consequence of the change of religion would not entitle the other party to marry a Catholic without the Pauline dispensation. The point has been dealt with at length and very ably by Rev. Fr. A. Macry S. J. in his Notes to " Civil-Ecclesiastical Law " by Mr. J. A. Saldanha. I need only state that the personal law of the Catholic forbids him to marry a non-Catholic divorcee who has not obtained the Pauline dispensation and hence he cannot marry such a divorcee under the Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872.

The restriction under s. 88 may also be brought into operation in the case of a remarriage of a person whose partner has been continuously absent for a period of seven years. The presumption under s. 494 of the Indian Penal Code, drawn negatively, is not accepted under canon law which requires clear evidence that the party has died or some convincing evidence that the party must have died. In the absence of such definite evidence the other party cannot remarry under canon law and so he or she cannot remarry under the Act. The evidence necessary in each case would be a question of fact.

G. J. SALDANHA.

GLEANINGS.

ACCIDENTAL LIBEL.

CAN A. libel B. by accident? After perusing the majority judgments of the Court of Appeal in Newstead v. London Express Newspaper, Ltd. (1939, 4 All E.R. 319) we must say once more that he can. That decision is more or less a corollary to the historic decision of the House of Lords in Hulton & Co. v. Jones (1910, A.C. 20), which is well remembered by all our readers who practise in this field of law and by a number of literary and business men. The plaintiff (happily still with us as a County Court Judge) bore the unusual name of Artemus Jones. A writer of light material in the defendants' newspaper, describing a motor festival on the Continent, spoke of an imaginary Artemus Jones, whom he pretended to see there. He used words which need not now be repeated but which were highly defamatory. The plaintiff sued for libel and was able to bring many creditable witnesses to Court who swore that they thought the words referred to him. So though the plaintiff admitted that neither the editor of the newspaper nor the writer of the article knew anything about him, he got his verdict and held it, after a stern battle both in the Court of Appeal (1902, 2 K. B. 444) and the House of Lords (1910, A. C. 20). As one looks back, however, over the judgments, one realises that the Judges were not unanimous on the reasoning by which they reached their decisions. Lord Alverstone, who gave the first judgment and dismissed as bad law the plea that intention is an ingredient in the tort of defamation, said :—

"Dealing with the authorities it is, I think, beyond dispute that, apart from express malice, the intention or motive with which the words are used is immaterial." Fletcher Moulton, L.J., on the other hand thought that there could be no libel unless the publisher intended to defame the plaintiff. It was to his mind settled law that words were not published "of and concerning" the plaintiff (according to the vital words in the averment) unless the writer intended to refer to him. He wanted to allow the appeal. Farwell, L.J., had to decide between these opposing views and came down on the side of Lord Alverstone, but for reasons which liken the action for libel to an action for negligence or for deceit, thus :—

"The intention to libel may be proved not only when the defendant knows and intends to injure the individual but also if he has made a statement concerning a man by a description by which the plaintiff is recognised ... if it is made recklessly. ... The element of intention which is as essential to an action of defamation as to an action of deceit can be proved in the same way in both actions."

We have had to abridge our quotation. It is enough to show what the learned Lord Justice thought. And when the defendant went on to the House of Lords two of the Law Lords went out of their way, if we may say so, to express concurrence in his view. Any of our readers who turns to the report will find that Lord Atkinson and Lord Gorell both thought he "put the case on the true ground," i.e., that recklessness was an ingredient in libel. Lord Loreburn and Lord Shaw were nearer to Lord Alverstone. Libel consists in using language which "other persons knowing the circumstances would reasonably think to be defamatory" of the plaintiff. If this can be shown the tort is committed and it is no defence to say that the defendant did not intend to defame him or anyone else.

So we learnt that there may be such a thing as an unconscious libel. But there was much in the judgments to show that the Judges, or many of them, thought that negligence must be shown where the defendant could establish his complete innocence of any intention to defame the plaintiff. This view was clearly in the mind of counsel who drew the pleadings in the recent case of accidental libel. The defendants had published a statement which was perfectly true of one "Harold Newstead, a Camberwell man," but equally false of another Harold Newstead, also a resident in that borough. The innocent man sued for libel. When met by the defence that the words were not intended or understood to refer to him and were true of another, he replied with a charge of recklessness. The defendants' description of the bigamist (for such the other Newstead was) was not sufficiently particular to show precisely to whom their observations referred. Other papers had been more precise and there was evidence of "recklessness" in that those particulars had been omitted from the defendants' publication. Now if recklessness is not relevant as an ingredient in the tort of libel, this plea was embarrassing and tended to prejudice the defendants and should, we suggest, have been struck out. But it stood on the record and the learned Judge clearly thought that it raised an issue fit for the jury to consider. In charging them he left to them five questions, of which the fourth was :—

"In omitting the occupation and address of the convicted man, were the defendants (a) reckless, (b) negligent?"

We have not the jury's answer to that question. As they could not agree on the first and vital question—whether reasonable people would understand that the words complained of applied to the plaintiff—the case had to await another jury. The defendants sought to establish when they reached the Court of Appeal that in spite of the disagreement of the jury on the first and vital question, their findings on the others—which were not read out in Court—were sufficient to support a judgment for them. So we may guess that the jury found in the defendant's favour on the issue of recklessness and/or negligence. Anyhow, as the case was presented in the Court of Appeal it became proper, or at least opportune, for that Court to say whether it agreed with the views expressed by Lord Justice Farwell and Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton in Hulton v. Jones (supra). The Master of the Rolls decided, with some respectful hesitation, against the view of Lord Justice Farwell that what is truly said of one man cannot be a libel on another. He could not accept the analogy between actions for libel and actions for deceit. In actions of that kind recklessness is only used to make out a fraudulent intent in law where there is no fraudulent intent in fact. If a man deceives others by false statements which he utters without caring whether they be true or not, he is, in actions for deceit, in the same position (in law) as though actual fraudulent intent could be brought home to him. But the recklessness only goes to supply, artificially, a motive in the eyes of the law. It should not be considered when a Court is estimating the meaning of the statement made. What you have to look at in libel cases is the meaning of the published words. If, when they are read in the light of surrounding circumstances, they are understood by reasonable people to refer to the plaintiff, then for all relevant purposes they do refer to him. Their meaning cannot be affected by the recklessness or honesty of the writer.

Lord Justice du Parcq concurred and, in spite of an attractive judgment by Lord Justice MacKinnon, we must now say with confidence that liability for libel does not depend on the intention of the defendant or alleged defamer, but on the fact of defamation. A. may publish a libel "of and concerning" B., though he has never in his life heard of him and though there be some other B. of whom he wrote nothing but the truth. That is the law at present. We think it bears hardly on the proprietors of newspapers. Lord Justice MacKinnon's judgment supplies ready examples of the hardship. And it is plain that those who drew the abortive Law of Libel Amendment Bill which was presented with good support in the autumn of 1938 felt that hardship and meant to remedy it. Their very first stroke was to aim at the destruction of the Hulton v. Jones rule. The draftsman would make it a good defence to a claim for libel if the defendant can prove certain things. First, he must prove that he had no intention of referring to the plaintiff. Secondly, he must prove one or other of two things—either that he did not know of the existence of the plaintiff and that his ignorance was not due to want of reasonable care, or that he did not foresee, at the time of publication, that his words might reasonably be understood to refer to the plaintiff and that his want of foresight was not due to carelessness. This was a good Bill and some lawyers regret its withdrawal which took place, if our memory does not fail us, on official promises of a general inquiry into the law of libel. It will be observed that the defendant, if this Bill passed into law, would have to carry rather a heavy burden. He could not escape liability by merely proving that he did not intend to refer to the plaintiff. He must prove further one or other of the alternative states of fact which were sketched out in the second part of the defensive section. We wish the law were amended in this way, but there is at present little hope.—L.J.

SERVANTS OR SERFS.

It is good in times like these to read the judgments of the House of Lords in Nokes v. Doncaster Collieries (1940, 3 All E. R. 549; post, p. 66). The problem before the House was whether an order made under s. 154 of the Companies Act, 1929, to transfer one company's property to another, could operate to transfer contracts of personal service, so that an employee of the first company might find himself, willy-nilly and without being consulted, the servant of another master. The question was not an easy one, because by sub-s. (4) the expression "property" includes property, rights and powers of every description, and the Court of instance, a Divisional Court, and the Court of Appeal had held that these words were wide enough to include a contract of service. With this view Lord Romer agreed. But the majority of the Law Lords happily found it possible to take a wider view. It is a commonplace that apart from the proposed operation of this section a contract of personal service cannot be transferred without the employee's consent. As Lord Atkin put it: "Ingrained in the personal status of a citizen under our laws is the right to choose for himself whom he will serve, and this right of choice constitutes the main difference between a servant and a serf. . . . It is said that one company does not differ from another, and why should not a benevolent Judge of the Chancery Division transfer the services of a workman to another admirable employer just as good and perhaps better. The answer is twofold. The first is that, however excellent the new master may be it has hitherto been the servant who has had the choosing of him, and not the Judge. The second is that it is a complete mistake to suppose that people do not attach importance to the identity of the particular company with which they deal." This was well said, and their Lordships were able to give effect to it by holding, in Viscount Simon's words, that s. 154 did not contemplate the transfer of rights which in their nature were incapable of being transferred. To meet present necessities a certain temporary control of labour has been voluntarily accepted, but that makes a restatement of the main principle all the more timely.—L.J.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

MR. JUSTICE HUMPHREYS was in some interesting country recently. He had to decide on the liability of a hirer of motor cars for crimes committed by his servants (Grey v. Gee Cars, Ltd., Times, July 27). The defendants hired out a car to take the plaintiff, with a friend, on a long journey. The car was duly filled with valuable luggage. But before the passengers got into the car an air-raid warning sent them flying for refuge, and the hired driver made off with the luggage. For this the passenger sued, and framed her action both in negligence and in breach of contract. It was, she said, an implied term of the contract that the driver should be honest, and it was also careless to send out as a driver a car washer who was at best only satisfactory in that capacity. Both claims failed. The learned Judge decided that there was no negligence in sending out as a driver a man who was known to be a satisfactory washer, and further that his act in stealing the luggage was entirely outside the scope of his authority. A great array of decisions might be marshalled on the subject. It is true, of course, that a master is under a duty towards third persons to employ servants reasonably competent so far as the duties of the employment go (Wanston v. Pooley, 6 Cl. & F. 910 n.). But there is no guarantee or duty to strangers that the master of a servant will answer or must answer for anything which the servant may do.—L.J.

WHAT IS A "HOUSEHOLD" ?

It is strange, but true, that opinions may honestly differ as to the meaning of words which have been in common use amongst us ever since we began to talk and write English. Take, for instance, the word "household." Everybody has what is called a pretty good notion of what that word means; yet only this week two parties to an insurance contract had to come before a Judge of the High Court in order to find out which of them was right about it (English v. Western, Times, November 15). The plaintiff was an insured motorist who was sued by his own sister (a passenger) for negligence, and claimed relief from his insurers. They relied on a clause in their policy which cut out liability if a member of the assured's household were injured, unless that member were carried by reason of a contract of employment. The sister and brother were both unmarried, and lived with their father, who provided them with food, lodging and allowances. In these circumstances the plaintiff asserted that his sister was not a member of his household. He had no sort of control over the house where they both lived. The insurers said that a household is a family or club, and that people may live in each other's households if they just live under one roof. The learned Judge accepted the insurers' interpretation. As we say, there is room for difference of opinion. Once more we see that even insurance companies have not really learnt to write accurate English.—L.J.

RELATING TO CHILDREN.

A NOTABLY superfluous passage in an affidavit read recently in the Chancery Division caused Mr. Justice Farwell to remark : "It seems a little unnecessary for a lady to say that she was present at the birth of her own infant. One assumes that usually. It is difficult to see how she could have been anywhere else." Oddly enough, this point is not free from authority, for no one has put the principle underlying the matter more eloquently than O'Brien, J., in the concluding passage of his judgment in Walker v. Great Northern Railway Co. of Ireland, 28 L. R. Ir. 69, at p. 83 : "In law, in reason, in the common language of mankind, in the dispensations of nature, in the bond of physical union and the instinct of duty and solicitude on which the continuance of the world depends, a woman is the common carrier of her unborn child, and not a railway company." In this connection one is reminded of the lady who, when asked in a Court of law how many children she had had, replied : "Four, to the best of my knowledge, information and belief." Then there was the case of the man who was being tediously cross-examined before Mr. Justice Darling. He had been asked how many children he had had, and replied two. Later on he was asked the same question again, and the Judge intervened : "He told you he had two children a few moments ago. There are hardly likely to have been any fresh arrivals since."—S.J.

 LOTTERIES.

SOME people think that the law about lotteries will never be finally settled. As Mr. Justice Humphreys observed a few years ago (Coles v. Odham's Press, 100 J. P., at p. 89), a particular scheme is no sooner declared by the Court to be a lottery than a number of extremely able people apply their ingenuity to the discovery of some means of avoiding the judgment. One thing is, however, clear. If you publish something which is an unlawful publication (as one of a lottery), you cannot save yourself by publishing with it something else in the way of a purely skilful competition. And the recent decision of the Divisional Court in Barker v. Mumby (1939, 1 All E. R. 611) shows that you cannot make a lottery lawful by dressing it up in the guise of credit betting. The question "What is a lottery?" came before Mr. Justice Bennett last week (Whiteman v. Atkins, Times, August 29). The plaintiff was a director of a company against which she brought a friendly action to determine whether a venture on which they were about to embark was a lottery. It had two objects. The first was to collect funds which would go, amongst other things, to reward winners of a crossword competition. This might or might not be a lottery. The learned Judge had not enough information to decide that question. But part of the funds subscribed were to go to whoever applied for most competition tickets. No skill whatever is needed in the mere act of subscription and the result is entirely a matter of chance. We can conceive few clearer cases.—L.J.

 THE WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

IF evidence is admissible at all, its weight is always for the jury. The legal truth is simple yet fundamental ; and one is reminded of it by the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Wright (Times, August 27), in which the Court of Criminal Appeal dismissed the appeal of a husband who had been convicted of murdering his wife. No motive of any kind for the murder was alleged by the prosecution. The husband and wife were apparently living in good friendship with three children, who left them together when they went to school. When they came back they found their murdered mother, and a meat chopper which had apparently been wiped was found in the barn. This fact did little or nothing for the prosecution; but on the husband's shirt was found a spot of blood. It might have come from his wife, and could not have fallen upon his shirt while he was out walking, it seems, after the fatal act and before his children found their dead mother. The evidence was slender, but no one can say that it was inadmissible. Some men may shrink from the conviction upon a capital charge of a man against whom nothing can be said but that he has one spot of blood on his shirt sleeve. In murder there is always a search for motive, and here, so far as the prosecution knew, there was none. There was no suggestion of insanity. Still, the jury thought the evidence sufficient. The summing up was perfect, and, quite properly, the Court held that that was an end of the matter.—L.J.

A WILL.

To my wife, I leave her lover, and the knowledge that I wasn't the fool she thought I was.

* * *

To my son, I leave the pleasure of earning a living—for thirty-five years, he thought the pleasure was mine. He was mistaken.

* * *

To my daughter, I leave £20,000—she will need it—the only piece of business her husband ever did, was to marry her.

* * *

To my valet, I leave the clothes he has been stealing from me for the last ten years—also the fur coat that he wore last winter at Palm Beach.

* * *

To my chauffeur, I leave my cars—he almost ruined them, and I want him to have the satisfaction of finishing the job.

* * *

And lastly, to my partner, I leave the suggestion that he takes some other man in with him if he expects to do any business.—N. S. & N.

RECENT ENGLISH CASE.

CRIMINAL LAW—Evidence—Admissibility—Buggery—Charge of offence on specific date—Evidence of offence with same boy on previous occasion—Corroboration—Evidence relating to earlier occasion corroborated—Whether corroboration of evidence relating to date charged. The appellant was convicted on a charge of committing buggery with H on a certain date. He gave evidence not only of the commission of the offence on the date charged, but also of a commission on an earlier occasion. There was no corroboration of H's evidence regarding the date charged, but there was corroboration of his evidence regarding the earlier occasion. The Judge directed the jury that they might treat the evidence corroborative of H's evidence relating to the earlier occasion as corroborative of his evidence relating to the date charged :—Held, (a) that the evidence of H relating to the earlier occasion was rightly admitted; and (b) that the Judge had correctly directed the jury on the question of corroboration. REX v. HARTLEY, [1941] 2 K. B. 5.

RECENT INDIAN CASES.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE (ACT V OF 1908), ss. 22, 23, 24—Transfer—Suit—pending in a subordinate Court—High Court, whether has power to transfer to a Court subordinate to another High Court. The High Court has jurisdiction to transfer a suit pending in a Court subordinate to it to a Court subordinate to any other High Court. KANHAIYALAL DAGA v. ZUMEN LAL, [1941] NAG. 311.

CONTEMPT OF COURT—Comment on pending proceedings in Court, whether amounts to contempt—Criminal Court proceedings pending—Calling of public meeting and delivering of speeches commenting on Court proceedings, effect of. The question in all cases of comment on pending proceedings is not whether the publication does interfere, but whether it tends to interfere, with the due course of justice, and on the same principle it is a contempt of Court to make a speech tending to influence the result of a pending trial, whether civil or criminal, or to deliver a speech at a meeting. Where, therefore, while a criminal case was pending, a public meeting was called and speeches were delivered there with the object of influencing the decision of the criminal Court, preventing witnesses from giving evidence, and bringing pressure on the complainant to withdraw his complaint, it amounted to contempt of Court. RADHA KRISHNA v. RAJA RAM, [1941] 16 LUCK. 61.

CO-OWNER—Right of—Joint property—One co-owner in possession of more than his pro rata share—Whether liable for excessive use and occupation—Where his user amounts to ouster of others—His liability to others for such user. The mere fact, that at any given time one co-owner is in actual possession of more than his pro rata share, would not render him accountable to others for excessive use and occupation. If, however, his possession or user of joint property amounts to exclusion or dispossession of others, then such possession or user becomes unlawful and he must account to the other co-owner either for the fair rental value or the profits, or be liable for mesne profits in excess of his just share. THE PUNJAB NATIONAL BANK LTD., SHEIKHPURA v. PARS RAM, [1941] LAH. 246.

DIVORCE ACT (IV OF 1869), s. 10—Marriage of a Hindu with a Christian woman in a Registrar's Office in Scotland—Second marriage of the Hindu with a Hindu woman in Hindu form—Consummation of second marriage, whether amounts to adultery—First wife, whether entitled to divorce. When a Hindu marries a Christian woman in a Registrar's Office in Scotland, and while the Christian wife is living, marries a Hindu woman in a Hindu form, though the second marriage does not amount to bigamy, if it is consummated the consummation amounts to adultery and forms a ground for divorce on the petition of the first wife. CHITNAVIS v. CHITNAVIS, [1941] NAG. 260.

EASEMENT—Right of way—Person using a particular way over adjoining land for less than the prescriptive period—Obstruction by stranger—If action can be maintained by the former. A person who has been using a particular way over land adjoining his, but for less than the prescriptive period, cannot, in ordinary circumstances, maintain an action to prevent a stranger from obstructing him using the way. Such an action can only be maintained, if the obstruction to user will have the effect of substantially depriving the person of the enjoyment of his property. VENKATANARASIMHA RAJU v. RAMASWAMI, [1941] MAD. 367.

EVIDENCE ACT. (I OF 1872), s. 25—Accused charged with murder—Admission in the statement to police of offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Admissibility of. The prohibition contained in s. 25 of the Evidence Act is of a general nature. It forbids the proof at a trial of a criminal offence of any; confession of any offence made by the accused to a police. Therefore, the confession made by the accused to the police of an offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder is not admissible in evidence in his trial for murder upon the same facts. ALI GHOR MAHI MACCHI v. CROWN, [1941] KAR. 292.

—S. 32 (1)—Dying declaration—Admissibility, material time of, whether the date when the document is received in evidence or the date of the decision. The admissibility of a particular piece of evidence has to be decided with reference to the time when the Court received the evidence, and not when the case was eventually decided. Failure of a charge of murder will not, therefore, make any difference to the admissibility of a dying declaration for the purpose of other offences committed in the course of the transaction, with which the accused is charged. PARMANAND v. CROWN, [1941] NAG. 110.

HINDU LAW—Adoption—Son dying without male heir—Son's widow, re-marriage of—Widow—Power to adopt to her husband, whether revives. Where a Hindu dies leaving a widow and a son and the son dies leaving a widow only, the power of the former widow to adopt a son to her husband revives on the re-marriage of the son's widow. BAPUJI v. GANGARAM, [1941] NAG. 178.

—Alienation—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Ancient transaction—Legal necessity—Presumption, whether to be made—Transaction more than thirty years old—Parties and witnesses not alive—Transaction, whether ancient—Compromise, alienation as a result of, when binds reversioners—Partition, separate shares, record of in revenue papers, whether sufficient proof of. In the case of an ancient transaction relating to the alienation of Hindu joint family property, it must be presumed that the alienation was lawful (i.e.) justified by legal necessity.

On the principle underlying s. 90 of the Evidence Act the presumption in favour of legal necessity may be applied to transfers more than thirty years old provided that the original parties and witnesses to it are not available at the trial for bearing testimony to the circumstances in which the transaction was concluded.

• An alienation which is the result of a compromise that is reasonable and prudent and for the benefit of the estate binds the reversioners.

The record of separate shares in revenue papers is by itself not sufficient to prove a partition among the co-sharers. BABULAL v. MANIKLAL, [1941] NAG. 124.

—Debts of father—Son's liability for original receipt of moneys by father, lawful—Subsequent misappropriation by him—Son liable. A Hindu son is bound, under the rule of pious obligation in Hindu law, to discharge the liabilities of his father, arising from lawful receipt of moneys by the father. The fact that the father subsequently misappropriates the moneys will not change the character of the debt and the son's liability, therefore is not affected by the supervening dishonest act of the father. The son is not liable in cases where the moneys are originally obtained by the father by the commission of an offence. ANANDRAO v. Co-OPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETY, PEDATADEPALLI, [1941] MAD. 27.

HINDU LAW—Maintenance—Widowed daughter, if entitled to maintenance from father's estate in his widow's possession. Under Hindu law, a widowed daughter who has no means of subsistence and whose husband's family is unable to support her is entitled to maintenance out of her father's estate in the hands of his widow. The principle of the decision in Janki v. Nand Ram (1888, 11 All. 194, F.B.) that a moral obligation becomes a legal obligation when the estate of a person on whom the moral obligation lay comes into the possession of his heirs, applies to the case. AMBU BAI v. SONI BAI, [1941] MAD. 13, F.B.

———Widow's maintenance—Residence in husband's house not a condition precedent—Husband's will imposing such condition, effect of—Amount of maintenance—Husband's will fixing amount, effect of. Under the Hindu law a widow who leaves the residence of her deceased husband, not for unchaste purposes, and lives elsewhere does not thereby forfeit her right to maintenance. It is not enjoined in the Hindu shastras that a widow should remain in the residential house of her late husband under all sorts of circumstances. Even where the husband has, by his will, directed that the widow should get maintenance while residing in the house but would not be entitled to any if she discontinued living in it, the direction can be ignored if there was just cause for the widow to leave the house. The occurring of a litigation between the widow and the heir in possession of the house, resulting in strained feelings between the parties, is such a just cause. Arrears of maintenance are claimable as from the date on which the widow left the residential house of the family and took up her residence elsewhere. The right of the widow to get a reasonable and adequate amount of maintenance is derived from the Hindu law itself, and is not dependent upon any provision in respect thereof made in her husband's will. Where the husband's will has specified a particular amount, the Court is not bound by it beyond the fact that such suggestion may be taken into consideration in determining what amount would be adequate and reasonable. JAMUNA KUNWAR v. ARJUN SINGH, [1940] ALL. 739.

———Widow's estate—Surrender in favour of a male reversioner of the second degree with the consent of the immediate female reversioner, if valid. A Hindu widow can, with the consent of the immediate female reversioner, relinquish the estate in favour of the next male heir of her husband, provided the circumstances are such as would entitle the Court to construe the transaction, as amounting, in substance, to a relinquishment by the widow in favour of the next female heir and a similar second surrender by the latter in favour of the next male heir.

It would be against the doctrine of surrender, if the widow or the intermediate female heir would stipulate for any benefit to her save and except what is necessary for her maintenance, or would stipulate for a maintenance allowance not only to be paid to her during her lifetime but which will be payable to her heirs and successors after her death. JANKI NATH RAY v. JYOTISH CHANDRA ACHARJYA CHAUDHURI, [1941] 1 CAL. 234.

INCOME-TAX ACT (XI OF 1922), s. 14 (1)—Member of a Hindu undivided family—Widow of a coparcener—Maintenance received by her—Exempt from income-tax—Subsequent disruption of the joint family—Contributions by the separated members towards the maintenance—Exempt from income-tax—Hindu law. The widow of a coparcener in a Hindu undivided family, though not herself a member of the coparcenary body, can nevertheless be a member of the undivided family; and money received by her as maintenance is therefore exempt from income-tax, under s. 14(1) of the Income-tax Act. BHAGWATI v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, [1941] ALL. 43.

LAND ACQUISITION ACT, 1894, s. 18—Collector acting under s. 18—Whether acts judicially and is subordinate to the High Court—His order—Whether subject to revision by the High Court under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908). Collector acting under s. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act does not act judicially nor is he a Court subordinate to the High Court and, consequently, his order is not subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under the provisions of s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. AMAR NATH v. THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL IN COUNCIL, [1941] LAH. 100.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—Lease—Tenancy at will or from month to month—Tenancy, whether permanent—Question whether tenancy permanent or precarious a question of law. When a tenancy is terminable at the will of the tenant, it must be held to be terminable at the will of the landlord also. Whether a tenancy is permanent or precarious is a legal inference from facts and not in itself a question of fact. Mere erection by the tenant of permanent structure upon the land let to him, in the knowledge of and without interference by, his landlord, will not suffice to raise an equitable estoppel in favour of the tenant. RAM LAL SAHU v. MUSAMMAT BIBI ZOHRA, [1941] 20 PAT. 115.

LEGAL PRACTITIONERS ACT (XVIII OF 1879), s. 13 (f)—Rule 16 of the rules framed under the Legal Practitioners Act—Legal practitioner—Not maintaining accounts in respect of professional work—If professional misconduct. Under r. 16 of the rules framed under the Legal Practitioners Act it is the duty of every pleader to keep regular accounts of all moneys received and disbursed by him in connection with each suit in which he is engaged. Even if he has not much work he is bound to keep accounts for whatever work he may have and failure to keep such accounts will amount to professional misconduct. A PLEADER, In re, [1941] MAD. 286.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS ACT (XXVI OF 1881), s. 87—Construction of—Promissory note—Material alteration by stranger without any fraud or by laches of holder—Effect. The holder of a promissory note is not affected by a material alteration in the instrument when the alteration has been made by a stranger without the consent of the holder and without any fraud or laches on his part. GOUROCHANDRO v. KRUSHNACHARANA, [1941] MAD. 295.

PRACTICE—Remedy prescribed by an Act—Person entitled to the remedy, whether deprived of other forms of remedies. When a specific remedy is given by an Act, it thereby deprives persons of other forms of remedies than that given by the Act. JABBAR SHAH v. KANCHHEDILAL, [1941] Nag. 203.

PRACTICE—Witness under cross-examination incapable of giving rational answers—Court's power to stop cross-examination suo motu—Procedure to be followed in such cases. When a person is called to give evidence and when there is reason to suspect that he may be incapable of giving rational answers to questions put to him, that is, as a rule, known either to the prosecution or to the defence or to both. In such a case the usual course is for the attention of the Court to be drawn to the matter and for the Court to question the witness with a view to ascertaining whether he is competent to give evidence or not. When a Court in India has once decided that a witness is competent, it ought not to intervene at a later stage suo motu and reverse its previous decision and expunge the evidence already recorded, especially when that evidence has been recorded at some length. RAMPADARATH SINGH v. KING-EMPEROR, (1941) 20 PAT. 339.

PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY ACT, 1920, S. 9—Joint Hindu Family trading firm—Petition for the adjudication of the firm as such—Whether competent. The Indian Stamp Act, 1899. By the Right Hon. SIR DINSHAH F. MULLA, KT. C.I.E., M.A., LL.D. and E. M. PRATT, Retired Judge of the High Court of Bombay. CALCUTTA : Eastern Law House Ltd. P. 13 Ganesh Chander Avenue. Fourth edition, 1941. Roy 8vo. Pages xxxvi + 326. Price Rs. 7.

WE heartily welcome this new edition of the Indian Stamp Act. As the Stamp Acts enacted by the Provincial Legislatures have effected various changes in the scales of Stamp fees, an up-to-date edition of the statute law was highly necessary. The learned author of the present edition has very wisely relegated the Provincial Stamp Acts to a supplement so that it may be convenient to issue a fresh supplement to meet the vagaries of the Provincial Legislatures. All cases bearing on the Stamp Law since the publication of the last edition have been scrupulously incorporated and the commentaries have undergone a thorough and careful revision. Some portions have been amplified in the light of fresh decisions. The Stamp Rules have been brought up to date. Altogether this is a most authoritative, lucid and accurate commentary on the Indian Stamp Act and will be found very serviceable to those who have to tackle the provisions of the Act

Law and Practice of Conveyancing. By Sir JAI LAL, Ex-Judge, Lahore High Court. LAHORE : The University Book Agency, Kacheri Road. 1941. Royal 8vo. Pages xxx & 350. Price Rs. 10.

THERE is no other branch of the law which requires for its successful prosecution a more detailed and specialised study than the law and practice of conveyancing. In practice this is rendered more difficult in India because, unlike England, there is no statutory provision in this country directly laying down rules for drafting of documents. There is a dearth of literature on this important subject in India. The appearance of this book is therefore doubly welcome. The book opens with an introduction which, among other things, indicates the special features in outline of the law of Real Property in England as compared with the law relating to landed property in India. The opening chapters, which are mainly based on various Acts of the Legislatures bearing on the subject, contain a discussion of certain principles and provisions of law which are necessary for investigation of title to property and for preparation of satisfactory drafts of documents. Then follow chapters on the law relating to the preparation of testamentary documents and general observations on drafting of documents. A section of the book contains forms and precedents of documents. The author has, within a small compass, dealt with this vast and difficult subject with commendable lucidity and conciseness. This book can be recommended as a reliable guide to the study of the law connected with the drafting of deeds and of forms suitable to the requirements of this country.

Excess Profits Tax. By V. S. SUNDARAM. BOMBAY : Butterworth & Co. (India) Ltd., Phoenix Building, Ballard Estate. 1941. Royal 8vo. Pages 314 & xcvi. Price Rs. 7-8-0.

THE author's commentary on the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, is now a well-recognised authority on the subject and he has now completed the survey of the entire law of income-tax in India by the publication of this book which deals, in the author's words, with a superstructure on Income-tax. The provisions of the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940, are accurately summarised in the introduction to the book which is followed by a brief analysis, in bare outline, of the Act. Notes on the sections and the rules in the schedules deal not only with decided cases but with all problems that are likely to arise in practice under the law. The latter feature will be of great help to the practising lawyer and to those affected by the Act. A supplement containing notes on decided cases relating to income-tax which were published since the publication of the author's commentary on the Act of 1922, is included here. The book contains much useful matter including extracts from the United Kingdom Finance Act, 1940, the Income-tax Law (Amendment) Act, 1940, and the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1940. It is meant as a supplement to the author's previous publication and will, without doubt, take its place by its side as a useful compilation on the subject of excess profits tax in India.

Elements of the Law of Insolvency in British India. By NANUBHAI BHIDAS ABUVALA, B.A., LL.B., Solicitor, High Court, Bombay. BOMBAY : N. M. Tripathi & Co., Princess Street. 1941. Seventh edition. Demi 8vo. Pages 349. Price Rs. 3-8-0.

IN this handbook the author has briefly set forth the law of insolvency as it obtains in the Provinces and Presidency towns in British India. The subject is dealt with in a narrative form under suitable headings and the relevant case-law, which is brought down to May 1941, is adequately referred to. The appendices contain full texts of the two Insolvency Acts, forms of petitions and questions set at the law examinations. This handbook will be of great assistance to students making their first acquaintance with the law of Insolvency.

The All India Criminal Digest : 1904-1940. Vol. I. By S. K. IYER, B.A., B.L., Advocate, High Court, Madras. LAHORE : Law Book Depot, Krishna Nagar. 1941. Royal 8vo. Columns 1816. Price Rs. 24 for three volumes.

To the busy lawyer a digest of cases is a sine qua non inasmuch as it helps him to lay his finger, without loss of time, upon the decision required. The test of a good digest is, therefore, apart from its accuracy, the facility which it affords to pick out a required decision. This publication contains all the features of a good digest. Along with the headnotes the reasoning of the Judges and their obiters are included where necessary. The cross references are adequate. Two more volumes are yet to appear and when completed this digest will be very serviceable to the profession.

Century Edition of All India Criminal Digest : 1840-1941. Vol. I. By A. N. KHANNA, Advocate, High Court, Lahore. LAHORE : Atma Ram & Sons, Anarkali. Crown 4 to. Columns 1464. Price Rs. 30 per set of three volumes.

THIS is a digest of all the important criminal rulings of the High Courts in India from the year of 1840 to 1941. The cases are digested into appropriate headings and an analytical synopsis is given at the beginning of every subject. The sub-headings in the synopsis contain column references in the digest to facilitate easy reference. The case-law from 1901 to 1941 is digested more fully while the case-law before the year 1901 is compressed and appended to the former in an abbreviated form at the end of each particular subject dealt with. Where however a point is not covered by any recent ruling the cases relating to it are digested in full even if they were prior to 1901. This digest will be very useful to the profession.

The Arbitration Act, 1940. By S. C. DAS, M.A., LL.B., Advocate, High Court, Allahabad. ALLAHABAD : The Allahabad Law Journal Press. 1941. Pages 346. Price Rs. 6.

THIS Act which is mainly based on the English Arbitration Acts of 1889 and 1934 is, however, not an exhaustive code as in many respects it gives only an outline and leaves the details to be supplied by judges in accordance with well established principles of law. A commentary, like the present, which extensively refers to English decisions on the subject, is therefore helpful in elucidating the provisions of the Act. The notes to the various sections, which are grouped under different sub-headings, are brief and to the point. The case-law, English and Indian, is brought down to the end of 1940. For those interested in the genesis of the law of arbitration in British India there is a short historical survey of the law from the beginning of the British rule in India. This book which is neatly got up will be of use to the profession as a handy conspectus on the law of arbitration.

The Law of Arbitration in India. By SHAMBHU DAYAL SINGH, M.A., LL.B. Allahabad. ALLAHABAD : Allahabad Weekly Reporter Office, Indian Law House. 1941. Royal 8vo. Pages 422. Price Rs. 5.

THE placing of a new Act of any importance on the statute book seems to be a signal for letting loose a plethora of commentaries on it. The recently enacted Arbitration Act of 1940 forms no exception. This commentary opens with an introduction which deals with the entire law of arbitration and allied subjects. The provisions of the Act are examined in the light of relevant English and Indian decisions. The exposition of the subject is clear and concise. This book will be useful not merely to lawyers but to all those who have to enter into arbitrations or to act as arbitrators for the settlement of commercial disputes.

The Law of Benami Transactions in India. By A. GHOSH, B.A., B.L., Advocate High Court, Calcutta. CALCUTTA : Eastern Law House Ltd., P 13 Ganesh Chander Avenue. Third edition. 1941. Demi 8vo. Pages 368. Price Rs. 5.

IN this revised and enlarged edition the author has traced the development of the law of benami in India from its earliest stage to its new form which assimilates the Indian law very nearly to the English doctrine of advancement. The system of benami not being based on any statute law the rules for determining benami transactions are derived from judicial pronouncements. In this treatise the case-law bearing on the subject is copiously referred to and principles deduced therefrom are lucidly set forth. The author has dealt with the subject in all its aspects including the economic and the moral. This treatise can be recommended to the profession as a complete monograph on the law of benami in India.

The Law of Evidence in Criminal Cases. By SARAT CHANDRA CHATTERJI, Advocate, High Court, Calcutta. CALCUTTA : Eastern Law House, P 13, Ganesh Chander Avenue. Third Edition. 1941. Demi 8vo. Pages 579. Price Rs. 5.

As the title of this book indicates, this is a commentary on those provisions of the Evidence Act which are of frequent application to criminal trials. The notes on the sections deal fully with the case law which is brought down to March 1941. Extracts from judgments and standard works on the subject are given. The appendices contain the texts of the Indian Oaths Act, 1873, the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1891, and the Commercial Documents Evidence Act, 1939. As a guide to the law of evidence in criminal cases this book will be useful.

Law relating to Company shareholders in India. By H. R. MEHROTRA, G.D.A. CALCUTTA : Progressive Publishing Co. 1941. Demi 8vo. Pages 336 & lxviii. Price Rs. 3-8-0.

THIS book which is mainly written for shareholders of limited companies in India supplies a want. It explains in simple language the provisions of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, which relate to shareholders of companies. The sections of the Act are grouped together so as to form separate topics of discussion and the relevant case-law is referred to in elucidating the legal principles involved. The changes effected by the Amending Act of 1936 are clearly explained. This book will be of assistance to shareholders who wish to have a clear and concise idea of their rights and liabilities.

October, 1941.

"ORAL ADOPTION" OF DAUGHTER'S SON

It has been recently decided in Swaminatha Aiyar v. Vageesam<sup>1</sup> by the Chief Justice and Patanjali Sastri J. that an oral adoption, with corporeal delivery, of a daughter's son by a Brahmin of Tanjore District was by a text of Yama perfectly good as against the claims of the adoptive father's undivided brother and brother's son, in a suit for partition by the adopted son. The said text dispensing with datta-homam and other rites prescribed only vag-dana in the case of adoption of a son of a brother or daughter, and its authority and authenticity have been questioned or canvassed in Allahabad, Bombay and Calcutta High Courts. Their Lordships preferred to follow them and approved of the old Smṛiti text cited and based the decision solely on it. Patanjali J. even felt happy and thankful for the text that relieved him of the painful duty of balancing ceremonial and religious texts and disentangling civil rights and obligations from their meshes. True, Vaidyanatha at pp. 20-25 of his Sraddha-kanda in Grantha canvassed the point and finally left it to option of people to adopt any course they pleased. It is a difficult question and one should congratulate their Lordships on their easy solution.

But the only difficulty in the way of accepting their Lordships' decision as sound or satisfactory is that they sold an old and outworn coat and said that it was of the latest fashion, and worth the price paid for. The question naturally arises to the mind whether they would dare sell a similar wedding gown? I mean, would they take an equally easy view on the question of an oral marriage on the strength of certain ancient texts to be found scattered in Manu and other sages? They would at once go in for more modern texts and declare a marriage to be valid only on the completion of the saptapadi at the end of the vivaha homam which alone, they would say, would confer the status of wife and effect change of gotra from father's into husband's coupled with a consequent change in respect of pinda or funeral rites and sutaka or pollutions, not to speak of other civil rights and obligations such as inheritance and maintenance. Time was when an oral contract of marriage involving gift only of the girl, and no more by way of homam or other rite, was deemed sufficient to transfer the bride to the husband's family so completely that on his death she as his widow could embrace his brother in Niyoga (levirate), and beget issue for her husband (Manu, 9.69). But Yajnyavalkya (1.65) ruled that it became null and void if only a better bridegroom came upon the scene. Vasishtha (17.64), Baudhayana (4.1.17), Laghu Satatapa (43-45) and Narada (15.30) unanimously state that even if she had been orally gifted away with water, she continued to be in her father's dominion and gotra and did not pass on to her husband's for want of marriage with homam and other mantras. They do so in the teeth of Manu's assertion (9.71) that such a breach of promise of marriage or contract of gift in marriage is a heinous sin of untruth relating to person. This no doubt we know was an older state of the law of marriage that since gave way. It was on the main ground of absence of marriage with mantra and homam rites that continuously and exclusively kept woman or concubine had no status in her paramour's family either for herself or for her issue. It is true that, like the recent League of Nations' resolution in favour of better rights for illegitimate children all the world over in future, Yajnyavalkya (2.136-137) long ago anticipated it and allowed a Sudra's illegitimate son to go in shares with legitimate sons after his death, and to take the whole in their absence leaving no daughter's sons either. In the higher castes illegitimate sons get only maintenance. Thus enormous importance was given to homa and mantra even in the case of Sudras' 'marriage-samskara, not to say of Brahmins'.

Such being the case as regards marriage, what should be the law in the case of adoption which at once and equally affects the status and relationship of the adopted person towards those in the new as well as old family? It is of course conceded that if he were already no sapinda or sagotra there could be no valid adoption without datta-homam as well as oral and actual offer and acceptance of the boy in adoption, accompanied by water-pour. It is equally felt proper and reasonable to go through the whole prescribed procedure in the case of distant sagotra for the double reason of bringing a remote, long-ago divided kinsman nearer home and of ensuring the consequences of pinda and pollution leaving the old and binding the new family. But it does not look so very necessary in the case of a brother's son, whether joint or divided, since pinda and pollution continue as close as ever. It is also perhaps chiefly because of a special text of Vedic or even pre-Vedic origin found in all earlier Smritis, viz., that a brother's son is a son unto all (sonless) brothers as well. This certainly prevailed as law at a time when a Dattaka or adopted son was so low in the eyes of tradition, law and public opinion which hardly seem to have favoured even the highly prized Kshetrāja and Putrika-putra as in a little later age. Partition being rare, and all the family living together for generations, this was evidently thought most natural and desirable, notwithstanding the fact that sons were prayed for to discharge the three-fold debt one was thought to be born in. Perhaps the great (Maha Bharata) war was not yet waged to deplete the whole land of all adult men so much so that cries were to be heard everywhere of "sons at any cost", "sons of any kind" and "sons of any origin or birth", to keep lines of families from extinction, and perhaps to redeem Gaya also from going into oblivion or into Buddhist hands (Atri, 52-57; Likhita, 10-13; Brihaspati, 20.23; and Vasishtha, 11.39).

Hence in the face of such a text in favour of a brother's son being fully competent and sufficient to serve and save all brothers at once, and because of the nearness of his sapindaship, Yama was right in laying down the rule that mere word of gift would do without more by way of homa and other prescribed rites. Similarly, he would be in order if he had so ruled in the case of a Putrika-putra or son born of a daughter appointed or constituted a Putrika, that is, married subject to a condition expressly agreed to by repeating the prescribed formulas at the time of gift in marriage to the effect :—"I give you this brotherless daughter of mine with all ornaments and attire ; but, your first son by her shall belong to me alone". "I do consent". If the last words of the father's formula be "shall belong to us both" then the son born should be a true Dwyamushyayana. It is a moot question if in this later contingency homam and all other rites would be necessarily gone through if the grandfather wanted to adopt the child exclusively as his own on finding other male children born to his daughter. But if there was no such express condition extorted from the bridegroom, but there was only a mental reservation to have the first son of the marriage for his own exclusive benefit then he was no better than any other grandson or "dauhitra" born of marriage without any such stipulation and it is only just and reasonable to expect the usual homam and other rites also to accompany as in the case of all adoptions from other gotras than one's own. The question is not solely as their Lordships seem to have been unnecessarily labouring and emphasising whether the daughter's son is not already competent to render spiritual benefit even before and without adoption ; for in that case it might be pertinently asked "Then, why adoption of him at all?" "Why do you deprive his father altogether when you have some benefit through him already?" But the question would be whether he need adopt at all when he has his brother's son, whether as a Brahmin he can defy the specific injunctions of Sastras against adoptions of daughter's sons, whether he can plead a valid custom to such an effect and whether he can utterly dispense with rite relating to 'any a-gotra-sweekaram' and merely content himself with gift of the boy yet be in order.

Saunaka is positive that adoption must be of a close agnate among all the four castes, that among Brahmins it must be of a sapinda, failing whom, a near or distant sagotra, and that never should one go out of one's gotra in search of a boy to adopt. But he is prepared however to allow Sudras to adopt a daughter's or sister's son on a principle that perhaps savours of the principle of a Sudra's dasiputra sharing in the inheritance. But Sākala would not extend this freedom to adopt son of daughter, sister or mother's sister to Sudras among whom there is only one gotra for all or none at all. A text of Narada asks sapinda and sagotra to be exhausted before resorting to a different gotra. Vriddha Visishtha insists that sons taken from different gotras or different branches of the same gotra must needs undergo all the prescribed rites before the adopted son can seek to establish his full rights and status in his new family. Vriddha (or Brihat) Manu is even unduly hard upon adoptions without the necessary rites and formalities by giving the adopted son no more than marriage-expenses like unto a female child born in the family, and the natural father is declared heir to the adopted son and not the adoptive father. Vriddha Gautama simply quotes the above and further adds that adoption rites while conferring new gotra do not produce a close sapindaship (such perhaps as to exclude a nearer agnate from inheritance in preference). This sapindaship evidently has not much to do with any supposed spiritual competency as of a daughter's son. A Smṛityantara or unidentified author remarks, "Though formally given and accepted in adoption, a son who has not undergone in the new family any of the rites such as Jāta-karma, fails in truth and in effect as such, and how can he become entitled to (a share in) the inheritance"! Lastly, Anusasanika-parva of Maha Bharata (84. 37-39) says that an adoption by mere taking or accepting delivery of an infant is only valid in certain places (Mithila?) and the same is said to be Kritika form, and not dattaka.

In the light and in the fact of such a strong muster of authorities on the specific question of law before their Lordships it is impossible not to believe that the text of Yama relied upon by them was an out-and-out worn-out thing or his "dauhitra" meant only a putrika-putra appointed by an exclusive or common formula prescribed for the purpose at the time of the daughter's marriage. It is true that Katyayana (Kane, sl. 44) is emphatic that resort to self-willed courses of act or interpretation in defiance of express texts is ruinous to paradise in future and to established order in the present world. But it is hoped that this dictum does not apply to the present case pregnant with authorities to the contrary of Yama's dictum.

The faltering and faulty judgments of High Courts and even the Privy Council pronounced during the last forty years at least on Hindu law make out a strong case for the formation of a special panel of duly qualified experts with sufficient intimacy and research work experience in Hindu law to help the High Courts and the Privy Council at least, if not also the District Courts, whenever important questions of law have to be tackled. What is required today is a keen eye to essential principles, their true origin, evolution through the ages, and tendencies of further growth and future development in their impact with modern conditions and influences.

CONVERSION—Alternative remedies in contract and tort—Writ issued in contract against one defendant, but action discontinued—Whether a bar against another defendant. A cheque payable to the appellants was converted by the M company and collected for that company by its bankers the B bank. The appellants brought an action against the M company for the amount of the cheque either as money lent or as money had and received to the use of the appellants, but they discontinued that action and no final judgment was obtained. The appellants afterwards brought the present action against the B bank for conversion of the cheque :—Held, that the appellants by merely initiating proceedings against the M company for money lent or for money had and received had not thereby elected to waive the tort so as to be precluded from bringing the present action in tort. In such a case it is judgment and satisfaction in the first action, and not merely the bringing of the claim which constitutes a bar to a second action. *UNITED AUSTRALIA LD., v. CHEQUE—Cheque given in payment of a debt—Cheque dishonoured and outstanding in the hands of a third party—Assignment of the debt—Suit by the assignee—Maintainability. Where a cheque, given for the price of goods by the buyer to the seller, is indorsed for value by the latter and delivered to a third party, and then the cheque is dishonoured by non-payment, neither the seller nor, in case of seller's insolvency in the meantime, the transferee from the Official Assignee of the seller's CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, S. 60(1) (b)—Property exempt from attachment and sale—"Tools of artisans"—Whether the number of such tools, for which exemption can be claimed, is limited—Sewing machines used by a tailor. A tailor who uses a sewing machine is an artisan and the sewing machine is a "tool of an artisan," within the meaning of section 60(1) (b) of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 60(1) (b) of the Civil Procedure Code, which enacts that tools of artisan shall not be liable to attachment, does not say that only such tools shall not be liable to attachment as are necessary for the maintenance of the artisan. So, where the judgment-debtor was a tailor who, along with his employees, worked at his shop with six sewing machines belonging to himself, it was held that all the six sewing machines were exempt from attachment and sale under section 60(1) (b). *AHMAD SAYEED v. The words personal appearance in Court mean the same thing as attendance in Court. KISSEN LAL KANKORIA v. PURSHOTTAM DAS HALLVASIYA, [1941] 2 Cal. 155.

CONTEMPT OF COURT—Privilege of press—Publication of article in newspaper, whether amounts to contempt of Court—Test in cases of contempt of Court. As regards contempt of Court far from there being special privilege of the press there is a special responsibility affecting the editor of a newspaper, namely that he is in duty bound always to bear in mind the danger of prejudicing the course of justice by the publication of articles in his newspaper which though innocent in appearance may easily be so read by members of the public as to prejudice the course of litigation.

In judging whether the publication of an article in a newspaper will amount to contempt of Court or not the real and proper test is not whether the article will in fact prejudice the defendants or not, or scare away their witnesses, or lead them to compromise the suit, but the Court has to read the articles and see whether the articles may have that effect, and thereby tend to interfere with the proper course of justice. *HAKIM QARI NASIR AHMAD v. INJUNCTION—Injunction to restrain a defendant from proceeding in another Court—Inherent power of the High Court—Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), ss. 10, 151. The High Court in its original civil jurisdiction has inherent power to restrain a defendant by injunction from proceeding with a suit in another Court on grounds of convenience alone.

Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, recognises the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court. BHAGAT SINGH BUGGA v. DEWAN JAGBIR SAWHNEY, [1941] 1 Cal. 490.

PENAL CODE, SS. 420 AND 511—Cheating—Attempt to cheat—Contract not enforceable in civil Court, whether can be basis of prosecution for cheating—Person forewarned and therefore not cheated. There is no general principle that a criminal prosecution must fail if it is based upon a contract which could not be enforced in a civil Court. A man may be guilty of an attempt to cheat although the person he attempts to cheat is forewarned and is, therefore, not cheated. When the accused posed that he could double currency notes and a police officer knowing that he could not do so but with a view to get him convicted gave him some notes and caught him while, after going through a mock process of doubling notes, he tried to substitute some pages of a book in their place, held, that the accused went far beyond the stage of preparation and was liable to be convicted of the offence of attempting to cheat. *KING-EMPEROR v. The Indian Limitation Act, Vol. I, Secs. 1-32. By V. V. CHITALEY, B.A., LL.B., and K. N. ANNAJI RAO, B.A., LL.B. NAGPUR : The All India Reporter Ltd. 2nd edn., Royal 8vo. Pages 1023. Price Rs. 27 for three volumes.

IN this new edition the authors have incorporated all the reported decisions bearing on the law of limitation which have appeared since the publication of the first edition three years ago. The statutory changes made during this period are also incorporated. This volume deals with ss. 1 to 32 of the Act. All the features which have popularized the previous publications of these authors are to be found here. This book, like its predecessor, will be of use to the practitioners as a well digested repository of the entire case-law on the subject.

The Law of Conveyancing in British India. By S. K. DUTT, Advocate, Allahabad High Court. ALLAHABAD : Universal Law House, 26 Sheocharan Lal Road. 1941. Royal 8vo. Pages 874. Price Rs. 12.

THE art of conveyancing, which is concerned with the transfer of legal rights to property, is regulated by certain well-recognized rules. In order to be a competent draftsman one must have a thorough grasp of the principles governing this art. A mere ability to adapt precedents to a particular case is not enough to make one a successful draftsman without a thorough knowledge of the rules of drafting and an ability to apply these rules to practical cases. Realizing the importance of the above the author of this book has dealt at great length with the principles of conveyancing as obtaining in British India. These principles are explained in the form of lectures which cover the main body of the book and are lucidly and succinctly set forth. The forms and precedents embrace a wide range of subjects and to each precedent and form are appended notes which will be of practical use to the draftsman. Statutory forms and precedents are also given. The appendices deal with the stamp duty payable on instruments and the salient portions of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1940.

The Indian Conveyancer. By RAI BAHADUR P. C. MOGHA, B.A., LL.B. CALCUTTA : Eastern Law House, P 131, Ganesh Chunder Avenue. 1941. Second edition. Royal 8vo. Pages 676. Price Rs. 10.

THIS pioneer work on conveyancing in India which now appears in its second edition incorporates changes necessitated since its first appearance in 1938. The notes are revised and brought up to date and the precedents are also revised and a few new ones added. The book opens with a brief introductory statement on the general principles of conveyancing. For facility of reference the precedents are arranged in groups according to subjects and in the prefatory notes appended to the precedents the relevant law on the subject is briefly stated. Provisions of Stamp and Registration laws are referred to. This book, without doubt, will be invaluable to the draftsman on account of its exhaustiveness and general arrangement of the various precedents.

Indian Company Law. By M. J. SETHNA, Barrister-at-Law. BOMBAY : D. B. Taraporevala & Co., Hornby Road. 2nd edn., 1941. Roy. 8vo. Pages 398 & cclxl. Price Rs. 7-8-0.

THIS is an enlarged edition of a book which in its first edition was primarily meant for law students. While widening its scope so as to make it useful to the practitioners the author has retained the original scheme of arrangement. The entire statutory law on the subject is dealt with in a narrative style and the reader is taken logically through the different topics which are explained in the light of English and Indian cases bearing on the subject. References to the various sections of the Act are given in the commentaries to facilitate reference to the law dealing with the required point. The commentaries are lucid and the statement of law deduced from the decisions is accurately and briefly stated. Two chapters in this edition merit special mention, one which summarizes the salient features of the Indian Insurance Act, 1938, and another which deals with income-tax and super-tax in relation to registered companies. The full text of the Indian Companies Act as amended up to July 1941 is given and the appendices contain much useful matter. This book will be useful to the lawyer, the student and the layman as a reliable and clear exposition of the law on the subject.

An Introduction to the law of Limitation and Prescription. By K. J. KHAMBATTA, M.A., LL.B., F.S.S., Advocate (O.S.). BOMBAY: N. M. Tripathi & Co., Princess Street. 1941. Fourth edition. Royal 8vo. Pages 238. Price Rs. 4-4-0.

IN this new edition of a popular handbook the author has carefully revised and brought up to date the text of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. Several new topics are introduced including a detailed discussion of the effect of appropriation of an "open payment." Alterations made by recent Legislative enactments are incorporated and the case law is brought down to the end of June, 1941. The book is in three parts. The first one deals with the broad aspect of the law of limitation and prescription, the inter-relation of these two concepts and other allied topics. It will be of particular interest to practitioners as it contains matters which are not dealt with in the Indian Limitation Act. Part two contains an analysis of the Act. Here the various sections are regrouped logically and are explained in the light of decided cases with great lucidity and conciseness. The regrouping of the articles of the first schedule on the basis of certain generalisations will be of great help to the student in remembering the different periods of limitations. The last part explains certain concepts to be met with in the law of limitation. The book will serve as an excellent guide to students.

Report of the Hindu Law Committee. 1941. Government of India Press, SIMLA. Royal 8vo. Pages 49.

THIS publication contains the report of the Hindu Law Committee appointed by the Government of India in January, 1941, to examine the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, and two non-official Bills. One of the recommendations of the Committee is that the whole of the Hindu law should be codified beginning with the law of succession. A supplement to this report contains a draft memoranda relating to the Mitakshara law of male succession on which opinions are invited. The report makes very interesting reading and can be recommended to those who are alive to the needs of the codification of Hindu law. The present attempt takes us back to the original texts and dovetails them into the usages which have influenced the present day life of the Hindus. The task of reducing the behests of Hindu law as conceived by the sages in remote antiquity to clear-cut propositions of law is by no means a simple one. The committee of experts will deserve well of the Hindu community if they succeed in evolving rules which will harmonise the texts, take due account of different usages, and simplify the bewildering mass of judicial decisions.
